CALIFORNIA REPORTER REFERENCES

---

19 CALIFORNIA REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
1	118	815
8	118	809
14	118	812
19	119	1
61	119	23
65	119	138
72	119	353
85	119	137
87	119	134
94	119	129
98	119	133
100	119	131
104	119	329
111	119	340
123	119	717
140	119	727
143	119	729
147	119	713
156	119	731
162	119	945
176	120	6
181	120	1
189	120	26
198	120	13
209	120	9
217	120	20
226	120	31
233	120	19
236	120	650
244	120	649
248	120	661
254	120	869
263	120	874
271	120	880
281	120	887
283	120	888
284	120	886
287	120	879
289	120	865
297	121	10
304	121	7
308	121	497
314	121	1
319	121	713
324	121	678
336	121	685
344	121	673
354	121	716
368	121	702
388	121	689
409	121	729
420	122	17
428	122	47
439	122	53
446	121	727
449	122	8
454	121	738
458	121	724
463	122	257
476	122	11
483	122	14
488	122	22
534	121	734
540	122	1
543	122	3
553	122	264
562	122	268
566	122	271
570	122	564
580	122	549
586	122	552
595	122	543
605	122	557
614	122	513
622	122	570
634	122	526
647	122	576
659	123	11
676	123	20
707	122	889
713	123	505
748	122	896
755	123	1
774	122	900
778	122	902
807	122	892
815	123	440
818	123	442
831	123	457
870	123	456
874	123	526
875	123	526
876	123	525
877	123	525

48 CALIFORNIA APPELLATE REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal.App. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
1	119	197
8	119	165
12	119	214
23	119	158
27	119	162
29	119	185
33	119	142
37	119	164
40	119	145
46	119	148
52	119	408
62	119	370
72	119	444
79	119	430
82	119	346
86	119	160
90	119	383
97	119	394
101	119	438
110	119	404
117	119	435
124	119	396
126	119	381
131	119	349
150	119	426
157	119	387
160	119	359
177	119	368
180	119	413
199	119	388
203	119	431
205	119	433
209	119	961
220	119	375
230	119	777
234	119	806
249	119	754
255	119	766
259	119	796
263	119	788
276	119	763
281	119	758
291	119	980
312	119	775
314	119	734
319	119	800
326	119	798
329	119	787
332	119	740
337	119	752
340	119	743
345	119	969
347	119	970
352	119	1010
355	119	967
359	119	1013
360	119	745
367	119	804
372	119	779
375	119	749
381	119	954
393	119	998
397	119	768
404	119	736
408	120	97
417	120	153
422	119	1000
429	119	973

48 CALIFORNIA APPELLATE REPORTS, 2d SERIES—Continued

Cal.App.	P.2d
Page	Vol.	Page
440	120	79
446	119	979
449	119	1012
452	119	1003
459	119	995
465	120	44
475	120	125
481	120	107
488	119	992
495	120	62
500	120	37
506	120	121
514	119	1008
518	120	161
528	120	48
535	120	148
540	120	146
543	120	65
546	120	117
551	120	71
556	120	102
565	119	952
568	120	131
574	120	85
580	120	134
584	120	151
589	119	390
596	120	82
603	120	167
622	120	177
631	120	60
635	120	92
642	120	708
646	120	509
648	120	672
650	120	510
652	120	889
658	120	36
660	120	507
663	120	505
666	120	686
673	120	68
674	120	89
680	120	69
682	121	39
685	121	74
690	121	32
696	121	76
709	121	28
717	120	70
718	120	119
721	120	96
723	120	693
731	120	665
739	120	674
744	120	713
746	120	730
756	120	710
762	120	714
772	120	720
780	120	724
791	120	703
800	120	682
806	120	921
819	120	670
824	120	697
829	120	699
835	120	927
845	120	901
848	120	690
854	119	162
854	119	142
855	119	967
856	120	68

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2025

https://archive.org/details/californiareport0000vari_v3m9

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

COVERING CASES REPORTED IN

PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

123 P.2d – 124 P.2d

TO BE CITED BY VOLUME AND PAGE OF THE
PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1942

Copyright, 1942, by West Publishing Co.
Pacific Reporter, Second Series, Vol. 123, Nos. 1–3; Vol. 124, Nos. 1–4.

Copyright, 1942, by West Publishing Co.

Cal.Rep.123–124 P.2d
5th Reprint—1980

JUDGES AND OFFICERS

SUPREME COURT

Chief Justice

PHIL S. GIBSON	San Francisco

Associate Justices

JOHN W. SHENK	San Francisco
JESSE W. CURTIS	San Francisco
DOUGLAS L. EDMONDS	San Francisco
FREDERICK W. HOUSER	Los Angeles
JESSE W. CARTER	San Francisco
ROGER J. TRAYNOR	Berkeley

Clerks

B. Grant Taylor	Clerk	San Francisco
A. V. Haskell	Chief Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
I. M. Johnson	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Loren F. White	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Samuel C. Shenk	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
E. L. Blake	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
H. P. Coultis	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
L. A. Endres	Deputy Clerk	Sacramento

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS

FIRST DISTRICT—SAN FRANCISCO

Division 1

Presiding Justice

RAYMOND E. PETERS	San Francisco

Associate Justices

BENJ. K. KNIGHT	San Francisco
LOUIS H. WARD	San Francisco

Division 2

Presiding Justice

JOHN T. NOURSE	San Francisco

Associate Justices

GEO. A. STURTEVANT	San Francisco
HOMER R. SPENCE	San Francisco

Clerks

Walter S. Chisholm	Clerk	San Francisco
W. B. Sullivan	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Meredith L. Wilson	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco

SECOND DISTRICT—LOS ANGELES

Division 1

Presiding Justice

JOHN M. YORK	Los Angeles

Associate Justices

WILLIAM C. DORAN	Los Angeles
THOMAS P. WHITE	Los Angeles

Division 2

Presiding Justice

MINOR MOORE	Los Angeles

Associate Justices

WALTON J. WOOD	Los Angeles
MARSHALL F. McCOMB	Los Angeles

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS—Cont'd.

Division 3

PRESIDING JUSTICE

B. REY SCHAUER	Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

CLEMENT L. SHINN	Los Angeles
PARKER WOOD	Los Angeles

CLERKS

JAMES E. BROWN	Clerk	Los Angeles
C. L. KING	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
JOHN W. SHENK III	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles

THIRD DISTRICT—SACRAMENTO

PRESIDING JUSTICE

ANNETTA A. ADAMS[1]	Sacramento

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

ROLFE L. THOMPSON	Sacramento
RAGLAN TUTTLE	Sacramento

CLERKS

CAVINS HART	Clerk	Sacramento
GEORGE N. DIDION	Deputy Clerk	Sacramento

FOURTH DISTRICT

Fresno—San Bernardino—San Diego

PRESIDING JUSTICE

CHARLES R. BARNARD	Fresno

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

E. J. MARKS	San Bernardino
LLOYD E. GRIFFIN	San Diego

CLERKS

M. C. VANALLEN	Clerk	San Bernardino
LLOYD E. HIDDEN	Deputy Clerk	San Bernardino
EARL J. VERDECKBERG	Deputy Clerk	San Diego
ROY M. BOSTWICK	Deputy Clerk	Fresno

---

[1] Appointed, took office May 6, 1942.

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

Presiding Judge

HARTLEY SHAW	Los Angeles

Judges

EDWARD T. BISHOP	Los Angeles
W. TURNEY FOX	Los Angeles

Clerk

Jerome B. Williams	Los Angeles

SAN FRANCISCO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

FRANKLIN A. GRIFFIN	San Francisco

Judges

THOMAS M. FOLEY	San Francisco
ROBERT McWILLIAMS	San Francisco

Clerk

W. J. Greeley	San Francisco

SAN DIEGO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

CHARLES C. HAINES	San Diego

Judges

GORDON THOMPSON	San Diego
ARTHUR L. MUNDO	San Diego

Clerk

J. B. McLees	San Diego

Attorney General

Earl Warren	San Francisco

Reporter

B. E. Witkin	San Francisco

CASES REPORTED

	Vol.		Page
Adams v. Hildebrand, App.	124	P.2d	80
Adolph Coors Co. v. Corbett, App.	123	P.2d	74
Alexander v. Scattergood, App.	124	P.2d	151
Alexander v. State Personnel Board, App.	124	P.2d	338
American Nat. Bank of San Bernardino; Hayward Lumber & Investment Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	56
American Trust Co. v. Mickey, App.	124	P.2d	637
Anderson v. Meuer, App.	123	P.2d	903
Anderson; Salada Beach Public Utility Dist. v., App.	123	P.2d	86
Anderson; Sistrom v., App.	124	P.2d	372
Anderson; White v., App.	123	P.2d	543
Andrews v. Police Court of City of Stockton, App.	123	P.2d	128
Appier v. Hayes, App.	124	P.2d	125
Armer v. Dorton, App.	123	P.2d	94
Ashton; Mitchell v., App.	124	P.2d	161
Austin v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, App.	123	P.2d	119
Austin v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	123	P.2d	39
Babione v. Sanguienetti, App.	123	P.2d	85
Balkwill v. City of Stockton, App.	123	P.2d	596
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Chichester v., App.	124	P.2d	99
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Edgar v., App.	123	P.2d	885
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Gardner v., App.	124	P.2d	330
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Rives-Strong Bldg. v., App.	123	P.2d	942
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Washer v., App.	123	P.2d	575
Barnett; Galvan v., App.	124	P.2d	81
Bauer v. Williams, App.	124	P.2d	630
Bauer's Estate, In re, App.	124	P.2d	630
Beaudry v. Peterson, App.	123	P.2d	108
Beaudry v. Peterson, App.	124	P.2d	637
Beck v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, Sup.	124	P.2d	9
Belmont; Stub v., Sup.	124	P.2d	826
Bentley v. Mountain, App.	124	P.2d	91
Bertken; Prentice v., App.	123	P.2d	96
Bettencourt v. State, Sup.	123	P.2d	525
Bingaman; Gore v., Sup.	124	P.2d	17
Blackman v. Dalton's Auto & Furniture Loans, App.	124	P.2d	123
Board of Civil Service Com'rs of City of Los Angeles; Austin v., App.	123	P.2d	119
Board of Education of San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. Mulcahy, App.	123	P.2d	114
Board of Pension Com'rs of City of Los Angeles; McKeag v., App.	124	P.2d	109
Boice; Crouser v., App.	124	P.2d	358
Bollinger v. National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., App.	124	P.2d	676
Bowes; Connell v., Sup.	123	P.2d	456
Bowes v. Superior Court of Alameda County, App.	124	P.2d	667
Brandon v. State, Sup.	123	P.2d	525
Bridge Inv. Co.; Collins v., Sup.	123	P.2d	436
Briggs; People v., Sup.	123	P.2d	433
Brooks; People v., App.	123	P.2d	556
Brown v. City of Oakland, App.	124	P.2d	369
Brown International Inv. Co.; Rockwood v., App.	124	P.2d	612
Brunton v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	124	P.2d	831
Burdusis; George v., App.	123	P.2d	134

	Vol.		Page
Burger v. Hirni, App.	123	P.2d	891
Burns v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	124	P.2d	15
Burrows; Ehlen v., App.	124	P.2d	82
Business Management Corporation v. Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement, App.	123	P.2d	142
Buxbom v. Smith, App.	123	P.2d	907
Calder v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	123	P.2d	897
California Portland Cement Co.; Hunton v., App.	123	P.2d	947
Callison v. Dondero, App.	124	P.2d	852
Campbell v. Realty Title Co., Sup.	124	P.2d	810
Chase v. Union Title Insurance & Trust Co., App.	124	P.2d	895
Chase's Estate, In re, App.	124	P.2d	895
Cheleden v. State Bar of California, Sup.	124	P.2d	1
Chichester v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App.	124	P.2d	99
Chierotti v. San Francisco Police Department, Sup.	124	P.2d	51
Chinn; Kim v., Sup.	123	P.2d	438
Christian v. Rice Growers Ass'n of California, App.	123	P.2d	534
City and County of San Francisco; Calder v., App.	123	P.2d	897
City and County of San Francisco; Natural Milk Producers Ass'n v., Sup.	124	P.2d	25
City of Fresno; Van Gammeren v., App.	124	P.2d	621
City of Huntington Beach; Denio v., App.	124	P.2d	649
City of Long Beach; Helbach v., App.	123	P.2d	62
City of Los Angeles; Crown Body Corporation v., App.	123	P.2d	566
City of Los Angeles; George v., App.	124	P.2d	872
City of Los Angeles; Haas v., App.	124	P.2d	100
City of Los Angeles; Hagenburger v., App.	124	P.2d	345
City of Los Angeles; Knoll v., App.	124	P.2d	113
City of Los Angeles; Rippe v., App.	123	P.2d	47
City of Oakland; Brown v., App.	124	P.2d	369
City of Pasadena; First Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena v., App.	123	P.2d	60
City of Stockton; Balkwill v., App.	123	P.2d	596
Clarke v. Volpa Bros., App.	124	P.2d	377
Cleveland; Sheets v., App.	124	P.2d	200
Cohn v. Cohn, Sup.	123	P.2d	833
Coleman; People v., App.	123	P.2d	557
Colgrove v. Lompoc Model T Club, App.	124	P.2d	128
Collins v. Bridge Inv. Co., Sup.	123	P.2d	436
Collins; Gooderham & Worts v., App.	123	P.2d	922
Collins; People v., App.	123	P.2d	43
Collins; Rathjen Bros. v., App.	123	P.2d	925
Collins; Rathjen Bros. v., App.	123	P.2d	930
Collins; Sauers Wholesale Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	936
Collins; Tonkin Distributing Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	938
Connell v. Bowes, Sup.	123	P.2d	456
Consolidated Milk Producers for San Francisco v. Parker, Sup.	123	P.2d	440
Consumers Rock & Cement Co.; Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	872
Conterno; People v., App.	124	P.2d	610
Coors Co. v. Corbett, App.	123	P.2d	74
Corbett; Adolph Coors Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	74
Corporation of America v. Durham Mut. Water Co., App.	123	P.2d	81
Crail; Shore v., App.	123	P.2d	840
Crandall v. McGrath, App.	124	P.2d	858
Crawford; Salvation Army of and at Pasadena v., Sup.	124	P.2d	329
Crivello v. San Diego County, App.	123	P.2d	899
Crouser v. Boice, App.	124	P.2d	358
Crowley, Ex parte, App.	124	P.2d	329
Crown Body Corporation v. City of Los Angeles, App.	123	P.2d	566
Da Arauje v. Rodriques, App.	123	P.2d	154

	Vol.		Page
Dalton's Auto & Furniture Loans; Blackman v., App.	124	P.2d	123
Davey; Tarvin v., App.	124	P.2d	624
Davis; Overland v., App.	123	P.2d	581
Davis v. Robinson, App.	123	P.2d	894
Dayton Storage Co.; Weinberg v., App.	124	P.2d	155
De Bretteville; Scoville v., App.	123	P.2d	616
De Bretteville; Scoville v., App.	123	P.2d	622
Debrincat; Whitfield v., App.	123	P.2d	591
De Garmo v. Goldman, Sup.	123	P.2d	1
Denio v. City of Huntington Beach, App.	124	P.2d	649
Department of Agriculture; Pacific Coast Dairy v., Sup.	123	P.2d	442
Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement; Business Management Corporation v., App.	123	P.2d	142
Descant; People v., App.	124	P.2d	864
De Vaux; Lindsey v., App.	123	P.2d	144
Dixon v. Mounts, App.	123	P.2d	66
Dominguez Estate Co. v. Ruddock, App.	124	P.2d	67
Dondero; Callison v., App.	124	P.2d	852
Dorton; Armer v., App.	123	P.2d	94
Downey's Estate, In re, App.	124	P.2d	637
Duraind's Estate, In re, App.	124	P.2d	330
Durham Mut. Water Co.; Corporation of America v., App.	123	P.2d	81
Duvall v. First Baptist Church of Van Nuys, App.	124	P.2d	89
Eddleman; Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v., App.	123	P.2d	874
Edgar v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App.	123	P.2d	885
Eggert v. Pacific Savings & Loan Co., Sup.	124	P.2d	815
Ehlen v. Burrows, App.	124	P.2d	82
Elba Oil Co.; Mueller v., App.	124	P.2d	132
Ellis; Ferrill v., App.	123	P.2d	857
Escobar v. McNiel, App.	124	P.2d	70
Evans v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	124	P.2d	820
Everts v. Matteson, App.	124	P.2d	685
Farquar; Stracke v., Sup.	124	P.2d	9
Federal Deposit Ins. Corporation v. Eddleman, App.	123	P.2d	874
Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., Sup.	124	P.2d	51
Fernelius v. Pierce, App.	123	P.2d	910
Ferrill v. Ellis, App.	123	P.2d	857
Ferroni v. Pacific Finance Corporation of California, two cases, App.	124	P.2d	615
Field v. Mollison, App.	123	P.2d	603
Fire & Police Pension Board of City of Pasadena; Talbot v., App.	124	P.2d	352
First Baptist Church of Van Nuys; Duvall v., App.	124	P.2d	89
First Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena v. City of Pasadena, App.	123	P.2d	60
Forbes; Housing Authority of City of Oakland v., App.	124	P.2d	194
Fox v. Schuster, App.	123	P.2d	56
Franklin; Ritter v., App.	123	P.2d	866
Fritz v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., App.	123	P.2d	622
Fruzia; Heath v., App.	123	P.2d	560
Galvan v. Barnett, App.	124	P.2d	81
Gandi; Oakland Scavenger Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	143
Gardner v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App.	124	P.2d	330
George v. Burdusis, App.	123	P.2d	134
George v. City of Los Angeles, App.	124	P.2d	872
Givens v. Markall, App.	124	P.2d	839
Goldman; De Garmo v., Sup.	123	P.2d	1
Gonzales; People v., Sup.	124	P.2d	44
Gooderham & Worts v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	922
Goodman Bros. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	124	P.2d	644
Gordon; Vucinich v., App.	124	P.2d	868

	Vol.		Page
Gore v. Bingaman, Sup.	124	P.2d	17
Goss; Lyon v., Sup.	123	P.2d	11
Graceland v. Peebler, App.	123	P.2d	527
Griflin; Lovell v., App.	124	P.2d	615
Griffith; Moore v., App.	124	P.2d	900
Gudger v. Manton, App.	123	P.2d	635
Haas v. City of Los Angeles, App.	124	P.2d	100
Hagenburger v. City of Los Angeles, App.	124	P.2d	345
Hamilton; Manson v., Sup.	123	P.2d	503
Harkness; People v., App.	124	P.2d	85
Harvey; Kirkpatrick v., App.	124	P.2d	367
Hawkins; People v., Super.	124	P.2d	691
Hayes; Appier v., App.	124	P.2d	125
Hayward Lumber & Investment Co. v. American Nat. Bank of San Bernardino, App.	123	P.2d	56
Heath v. Fruzia, App.	123	P.2d	560
Hedlund v. Sutter Medical Service Co., App.	124	P.2d	878
Heffron v. Rosenberg, App.	124	P.2d	74
Helbach v. City of Long Beach, App.	123	P.2d	62
Henger-Seltzer Co.; Steelduct Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	100
Henry's Turk & Taylor Lunch; Sublett v., App.	123	P.2d	844
Hernandez; People v., App.	123	P.2d	100
Hibbard v. Los Angeles County, App.	123	P.2d	122
Hildebrand; Adams v., App.	124	P.2d	80
Hirni; Burger v., App.	123	P.2d	891
Hizar v. State Bar of California, Sup.	124	P.2d	812
Hochwender; People v., Sup.	124	P.2d	823
Horton & Converse; Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. of Los Angeles v., App.	124	P.2d	56
Housing Authority of City of Oakland v. Forbes, App.	124	P.2d	194
Howton v. Howton, App.	124	P.2d	837
Hughes v. Schwatz, App.	124	P.2d	886
Hunt v. Pacific Electric R. Co., App.	124	P.2d	89
Hunton v. California Portland Cement Co., App.	123	P.2d	947
Inglewood Humane Soc.; Menches v., App.	124	P.2d	870
Jack; Kroeker v., App.	124	P.2d	619
Janssen v. Los Angeles County, App.	123	P.2d	122
Johnson; Powell v., App.	123	P.2d	875
Johnston v. Yarbrough, App.	123	P.2d	568
Johnston Rock Co.; Raglan v., App.	123	P.2d	883
Jones v. State, Sup.	123	P.2d	526
Karn v. Wills, App.	123	P.2d	640
Kelley v. Russell, App.	123	P.2d	606
Kelly's Estate, In re, Sup.	124	P.2d	329
Kendall; Murphy v., App.	123	P.2d	129
Kiessig v. San Diego County, App.	124	P.2d	163
Kim v. Chinn, Sup.	123	P.2d	438
Kirkpatrick v. Harvey, App.	124	P.2d	367
Knoll v. City of Los Angeles, App.	124	P.2d	113
Korner, Ex parte, App.	123	P.2d	111
Kroeker v. Jack, App.	124	P.2d	619
Kuhlemeier v. Lack, App.	123	P.2d	918
Lacey, In re, Sup.	124	P.2d	21
Lack; Kuhlemeier v., App.	123	P.2d	918
Laisne v. State Board of Optometry, Sup.	123	P.2d	457
LaMarr; People v., App.	124	P.2d	77
Lane v. Whitaker, App.	123	P.2d	53
Lasker, In re, App.	124	P.2d	72
Laughlin v. State, Sup.	123	P.2d	526
Lebal Co. of America v. Mastrup, App.	124	P.2d	348

	Vol.		Page
LeGrand v. Russell. Withdrawn by Order of Court	124	P.2d	630
Lincoln v. Superior Court of Madera County, App.	124	P.2d	179
Lindsey v. De Vaux, App.	123	P.2d	144
Lompoc Model T Club; Colgrove v., App.	124	P.2d	128
Long Beach Local No. 128 of Oil Workers International Union; Steiner v., Sup.	123	P.2d	20
Lorenz v. Santa Monica City High School Dist., App.	124	P.2d	846
Los Angeles County; Hibbard v., App.	123	P.2d	122
Los Angeles County; Janssen v., App.	123	P.2d	122
Los Angeles Junction R. Co.; Newkirk v., App.	123	P.2d	861
Lovell v. Griffin, App.	124	P.2d	615
Lyon v. Goss, two cases, Sup.	123	P.2d	11
Lyon; Siemon v., App.	124	P.2d	893
Maaskant v. Matsui, App.	123	P.2d	853
Mabry v. Scott, App.	124	P.2d	659
McCaslin; Shaw v., App.	123	P.2d	102
McGrath; Crandall v., App.	124	P.2d	858
McIntosh; Phillips v., App.	124	P.2d	835
McKeag v. Board of Pension Com'rs of City of Los Angeles, App.	124	P.2d	109
McKinnon; Miller v., Sup.	124	P.2d	34
McNiel; Escobar v., App.	124	P.2d	70
Makzoume v. Makzoume, App.	123	P.2d	72
Maloney v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., Sup.	123	P.2d	449
Manning; Weinberger v., App.	123	P.2d	531
Manson v. Hamilton, Sup.	123	P.2d	503
Manton; Gudger v., App.	123	P.2d	635
Markall; Givens v., App.	124	P.2d	839
Market St. R. Co.; Silva v., App.	123	P.2d	904
Martin v. Riley, Sup.	123	P.2d	488
Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co.; Maloney v., Sup.	123	P.2d	449
Mastrup; Lebal Co. of America v., App.	124	P.2d	348
Mather v. Mather, App.	124	P.2d	625
Matson Nav. Co.; United States Guarantee Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	537
Matsui; Maaskant v., App.	123	P.2d	853
Matteson; Everts v., App.	124	P.2d	685
Mazzei; Royal Ins. Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	586
Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. of Los Angeles v. Horton & Converse, App.	124	P.2d	56
Menches v. Inglewood Humane Soc., App.	124	P.2d	870
Metropolitan Life Ins. Co.; Fritz v., App.	123	P.2d	622
Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Riverside County, App.	124	P.2d	363
Metz v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	124	P.2d	670
Meuer; Anderson v., App.	123	P.2d	903
Meyer; Spanfelner v., App.	124	P.2d	862
Mickey; American Trust Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	637
Midstate Horticultural Co.; Pennsylvania R. Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	902
Milanchalk; People v., App.	124	P.2d	74
Miller v. McKinnon, Sup.	124	P.2d	34
Miller v. Miller, App.	123	P.2d	118
Miller v. Rolkin, Sup.	124	P.2d	12
Miller's Estate, In re, App.	123	P.2d	118
Milly; Selinger v., App.	124	P.2d	631
Mitchell v. Ashton, App.	124	P.2d	161
Mitchell's Estate, In re, Sup.	123	P.2d	503
Mollison; Field v., App.	123	P.2d	603
Moore, In re, App.	124	P.2d	900
Moore v. Griffith, App.	124	P.2d	900
Moore v. Stella, App.	124	P.2d	167
Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Sampsell, App.	124	P.2d	353

	Vol.		Page
Mountain; Bentley v., App.	124	P.2d	91
Mounts; Dixon v., App.	123	P.2d	66
Mueller v. Elba Oil Co., App.	124	P.2d	132
Mulcahy; Board of Education of San Francisco Unified School Dist. v., App.	123	P.2d	114
Murphy v. Kendall, App.	123	P.2d	129
Murphy's Estate, In re, App.	123	P.2d	129
National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn.; Bollinger v., App.	124	P.2d	676
Natural Milk Producers Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	124	P.2d	25
Nelson; Torrey v., App.	124	P.2d	336
Newkirk v. Los Angeles Junction R. Co., App.	123	P.2d	861
Nicola v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., App.	123	P.2d	529
Norris v. Norris, App.	123	P.2d	847
Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. Consumers Rock & Cement Co., App.	123	P.2d	872
Oakland Scavenger Co. v. Gandi, App.	124	P.2d	143
O'Brien v. O'Brien, App.	123	P.2d	877
Ochoa, Ex parte, App.	123	P.2d	106
Older; Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co. v., App.	123	P.2d	873
One 1937 Packard 6 Touring Sedan, Engine No. T21720; People v., App.	123	P.2d	900
Overland v. Davis, App.	123	P.2d	581
Pacific Coast Dairy v. Department of Agriculture, Sup.	123	P.2d	442
Pacific Electric R. Co.; Hunt v., App.	124	P.2d	89
Pacific Finance Corporation of California; Ferroni v., App.	124	P.2d	615
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Fennessey v., Sup.	124	P.2d	51
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Nicola v., App.	123	P.2d	529
Pacific Savings & Loan Co.; Eggert v., Sup.	124	P.2d	815
Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Perez, App.	124	P.2d	184
Palmer; People v., App.	123	P.2d	882
Parker; Consolidated Milk Producers for San Francisco v., Sup.	123	P.2d	440
Paterson; Pierce v., App.	123	P.2d	544
Peebler; Graceland v., App.	123	P.2d	527
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Midstate Horticultural Co., App.	124	P.2d	902
People v. Briggs, Sup.	123	P.2d	433
People v. Brooks, App.	123	P.2d	556
People v. Coleman, App.	123	P.2d	557
People v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	43
People v. Conterno, App.	124	P.2d	610
People v. Descant, App.	124	P.2d	864
People v. Gonzales, Sup.	124	P.2d	44
People v. Harkness, App.	124	P.2d	85
People v. Hawkins, Super.	124	P.2d	691
People v. Hernandez, App.	123	P.2d	100
People v. Hochwender, Sup.	124	P.2d	823
People v. LaMarr, App.	124	P.2d	77
People v. Milanchalk, App.	124	P.2d	74
People v. One 1937 Packard 6 Touring Sedan, Engine No. T21720, App.	123	P.2d	900
People v. Palmer, App.	123	P.2d	882
People v. Philbin, Super.	123	P.2d	159
People v. Potter, App.	124	P.2d	189
People v. Putnam, App.	123	P.2d	573
People v. Roberts, App.	123	P.2d	628
People v. Scranton, App.	123	P.2d	132
People v. Steinberg, App.	124	P.2d	341
People v. Tracy, App.	123	P.2d	138
People v. Vivian, App.	123	P.2d	613
People v. Wells, Sup.	124	P.2d	809
People v. Zemavasky, Sup.	123	P.2d	478
Perez; Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	184
Peterson; Beaudry v., App.	123	P.2d	108

	Vol.		Page
Peterson; Beaudry v., App.	124	P.2d	637
Philbin; People v., Super.	123	P.2d	159
Phillips v. McIntosh, App.	124	P.2d	835
Pierce; Fernelius v., App.	123	P.2d	910
Pierce v. Paterson, App.	123	P.2d	544
Pike; Stanislaus Lumber Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	190
Plum v. State Board of Control, App.	124	P.2d	891
Plummer v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	124	P.2d	5
Police Court of City of Stockton; Andrews v., App.	123	P.2d	128
Polk v. Polk, App.	123	P.2d	550
Potter; People v., App.	124	P.2d	189
Powell v. Johnson, App.	123	P.2d	875
Powers; Wood v., App.	123	P.2d	564
Prentice v. Bertken, App.	123	P.2d	96
Putnam; People v., App.	123	P.2d	573
Raglan v. Johnston Rock Co., App.	123	P.2d	883
Randall; Smith v., App.	124	P.2d	334
Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	925
Rathjen Bros. v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	930
Realty Title Co.; Campbell v., Sup.	124	P.2d	810
Reiss v. Reiss, App.	123	P.2d	68
Reiss' Estate, In re, App.	123	P.2d	68
Rice Growers Ass'n of California; Christian v., App.	123	P.2d	534
Richardson, In re, Sup.	123	P.2d	11
Rilcoff v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App.	123	P.2d	540
Riley; Martin v., Sup.	123	P.2d	488
Rippe v. City of Los Angeles, App.	123	P.2d	47
Rittenhouse v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Sup.	123	P.2d	836
Ritter v. Franklin, App.	123	P.2d	866
Riverside County; Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v., App.	124	P.2d	363
Rives-Strong Bldg. v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App.	123	P.2d	942
Roberts; People v., App.	123	P.2d	628
Robinson; Davis v., App.	123	P.2d	894
Rockwood v. Brown International Inv. Co., App.	124	P.2d	612
Rodgers; Wheeland v., Sup.	124	P.2d	816
Rodriques; Da Arauje v., App.	123	P.2d	154
Rolkin; Miller v., Sup.	124	P.2d	12
Rose v. Rose, App.	123	P.2d	37
Rose v. State, Sup.	123	P.2d	505
Rosemeyer; Stricklin v., App.	123	P.2d	151
Rosenberg; Heffron v., App.	124	P.2d	74
Rothschild v. Wolf, Sup.	123	P.2d	483
Royal Ins. Co. v. Mazzei, App.	123	P.2d	586
Ruddock; Dominguez Estate Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	67
Russell; Kelley v., App.	123	P.2d	606
Safeway Stores v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co., App.	123	P.2d	878
Salada Beach Public Utility Dist. v. Anderson, App.	123	P.2d	86
Salopek v. Schoemann, Sup.	124	P.2d	21
Salvation Army of and at Pasadena v. Crawford, Sup.	124	P.2d	329
Sampsell; Mortgage Guarantee Co. v., App.	124	P.2d	353
San Diego County; Crivello v., App.	123	P.2d	899
San Diego County; Kiessig v., App.	124	P.2d	163
San Francisco Police Department; Chierotti v., Sup.	124	P.2d	51
Sanguienetti; Babione v., App.	123	P.2d	85
San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co.; Safeway Stores v., App.	123	P.2d	878
Santa Monica City High School Dist.; Lorenz v., App.	124	P.2d	846
Sauers Wholesale Co. v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	936
Scattergood; Alexander v., App.	124	P.2d	151

	Vol.		Page
Schoemann; Salopek v., Sup.	124	P.2d	21
Schuster; Fox v., App.	123	P.2d	56
Schwatz; Hughes v., App.	124	P.2d	886
Scott; Mabry v., App.	124	P.2d	659
Scoville v. De Bretteville, App.	123	P.2d	616
Scoville v. De Bretteville, App.	123	P.2d	622
Scranton; People v., App.	123	P.2d	132
Scully v. State, Sup.	124	P.2d	609
Selinger v. Milly, App.	124	P.2d	631
Sellery v. Ward, App.	123	P.2d	916
Shahen; Weadon v., App.	123	P.2d	88
Shaw v. McCaslin, App.	123	P.2d	102
Sheets v. Cleveland, App.	124	P.2d	200
Shore v. Crail, App.	123	P.2d	840
Siemon v. Lyon, App.	124	P.2d	893
Silva v. Market St. R. Co., App.	123	P.2d	904
Sistrom v. Anderson, App.	124	P.2d	372
Smith; Buxbom v., App.	123	P.2d	907
Smith v. Randall, App.	124	P.2d	334
Smith v. Smith, App.	124	P.2d	117
Southern Counties Gas Co. of California; Van Rennes v., App.	124	P.2d	350
Southern Pac. Co.; Austin v., App.	123	P.2d	39
Southern Pac. Co.; Metz v., App.	124	P.2d	670
Spanfelner v. Meyer, App.	124	P.2d	862
Stanislaus Lumber Co. v. Pike, App.	124	P.2d	190
State; Bettencourt v., Sup.	123	P.2d	525
State; Brandon v., Sup.	123	P.2d	525
State; Jones v., Sup.	123	P.2d	526
State; Laughlin v., Sup.	123	P.2d	526
State; Rose v., Sup.	123	P.2d	505
State; Scully v., Sup.	124	P.2d	609
State Bar of California; Cheleden v., Sup.	124	P.2d	1
State Bar of California; Hizar v., Sup.	124	P.2d	812
State Board of Control; Plum v., App.	124	P.2d	891
State Board of Optometry; Laisne v., Sup.	123	P.2d	457
State Personnel Board; Alexander v., App.	124	P.2d	338
Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co., App.	123	P.2d	100
Steinberg; People v., App.	124	P.2d	341
Steiner v. Long Beach Local No. 128 of Oil Workers International Union, Sup.	123	P.2d	20
Stella; Moore v., App.	124	P.2d	167
Stracke v. Farquar, Sup.	124	P.2d	9
Stricklin v. Rosemeyer, App.	123	P.2d	151
Stub v. Belmont, Sup.	124	P.2d	826
Studio Amusements; Thomas v., App.	123	P.2d	552
Sublett v. Henry's Turk & Taylor Lunch, App.	123	P.2d	844
Summers' Estate, In re, App.	124	P.2d	94
Superior Court of Alameda County; Bowes v., App.	124	P.2d	667
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Burns v., Sup.	124	P.2d	15
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Goodman Bros. v., App.	124	P.2d	644
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Plummer v., Sup.	124	P.2d	5
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Brunton v., Sup.	124	P.2d	831
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Evans v., Sup.	124	P.2d	820
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Rilcoff v., App.	123	P.2d	540
Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Rittenhouse v., Sup.	123	P.2d	836
Superior Court of Madera County; Lincoln v., App.	124	P.2d	179
Superior Court of Mendocino County; Beck v., Sup.	124	P.2d	9
Sutter Medical Service Co.; Hedlund v., App.	124	P.2d	878

	Vol.		Page
Talbot v. Fire & Police Pension Board of City of Pasadena, App.	124	P.2d	352
Tanner v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., Sup.	123	P.2d	497
Tarvin v. Davey, App.	124	P.2d	624
Taylor; Tomkins v., App.	124	P.2d	856
Thomas v. Studio Amusements, App.	123	P.2d	552
Title Insurance & Trust Co.; Tanner v., Sup.	123	P.2d	497
Tomaier v. Tomaier, App.	123	P.2d	548
Tomkins v. Taylor, App.	124	P.2d	856
Tonkin Distributing Co. v. Collins, App.	123	P.2d	938
Torrey v. Nelson, App.	124	P.2d	336
Tracy; People v., App.	123	P.2d	138
Treadwell v. Woods, App.	124	P.2d	94
Turner's Estate, In re, App.	123	P.2d	66
Union Title Insurance & Trust Co.; Chase v., App.	124	P.2d	895
United States Guarantee Co. v. Matson Nav. Co., App.	123	P.2d	537
Vallera v. Vallera, App.	124	P.2d	863
Van Gammeren v. City of Fresno, App.	124	P.2d	621
Van Rennes v. Southern Counties Gas Co. of California, App.	124	P.2d	350
Vivian; People v., App.	123	P.2d	613
Volpa Bros.; Clarke v., App.	124	P.2d	377
Vucinich v. Gordon, App.	124	P.2d	868
Walker; Woods v., App.	124	P.2d	844
Ward; Sellery v., App.	123	P.2d	916
Washer v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App.	123	P.2d	575
Weadon v. Shahen, App.	123	P.2d	88
Wear's Estate, In re, Sup.	124	P.2d	12
Weinberg v. Dayton Storage Co., App.	124	P.2d	155
Weinberger v. Manning, App.	123	P.2d	531
Wells; People v., Sup.	124	P.2d	809
Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co. v. Older, App.	123	P.2d	873
Wheeland v. Rodgers, Sup.	124	P.2d	816
Whitaker; Lane v., App.	123	P.2d	53
White v. Anderson, App.	123	P.2d	543
Whitfield v. Debrincat, App.	123	P.2d	591
Williams; Bauer v., App.	124	P.2d	630
Wills; Karn v., App.	123	P.2d	640
Wolf; Rothschild v., Sup.	123	P.2d	483
Wood v. Powers, App.	123	P.2d	564
Woods; Treadwell v., App.	124	P.2d	94
Woods v. Walker, App.	124	P.2d	844
Yarbrough; Johnston v., App.	123	P.2d	568
Zemavasky; People v., Sup.	123	P.2d	478

*

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

123 PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

IN VOLUME

123 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

---

19 Cal.2d 755

DE GARMO v. GOLDMAN et al.

L. A. 17346.

Supreme Court of California.

March 5, 1942.

1. Action 🔑22

In determining whether action is one in equity, the equitable characteristics of the relief sought must be considered, since the courts of chancery have always claimed and exercised the right to provide a remedy for every wrong not cognizable by courts of law.

2. Courts 🔑212

An action, by stockholder and director, to remove other directors for alleged fraudulent acts based upon the statute authorizing removal of a director for acts authorizing the removal of a trustee under the broad principles of equity and which is based upon the breach of the director's fiduciary duty to the corporation, is an "action in equity" within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and is not an "action at law", since plaintiff director in order to be entitled to relief was required to have clean hands. Civ.Code, §§ 310, 2230; Const. art. 6, § 4.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Action at Law" and "Action in Equity".

3. Equity 🔑65(1)

Court of equity must, upon any suggestion that a plaintiff has not acted in good faith concerning matters upon which he bases suit, inquire into facts in that regard.

4. Equity 🔑65(2)

It is not only fraud or illegality which will prevent a suitor from obtaining equitable relief, but any unconscientious conduct upon his part which is connected with the controversy will repel him from the forum whose very foundation is good conscience.

5. Equity 🔑65(2)

Equity will not aid one who is guilty of breach of contract connected with the transaction concerning which he asks for a decree in his favor.

6. Equity 🔑65(1), 66

The principle that one seeking equitable relief must come into equity with "clean hands", differs from the maxim "He who seeks equity must do equity", in that latter assumes that different equitable rights have arisen from same subject matter or transaction, some in favor of plaintiff and some in favor of defendant, so that plaintiff is required to recognize and provide for defendant's rights, and his relief is granted only upon a showing that defendant's rights are protected.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Clean Hands" and "He Who Seeks Equity Must Do Equity".

7. Equity 🔑65(1)

Any really unconscientious conduct connected with the controversy to which one is a party is sufficient justification for the court to close its doors to him, and the fact that one does not have an adequate remedy at law does not justify disregarding the maxim.

8. Equity 🔑65(1)

The burden is on the one coming into a court of equity for relief to prove, not only his legal right, but his clean hands, and he may not rely on any deficiencies that may be laid at door of the defendant.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)

Where stockholder and director of corporation seeking removal, in equity action, of certain others as directors introduced evidence showing that defendant directors collected rebates from certain employees and made incomplete returns to an association, and made false reports to lessor so that lessor would accept smaller amount of rent than should have been paid, but evidence also showed that plaintiff, owning one-half the stock, personally benefited by every alleged fraudulent act of defendants that increased assets of corporation and that as corporation's president plaintiff was being paid salary to supervise its office, handle its accounts, and take care of its tax matters, court's failure to find upon material issue of plaintiff's good faith required reversal. Civ.Code, § 310.

10. Appeal and error ⊂⇒870(2)

In action by director to remove certain other directors of corporation, in which corporation was made defendant, action of trial court in striking corporation's cross-complaint and refusing to hear evidence thereon could not be reviewed on appeal from a judgment removing defendants as directors, since court had rendered no "judgment" determining rights of parties in that regard. Civ.Code, § 310.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

11. Appeal and error ⊂⇒138

Corporation was "necessary party" to action by one director against certain other directors to remove defendant directors from office and as such party corporation could appeal from judgment rendered, although its rights were not specifically determined by that judgment. Civ.Code, § 310.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Necessary Party".

12. Appeal and error ⊂⇒442

Appeal of directors of corporation from judgment removing them from office in action by another director and barring defendants from re-election before December 1, 1940, stayed judgment appealed from, and a subsequent resolution of March 15, 1940, a year after judgment, directing substitution of attorneys, was ineffective for that purpose. Code Civ.Proc. § 949.

13. Appeal and error ⊂⇒671(1)

Record on appeal was not such as to enable Supreme Court to rule upon motion to substitute attorneys for corporation in action to remove certain persons as directors, where judgment removing defendants as directors barred them from re-election only until December 1, 1940, and, according to plaintiff's affidavit, a meeting of stockholders was held on December 5, 1940, at which time new board of directors was elected, and thereafter meeting of directors was held at which resolution expressing desire of corporation to substitute counsel was approved, but answering affidavit on corporation's behalf stated facts at variance with those presented by plaintiff concerning election of directors, so that issue of fact concerning validity of election was presented. Civ.Code, § 310.

14. Appeal and error ⊂⇒776

An appellant may not dismiss his appeal as a matter of right, but whether he may do so is within discretion of court, and, where dismissal of appeal of one of several appellants will prejudice his co-appellants, it may properly be refused.

15. Appeal and error ⊂⇒776

Court should not allow litigant to dismiss his appeal where it appears that effect of such order would make it possible for respondent to obtain benefits of judgment to which, in equity and good conscience, he is not entitled.

16. Appeal and error ⊂⇒776

Appeal from judgment removing defendants as directors of corporation and barring them from re-election until December 1, 1940, would not be dismissed pursuant to stipulation of substituted counsel for one of defendants where affidavit showed that since September 1, 1939, such defendant had been employed by corporation as manager of its business department with title "Assistant to the President" and where, upon a retrial, court might determine that because of plaintiff's own derelictions of duty as president and director, plaintiff should not obtain equitable relief, and record also showed that when suit was commenced the other defendant was employed under contract and that the determination of his appeal might affect the rights thereunder, since a decision on the merits would be required.

SHENK, CURTIS, and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. Turney Fox, Judge.

Action by G. C. DeGarmo, a stockholder and director of a corporation, against A. Goldman and another, for the purpose of removing defendants as directors, in which the Golden State Glass Corporation was also made a defendant. The defendant corporation and defendant Goldman filed cross-complaints. The order allowing the corporation to file a cross-complaint was vacated, and, from a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Dismissal of appeal of defendant Goldman pursuant to stipulation of counsel denied; permission to file supplemental affidavit upon motion of defendant corporation to substitute counsel and the answer thereto denied; motion to substitute counsel denied without prejudice to application to renew same in superior court, and judgment reversed.

See, also, DeGarmo v. Shenberg, Cal. Sup., 102 P.2d 522.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, CURTIS, and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

Frank M. Gunter, of Los Angeles, for appellant Shenberg.

O. C. Sattinger, of Los Angeles, for appellant Golden State Glass Corporation.

Newby & Newby and Mitchell, Silberberg, Roth & Knupp, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Goldman.

Glen Behymer and Biby & Biby, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

The controversy between the parties to this litigation concerns the affairs of the Golden State Glass Corporation. G. C. DeGarmo, one of its stockholders, and also a director, under the authority of section 310 of the Civil Code, brought a suit against N. E. Shenberg and A. Goldman for the purpose of removing them as directors. As grounds for such removal, DeGarmo alleged that they had grossly abused their authority and had committed certain fraudulent and dishonest acts. In a second count of the complaint, it was alleged that the conduct of these directors had damaged the corporation in the sum of $10,000, and that the suit was prosecuted by the stockholder, on behalf of the corporation, because a demand upon its board of directors to sue would be useless.

The corporation was also named as a defendant, as required by the statute.

Upon the allegations of the complaint and evidence presented by affidavit, a receiver of the corporation was appointed, but the orders made in that regard were set aside. Golden State Glass Corporation v. Superior Court, 13 Cal.2d 384, 90 P.2d 75. The case is again before this court upon the separate appeals from the judgment prosecuted by each of the defendants, and a motion by the corporation, to substitute attorneys.

The corporation not only answered the allegations of the complaint but later filed a cross-complaint, pursuant to an order made upon motion, alleging that DeGarmo was indebted to it in the sum of $22,000 paid to him for services which were not rendered. Later, the order allowing the filing of this cross-complaint was vacated. Goldman also filed a cross-complaint for declaratory relief concerning the rights and duties of the directors generally and under certain agreements made by them in regard to control of the corporation. He asked the court to determine whether the corporation has three or four directors, and to dissolve the corporation in the event that it has four directors who are so deadlocked that the corporation cannot carry on its business.

Upon trial of these issues, judgment was rendered against Goldman upon his cross-complaint; also, that he and Shenberg each be removed from his respective office as a director of the corporation, and barred from re-election during the period prior to December 1, 1940.

The first question requiring consideration concerns the nature of the action, for unless it is one in equity, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal. Const. art. VI, sec. 4. The respondent urges that his action is one at law and that he has invoked a statutory remedy; the appellants take the position that section 310 of the Civil Code, as amended, only enlarged the equitable jurisdiction of the superior court.

[1] Since the distinctions between actions at law and proceedings in equity have been abolished, considerable difficulty has often been encountered in defining them, and with the enlargement of statutory remedies, it is unfortunate that the Constitution places jurisdiction upon such a theoretical basis. The doctrine that when classification is necessary, a court should look to the historical basis of the plaintiff's right under the English law in the light of such modifications as have taken place in this country (Philpott v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 512, 36 P.2d 635, 95 A.L.R. 990), is not always an accurate one. The equitable characteristics of the relief sought must be considered, for the courts of chancery have always claimed and exercised the right to provide a remedy for every wrong not cognizable by courts of law, and the complexities of the present social order have brought about conditions which were unknown when the English courts of equity were established. For example, statutory remedies to quiet title are said to be within the court's equitable jurisdiction. Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 62 P.2d 358, 117

A.L.R. 1; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 P. 249, 681.

An example of a statutory equitable remedy is section 315 of the Civil Code. Under this section, upon the filing of an action therefor by a shareholder of a corporation, the superior court shall have the power to try and determine the validity of the election or appointment of any director. Forty years ago, it was held that this statute enlarged the historical jurisdiction of chancery and provided an equitable remedy. Whitehead v. Sweet, 126 Cal. 67, 58 P. 376; see, also, Simpson v. Nielson, 77 Cal.App. 297, 246 P. 342.

Section 310 of the Civil Code, as originally enacted, fixed the conditions under which individual directors, or the entire board of directors, of a corporation may be removed from office by the stockholders. In 1931, this section was amended by the addition of subdivision 3, which provides that: "The superior court of the county where the principal office is located may at the suit of any shareholder or shareholders holding at least ten per cent of the number of outstanding shares with or without voting rights remove from office any director or directors in case of fraudulent or dishonest acts or gross abuse of authority or discretion with reference to the corporation, and may bar from re-election any director so removed for a period prescribed by the court. The corporation shall be made a party to such actions."

Although, strictly speaking, directors of a corporation are not trustees, it has been held that section 2230 of the Civil Code relating to trustees is also applicable to them. Bainbridge v. Stoner, 16 Cal.2d 423, 106 P.2d 423; Snediker v. Ayers, 146 Cal. 407, 80 P. 511. The statute invoked by the respondent not only provides for the removal of a director found to have been guilty of acts which would be cause for the removal of a trustee under the broad doctrines of equity, but also authorizes the court to "bar from re-election any director so removed for a period prescribed by the court." A determination to this effect is in the nature of an injunction. It is also closely analogous to the equitable remedy for the removal of a trustee provided by section 2283 of the Civil Code, and the relief which may be obtained is characteristic of a court of equity in that it acts on the person of the defendant. See Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 4th ed., vol. 1, page 163; Story's Equity Jurisprudence, 14th ed., vol. 1, page 91. Moreover, the statutory action against directors for misconduct is based upon a breach of their fiduciary duty to the corporation and it is said that under such circumstances equity has concurrent jurisdiction with law. 3 Fletcher Cyc. Corp., Perm. Ed., sec. 1270, page 749; see, also, Morawetz, Private Corporations, sec. 543, page 517.

[2] The respondent relies upon Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am.Dec. 508, where this court denied that equity had jurisdiction with regard to the removal of corporate officers of any description. But the court also said that "in all cases where this power has been exercised by a Court of Chancery, the jurisdiction has been expressly conferred by statute." 16 Cal. at page 149, 76 Am.Dec. 508. Section 310 of the Civil Code, enacted many years after this decision has supplied the statutory authority, although it may be noted that two later cases considered the right of a court to remove directors as being within the historical jurisdiction of equity. In the first of these, Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 P. 788, a stockholder brought suit for the purpose of protecting his interest in a corporation against certain acts of its directors which, it was alleged, were unauthorized. This court held that the relation of directors to the corporation which they serve is a fiduciary one, and "If a trustee is shown to have been unfaithful, the court * * * may remove him from his trust." 93 Cal. at page 32, 28 P. at page 791. At a later time the District Court of Appeal observed that "a court of equity may remove directors of a corporation, if deemed necessary, when they have proven unfaithful." California, etc., Ass'n v. Superior Court, 8 Cal.App. 711, 712, 97 P. 769, 770. Although each of these statements is dictum, they express the broad concept of equitable jurisdiction which is both historically justified and presently required in judicial administration if courts consider the protection of rights as of first importance.

A consequence of this holding is that the respondent is not entitled to the relief sought by him unless he came into the court of equity with clean hands. And this rule is applicable even if the evidence supports the findings of fact, which are favorable to him and in almost literal accordance with the allegations of the complaint.

The court found that Goldman, with the knowledge of Shenberg, in violation of an agreement made between the corporation and a glass workers' union relating to rates of pay, collected rebates from certain employees; that a certain employee was discharged for refusal to consent to such practice and a new employee employed who agreed to and did make such rebates. It also found that prior to July, 1935, Shenberg and Goldman instructed the corporation's bookkeeper to keep two sets of books, and make incomplete returns to a glass contractors' association, under which the corporation did not pay certain amounts due from it upon the basis of the true amount of business done.

Another finding of the court is that Goldman, as secretary of the corporation, with the knowledge of Shenberg, made false reports to the lessor of the premises upon which the business was carried on for the purpose of deceiving the lessor, and that upon the basis of such reports the lessor accepted a less amount of rent than should have been paid. Also, that in a number of reports made by Shenberg under contracts for work performed by the corporation in connection with projects of the Public Works Administration of the United States, he certified, on its behalf, that certain employees were not truthfully classified in accordance with the work performed by them and that the amount of their wages was misstated.

The court further found that Shenberg and Goldman proposed to some employees that they would be paid at the prevailing rate for work done on government jobs and at the union scale for other work, but that they could not work for the corporation unless they rebated to Goldman, for the benefit of Goldman and Shenberg, the amount paid over a specified sum each week. Some employees accepted this proposal and made payments accordingly, and Shenberg, knowing the facts, certified to the government agency that wages had been paid at the prevailing rate, concealing the refunds.

The acts enumerated in these findings certainly are contrary to those principles of honesty and fair dealing which should be followed by an officer or director of a corporation. But in determining whether the respondent should have the equitable relief which he seeks, the court of equity will also consider the facts concerning his conduct.

By their answers, Shenberg and the corporation denied that DeGarmo had been either ready, able or willing to perform the duties of his office. They pleaded that in 1936, he and the other officers entered into a contract concerning the management of the corporation, which included the amount of salary to be paid to each of them for his services. The salary of DeGarmo was fixed at $500 per month, and from 1935 through 1938 the corporation paid to him approximately $23,000, although he failed and refused to render any services therefor.

In this connection, they asserted, for almost three years prior to the commencement of the present suit, Shenberg and Goldman requested DeGarmo to perform his duties, but he refused to do so, in consequence of which such duties were performed by them. His salary, it is alleged, was discontinued solely because of his refusal to perform the duties prescribed for him as the president of the corporation.

In his cross-complaint Goldman alleged that DeGarmo had entered into certain contracts in writing by which he agreed that the number of directors of the corporation should be reduced from four to three and to cancel certain stock. According to Goldman, DeGarmo has refused to comply with this contract and contends that he is not bound by it although the other parties to it have fulfilled all of its terms.

Answering DeGarmo's charges concerning the use of false records of sale to deceive the glass association in regard to the amount of money due to it, Shenberg and the corporation pleaded that, according to the advice given them by DeGarmo, the agreement was void from its inception and in restraint of trade and no payment should be made under it. Concerning the assertedly false sales tax returns, both alleged that under an agreement concerning the division of duties between the officers of the corporation, the supervision of all of the financial records of the corporation, including the duty to make tax returns, was vested in DeGarmo and at no time did he alter the method of filing sales tax returns or the manner of maintaining the books of the corporation.

These answers present two issues as to the good faith of DeGarmo. One of them concerns his asserted failure to comply with the contract under which he agreed to perform certain services for the stipulated salary. The other relates to the charges made by him in which he asserted that his co-directors had been guilty of fraudulent practices.

Upon the first one, the trial court found in favor of DeGarmo, but the finding in this regard is not supported by the evidence. When called as a witness, in his own behalf, DeGarmo testified that he did not agree to perform any duties: "It was never intended that I should spend any particular time there except such time as I saw fit." He admitted that in a deposition he had replied to a question asking what he did for his salary: "It didn't make any difference whether I did anything or not * * * it was not the intention that I should do anything in particular."

But of even more importance is the fact that the trial court excluded evidence tending to prove that, for a long period of time, DeGarmo had not performed his duties as the president and director of the corporation. Upon cross-examination, he was asked: "Well, Mr. DeGarmo, since July 5, 1935, to the present time you have drawn from the corporation approximately $22,000 in salary, haven't you?" When the court sustained an objection to this question, counsel offered to prove that in the years 1936 and 1937 the respondent rendered no services of any appreciable nature for the corporation. This offer was rejected by a similar ruling of the court. In conclusion, counsel for the appellants asked DeGarmo whether since July, 1935, he had been ill a great part of the time and practically incapacitated from taking care of any business. This question was also held to be improper.

The exclusion of this evidence was error of a most serious nature. If the court had permitted DeGarmo to answer the questions propounded to him and other questions of the same nature relating to his own conduct and had found that he was guilty of willful and deliberate breach of contract, this would have been tantamount to a finding of bad faith within the meaning of the doctrine of clean hands.

[3-5] Upon the second issue of good faith, the court made no finding although it is the duty of a court of equity, upon any suggestion that a plaintiff has not acted in good faith concerning the matters upon which he bases his suit, to inquire into the facts in that regard. For it is not only fraud or illegality which will prevent a suitor from obtaining equitable relief. Any unconscientious conduct upon his part which is connected with the controversy will repel him from the forum whose very foundation is good conscience. Johnston v. Murphy, 36 Cal.App. 469, 172 P. 616. Nor will equity aid him who is guilty of breach of contract connected with the transaction concerning which he asks for a decree in his favor. Harrison v. Woodward, 11 Cal.App. 15, 103 P. 933.

The rule in this regard is a fundamental one. Bennett v. Brown, 206 Cal. 424, 274 P. 532; Young v. Young Holdings Corp., Ltd., 27 Cal.App.2d 129, 80 P.2d 723; Baar v. Smith, 97 Cal.App. 398, 275 P. 861. It was succinctly explained in Allstead v. Laumeister, 16 Cal.App. 59, 64, 116 P. 296, 297, where the court, quoting from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, said that "'whenever a party, who, as actor, seeks to set the judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, has violated conscience, or good faith, or other equitable principle, in his prior conduct, then the doors of the court will be shut against him in limine; the court will refuse to interfere on his behalf, to acknowledge his right, or to award him any remedy.'" See, also, Richman v. Bank of Perris, 102 Cal.App. 71, 282 P. 801.

[6-8] The action of equity courts in their interposition on behalf of suitors for any and every purpose and in their administration of any and every species of relief, is guided and regulated by this principle. It differs from the maxim, "he who seeks equity must do equity" in that the latter assumes that different equitable rights have arisen from the same subject matter or transaction, some in favor of plaintiff and some in favor of the defendant so that the plaintiff is required to recognize and provide for defendant's rights and his relief is granted only upon a showing that defendant's rights are protected. Therefore, as the very foundation of an equity forum is good conscience, any really unconscientious conduct connected with the controversy to which he is a party is sufficient justification for the court to close its doors to him, nor does the fact that a plaintiff may have no adequate remedy at law justify disregarding the maxim. Miller v. Kraus, Cal.App., 155 P. 834. The burden is on the one coming into a court of equity for relief to prove not only his legal rights but his clean hands, and he may not rely on any deficiencies that may be laid at the door of the defendants. Richman v. Bank of Perris, supra.

[9] According to the respondent's own testimony, approximately two years before he filed his suit, he was told that two sets of books were being kept for the purpose of defrauding the Glass Jobbers Association. About the same time, he discovered that false sales tax returns were being made to the state. Not long after, he was given information that the corporation was defrauding its lessor by means of false reports concerning the volume of business transacted upon the leased premises.

What did he do upon receiving this information? He testified that he talked with Shenberg, and once or twice with Goldman. He mentioned some of the matters to the bookkeeper but he did not ask her to show him the books. And although the corporation then employed an auditor who made monthly reports of its business, DeGarmo did not ask him to make any investigation of these matters.

The respondent says that he told Goldman and the bookkeeper that the irregularities must not continue. But he never made any investigations to determine whether or not his demands had been carried out, even though Shenberg told him that Goldman was continuing to make false reports for sales tax purpose. He did not communicate with the corporation's lessor or the state or the sales bureau in an attempt to rectify the fraud practiced upon them. And he permitted Goldman to negotiate a new lease with the lessor when he knew that it had been falsely informed concerning the income of the company.

During all of this time, DeGarmo was not only a director of the corporation; he was also its president. As holder of one-half the stock he personally benefited by every fraudulent act of Shenberg or Goldman that increased the assets of the company. And as the corporation's president, he was being paid a salary to supervise its office, handle its accounts, and take care of its tax matters. Under these circumstances, the failure of the trial court to find upon the material issue of DeGarmo's good faith requires a reversal of the judgment. Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 702, 154 P. 835; Matthiessen v. Grand, 92 Cal.App. 504, 268 P. 675.

[10, 11] Concerning the appeal of the corporation, the action of the trial court in striking its cross-complaint from the files and refusing to hear evidence thereon may not be reviewed on this appeal because the court has rendered no judgment determining the rights of the parties in that regard. But the corporation is a necessary party to the action authorized by section 310 of the Civil Code and, as such party, it may appeal from the judgment rendered although its rights are not specifically determined by that judgment. The allegations of its answer are substantially the same as those made by Shenberg and present the same issue as to the good faith of the respondent.

The motion to substitute attorneys for the corporation was made by Newby and Newby, who claim to represent it under a resolution authorizing their employment which was adopted on March 15, 1940, approximately one year after the judgment was entered. It is opposed by counsel who represented the corporation upon the trial of the action and is its attorney of record in this court, and also by counsel for Shenberg. Each assert that the judgment was not self-executing; that it was stayed when the appeals of Goldman and Shenberg were perfected; that DeGarmo and Crane, whom the complaint alleges were directors with Goldman and Shenberg when the suit was instituted, not constituting a majority of the board of directors, could not elect successors to Goldman and Shenberg; and that any purported action for that purpose is invalid.

[12] The effect of an appeal from a judgment is a matter of statutory regulation. Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that in cases such as the present one "the perfecting of an appeal stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from * * *. But such appeal does not stay proceedings, without a writ of supersedeas, where it adjudges the defendant guilty of usurping, or intruding into, or unlawfully holding a public office, civil or military, within the state * * *." It has been held that the exception in this statute does not apply to the judgment in an action to determine the validity of an election of a director of a corporation. Foster v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279, 47 P. 58. Also, in an earlier action to set aside the election of a director, this court decided that the effect of an appeal was "to leave the parties in the same situation, with reference to the rights involved in the action, as they were prior to the rendition of the judgment." Dulin v. Pacific Wood & Coal Co., 98 Cal. 304, 308, 33 P. 123, 125.

Considering the exception of the statute, the court at an early date reached the conclusion that an appeal from a judgment ordering a sheriff removed from office operated as a supersedeas because he was not charged with usurping or intruding into or unlawfully holding a public office. Covarrubias v. Board of Sup'rs of Santa Barbara County, 52 Cal. 622. And when the members of the board of supervisors were ordered removed from office the court declared that "the appeal, when well taken, 'ipso facto operated a supersedeas.'" Restating this determination more fully it said: "Whether, then, the judgment in such a case be considered a self-executing judgment or not, the appeal is equally self-executing, and restores the officer to his rights of office until its final determination." Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 485, 50 P. 644, 647.

The code provision is perfectly plain and this court has consistently applied its express terms as providing a statutory supersedeas in cases such as the present one. Accordingly the appeal of Goldman and Shenberg stayed the judgment appealed from and the resolution of March 15, 1940, directing a substitution of attorneys is ineffective for that purpose.

[13] However, upon a rehearing of the motion, DeGarmo presented for filing a supplement affidavit in which he states that further action has been taken by the corporation concerning a substitution of attorneys. The judgment removing Goldman and Shenberg from office barred them from re-election only until December 1, 1940. According to DeGarmo's affidavit, a meeting of the stockholders of Golden State Glass Corporation was held on December 5, 1940, at which time a new board of directors was elected. Thereafter a meeting of the directors then elected was held, at which time the resolution expressing the desire of the corporation to substitute Newby & Newby as its counsel was ratified and approved.

In an answering affidavit, on behalf of the corporation, facts are stated which are at variance with those presented by DeGarmo concerning the election of directors. These affidavits therefore present an issue of fact concerning the validity of the election, and a decision upon the motion would require a determination as to what persons, if any, had been duly elected as directors of the corporation. Under such circumstances, the record is not such as to enable this court to rule upon the motion.

There is also before the court a stipulation signed by Newby & Newby, who, on March 18, 1940, were substituted as counsel for the appellant Goldman, and counsel for DeGarmo, that the appeal of Goldman may be dismissed. When this stipulation was filed, the court reserved a ruling upon it in order that the effect of a dismissal upon the rights of other appellants might be considered in connection with the merits of the case.

[14, 15] The rules of this court provide: "An appeal may be dismissed by the court at any time, upon and in accordance with the written stipulation of the attorneys of record of the respective parties." Rule XXIV. This rule states a general principle of appellate procedure. An appellant may not dismiss his appeal as a matter of right; whether he will be permitted to do so is within the discretion of the court. And where the dismissal of the appeal of one of several appellants will prejudice his co-appellants, it may be properly refused. 3 Am.Jur. 322, 324; 4 C.J.S., Appeal and Error, § 1351, p. 1942. Nor should a court allow a litigant to dismiss his appeal when it appears that the effect of such an order would make it possible for the respondent to obtain the benefits of a judgment to which, in equity and good conscience, he is not entitled.

[16] The reason for the stipulation requesting a dismissal is undoubtedly shown by affidavits now before the court. From them it appears that since September 1, 1939, Goldman has been employed by the Golden State Glass Company as manager of its business department with the title "Assistant to the President." But upon a retrial, the court may determine that, because of his own derelictions of duty as the president and a director of the corporation, DeGarmo should not obtain equitable relief. If that should occur and, in the meantime, Goldman has been allowed to dismiss his appeal, DeGarmo will have accomplished at least a portion of an inequitable purpose.

Under these circumstances, the court will not dismiss the appeal of Goldman and the rights of the respective parties must be determined accordingly. Nor will it dismiss the appeals of Goldman and Shenberg upon the ground that the issues have become moot because the judgment barred each of them from re-election only during the period prior to December 1, 1940. The record shows that at the time this suit was commenced Shenberg was employed by the corporation under a contract and that the determination of his appeal may affect the rights thereunder. Also, it is apparent that the validity of actions taken by the directors appointed to succeed Goldman and Shenberg may be called into question as between them and DeGarmo or the corporation. The case must therefore be decided upon the merits. Couts v. County of San Diego, 139 Cal.App. 706, 34 P.2d 812.

The court will make no order dismissing the appeal of Goldman pursuant to the stipulation of counsel; permission to file the supplemental affidavit upon the motion of the corporation to substitute counsel and the answer thereto is denied as to each of them; the motion to substitute counsel is denied without prejudice to an application to renew the same in the Superior Court upon a new trial of the suit; and the judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., TRAYNOR, J., and PETERS, Justice pro tem., concurred.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

I agree that this court has original appellate jurisdiction in this case but I dissent from the judgment of reversal as to the defendant Shenberg and the corporation and from the refusal to dismiss the appeal of the defendant Goldman.

The defendant Shenberg's brief is devoted to disputed evidentiary matter and other discussion not material to the real issue in the case. Section 310 of the Civil Code provides for removal of directors from office in case of fraudulent or dishonest acts or gross abuse of authority or discretion with reference to the corporation. The complaint charged him and the defendant Goldman with certain fraudulent acts. The trial court found, among other things, that Shenberg, along with Goldman, was guilty of fraudulent practices in connection with dealings between the corporation and a certain labor union with which it had contractual relations; fraudulent practices in obtaining rebates from employees; fraudulent practices in dealing with its employees in connection with work being performed on Public Works Administration contracts; and fraudulent practices in keeping duplicate books in such a way that false reports were made to a trade association so that increased sales were made in violation of an agreement with that association. It was also found that as a result of the keeping of two sets of books, the rental for the premises occupied by the corporation which was based on the amount of sales, was fraudulently reduced to the minimum. In considering Shenberg's appeal from the judgment of removal, the issue is simply whether the evidence supports the findings as to the alleged fraudulent acts. A review of the record discloses that there is overwhelming evidence to support those findings, and the majority opinion does not even intimate otherwise.

As one of the acts of abuse of authority the complaint charged that on and after March 1, 1938, Goldman and Shenberg refused to permit DeGarmo to perform any of his duties as president of the corporation or to perform any services for or on behalf of the corporation and that they gave such instructions to the auditor as to cause the corporation to discontinue DeGarmo's salary. As a defense or justification for the discontinuance of the salary. the defendants offered evidence to show that since 1935 DeGarmo had been ill a great part of the time and had been so incapacitated that he could render no services to the corporation. The trial court sustained objections to this offer of proof yet found that DeGarmo had performed his duties until March 1, 1938. Defendant Shenberg now urges that this finding is not supported by the evidence and that it was prejudicial error to sustain the objections to the offer of proof that DeGarmo had not performed the services. If the stopping of the salary payments by the corporation because of the activities of this defendant were the only act of misconduct charged against him and if the judgment of removal were based solely on this alleged act of misconduct there might be some merit in the contention. However, as previously stated, numerous acts of misconduct were found which were supported by the evidence. It therefore becomes immaterial whether this one finding is supported by the evidence. Hertel v. Emireck, 178 Cal. 534, 174 P. 30; Young v. Young Holdings Corp., Ltd., 27 Cal.App.2d 129, 154, 80 P.2d 723; 2 Cal.Jur. 1028, 1029; 24 Cal.Jur. 942. Assuming that the trial court erred in sustaining the objection and that the finding with reference to DeGarmo's services is unsupported, such finding does not affect the judgment of removal and is not a ground for reversal. Forestier v. Johnson, 164 Cal. 24, 127 P. 156; Delannoy v. Quetu, 73 Cal.App. 627, 239 P. 71.

In answer to a question propounded by this court since the appeal was lodged here the defendant Shenberg now contends that the plaintiff DeGarmo was estopped from bringing the action for removal because of alleged acquiescence and participation in the alleged fraudulent acts. In other words, it is claimed that DeGarmo came into court with unclean hands. Assuming that the plea is available to Shenberg and that, as here, it may be raised without pleading and for the first time on appeal, this defendant is at once met with the conclusion of the trial court implicit in the findings and judgment that no basis in fact existed for the operation of such an estoppel. Whether it existed was a question of fact and the plaintiff is entitled to the intendments in his favor arising from the judgment. Unless the record shows as a matter of law that he actively participated in the fraudulent and dishonest acts or had knowledge of those acts and negligently failed to take any steps to remedy the situation this court is bound by the conclusions of the trial court.

DeGarmo denied any knowledge whatsoever of the fraudulent activities of Shenberg and Goldman until after the same were committed. He admitted acquiring information that false sales reports had been made to the Biddle Sales Corporation so that the defendant corporation could make more sales in violation of its agreement to the lessor bank to reduce rent; and to the state to reduce sales taxes. But he did not remain inactive after learning of these activities. He made strenuous and frequent objections to such a method of conducting the affairs of the corporation. He reprimanded Shenberg, Goldman, the bookkeeper, and the auditor, and demanded that the methods of reporting sales be changed. These efforts to correct the dishonest practices within the corporation were effective. In August, 1936, DeGarmo caused the corporation to withdraw from the glass association, thus terminating the false sales reports to that association. At the end of 1937 a new lease was made which provided that the rent was to be paid on a flat basis instead of being based on the amount of sales. There is little testimony in regard to the payment of sales taxes, but it clearly appears from the record that that difficulty had also been corrected before the commencement of the action.

There is no evidence whatsoever that DeGarmo actively participated in the fraudulent practices of Shenberg and Goldman. There is evidence that when DeGarmo obtained knowledge of such practices he protested against the continuance of the same. He received assurances that they would be discontinued and they were discontinued with the results above indicated. There is no basis in the record for the contention that the plaintiff was or is estopped from maintaining the action.

Appeal of A. Goldman.

The defendant Goldman, through his own attorney, filed a separate notice of appeal from the judgment removing him as a director of the corporation. He has filed no brief. He was charged with the same acts of misconduct and gross abuse of authority alleged against Shenberg and since he has filed no brief he may well be deemed to have abandoned his appeal. Furthermore, Goldman has presented to this court a written stipulation to dismiss his appeal with the request that an order of dismissal be made in accordance therewith. The stipulation is signed by his counsel of record and is approved by his own signature. It is also signed by counsel for the plaintiff.

Rule XXIV governing the practice and procedure in this court provides: "An appeal may be dismissed by the court at any time, upon and in accordance with the written stipulation of the attorneys of record of the respective parties."

Notwithstanding the foregoing rule the defendant Shenberg objects to an order of dismissal of Goldman's appeal on the ground that he would be prejudiced thereby. There is no merit in the objection. It may be assumed that under some circumstances an appellant should not be permitted, as of right, to dismiss his appeal when such dismissal would prejudice the rights of a co-defendant on a joint appeal. But Goldman's appeal is not of that character. It is a separate appeal which he had the right to take or not to take regardless of Shenberg's wishes. Having taken it he should have the right to control it under the circumstances here presented and to dismiss it under the rule.

The corporation is not a party aggrieved by this judgment. The judgment does not purport to adjudicate any of the corporation's rights. It is silent on that subject. It would not constitute a bar to any subsequent action the corporation might desire to bring against the plaintiff. Section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "Any party aggrieved may appeal * * *." Unless a party is aggrieved he has no right of appeal (Maxwell Hardware Co. v. Foster, 207 Cal. 167, 277 P. 327), and if taken it should be dismissed. Youle v. Thomas, 146 Cal. 537, 80 P. 714; 2 Cal. Jur. 217. A party aggrieved is one "having an interest recognized by law in the subject matter of the judgment, which interest is injuriously affected by the judgment." In re Estate of Colton, 164 Cal. 1, 127 P. 643, 645.

In my opinion the judgment removing the defendant Shenberg as a director of the corporation should be affirmed and the separate appeals of the defendants Goldman and the corporation should be dismissed.

CURTIS and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 894

In re RICHARDSON.

Cr. 4277.

Supreme Court of California.
March 19, 1942.

Attorney and client 🔑39

Where investigation and report by State Bar indicated that facts and circumstances surrounding conviction of attorney on his plea of guilty in Federal District Court did not disclose moral turpitude to have been involved in the commission of the offense, order to show cause issued in disbarment proceedings was discharged.

In Bank.

Proceedings in the matter of the disbarment of Jerome Lyman Richardson.

Order to show cause discharged.

See, also, 15 Cal.2d 536, 102 P.2d 1076.

Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, and Robert W. Kenny and Morris E. Cohn, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Philbrick McCoy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

It appearing upon investigation and report by the State Bar that the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction of Jerome Lyman Richardson, on his plea of guilty in action No. 27812 in the District Court of the United States in and for the Northern District of New York, do not disclose moral turpitude to have been involved in the commission of the offense, the order to show cause heretofore issued herein is discharged.

19 Cal.2d 659

LYON v. GOSS et al. (two cases).

L. A. 17182, 17594.

Supreme Court of California.
March 3, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

A decree in equity which is denominated "interlocutory" and directs further hearing for certain purposes may make so complete and final an adjudication of all issues of fact and law as to constitute a "final judgment" for purpose of appeal, since it is not the form of decree but the substance and effect of adjudication which is determinative of the finality thereof for purpose of appeal.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Judgment".

2. Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

Where no issue is left for future consideration except the fact of compliance or noncompliance with terms of first decree, that decree is "final"; but, where anything further in the nature of judicial action on part of court is essential to a final determination of rights of parties, decree is "interlocutory".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Decree" and "Interlocutory Decree".

3. Action 🔑6
Equity 🔑39(1)

In declaratory judgment action, trial court after entering interlocutory decree properly undertook to administer further equitable relief in accordance with general prayer of pleadings, since equity, having once obtained jurisdiction of a cause, will dispose of the entire controversy. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

4. Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

Trial court's undertaking to administer further equitable relief in accordance with general prayer of pleadings in action for declaration of rights under contract and lease did not have effect of establishing the character of first decree as purely interlocutory and unappealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

5. Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

In action for declaration of rights under a contract and lease, and for other equitable relief, a decree, which reserved for future consideration not only the matter of compliance or noncompliance with its terms but also issues pertaining to performance and prevention of performance of contract, and which did not even complete declaration of rights and duties of parties but expressly stated that no adjudication was made as to what their rights would be in event defendant was unable to perform, was "interlocutory" and hence not appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 1060.

6. Appeal and error 🔑80(3)

In action for declaration of rights under contract and lease wherein court entered an interlocutory decree, refusal on final hearing to make further adjudication contemplated by decree or to administer general equitable relief on ground that only issues properly triable were those essential to declaration of rights and that interlocutory decree constituted a complete declaration of such rights could not operate retroactively to alter purport of interlocutory decree and accord to it a finality so as to make such decree appealable. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑720

Where contract for lease of public market provided that lessee was immediately to commence to sublease spaces in market, subleases providing for payment of bonuses by prospective subtenants in addition to rentals, and lessor was to receive proportions of income received by lessee and lessee's interest in lease would be forfeited unless lessee procured subleases calling for payment of specified amount in bonuses by certain date, contract was not void for want of "mutuality".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mutuality".

8. Municipal corporations 🔑720

A contract for lease of public market, providing that lessee was to immediately commence to sublease spaces in market and that lessee's interest in lease would be forfeited unless lessee procured subleases calling for payment of specified amount in bonuses by certain date, was not void for want of mutuality even if contract was unilateral in its inception, where contract became mutual and binding upon partial performance by lessee, and upon execution for a valuable consideration by lessor of a waiver of certain obligations under contract.

9. Municipal corporations 🔑720

Under contract for lease of public market which required lessee to immediately commence to sublease spaces in market and to obtain certain bonuses and rentals from sublessees, whereby lessee was required to endeavor to replace canceled subleases within a reasonable time, what constituted reasonable time was a "question of fact" in determining which court properly considered conduct of parties, acquiescence of lessor and his administrator in delay and replacement, construction which parties placed upon contract, the date of commencement of lease, and administrator's failure to co-operate with lessee in securing of contracts and leases.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

10. Action 🔑6

In action for declaratory judgment construing a contract for lease of public market which required lessee to immediately commence to sublease spaces in market, it was improper for court to incorporate new obligations in contract or to couch interlocutory decree in terms of a decree in specific performance by giving lessee a specified time in which to perform. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Civ.Code, § 3390.

11. Action 🔑6

In action for declaratory judgment construing contract for lease of public market, specific performance of obligations could not be decreed where contract was one for rendition of personal services which neither party could be compelled to perform. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Civ.Code, § 3390.

12. Action 🔑6

In action for declaratory judgment construing a contract for lease of public market involving personal services, that contract was not susceptible of being made the subject of decree of specific performance in equity did not leave the parties without remedy or deprive trial court of its power to proceed with disposition of entire controversy since court might allow parties to amend pleadings and to litigate their respective legal claims for damages. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Civ.Code, § 3390.

◆

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement L. Shinn, Judge.

Action by Beach D. Lyon, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Homer Laughlin, deceased, against C. A. Goss and another, for a declaration of rights under a contract and lease and for other equitable relief. From an interlocutory decree, plaintiff appeals, and from a final judgment thereafter entered, named defendant appeals.

Appeal from interlocutory decree dismissed and final judgment reversed.

For prior opinions, see 115 P.2d 886, 115 P.2d 891.

Russ Avery and Harmel L. Pratt, both of Los Angeles, for Appellant in case No. 17182 and for Respondent in case No. 17594.

Bartlett & Kearney, Alfred L. Bartlett, and Wm. B. Gilroy, all of Los Angeles, for Respondents in case No. 17182 and for Appellant in case No. 17594.

CARTER, Justice.

This action was brought to secure a declaration of the rights of the parties under a contract and lease, and for other equitable relief. Plaintiff has appealed from an interlocutory decree (L. A. No. 17182), and defendant Goss from a final judgment entered five months later (L. A. No. 17594).

The premises affected by the contract and lease cover the ground floor of the Homer Laughlin Building, located at 315 South Broadway, Los Angeles. For many years prior to this litigation these premises had been occupied by the largest public market in Los Angeles. In it there were approximately seventy stalls occupied by sub-tenants operating meat and vegetable markets, grocery stores, and other concessions, and some seven hundred employees were engaged to serve the twenty to forty thousand customers who shopped there daily.

For years prior to March, 1929, the master lease upon the entire premises had been held by a corporation, the Grand Central Public Market, Inc., and the term of its then lease ran to October 31, 1939. For over twenty years defendant C. A. Goss had been interested in this corporation as organizer, president, or general manager. The corporation ordinarily followed the plan of sub-leasing the various stalls to subtenants, who operated individually but were subject to certain rules and to the supervision of the corporation.

On March 11, 1929, Mr. Goss and Homer Laughlin, the owner of the Homer Laughlin Building, entered into an agreement for a lease of the market property for a term of twenty years commencing November 1, 1939, and ending October 31, 1959. It will be noted that at the time of the execution of this contract the outstanding master lease had approximately ten years and eight months to run, and that immediately upon its termination, the new lease was to take effect.

The agreement of March 11, 1929, recited that Mr. Goss was desirous of securing a lease of the premises for the 1939-1959 term, and for it offered to pay Mr. Laughlin, as a bonus and in sole consideration of the execution of the lease and not as any part of the rental, the sum of $1, together with certain portions of the income which Mr. Goss would receive as lessee. The agreement further recited that Mr. Laughlin had accepted the offer, and had that day executed a lease to Mr. Goss for the twenty year term at a fixed rental of $2,280,000, payable at the rate of $9,500 a month on the first day of each month commencing November 1, 1939.

It was provided that the premises would continue to be used for a market without substantial change in the method of operation, and that Mr. Goss would proceed with diligence to procure sub-leases and contracts for sub-leases from responsible persons who wished to conduct merchandising establishments in the stalls and would agree to make bonus and rental payments to at least the minimum amount specified in a schedule attached to the agreement. According to the schedule, the total of all bonuses for subleasing the entire market would be $485,000. Of this sum Mr. Laughlin was to receive the first $205,000, and the balance was to be divided equally with Mr. Goss. The schedule also called for a total minimum rent from subleases of $17,410 a month, of which $9,500 was to be paid to Mr. Laughlin outright and the balance was to be divided equally with Mr. Goss.

The agreement declared that Mr. Laughlin entered into it because of special confidence and trust in Mr. Goss and his long experience in subleasing and managing the premises. Mr. Goss covenanted to endeavor immediately to secure subleases and sublease contracts and to continue the endeavor with diligence until all available space was subleased. He also agreed that he would procure contracts calling for the payment of bonuses in the sum of $75,000 by March 11, 1932, and additional contracts providing for the payment of further bonuses in the sum of $130,000 by March 11, 1935, or a total of $205,000, and that by the latter date he would also have subleases providing for a rental income over the term of not less than $9,500 a month, time being expressly made the essence of the agreement. In the event of his failure to so perform by March 11, 1935, it was provided that the agreement and all of his interest in the master lease and in all subleases and contracts should immediately cease and determine, and that all sums paid in should be held by Mr. Laughlin as liquidated damage for the breach. Provision was made for the deposit of all income with a trustee bank, to be disbursed in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and also for conditional assignment of the master lease to the trustee, to be held for the benefit of the one party or the other, conditioned upon performance or nonperformance of the agreement by Mr. Goss.

On April 23, 1929, the parties addressed a letter to the trustee which among other things provided that all subleases and contracts for subleases should be submitted to Mr. Laughlin for approval, and that without his approval none would be entered into by Mr. Goss or accepted by the trustee.

On May 28, 1930, the parties addressed another letter to the trustee wherein it was agreed that in case any of the contracts or subleases delivered to Mr. Laughlin as part of the $205,000 first to be delivered to him, should be cancelled by reason of the default of the maker, then such contracts would be replaced or made good to Mr. Laughlin from later contracts. It was also provided that the first available funds, if necessary, even those due Mr. Goss, could be used by the trustee to meet semi-annual installments on a mortgage outstanding against the Homer Laughlin Building, Mr. Goss to be later reimbursed for such advances.

Subsequent to execution of the agreement Mr. Goss proceeded with diligence to perform. Prior to April 20, 1931, he obtained and delivered to the trustee, and secured the approval of Mr. Laughlin on thirty-four contracts to enter into leases and thirty-four subleases with persons desiring to conduct merchandising stalls on the premises. The total amount of the bonuses to be paid under these contracts was $282,000, and the total monthly income provided by the subleases was $7,400.

On April 20, 1931, the parties addressed another letter to the trustee. It called attention to the provision of the agreement that in event of failure by Mr. Goss to obtain the specified contracts and subleases by March 11, 1935, his interest should cease and determine. It then stated: "The second party (C. A. Goss) has at this time secured sufficient subleases and contracts to enter into subleases to assure the performance of the covenants and conditions of said trust agreement on his part to be kept and performed and it has now been agreed that first party (Homer Laughlin) now waives said provision of the trust agreement and from this date said trust agreement shall be held to be a binding contract and it is agreed that no default thereof can be declared by first party (Homer Laughlin) because of any present or future violation or failure to perform the provisions of said trust agreement hereinbefore and in this letter set out." The letter further provided that in consideration of the premises, it was agreed that all bonus and sublease income received by the trustee, over necessary expenses, should be paid to Mr. Laughlin until he should have received $205,000 net, and that in case the Grand Central Public Market, Inc., should pay $13,500 advance rent, it should be turned over to Mr. Laughlin. This advance rental was subsequently paid.

On December 27, 1932, Mr. Laughlin died, and Beach D. Lyon, plaintiff herein, was appointed administrator with the will annexed of his estate. Meanwhile an economic depression had settled upon the country, twenty-six of the thirty-four contracts for subleases were in default, and at least twenty-three of them had to be cancelled. The trustee received only $65,692.42 in bonuses, including installments on defaulted contracts, of which it paid $43,800.64 to Mr.

Laughlin, and after the deduction of expenses retained a balance of $14,258.69. The contracts in default were not replaced. In 1937 Mr. Goss procured from a responsible person an additional contract for a sublease and $8,000 bonus, accompanied by a $1,000 deposit, but the administrator refused to approve the transaction. This refusal, according to findings of the trial court, was unreasonable and unjustified but it was not made in bad faith to prevent, nor did it prevent further performance by Mr. Goss of the agreement of 1929.

As the time approached for commencement of the term of the 1939-1959 master lease, the necessity for procuring subleases for the remaining stalls became pressing. On June 30, 1938, the administrator brought the present action against Mr. Goss and one of his associates. The prayer of the complaint was for a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under agreement of 1929, and for such other and further relief as should be just and equitable. Defendant Goss alleged in his answer that the agreement was valid, subsisting, and had not been forfeited, and asked that plaintiff be restrained from delaying or hindering performance, and for general relief.

Trial of the cause was completed and findings were entered on March 2, 1939, less than eight months prior to the commencement date of the term of the master lease. In addition to finding facts as already set forth, the trial court defined the rights and duties of the parties and found the further facts to be in substance as follows:

Defendant Goss failed to replace or make good any of the contracts for leases cancelled by reason of the default of the makers, and failed to continue with diligence his endeavor to secure contracts, but this failure was due in part to plaintiff's refusal to accept contracts submitted for approval, and in part to the acquiescence by Mr. Laughlin and by plaintiff in delays in securing additional contracts, by their construction of the agreement of 1929 and modifications thereof, and by their failure to insist upon strict performance. The waiver clause embodied in the letter of the parties of April 20, 1931, was executed for a valuable consideration passing to Mr. Laughlin. By it defendant "was relieved of his obligation to secure contracts for leases with bonuses of $205,000, payable on or before October 31, 1939, and monthly rentals of $9,500 and his obligation to replace or make good contracts which were cancelled within the periods stipulated in the contract, that is to say, bonus contracts in the amount of $75,000 by the 11th day of March, 1932, and contracts in the additional amount of $130,000 on March 11, 1935; but he was not relieved of his obligation to continue diligently in an endeavor to replace or make good contracts that had been cancelled, nor was he relieved of his obligation to replace and make good said contracts within a reasonable time."

In determining what would be a reasonable time, the court stated that consideration should be given to the conduct of the parties, the acquiescence of Mr. Laughlin and plaintiff in the delay in replacement, and plaintiff's refusal to accept the contract submitted for approval or to cooperate with defendant. In view of these circumstances, the court found, a reasonable time had not elapsed within which the contracts must be replaced or made good and "that a reasonable time therefor would be four months after the filing of an interlocutory decree" in stated terms.

It was the intention and agreement of the parties, the court further found, that defendant should continue his efforts until all space in the market was rented, but it was not their understanding that if he failed to rent all space before November 1, 1939, his rights and interests under the agreement of 1929 should terminate. In view of the conduct of the parties it would be inequitable to terminate his rights immediately, without affording him an opportunity to fulfill his obligations, but as it was doubtful that he would be able to obtain the requisite contracts and leases, it would likewise be inequitable to allow him more than four months after the filing of the interlocutory decree within which to obtain contracts with bonuses of not less than $205,000, payable on or before October 31, 1939, for leases calling for monthly rentals of at least $9,500. In view of the time which had elapsed during which no acceptable contracts were secured, and in order to show the responsibility of the prospective subleases, each contract for a sublease should be accompanied by a deposit of not less than 10 per cent of the total bonus to be paid, with an additional 10 per cent payable within sixty days after acceptance of the contract and sublease by plaintiff, and the balance of the bonus, without interest, should be payable on or before October 31, 1939. If within four months after entry of the interlocutory decree, defendant should obtain contracts and subleases from responsible tenants upon the specified terms, this would constitute a substantial performance by defendant up to that time of the agreement of 1929, and he would thereafter have the right, so long as he used diligent efforts, to continue to secure contracts and leases for all unrented stalls. The court intentionally and expressly failed to adjudicate or define the rights of the parties, or what would constitute a substantial performance of the agreement of 1929, or under what circumstances it might be inequitable to compel further performance, in the event of a substantial failure on the part of defendant to rent all of the stalls upon the specified terms.

On the same day that the findings were filed, March 2, 1939, an "Interlocutory Judgment and Decree" was entered. It adjudged that the agreement of 1929 was still in force and that defendant was entitled to an opportunity to fulfill it; that he should be allowed four months thereafter within which to procure and submit contracts and subleases upon the terms set forth in the findings, and that plaintiff should, without delay, approve all such contracts and subleases offered by responsible tenants; that in the event of performance to the required extent within the four months' period, defendant should be given the right to proceed with diligence to rent the remaining stalls; that in the event of non-performance to the required extent within four months, or failure thereafter to continue diligent efforts to rent remaining stalls, the right of defendant should immediately cease and determine. Lastly, provision was made for a further hearing at the end of the four months and it was expressly declared that "no adjudication is made as to what the rights of the parties would be in the event defendant Goss should be unable to secure contracts and subleases for all of the stalls in the market or the bonuses and rentals set out in the schedule."

Plaintiff appealed from this interlocutory decree on the theory that it constituted a final judgment and was therefore appealable (L. A. No. 17182). Defendant did not appeal.

On April 14, 1939, well within the four months period, defendant filed a petition for an order directing plaintiff to show cause why he should not be ordered to approve contracts for subleases which had been submitted to him, and why the four months period should not be extended. The order to show cause was issued and hearings were had on it on April 21st and 28th. The court found that in an effort to comply with the terms of the interlocutory decree, and in an endeavor to secure subleases with responsible persons, defendant had acted and was continuing to act with diligence; that he had employed experienced assistants, advertised in newspapers, and written to and made personal contact with many present and prospective tenants. Subleases had been secured from seven different parties, but plaintiff had rejected six and failed to act on the remaining one. All of prospective tenants save one were responsible parties, and plaintiff was not justified, with the one exception, in failing to approve the proffered contracts and subleases. The court also found that plaintiff, being familiar with the provisions of the interlocutory decree, had wilfully failed to comply with it by neglecting and refusing to approve subleases, that he had also failed to cooperate with defendant in his endeavor to secure contracts, and that these facts had become a matter of general information to present and prospective tenants of the market. With respect to the charge that such wilful misconduct on the part of plaintiff had materially affected defendant's progress in performing and that it justified an extension of the four months period, the court expressly reserved its finding until the final hearing provided by the interlocutory decree.

In July, 1939, after expiration of the four months, plaintiff made a motion, supported by affidavits, for further hearing and for entry of a final judgment decreeing that because of defendant's failure to perform, all of his rights under the agreement of 1929 had ceased and determined. Defendant offered counter-affidavits to prove that his failure was due to plaintiff's interference and prevention of performance. The matter came on for hearing on August 8, 1939, and after some discussion the court stated: "You had better offer your proof. I think this hearing now may be considered to be a resumption of the trial of the case as part of the trial." Oral evidence was thereupon introduced by both sides, by plaintiff to prove nonperformance by defendant, and by defendant to prove prevention of performance by plaintiff. The court, however, declined to try the issue of prevention and performance and, on motion of plaintiff, it struck out all testimony on behalf of defendant on that subject. Findings were then filed.

The court found that contracts and subleases in good standing procured before and after entry of the interlocutory decree provided for bonuses in no more than the sum of $106,400 and for monthly rentals of no more than $3,545; that defendant had submitted further contracts and subleases, but plaintiff had refused to approve them and would not approve any further contracts; that defendant had offered to prove that plaintiff's refusal had interfered with his efforts to perform but that the court had refused to try that question for the reason that "it was not in issue and its determination was not essential to a declaration of the respective rights of the parties. * * *"

From these findings the court concluded as a matter of law that neither plaintiff nor defendant had complied with the terms of the interlocutory decree, that the only issues properly triable were those essential to a declaration of the rights of the parties, and that the interlocutory decree constituted a complete declaration of those rights. A final decree was thereupon entered adjudging "that neither party have or recover of the other any relief other than a declaration of their respective rights as set forth in the interlocutory decree heretofore made and entered and the findings of fact and conclusions of law this day made and filed, after trial had pursuant to the terms of the interlocutory decree."

Defendant appealed from this final decree (L. A. No. 17594). Plaintiff did not appeal but reasserted his position that the interlocutory decree constituted a final judgment and that the points made by him on his appeal from that decree were well taken.

[1, 2] The first question to be considered is that of the nature of the interlocutory decree. A decree in equity which is denominated "interlocutory" and directs a further hearing for certain purposes, may make so complete and final an adjudication of all issues of fact and law as to constitute a "final judgment" within the meaning of that term as used in the statutes concerning appeals. The problem of determining whether a particular decree is essentially interlocutory and nonappealable, or whether it is final and appealable is often a difficult one. Two conflicting lines of authority bearing upon the subject are reviewed in Security-First Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 132 Cal.App. 683, 23 P.2d 1055. See also Perry v. West Coast Bond & Mortg. Co., 136 Cal.App. 557, 29 P.2d 279; Los Angeles A. T. Co. v. Superior Court, 94 Cal.App. 433, 271 P. 363; Johnson v. Solomons, 124 Cal.App. 43, 12 P.2d 140; Hollar v. Saline Products, Inc., 3 Cal.2d 80, 43 P.2d 273; Heywood v. Sooy, 4 Cal.2d 352, 353, 49 P.2d 826; Middleton v. Finney, 214 Cal. 523, 6 P.2d 938, 78 A.L.R. 1104; Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 114 P. 579; Krotzer v. Clark, 178 Cal. 736, 174 P. 657; Maxwell v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 294, 34 P.2d 475; Clement v. Duncan, 191 Cal. 209, 215 P. 1025; 2 Cal.Jur., secs. 18, 23, pp. 137–150. It is not the form of the decree but the substance and effect of the adjudication which is determinative. As a general test, which must be adapted to the particular circumstances of the individual case, it may be said that where no issue is left for future consideration except the fact of compliance or noncompliance with the terms of the first decree, that decree is final, but where anything further in the nature of judicial action on the part of the court is essential to a final determination of the rights of the parties, the decree is interlocutory.

The present action was brought under the declaratory relief statute (Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1060), which specifically provides that a party "may ask for a declaration of rights or duties * * * and the court may make a binding declaration of such rights or duties, whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time," and the declaration "shall have the force of a final judgment." Under this statute the court could have terminated the action at the time of entry of the interlocutory decree by confining its provisions to a declaration and adjudication of the rights and duties of the parties without reservation for future consideration of matters requiring further judicial action. The interlocutory decree would then have had the force of a final appealable judgment.

[3-5] The court, however, undertook to administer further equitable relief in accordance with the general prayer of the pleadings. This was not improper, for equity, having once obtained jurisdiction of a cause, will dispose of the entire controversy (10 Cal.Jur., sec. 40, p. 496), but it did have the effect of establishing the character of the first decree as purely interlocutory and nonappealable. In other words, that decree reserved for future consideration not only the matter of compliance or noncompliance with its terms, but also issues pertaining to performance and prevention of performance of the agreement of 1929; in fact, it did not even complete the declaration of the rights and duties of the parties but expressly stated that no adjudication was made as to what their rights would be in the event defendant was unable to secure contracts and subleases at the figures specified in the schedule. That the decree thus lacked finality and called for further judicial action on the part of the court is obvious.

[6] It is true that when the time came for a final hearing and the entry of a final decree, the court refused to entertain the evidence adduced on the issue of prevention of performance, and attempted to restrict its adjudication to a mere affirmance of the declaration of rights and duties as set forth in the interlocutory decree, to the same effect as if that decree had in fact been final. That is, the court refused on the final hearing to make the further adjudication contemplated by the provisions of the interlocutory decree, or to administer general equitable relief designed to dispose of the entire controversy, but instead concluded as a matter of law that the only issues properly triable were those essential to a declaration of the rights of the parties, that the interlocutory decree constituted a complete declaration of those rights, and that neither party should have or recover any other relief. However, this attempted restriction and wrongful procedure could not operate retroactively to alter the purport of the interlocutory decree and accord to it a finality which it did not possess.

Although the attempted appeal of plaintiff from the interlocutory decree (L.A. No.17182) was ineffectual and must be dismissed, a consideration of the propriety of that decree is necessary to a proper disposition of defendant's appeal from the final judgment (L.A.No.17594). Therefore, the entire record will be reviewed on the merits and the contentions made by plaintiff in his briefs on appeal L.A.No. 17182 will be considered briefly both in answer to defendant's points on appeal L.A. No.17594, and for the guidance of the trial court on further hearing of the cause.

[7, 8] A primary question is that of the validity of the agreement of 1929. Plaintiff contends that it is void for want of mutuality in that it did not bind defendant to any obligation or to the performance of any act; the only promise on his part was to endeavor to secure contracts and subleases, and in event of his failure, no legal liability was imposed upon him; he was free to abandon the enterprise at any time.

The consideration recited in the agreement is payment of $1 by defendant to Mr. Laughlin, together with proportions of the income to be received by defendant from his use and possession of the premises under the master lease, and execution by Mr. Laughlin to defendant of the master lease. It is also provided that defendant will procure contracts and subleases with responsible persons at scheduled bonus and rental prices, that he will carry liability and other insurance, and that he will immediately place funds and sublease transactions in the trustee bank for handling in accordance with further terms of the contract. The forfeiture clause provides for termination of the agreement upon defendant's failure to perform in the manner specified.

These provisions appear to impose mutual and reciprocal obligations constituting a valid and binding agreement. But even assuming that the point is an arguable one and that the contract was unilateral in its inception, that is, an offer of Mr. Laughlin to lease the premises to defendant if defendant performed certain undertakings in connection with subleasing, it is clear that the agreement became mutual, valid, and binding upon partial performance by defendant prior to April 20, 1931, and the execution on that date for a valuable consideration of the waiver agreement hereinbefore quoted. Rest. of the Law, Contracts, vol. 1, p. 33, sec. 45; Los Angeles Traction Co. v. Wilshire, 135 Cal. 654, 67 P. 1086; Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 26 P. 906; Noble v. Reid-Avery Co., 89 Cal.App. 75, 264 P. 341; Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Lane Mortg. Co., 18 Cal.App.2d 431, 63 P.2d 1189; Caspary v. Moore, 21 Cal.App.2d 694, 70 P.2d 224; 6 Cal.Jur. 211–215, secs. 139–141.

[9] A further contention is that defendant abandoned or breached the contract subsequent to the death of Mr. Laughlin in 1932. In this connection the trial court properly construed the waiver agreement as relieving defendant of his obligation to secure, prior to March 11, 1935, contracts for $205,000 in bonuses, and subleases providing a monthly rental of $9,500, but as not relieving defendant of his obligation to continue diligently in an endeavor to replace or make good the cancelled contracts within a reasonable time. The question of what constituted a reasonable time was of course one of fact. In determining it the court properly took into consideration the conduct of the parties, the acquiescence of Mr. Laughlin and plaintiff in defendant's delay in replacement, the construction which the parties themselves placed upon the contract, that is, that it did not require defendant to replace or make good the contracts prior to October 31, 1939, the date of commencement of the term of the master lease, and also to plaintiff's failure to approve the contract and lease submitted to him by defendant and his failure to cooperate with defendant in the securing of contracts and leases. Weighing these factors, the court concluded that on the date of entry of the findings and interlocutory decree, a reasonable time within which defendant might perform had not yet elapsed.

Although the evidence adduced on a retrial might compel a different conclusion, the present record affords sufficient support for these findings. This is so even if it be conceded that the limited authority of plaintiff, as administrator, would not have empowered him to take any action after the death of Mr. Laughlin to revitalize, vary, or waive the performance of the contract provisions. Eliminating this factor, there still remained as a basis for the findings, the effect of the waiver agreement, of Mr. Laughlin's acquiescence in delay in the face of the continuing economic depression, and of defendant's efforts to complete performance despite plaintiff's refusal to cooperate.

The further finding that a reasonable time within which to perform would be four months after filing of the interlocutory decree, and that it would be a substantial performance if defendant within that period should secure from responsible tenants contracts for bonuses to the amount of $205,000, and subleases providing a monthly rental of $9,500, each contract to be accompanied by a 10 per cent bonus deposit, with another 10 per cent payable in 60 days, and the balance before October 31, 1939, and if defendant would thereafter continue with diligence to endeavor to rent all remaining space, is subject to the criticism that the court thereby made a new contract for the parties instead of construing the existing contract.

The action being one for declaratory relief, the court could have concluded its adjudication with its declaration of the rights of the parties and its finding that the contract was still in full force and effect and that a reasonable time for performance had not elapsed. The decree would then have had the force of a final judgment. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1060, supra.

[10] Or if the court felt that a further exercise of its equitable jurisdiction was necessary, it could have provided by interlocutory decree for a further hearing to be held prior to the date of commencement of the term of the master lease, but without the above criticized restrictive provisions relative to performance. On further hearing it could then have appropriately determined whether the contract was still in force, whether under intervening circumstances a reasonable time for performance had elapsed, whether defendant had performed, or whether his performance had been hindered or prevented by plaintiff. Any additional declaration required to completely define the rights and duties of the parties, and any additional adjudication designed to dispose of the entire controversy could likewise have been made.

It was not proper, however, for the court to incorporate new obligations in the contract, or to couch the interlocutory decree in terms of a decree of specific performance by giving defendant a specified time in which to perform and expressly ordering plaintiff to "without delay approve all contracts for subleases and subleases offered by responsible tenants" and to "promptly notify defendant Goss and the tenants of such acceptance."

[11] That the obligations are not such as can be specifically enforced by an affirmative decree is clear. Aside from other reasons suggested, such as lack of mutuality of remedy (Civ.Code, sec. 3386), inadequacy of consideration (Rest., Contracts, sec. 367), etc., it is obvious that the agreement is one for the rendition of personal services which neither party can be compelled to perform (Civ.Code, sec. 3390; Rest., Contracts, sec. 379).

It obligates defendant to perform unique personal sales services, as witness the recital, "This contract is entered into by first party (Laughlin) because of his special confidence and trust in second party (Goss) and second party's long experience in subleasing and managing the premises under leases now in existence and because of second party's peculiar relation and acquaintance with those persons who now conduct mercantile establishments in the leased premises and who are prospective sub-tenants under the terms of this contract." It obligates plaintiff to accept or reject contracts and subleases submitted for approval, basing his action on his opinion as to the responsibility of the prospective tenants. Although, by virtue of a special provision of the contract, this service is one which plaintiff, as administrator, was empowered to perform after the death of Mr. Laughlin (11b Cal.Jur. 194, sec. 796), it requires an exercise of personal judgment and a degree of cooperation in making the enterprise successful, which cannot be compelled by court decree.

[12] The fact that the contract, although valid, is not susceptible of being made the subject of a decree of specific performance in equity does not leave the parties without remedy or deprive the trial court of its power to proceed with a disposition of the entire controversy. If the court concludes, on retrial, as it did from the evidence offered on the further hearing herein, that a reasonable time for performance of the contract by defendant has elapsed, or that plaintiff has consistently refused and will continue to refuse to approve any new contracts or subleases, and that the agreement has terminated, then it may allow the parties, if they so desire, to amend their pleadings and to litigate their respective legal claims for damages, an issue which will be determined by evidence of whether defendant breached the agreement and failed to perform because of his inability to meet its terms, or whether such failure was due to plaintiff's interference, and refusal to cooperate, or to approve contracts and subleases.

A similar situation was presented in Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., 13 Cal.2d 158, 172, 88 P.2d 698, 89 P.2d 386, 387, where a contract was declared to be valid but not susceptible of specific enforcement by affirmative decree, and for this reason it was there held that "the court would be constrained to deny equitable relief and to leave the parties to assert their legal rights under the contract." The opinion states: "Although the equitable remedy is not available to plaintiff, nevertheless the contract sued upon is valid and sufficiently certain to warrant the trial court in entertaining a plea for the recovery of damages [referring to cited cases]. The complaint, while praying for 'all just and proper relief', was not framed in the alternative to seek the legal remedy for breach of the contract as a whole. * * * Under present code procedure, which permits a party to litigate his right to legal and equitable relief in the same action, and by amendment to ask a change of remedy, there appears to be no reason why plaintiff, if so advised, should not apply for permission to amend its pleading. Farnsworth v. Hunter, 11 Cal.2d 27, 77 P.2d 840; Peters v. Binnard, 219 Cal. 141, 25 P.2d 834; Pascoe v. Morrison, 219 Cal. 54, 25 P.2d 9; Ahlers v. Smiley, 163 Cal. 200, 124 P. 827; 10 Cal.Jur., p. 10, sec. 7; note, 22 C.L.R., p. 208. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to damages, or to what extent, is not here intimated. That is a matter to be proved upon trial of the issue."

The appeal from the interlocutory decree is dismissed. The final judgment is reversed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 676

STEINER et al. v. LONG BEACH LOCAL NO. 128 OF OIL WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION et al.

L. A. 17777.

Supreme Court of California.

March 3, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 1, 1942.

1. Torts 🔑10

Workmen may lawfully combine to exert various forms of economic pressure upon an employer, provided object sought to be accomplished has a reasonable relation to betterment of labor conditions and the workmen act peaceably and honestly.

2. Constitutional law 🔑90, 91

The right of workmen to combine and to exert various forms of economic pressure in negotiating with an employer is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution as an incident of "freedom of speech", press, and assemblage.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Freedom of Speech".

3. Torts 🔑10

The right of workmen to combine to exert economic pressure upon an employer in seeking betterment of labor conditions is not dependent upon existence of a labor controversy between employer and his employees.

4. Constitutional law 🔑90

The constitutional guaranty of "freedom of speech", under which workmen may exert economic pressure upon an employer to obtain improved labor conditions, extends no further than to confer upon workmen the right to publicize the facts of an industrial controversy by peaceful and truthful means, and does not permit resort to acts of violence, physical intimidation, or false statement.

5. Injunction 🔑101(3)

Where workmen seeking betterment of labor conditions depart from bounds of peaceful persuasion and resort to acts of violence, courts are authorized and required to enjoin acts of violence or acts which amount to physical intimidation.

6. Injunction 🔑101(3)

The inherent power of a court of equity to enjoin acts of violence and physical intimidation by workmen seeking improvement of labor conditions is not limited to imposition of a restraint against violent and unlawful conduct, but may, under given conditions, be exercised to enjoin future picketing in any form where future picketing would have a coercive influence because of background of violence in controversy.

7. Constitutional law 🔑90

Where past picketing has become so irrevocably blended with acts of violence and physical intimidation as to justify belief that future picketing would result in continuance of illegal acts, an injunction restraining a labor organization from all picketing lies within equitable power of court and does not infringe right of "freedom of speech".

8. Injunction 🔑101(3)

The rule that all picketing may be enjoined where past picketing has been irrevocably blended with acts of violence and physical intimidation is particularly applicable where violent picketing was continued in defiance of a preliminary injunction.

9. Injunction 🔑101(3)

An injunction prohibiting all picketing may not be based upon isolated acts of violence or other unlawful conduct, but where picketing has been generally lawful, although accompanied by infrequent illegal acts not of a serious character, only the unlawful conduct will be enjoined.

10. Torts 🔑10

The use of vile and abusive language, threats of violence, and the shadowing of employer's business callers, employees, and employee's wives, amount to "physical intimidation" which may not be justified under any principles governing rights of persons engaged in labor disputes.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Physical Intimidation".

11. Injunction 🔑101(3)

Evidence that representatives of union in connection with picketing defendants' place of business resorted to vile language, threats, and shadowing of defendants' business callers and employees, justified injunction prohibiting all picketing about premises of the defendants and their customers, notwithstanding that acts of actual physical assault and damage were rare.

12. Appeal and error 🔑1056(1)

In suit to enjoin union and its members from picketing, refusal of evidence that union's officers instructed pickets to refrain from violence or intimidation was not prejudicial error, where much of violence and disorderly conduct in connection with picketing was committed during presence at employers' plant of the officers who allegedly gave the instructions, and those officers admitted participation in shadowing of employees and customers.

13. Appeal and error 🔑1056(1)

It is not reversible error to exclude evidence which could not affect the decision upon a material fact.

14. Trade unions 🔑8

Where picketing plan was planned and carried out by union, union was responsible for acts of its pickets committed within scope of their agency and within sanction of its officers.

15. Injunction 🔑101(3)

In determining whether injunction prohibiting all picketing in connection with labor dispute is proper, no logical distinction may be drawn between picketing enmeshed with actual violence and picketing carried on with threatened violence and physical intimidation.

16. Injunction 🔑101(1)

Although violence and intimidation accompanying picketing by union and its members justified injunction prohibiting all picketing and the boycotting of employers' customers, union and its members should not have been prohibited from doing acts which could be done peacefully without picketing, and injunction was improper insofar as it enjoined them from inducing anyone to refrain from making sales to employers and from interfering in contractual relations between employers and their employees.

17. Damages 🔑1, 163(1)

The principle underlying right to damages for injury is that person injured is entitled to compensation commensurate with his loss, and, to recover more than merely nominal damages, the injured person must not only prove infringement of a legal right, but the items of damage suffered by him.

18. Damages 🔑163(4)

The rule that amount and items of pecuniary damage are not presumed, but must be proved to justify recovery of more than nominal damages, is applicable to a tortious interference with a business.

19. Damages 🔑103

Where an established business is wrongfully interrupted and injured, the proper measure of damages is the diminution in value of business traceable to the wrongful act as reflected by loss of profits, expenses incurred, or similar concrete evidences of injury.

20. Injunction 🔑197

Where claim for damages in suit to enjoin picketing is based upon an alleged interference with business, personal discomfort and annoyance are not compensable elements of damage.

21. Injunction 🔑197

In suit to enjoin picketing and to obtain damages upon theory that union and its members had wrongfully interfered with plaintiffs' right to carry on a lawful business, award of damages exceeding mere nominal damages was improper, where it was admitted that there had been no physical injury and no loss of profits was shown.

CARTER, J., GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred Miller, Judge pro tem.

Suit by Fred Steiner and others against the Long Beach Local No. 128 of the Oil Workers International Union and others to enjoin the defendants from picketing or boycotting by means of force, violence, or intimidation. From a judgment granting an injunction and awarding damages, the defendants appeal.

Judgment, insofar as it granted an injunction, modified and as so modified affirmed, and the judgment insofar as it awarded damages reversed.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

D. A. Boone and James T. Satchell, both of Long Beach, for appellants.

Pierson & Block, Samuel P. Block, and Ralph Pierson, all of Compton, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Upon a complaint charging that officers and members of a labor union had entered into a conspiracy to picket the refinery of the Elm Oil Company and that they were conducting both picketing and boycotting by means of false representations and with acts of violence, a preliminary injunction issued. By that order, the superior court enjoined the union and its agents from picketing or boycotting by means of force, violence or intimidation. Upon a trial the injunction was made permanent and its terms were broadened to prohibit all picketing and boycotting. Damages in the sum of $2,500 were also awarded. The appeal is from that judgment.

The controversy between the parties arose over the demand made upon the owners of the refinery to sign a closed shop contract with a labor union, and the question for decision concerns the right of an employer to injunctive relief when picketing goes beyond the bounds of peaceful persuasion. More specifically, the court is called upon to determine whether or not all picketing and boycotting may be enjoined when an employer shows that those acting in behalf of the union have used violence, physical intimidation and other means of illegal coercion in the endeavor to attain their purpose.

The respondents, as partners, own and operate a business in the city of Long Beach. Under the firm name of Elm Oil Company they refine crude petroleum oil and sell the products obtained therefrom. The appellants are Long Beach Local No. 128 of the Oil Workers International Union, its officers and some of its members.

The union is an affiliate of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

By their complaint, the respondents alleged that the appellants entered into a conspiracy to injure and damage their business by picketing their premises; that no labor dispute existed between them and their employees, but on the contrary, the latter were entirely satisfied with respect to hours of labor, working conditions, wages, and all other matters connected with their employment; that their employees were not members of the C. I. O. union, were not desirous of becoming members thereof, and had expressed their desire to continue work under terms of their own choosing without the assistance of or interference from any labor organization; that the appellants, for the purpose of unionizing the respondents' business and to force their employees to join the union, caused pickets to be stationed about their premises; and that such picketing was conducted by means of violence, threats, intimidation, coercion, menacing conduct, and false representations. These asserted acts of unlawful conduct were set forth with particularity.

Further allegations of the complaint were that the respondents had valuable contracts with others for the purchase of crude oil; that by means of violence and threats, the appellants intimidated such persons from continuing to do business with them; and that by reason of the appellants' conspiracy and acts in pursuance thereof, they have suffered injury and damage to their business. The prayer was for a decree enjoining the appellants from in any manner picketing their place of business, or from in any manner interfering with their business, the business of persons dealing with them, or with their employees. In addition, damages in the sum of $25,000 were sought. Upon this complaint, a preliminary injunction issued limiting the number of pickets to be stationed about the plant during the pendency of the suit and enjoining the appellants from picketing or boycotting by means of force, violence, or intimidation.

By way of answer to the complaint, the appellants admitted the picketing of the respondents' place of business but denied the allegations of violence, threats and intimidation, asserting that the picketing was at all times carried on in a peaceful manner. As an affirmative defense they alleged that the partners had refused to negotiate with them and by means of threats and promises of favor, had forced their employees into stating that they were satisfied with their working conditions; that the working conditions in the respondents' plant with respect to wages and hours were less favorable to the employees than those which obtained in plants employing union labor, and had a tendency to break down and destroy advantages which had been established by the union; and that by reason of the respondents' acts, the appellants caused a picket line to be placed around their premises for the purpose of informing the public generally, and the persons connected with the industry, that Elm Oil Company was unfair to organized labor.

Upon the issues so framed, the case went to trial and the court made findings in substantial accordance with the allegations of the complaint. These findings, in the main, are based upon uncontradicted evidence which shows the following facts: Following the refusal of the respondents and their employees to negotiate with the union concerning a closed shop contract, a picket line was placed in front of the oil plant. At the outset, there were forty to fifty pickets. The number was then reduced, but until the date of the termination of the trial there were pickets on duty about the premises for twenty-four hours a day. At all times, the picketing was conducted under the supervision of the appellants Forrester and Coulter, both of whom were officers and representatives of the union.

Upon innumerable occasions, trucks of companies hauling oil for the respondents were followed by pickets in automobiles for long distances. Both Coulter and Forrester participated in this shadowing. Because of these actions, one truck company refused to haul any more oil for the respondents unless they protected the drivers against physical harm. To meet this demand, armed guards were provided.

The respondents' employees and their wives were followed by pickets, including Forrester. There is testimony that both the men and the wives were greatly frightened and harassed by these actions. At one time, the wife of an employee who had brought her husband's lunch to him was followed by two pickets in an automobile. The wife of another employee was also followed. This time two men employed by the oil company gave chase. Thereupon, the car containing the pickets stopped, and the appellant Booth, upon being questioned by one of these employees concerning the motive in following the woman, challenged him to a fight. Upon one occasion, Forrester followed an employee to his home after dark and drove back and forth in front of the house, causing the man and his wife great fright and annoyance. Forrester also followed the respondent Kindseth after dark.

During the picketing, those representing the union directed vile, abusive and insulting language at the respondents' business callers and employees. Threats of physical violence were embodied in some of this language, much of which is too vile to be here stated. At another time, the appellant Coulter approached an employee, who was engaged in gauging trucks at the oil plant, and told him that "in labor trouble people had been hurt, that there had been no violence in the Elm Oil Company case to date, but from that day on, he, J. C. Coulter, was not giving Brown any further protection."

Several trespasses were committed by pickets upon the property of the respondents. When a customer of the oil plant drove his car on to the premises, two of the pickets rushed at him and "grabbed at" him, and the appellant Benton threatened him with bodily harm. Upon another occasion, pickets blocked the driveways of the premises so as to prevent a truck belonging to one of the respondents' business visitors from leaving the plant. Another picket paraded in front of the premises carrying a pole on the end of which was a piece of cheese. Pickets threw rocks at the premises, hitting cars, tanks and trucks. At times, the pickets falsely represented to business callers that a strike was in progress at the plant. Moreover, the following of employees and customers, and the use of threatening and intimidating language toward them, continued after the issuance of the preliminary injunction prohibiting such conduct.

[1-3] It is now settled law that workmen may lawfully combine to exert various forms of economic pressure upon an employer, provided the object sought to be accomplished thereby has a reasonable relation to the betterment of labor conditions, and they act peaceably and honestly. Lisse v. Local Union, 2 Cal.2d 312, 41 P.2d 314; McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373. This right is guaranteed by the federal Constitution as an incident of freedom of speech, press and assemblage. Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093; Carlson v. People of California, 310 U.S. 106, 60 S.Ct. 746, 84 L.Ed. 1104. Nor is the right dependent upon the existence of a labor controversy between the employer and his employee. McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra; C. S. Smith Met. Market Co. v. Lyons, 16 Cal.2d 389, 106 P.2d 414; American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 312 U.S. 321, 61 S.Ct. 568, 85 L.Ed. 855.

[4] But the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech extends no further than to confer upon workmen the right to publicize the facts of an industrial controversy by peaceful and truthful means. Labor has no sanctuary in any federal right when it departs from the bounds of peaceful persuasion and resorts to acts of violence, physical intimidation, or false statement. Under such circumstances, picketing loses its character as an appeal to reason and becomes a weapon of illegal coercion.

[5-7] These principles both authorize and require courts to enjoin acts of violence or acts which "amounted to physical intimidation." Lisse v. Local Union, supra [2 Cal.2d 312, 41 P.2d 316]; McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra. Furthermore, the inherent power of a court of equity to grant injunctive relief is not limited to the imposition of a restraint against the violent and unlawful conduct, but may, under given conditions, be exercised to enjoin future picketing in any form. Prior picketing interwoven with continuous acts of violence and physical intimidation may create such fear and hostile attitude in the public, and in those persons desirous of business relations with the employer, that future picketing, even though conducted peaceably, would probably, if not necessarily, be regarded as sinister in purpose. The ban of the injunction against the illegal conduct would not be a sufficient remedy, under such circumstances, because acts otherwise peaceful would have a coercive influence when done with a background of violence. Accordingly, where past picketing has become so irrevocably blended with acts of violence, physical intimidation or other unlawful conduct as to give rise to a justifiable belief that future picketing is likely to result in a continuance of the illegal acts, an injunction restraining a labor organization from any and all picketing lies within the equitable power of the court and does not constitute an infringement of the right of free speech.

This is the rule which was very recently stated and applied in Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies Inc., 312 U.S. 287, 61 S.Ct. 552, 555, 85 L.Ed. 836, 132 A.L.R. 1200, where the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of a state court to enjoin acts of picketing in themselves peaceful, when they were enmeshed with accompanying violent conduct which was unlawful. In that case the court declared: "It was in order to avert force and explosions due to restrictions upon rational modes of communication that the guarantee of free speech was given a generous scope. But utterance in a context of violence can lose its significance as an appeal to reason and become part of an instrument of force. Such utterance was not meant to be sheltered by the Constitution. * * * And acts which in isolation are peaceful may be part of a coercive thrust when entangled with acts of violence. * * * In such a setting it could justifiably be concluded that the momentum of fear generated by past violence would survive even though future picketing might be wholly peaceful. * * * Nor can we say that it was written into the Fourteenth Amendment that a state through its courts cannot base protection against future coercion on an inference of the continuing threat of past misconduct."

[8] The Meadowmoor case does not stand alone, nor are the principles upon which it was decided of recent origin. Many other jurisdictions have authorized an injunction against all picketing where labor's acts have been so entangled with violence and other illegal conduct that future excesses might reasonably be anticipated in the light of what was done before. Vaughan v. Kansas City Moving Picture Operators' Union, D. C., 36 F.2d 78; Levy & Devaney v. International Pocketbook Workers' Union, 114 Conn. 319, 158 A. 795; Joe Dan Market v. Wentz, 223 Mo. App. 772, 20 S.W.2d 567; Keuffel & Esser v. International Ass'n of Machinists, 93 N.J.Eq. 429, 116 A. 9; Exchange Bakery & Restaurant v. Rifkin, 245 N.Y. 260, 157 N.E. 130; Nann v. Raimist, 255 N.Y. 307, 174 N.E. 690, 73 A.L.R. 669; Steinkritz Amusement Corp. v. Kaplan, 257 N.Y. 294, 178 N.E. 11; Busch Jewelry Co. v. United Retail Employees' Union, 281 N.Y. 150, 22 N.E.2d 320, 124 A.L.R. 744; Am.Law Inst. Restatement, Torts, vol. 4, sec. 816; see cases collected in 132 A.L.R. 1218. The rule is particularly applicable where violent picketing is continued in defiance of a preliminary injunction restraining the defendants from resorting to violence or physical intimidation. Under such circumstances, the probability of a recurrence of the unlawful conduct is great, and the violators should be allowed no further opportunity for wrongful conduct under the protection of a judgment given upon terms which have been previously ignored. Nann v. Raimist, supra; R. A. Freed & Co. v. Doe, Sup., 283 N.Y.S. 186.

[9] It is true that an injunction prohibiting all picketing may not be based upon isolated and episodic acts of violence or other unlawful conduct. An injunction issues only to protect against future irremedial harm, and where the picketing has been in general lawful but has been accompanied by infrequent illegal acts not of a serious character, only the unlawful conduct will be enjoined. Disassociated acts of past misconduct do not evidence an illegal intention and purpose on the part of labor, nor do they so stigmatize its conduct as to warrant a sweeping restraint against future picketing upon the ground that a recurrence of the illegal acts is likely despite a prohibition against the unlawful conduct. As stated in Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, supra, "* * * the right of free speech cannot be denied by drawing from a trivial rough incident or a moment of animal exuberance the conclusion that otherwise peaceful picketing has the taint of force."

[10, 11] Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, the injunction of the trial court must be upheld insofar as it prohibits picketing about the premises of the respondents and their customers. There is ample support for the findings concerning a series of acts which go far beyond what may reasonably be termed peaceful picketing. The use of vile and abusive language and threats of violence amounts to physical intimidation which may not be justified under any principles governing the rights of persons engaged in labor disputes. The following of the respondents' business callers and employees and the wives of employees is in the same category. Implicit in such shadowing is a threat of physical violence. The futility of a ban against this unlawful conduct alone is demonstrated, not only by its continuity, but also by the fact that it was conducted in the face of a preliminary restraining order.

[12] The appellants refer to these acts as the isolated acts of pickets unauthorized by the union and therefore not binding upon it. To call such acts isolated is to close one's eyes to the proved facts of the case. True, acts of actual physical assault and damage were rare. But threatened violence was common, for the conduct of the union representatives in following business callers and employees, and, in resorting to vile language and threats, was continuing, uninterrupted and thoroughly enmeshed with the picketing carried on by them.

The appellants challenge, as prejudicial error, the refusal of the trial court to receive evidence that the union's officers instructed its pickets to refrain from violence or intimidation of any character. However, the uncontroverted evidence shows that the picketing was conducted under the direction of Forrester and Coulter, who, it is asserted gave these instructions. Much of the violence and disorderly conduct was committed during their presence at the oil company's plant and with their tacit approval. Also, according to their own testimony, they participated in the shadowing of employees and customers.

[13, 14] Under the well-settled rule that it is not reversible error to exclude evidence which could not affect the decision upon a material fact (2 Cal.Jur. 1022), the appellants may not successfully challenge the refusal of the trial court to hear evidence of instructions which would not exonerate them from responsibility. Certainly instructions violated by the officers who issued them are no shelter to the union. The entire picketing plan was planned and carried out by the union, and it is responsible for the acts of its pickets committed within the scope of their agency and with the sanction of its officers. As the court declared in Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, supra, "* * * It is true of a union as of an employer that it may be responsible for acts which it has not expressly authorized or which might not be attributable to it on strict application of the rules of respondeat superior."

[15] The appellants seek to avoid the application of the rule announced in the Meadowmoor case upon the ground that the decision was made upon evidence showing the use of extreme physical violence of a most brutal nature, resulting in serious personal injuries and property damage to the picketed employers, their employees and the public. However, insofar as the propriety of an injunction prohibiting all picketing is concerned, no logical distinction may be drawn between picketing enmeshed with actual violence and picketing carried on with threatened violence and physical intimidation. If past picketing is entangled with violent threats and physical intimidation, future misconduct on the part of the pickets and justifiable apprehension of physical harm on the part of the employers, employees, and the public, may be as reasonably anticipated as in cases of actual physical violence. If the unlawful threats and intimidation are sufficiently continuous and extensive, the prohibition of the unlawful conduct only will not serve to remove the coercive effect of the picketing. Since the acts committed by the appellants were not isolated but formed a chain of physical intimidation characterizing the whole picketing as illegal, the trial court was entirely justified in issuing the broad and comprehensive restraint.

Many of the cited cases in which an injunction against all picketing was upheld were decided upon facts which did not include any evidence of extreme physical violence. In Busch Jewelry Co. v. United Retail Employees Union, supra, cited with approval in the Meadowmoor case, pickets blocked the entrances to retail stores and by such action prevented customers from entering; they intimidated employees by threats of personal violence and coercion; they used loud and obscene language and made false and fraudulent statements; by violence and threats they prevented customers from paying their bills; they picketed the homes of employees and customers; and they conducted snake dances in front of the picketed stores. As in the present case, however, there were only isolated instances of actual physical violence. In affirming a decree of the trial court enjoining the defendants from picketing the stores, the Court of Appeals declared: "* * * If a trial court can ever grant an injunction against continuing picketing where the picketing has been carried on with violence and will be in the future, this is such a case." [281 N.Y. 150, 22 N.E.2d 322, 124 A.L.R. 744.]

In Levy & Devaney v. International Pocketbook Workers' Union, supra, a labor organization sought to induce the unionization of a factory by picketing. Employees were followed to and from their work on various occasions, but there were no acts of physical violence. A judgment restraining all picketing was affirmed with the declaration: "When picketing is so unlawful as to indicate that the defendant does not intend to use his rights in a lawful manner, a court may reasonably expect that such unlawful conduct will continue, in the absence of an injunction, and in such case it is within the discretion of the trial court to enjoin further picketing altogether." [114 Conn. 319, 158 A. 796.]

Another case of the same character is Joe Dan Market v. Wentz, supra. The plaintiffs, owners of a retail grocery store and butcher shop, sought to enjoin the picketing of their place of business. Pickets walked to and fro in front of the premises so close to the entrance as to interfere with the ingress and egress of patrons; they used abusive language towards customers; their conduct was so boisterous that large crowds gathered; on several occasions the pickets were intoxicated and followed patrons who had left the store; and several persons desiring to trade in the store were accosted. In addition, a few assaults were committed. Rejecting the defendants' contention that the decree of the trial court was too broad in restraining lawful as well as unlawful picketing, the court held: "The picketing conducted by defendants consisted of one continuous transaction, involving unlawful acts on the part of defendants, and showing, by a systematic course of conduct and concerted action, their intention to accomplish their purpose by unlawful means. In such case equity will do complete justice by enjoining the whole of the unlawful proceeding. Picketing conducted as this was, accompanied by intimidation, threats, violence, and coercion, soon becomes current in the neighborhood, so that a continuation of the picketing, even though conducted peaceably, would probably, if not necessarily, result in intimidation." [223 Mo.App. 772, 20 S.W.2d 569.]

In support of their position that under the evidence which has been stated, only unlawful conduct may be enjoined, the appellants cite Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 P. 324; Southern California Iron & Steel Co. v. Amalgamated Association, 186 Cal. 604, 200 P. 1, and Lisse v. Local Union, supra. But in those cases, the court was not called upon to determine whether acts, which are otherwise peaceful, may be enjoined when picketing has been carried on with a background of violence, and they are not controlling in a determination of the rights of the parties to the present suit.

[16] However, the injunction from which the present appeal was taken must be modified insofar as it prohibits acts which may be done peacefully without picketing. The conduct of the appellants in the vicinity of the Elm Oil Company's plant and in connection with the boycotting of firms with whom the respondents have business relations justified the trial court in concluding that future activities of that character would continue to be carried on with the coercion of physical intimidation or violence. But peaceable discussion away from the situs of former violence may not be enjoined.

The remaining question for decision concerns the award of $2,500 damages. It is the position of the appellants that as the respondents failed to prove any actual damage, they were entitled to nominal damages only. On the other hand, the respondents urge that general damages may be awarded upon a showing of unlawful interference with their business, and that the elements constituting such damage need not be proved. Admittedly, no physical injury was done to the respondents, nor did they show any loss of profits, but they demanded damages upon the theory that the appellants had wrongfully interfered with their right to carry on a lawful business. The trial court gave judgment accordingly.

[17-19] Generally speaking, the principle underlying the right to damages for injury is that the person injured is entitled to compensation commensurate with his loss. It is not sufficient to prove the infringement of a legal right; to recover more than merely nominal damages, the injured person must prove the amount or items of the damage suffered by them. As stated in 25 C.J.S., Damages, § 144, p. 788, "As noted in § 6 supra, a presumption of at least nominal damage follows from proof of a legal wrong. However, the amount and items of pecuniary damage are not presumed, but must be proved; and if there is no evidence as to the extent of the pecuniary loss there can be no recovery of substantial damages, at least where the elements of damage are such as to be susceptible of pecuniary admeasurement." The rule is applicable to a tortious interference with a business. Hammer v.

Baum, 136 Misc. 490, 240 N.Y.S. 145; St. Germain v. Bakery & Confec. Workers' Union, 97 Wash. 282, 166 P. 665, L.R.A. 1917F, 824. Where an established business is wrongfully interrupted and injured, the proper measure of damages is the diminution in value of the business traceable to the wrongful act, as reflected by loss of profits, expenses incurred or similar concrete evidences of injury. Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 P. 327; Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 69 P. 491, 72 P. 406; Berry Foundry Company v. International Moulders Union, 177 Mo.App. 84, 164 S.W. 245.

[20, 21] The appellants seek to invoke the rule as to measure of damage in nuisance cases in which damages are allowable without any showing of exact pecuniary loss. In those cases, however, the principal damage suffered consists of injuries to the senses, physical discomfort, and personal annoyance, all of which is incapable of mathematical ascertainment. But the gravamen of the present action, insofar as the right to damages is concerned, is not an invasion of personal security but an interference with business, the damage to which is susceptible of precise computation. The damage resulting from such unlawful interference cannot be divorced from tangible injury to property and loss of profits. Personal discomfort and annoyance are not compensable elements of damage in such a case.

That part of the judgment which enjoins the appellants from doing certain acts is modified by striking therefrom the provisions "(d) Inducing any one to refrain from selling crude petroleum oil to plaintiffs" and "(e) Interfering in the contractual relations between plaintiffs and their employees"; as so modified it is affirmed. The judgment, insofar as it awards damages, is reversed for a new trial upon that issue. Costs on appeal shall be borne by the respective parties.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

The inevitable effect of the majority opinion in this case will be the abrogation of the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, press and assembly, and, for all practical purposes, will operate as a denial of the right of organized labor to exercise those rights by engaging in peaceful picketing; that is, the publicizing of a labor dispute, which rights were unequivocally declared to be protected against abridgement by a state by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States in Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093, and Carlson v. People of California, 310 U.S. 106, 60 S.Ct. 746, 84 L.Ed. 1104.

In order that we may have a more complete picture of the factual situation in the instant case, I will refer to the facts found by the trial court with reference to the character of the picketing here involved. The majority opinion in its statement of facts has gone beyond the findings of the trial court, disregarding the elementary rule that the findings of fact must support the judgment, and if they do not, the judgment must be reversed. The findings may be summarized as follows: That the plaintiffs are engaged in the business of refining and selling petroleum and its products, employing thirteen employees; that defendant Long Beach Local No. 128 of the Oil Workers International Union, affiliate of defendant C. I. O., is the local branch of the Oil Workers International Union; that there has never been a labor dispute between plaintiffs and their employees and the latter are not and do not wish to become members of defendant union or its affiliate; that no contract has ever existed between plaintiffs and defendants; that defendants conspired to "unionize" plaintiffs' business and their employees, to cause said employees to become members of defendant union and plaintiffs to enter into a closed-shop contract and discharge nonjoining employees; that to accomplish the purpose of the alleged conspiracy, defendants picketed plaintiffs' premises, the pickets wearing arm bands with the words "C. I. O. Picket" thereon, there being forty to fifty pickets at the outset, fifteen or twenty for about the first week thereafter, and varying numbers during twenty-four hours a day thereafter; that on March 23, 1939, defendant Forrester, a representative of defendant union, followed one of the plaintiffs around the block after dark; and that on one occasion two pickets followed the wife of one of plaintiffs' employees away from plaintiffs' premises, and on another occasion followed the employee and his wife in an automobile; that some of the defendants on one occasion followed one of the employees on foot and in a car; that there were five other instances when employees and their wives were followed off of plaintiffs' premises by certain of the defendants, and an employee at one time requesting the reason for his fellow employee's wife being followed was asked by one of the defendants if he wanted to fight; that on several occasions plaintiffs' customers or business callers were followed away from plaintiffs' premises (this conduct occurred during the month of March and early part of April, 1939); that during January, February and March, five of plaintiffs' employees were informed by various of the defendants in effect that unless they joined defendant union, plaintiffs' plant would be closed and they would never get work in the oil fields; that business callers at plaintiffs' premises were told not to deal with plaintiffs, to which some acceded, and some firms doing business with plaintiffs were picketed; that on various occasions abusive and insulting language was directed at plaintiffs' business callers and employees; that on one occasion a picket paraded in front of the premises carrying a pole on the end of which was a piece of cheese, and shook the pole at plaintiffs' premises; that Baker, a business caller of plaintiffs' "drove his car into the premises of plaintiffs and on into the private driveway of plaintiffs, driving in such a manner as to pass very close to the defendant F. G. Benton; that two of the defendant pickets rushed at Baker and grabbed at him, and that the defendant F. G. Benton, at said time and place, took off his jacket and threatened Baker with bodily harm"; that on one occasion the pickets blocked plaintiffs' driveway with a car and prevented a business caller of plaintiffs' from driving his truck off plaintiffs' premises. On one occasion one of defendants entered plaintiffs' premises without their consent and made a telephone call.

It must be remembered that during all of the time covered by the above findings, picketing which was unquestionably peaceful was being regularly pursued; one of the defendants were ever charged with or found guilty of contempt for violating the preliminary injunction issued by the trial court.

It should also be noted that the trial court did not consider the picketing to be violent or not peaceful or that violence was so interwoven with peaceful conduct that it could not be effectively restrained without the enjoining of all picketing. The court specifically found:

"XIII. That at all times during which pickets were maintained about the premises of the Elm Oil Company, the officers and employees of the company went to and from their work daily through the picket line and were at no time physically or bodily injured in any way, nor was any person physically or bodily injured while coming to or going from the plaintiffs' premises; and at no time was any of the tangible property of the Elm Oil Company injured.

"XIV. That when the trucks and cars of officers, employees and customers of the Elm Oil Company were followed by officers, members and pickets of the Union, at no time were any such trucks or cars stopped or attempted to be stopped or the driver and passengers of any such cars or trucks detained or attempted to be detained by, or engaged in conversation by any of the officers, members or pickets of the Union so following said cars and trucks."

Nevertheless, the trial court issued a blanket injunction against all picketing. In order to support that decree the majority decision relies upon the case of Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, Inc., 312 U.S. 287, 61 S.Ct. 552, 85 L.Ed. 836, 132 A.L.R. 1200. It must necessarily, as it does, concede that picketing is lawful and will not be enjoined even though there is no dispute between the employer and his employees, and none of the employees are members of the picketing union. A union may lawfully picket an employer for the purpose of obtaining a closed-shop contract, and unionizing the employer's employees. McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, 16 Cal.2d 311, 106 P.2d 373; Lund v. Auto Mechanics' Union No. 1414, 16 Cal.2d 374, 106 P.2d 408; C. S. Smith Met. Market Co., Ltd., v. Lyons, 16 Cal.2d 389, 106 P.2d 414; American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 312 U.S. 321, 61 S.Ct. 568, 85 L.Ed. 855.

Turning then to the sole foundation of the majority decision, the case of Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, Inc., supra, we find at the outset that under no possible theory may it be applied to the case at bar. Assuming for the moment that in that case the Supreme Court of the United States announced the rule that if the background of peaceful picketing consists of unlawful acts which are so inseparably interwoven with the peaceful picketing that it is impossible to give adequate relief without restraining all picketing, both tortious and nontortious, all picketing may be restrained, the fact remains that the trial court in the instant case made absolutely no finding that such conditions existed. The existence thereof is necessarily a factual problem upon which the trial court should exercise its discretion and judgment. If anything, the clear implication from the above quoted findings XIII and XIV, is that the trial court was of the opinion that no such conditions existed. But an examination of the record in this case shows beyond any doubt that the trial court did not even have the rule of the Meadowmoor case in mind, and did not even contemplate or consider its applicability to the case at bar. The judgment in the instant case was entered on March 4, 1940. The Meadowmoor case was decided on February 10, 1941, nearly a year later. In its oral opinion in this case the trial court stated:

"The McKay case has been decided by the District Court of Appeals, and it is now being argued yesterday and today, and it may go on for some time before the Supreme Court of this state. Whether there is a point there that can go to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error, I don't know. There may be. We do not know when the conclusion of this thing will come, but upon this theory of trial and error, we will get there eventually, and we will have a definite conclusion on this thing. The matter now stands that a District Court of Appeal in this state has said that there is a labor policy in this state based upon freedom of the individual employee to form a contract with an employer or not to have one, and he has the right not to have it disturbed in any way by anybody unless he chooses that person as his representative to disturb it. * * *

"There is only one case coming under the Labor Code in this state that has been decided by the Appellate Court that I know of—or three—those three cases that are now before the Supreme Court. They are the Lyons and all of those, which have no discussion of labor code situation in them at all. That code says that the individual right of freedom shall not be disturbed in any way. The McKay case says in effect, in my opinion, that if a labor union comes in and attempts to unionize a plant where it has no employee whom it represents, that the effect of that may be to force the employer to help compel his employees to join the union. That, the court says, will be an interference with his freedom. * * *

"I am not the lawmaker. It is the Legislature which said that the individual working man shall be given the preference, and I think that is what it does. If that is unconstitutional and the upper courts say so, very well—we will have to conform—but so far the District Court of Appeal has said that the freedom of the individual to do as he pleases, whether it conforms to the great majority, and by failing to conform may do harm, which minorities always do—they do harm from the point of view of the majority always—that the Legislature has said that principle of freedom of action absolutely untrammeled by anybody shall exist in the employee, and once he has made his decision, unless there is a labor dispute, the union cannot come in and interfere with that set-up so as to make it even probable that the employer might try to change that policy of the employee being a non-union man if he wants to be. * * *

"On the limited part of it—preventing violence and that sort of thing, but under my theory of this case, it is illegal to picket at all. It is not a question of whether the picketing is done peacefully or otherwise. Upon my theory of the case the Labor Code made it impossible to picket at all under these circumstances, and that, under that declared labor policy, the labor union had no right to go out there and interfere with these people at all in any way whatever. * * *

"The right to picket, in my opinion, not existing in this case, or the right to interfere with this business at all—would make it proper to have a complete injunction and that is what I will grant in this case, an injunction total in its effect, preventing the defendants from interfering with this business in any way whatever so far as the problems involved in this case are concerned."

It is obvious that the trial court decided the instant case solely upon one legal proposition, that is, that plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction against the picketing because there was no labor dispute between the employer and its employees. It cannot be criticized for so deciding the case because at the time of its decision the case of McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra, had been decided by the District Court of Appeal, and that court had held, contrary to the later holding of this court, that under the Labor Code picketing was unlawful when there was no labor dispute between the employer and his employees. See 90 P.2d 113, May 5, 1939. It was not until October 14, 1941, more than a year after the trial court's judgment, that this court announced a contrary rule. McKay v. Retail Auto. S. L. Union No. 1067, supra. The case of American Federation of Labor v. Swing, supra, stating the rule as announced by this court in the McKay case was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States on February 10, 1941. It inescapably follows therefore that not only was the instant case tried and decided upon a theory wholly foreign to the Meadowmoor case, but furthermore, the doctrine of that case was not even considered or contemplated by the parties, counsel or the court. Yet the majority opinion is based wholly upon that doctrine which is utterly without support in the findings of the trial court. The United States Supreme Court recognized the necessity for a finding of fact to support the doctrine of the Meadowmoor case, stating at page 555 of 61 S.Ct.: "It is not for us to make an independent valuation of the testimony before the master. We have not only his findings but his findings authenticated by the state of Illinois speaking through her supreme court. We can reject such a determination only if we can say that it is so without warrant as to be a palpable evasion of the constitutional guarantee here invoked. The place to resolve conflicts in the testimony and in its interpretation was in the Illinois courts and not here. To substitute our judgment for that of the state court is to transcend the limits of our authority." But the majority opinion here is not disturbed about the lack of such findings, it not only announces the rule of law, but decides the issues of fact, thereby invading the province of the trier of facts to weight the evidence and exercise his discretion as to its sufficiency and pass upon the credibility of witnesses. If the case had been tried and decided upon that doctrine there would have been in all probability much evidence introduced bearing upon the question of whether the public, plaintiffs' customers and their employees were justifiably in terror and fear of physical injury, whether efforts to control the unlawful conduct would be unavailing, and the like. In effect, the parties have not had a trial on that issue or the opportunity to present a case bearing thereon, and the majority opinion deprives them of those rights.

Still assuming that the Meadowmoor case in fact announces as the view of the United States Supreme Court, the doctrine ascribed to it by the majority opinion, there is another reason why it is manifestly not applicable to the case at bar. Here there was no such background of violence as was present in the Meadowmoor case. In that case it was said at page 554 of 61 S.Ct.:

"Witnesses testified to more than fifty instances of window smashing; explosive bombs caused substantial injury to the plants of Meadowmoor and another dairy using the vendor system and to five stores; stench bombs were dropped in five stores; three trucks of vendors were wrecked, seriously injuring one driver, and another was driven into a river; a store was set on fire, and in large measure ruined; two trucks of vendors were burned; a storekeeper and a truck driver were severely beaten; workers at a dairy which, like Meadowmoor, used the vendor system were held with guns and severely beaten about the head while being told 'to join the union'; carloads of men followed vendors' trucks, threatened the drivers, and in one instance shot at the truck and driver. In more than a dozen of these occurrences, involving window-smashing, bombings, burnings, the wrecking of trucks, shootings, and beatings, there was testimony to identify the wrongdoers as union men. * * *

"The question which thus emerges is whether a state can choose to authorize its courts to enjoin acts of picketing in themselves peaceful when they are enmeshed with contemporaneously violent conduct which is concededly outlawed." (Emphasis added.)

In the case at bar as seen from the findings heretofore discussed, the most that occurred were a few isolated acts of unlawful conduct such as the blocking of plaintiffs' driveway, abusive language, and perhaps an assault. No physical violence was found; no property was damaged; there were no threats of physical violence or property damage; there is no evidence whatsoever of any concerted plan or scheme to engage in a continuous and concerted campaign of violence with the aim of terrifying and physically intimidating the public, or plaintiffs' customers or employees. Yet the majority opinion concludes that: "Prior picketing interwoven with continuous acts of violence and physical intimidation may create such fear and hostile attitude in the public, and in those persons desirous of business relations with the employer, that future picketing, even though conducted peaceably, would probably, if not necessarily, be regarded as sinister in purpose."

There is not one scintilla of evidence in the case at bar that there was created a "fear and hostile attitude" on the part of the public. The followers of plaintiffs' employees and customers never stopped or even communicated with the persons followed. Those things occurred away from the employer's premises where the picketing was in progress, and as far as appears, the public knew nothing of it, and were not aware that there was any relation between the shadowing and the picket line. Because one or a few pickets sporadically used abusive language and followed employees and customers is certainly not a background of violence as contemplated by the Meadowmoor case. Even the courts of Illinois which gave birth to this doctrine have subsequently squarely held that it is strictly limited to acts of violence on a large and extensive scale as distinguished from unlawful acts not characterized by acts of violence. In 2063 Lawrence Ave. Bldg. Corporation v. Van Heck, 377 Ill. 37, 35 N.E.2d 373 at page 374, decided June 17, 1941, the Supreme Court of Illinois stated: "From the cases just referred to [the Meadowmoor case and others] it is definitely settled that to enjoin all picketing it must be found that violence has given the picketing a coercive effect whereby it would operate destructively as a force and intimidation, and it further appears to the court from the circumstances, that peaceful picketing in the future would be enmeshed in violence, threats or coercion by intimidation." (Emphasis added.) In the instant case there was no violence and no evidence indicating that the violence "would operate destructively as a force." Even if it be conceded that there was some violence, it cannot be claimed upon any interpretation of the evidence that that violence consisted of more than two or three isolated instances. In Ellingsen v. Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, etc., 377 Ill. 76, 35 N.E. 2d 349, the conduct as outlined by the court in its opinion was far more serious than that occurring in the case at bar, yet the decree of the lower court was reversed because it enjoined all picketing. The court stated at page 353 of 35 N.E.2d: "This brings us to a consideration of the acts of violence and intimidation alleged to have been committed in connection with the picketing in this case. The master found that there was evidence of intimidation by threats; that some of the conversation of the pickets was such as to amount to an attempt to coerce the storekeeper to give up the sale of the milk of the milk company and to prevent the delivery of other merchandise by preventing drivers going to the store who had sold the merchandise to the storekeeper. An examination of the evidence shows that in some instances the pickets sought to interfere with customers, such as attempting to prevent the purchase of chocolate milk by children who had purchased and were drinking it, by telling them: 'You will get sick drinking that stuff. Do you know how they get that chocolate milk? They go to the toilet and get it.' In other instances drivers delivering other products were told they could not go in. In one instance the picket stood in front of the doorway and prevented a driver from delivering orange juice which he had sold to the storekeeper, and by obstructing the doorway and gesturing prevented the deliverymen from entering. Other evidence is that delivery drivers were told 'to get to hell out of here' when they stopped. Other instances were that the pickets declared that drivers would get into trouble if they went into the store. Another witness testified that a picket told him: 'Don't enter there. Don't open the door or step into that store.' That the witness replied: 'Business is business,' to which the picket added: 'If you are smart about it, don't you know some day we will get even with you?' The master finds that the Union instructed the pickets not to engage in conversation with the storekeeper, or any one else, but that they violated those instructions. The master also found that the evidence shows that one of the stores picketed was caused to lose at least one customer by statements of the pickets amounting to an attempt to coerce." (Emphasis added.) And again at page 354 of 35 N.E.2d: "The record in this case does not, however, contain evidence tending to indicate that threats or statements such as were made are apt to become an element of future picketing. The master found, and the officers of the defendant union testified without dispute, that the pickets were instructed they were not to talk to any one while on picket duty, were not to obstruct the business of the stores and were to use no force or violence. This case is, under and above-described record, to be distinguished from the Meadowmoor case, where the record justified the restraining of non-tortious acts of picketing as well as acts of violence and threats." (Emphasis added.)

It is said in the majority decision: "The appellants challenge, as prejudicial error, the refusal of the trial court to receive evidence that the union's officers instructed its pickets to refrain from violence or intimidation of any character. However, the uncontroverted evidence shows that the picketing was conducted under the direction of Forrester and Coulter, who it is asserted gave these instructions. Much of the violence and disorderly conduct was committed during their presence at the oil company's plant and with their tacit approval. Also, according to their own testimony, they participated in the shadowing of employees and customers." It is obvious that the majority opinion completely ignores the nature of defendants' claim as a ground for reversal. They offered to prove that the pickets had been expressly instructed to avoid acts of violence and unlawful conduct. Their offer was refused. Surely such evidence was admissible upon the question of the responsibility, if any, of the members of the union not actually participating in the picketing. It was for the trial court to give it the weight it deserved rather than for this court in effect to hold that such evidence was wholly inadmissible. For that reason alone the judgment should be reversed. But there is even more significance to be attached to the refusal of the offer of that evidence. It has a direct bearing upon the issue of whether defendants' tortious conduct was so enmeshed with the lawful conduct that it would not be possible to control the unlawful conduct except by enjoining all picketing. It goes directly to the question of whether there was a concerted and continuous plan and course of conduct aimed at creating a fear of physical injury in the public and plaintiffs and their employees. If the pickets were expressly instructed against violence, then as to the nonparticipating members of the union, it would tend to establish that the acts were merely isolated and episodic rather than an inseparable part of a campaign of violence. The Meadowmoor case concedes that isolated and episodic acts are not sufficient to bring into operation the doctrine announced in that case. Yet the majority opinion without any finding by the trial court on the question, and with no evidence bearing thereon before it, (it having been excluded), proceeds to declare the case appropriate for a blanket injunction.

In the foregoing discussion I have assumed that the Supreme Court of the United States announced, in the Meadowmoor case, as its own, the doctrine ascribed to it by the majority decision. That, however, is not the case and that so-called doctrine cannot and should not be declared to be the law in this state. The Supreme Court of the United States was very careful to point out in the Meadowmoor case, that the courts of the state of Illinois in the exercise of their equity powers could if they chose, adopt such a doctrine without doing violence to the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech. It did not declare that such doctrine was a policy of which it approved. The court stated at page 554 of 61 S.Ct.: "The question which thus emerges is whether a state can choose to authorize its courts to enjoin acts of picketing in themselves peaceful when they are enmeshed with contemporaneously violent conduct which is concededly outlawed. The Constitution is invoked to deny Illinois the power to authorize its courts to prevent the continuance and recurrence of flagrant violence, found after an extended litigation to have occurred under specific circumstances, by the terms of a decree familiar in such cases. Such a decree, arising out of a particular controversy and adjusted to it, raises totally different constitutional problems from those that would be presented by an abstract statute with an overhanging and undefined threat to free utterance. To assimilate the two is to deny to the states their historic freedom to deal with controversies through the concreteness of individual litigation rather than through the abstractions of a general law." (Emphasis added.) And at page 556 of 61 S.Ct.: "But we do not have revisory power over state practice, provided such practice is not used to evade constitutional guarantees. See Fox River Paper Co. v. Railroad Comm., 274 U.S. 651, 655, 47 S.Ct. 669, 670, 71 L.Ed. 1279; Long Sault Development Co. v. Call, 242 U.S. 272, 277, 37 S.Ct. 79, 81, 61 L.Ed 294. We are here concerned with power and not with the wisdom of its exercise. We merely hold that in the circumstances of the record before us the injunction authorized by the supreme court of Illinois does not transgress its constitutional power. That other states have chosen a different path in such a situation indicates differences of social view in a domain in which states are free to shape their local policy." (Emphasis added.) It follows, therefore, that the Supreme Court of the United States did not, in the Meadowmoor case, pass upon the wisdom or propriety of what might be called the "enmeshment with violence" doctrine. Each state is wholly free to adopt the course, with respect to that doctrine, it believes to be most compatible with justice and the constitutional guarantees. The majority opinion treats the issue as wholly new in California and has having never been decided. That is not true. It has heretofore been established by this court that the scope of an injunction in a picketing case should be limited to a restraint upon only the tortious acts, and that a decree restraining peaceful picketing as well as tortious acts must be modified. In Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 80, 103 P. 324, 328, this court said with reference to an injunction restraining all picketing: "In conclusion, then, and applying these principles to the injunction here under consideration, it appears that, while the injunction was properly granted, it was broader in its terms than the law warrants. It was, for example, too broad in restraining defendants from 'in any wise interfering with' plaintiff's business, since the interference which we have discussed, of publication, reasonable persuasion, and threat to withdraw patronage, is legal, and such as defendants could employ. So, also, was the injunction too broad in restraining defendants from 'intimidating any customer by boycott or threat of boycott' since, as has been said, the secondary boycott is likewise a legal weapon." In Southern California Iron & Steel Co. v. Amalgamated Ass'n, 186 Cal. 604, 620, 200 P. 1, 7, this court stated: "The judgment as entered, however, is too broad in its terms, in that it purports to prohibit acts which may or may not be unlawful, according to the purpose for which they are done, and it does not clearly couple the acts with the unlawful purpose. Thus, for example, the placing of pickets near respondent's place of business for a purpose not at all connected with said business, and not for the purpose of intimidating employees of respondent, so as to coerce them to quit that employment, nor for the purpose of intimidating persons intending to become employees of respondent, so as to prevent them from doing so, could not appropriately be enjoined, since such an act would not be wrongful as against the respondent, and would not be calculated to injure the respondent's business. The judgment is not clearly expressed in other respects, and it is therefore liable to be misunderstood in the enforcement thereof if it should be violated. Consequently, it should be modified in these particulars." (Emphasis added.) See also, to the same effect, Lisse v. Local Union No. 31, 2 Cal.2d 312, 41 P.2d 314. While those cases may not have given minute consideration to the so-called enmeshment with violence doctrine, they clearly and unequivocally hold that an injunction which enjoins all picketing, where there are both tortious and nontortious acts, cannot stand. I take it therefore, that the doctrine has been repudiated in California at least, implicitly if not expressly.

The reasons are forceful and numerous why the doctrine should not become a part of California jurisprudence. It is tantamount in its practical operation to a prohibition of picketing as a means of publicizing a labor controversy; it declares forfeited and permits unjust abridgement of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of expression. It is a backward step in the struggle against government by injunction and all its attendant evils. Frankfurter & Greene, The Labor Injunction (1930) 200. The process has been slow whereby peaceful picketing reached its status as being within the protection of the Constitution, reaching its goal in Thornhill v. Alabama, supra. Heretofore the courts in civil liberties cases have zealously prevented states from infringing those liberties even though a desirable public advantage was the goal sought to be attained. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 84 L.Ed. 1213, 128 A.L.R. 1352; Thornhill v. Alabama, supra; Schneider v. State of New Jersey, 308 U.S. 147, 60 S. Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155; Lovell v. City of Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L. Ed. 949.

Trial courts whose social views are antagonistic to the rights of labor in its struggle will find the doctrine an easy means whereby the right of freedom of expression may be completely destroyed any time some questionable act is committed in the course of a bitter labor dispute. No matter what the provocation for the particular misconduct, the court may attempt to justify a blanket injunction against picketing on the ground that that was the only method of meeting the situation.

The only two possible theories upon which the doctrine may be based are: First, that the background of violence lends a "coercive thrust" to the subsequent peaceful picketing and thereby makes it in fact violent and physically intimidating. That is apparently the basis of the Meadowmoor case. Second, that by committing tortious acts, the right of freedom of expression is forfeited. See cases collected, 132 A.L.R. 1218. Those theories are equally untenable.

The first rests upon a rule so vague and indefinite in its outlines that its fair application is practically impossible in face of the cardinal principle guiding the issuance of injunctions that there must be certainty and precision. How many acts are necessary to establish a background of violence with a coercive thrust? What must be the character of such acts? When in point of time must the acts have been committed? How can it be ascertained that it is impossible to control and prevent the tortious acts unless all picketing is restrained? What portion of the public must be aware of the tortious acts before they are physically intimidated? Is the injunction being used as an instrument to prevent crimes (a field in which equity will not act) or to protect the employer from being picketed? As pointed out by Mr. Justice Black (Mr. Justice Douglas concurring) in his dissenting opinion in the Meadowmoor case, the standard for guidance is impossible to grasp. He said: "On the one hand it is said that 'dissociated acts of past violence' are not enough to forfeit the right of free speech. On the other hand a 'background of violence' appears to be sufficient. Nor are any more definite standards or guides to be found in such clauses as 'context of violence'; 'entanglement with violence'; 'coercive effect'; 'taint of force'; and 'coercive thrust'. It is my apprehension that a rule embodying such broad generalizations opens up new possibilities for invasion of the rights guaranteed by the First Amendment." The doctrine insofar as it is based upon a "background of violence," that is, past misconduct violates the elementary principle in the issuance of injunctions that they are given to prevent future misconduct but never to punish past misconduct. An injunction is a preventive rather than punative remedy. 14 Cal.Jur. 175, 176, 209, 210.

The second theory is equally unsound. As we have seen, an injunction is not an instrument for punishment. Therefore, it should not be used as a weapon to declare that a person's constitutional right of freedom of expression is forfeited because he is guilty of some tortious conduct. On that theory one tortious act alone would require a declaration of the forfeiture of one's constitutional right. The ramifications of such a rule when applied to analogous situations are startling to say the least. Assuming that an injunction would lie to restrain the utterance or printing of slander or libel, then a person who made or printed one or more slanderous or libelous statements could be perpetually enjoined from henceforth either speaking or writing. If a blanket injunction against peaceful picketing which is undeniably lawful may be issued where one or more tortious acts are committed in the course thereof, then a newspaper publisher who printed one or more libelous articles could be totally debarred from thereafter publishing his paper under any and all circumstances; the freedom of the press would be completely lost. A person making a slanderous utterance could be completely and permanently silenced upon all subjects. A person who persisted in diverting more water from a stream than that to which he was entitled could be enjoined from diverting any water from the stream although he had an unquestioned right to a certain quantity.

I can think of no logical reason, and none is advanced by the majority opinion as to why the courts cannot enjoin tortious conduct without sacrificing the constitutionality guaranteed civil liberties in the process. I see no valid reason why the courts cannot exercise adequate and efficient control over picketing by limiting its coercive process to tortious conduct. It is not acting alone in its effort in that respect. The entire machinery of the criminal law is available and ready, able and willing to thwart and punish acts of violence. To adopt the doctrine of the majority opinion is equal to the expression of a belief that that machinery is helpless and fails to function.

The authorities from other jurisdictions cited in the majority opinion as supporting a blanket injunction were all either decided prior to or failed to take into consideration the Thornhill and Carlson cases which placed the right to picket squarely on the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, press and assembly. The reasoning in those cases is practically the same as that which appeared in the earlier authorities which held all picketing unlawful asserting that by the very nature of things peaceful picketing was a misnomer because such a thing could not exist. They merely give word or lip service to the principle of freedom of expression while arriving at a conclusion which for all practical purposes destroys that principle.

Especial reliance is place upon the case of Busch Jewelry Co. v. United Retail Employees Union, 281 N.Y. 150, 22 N.E.2d 320, 124 A.L.R. 744, but in a later case in that state, May's Furs and Ready to Wear v. Bauer, 282 N.Y. 331, 26 N.E.2d 279, in the course of the picketing there were acts of violence and disorderly conduct, arrests and convictions following in the case of the latter, nevertheless the court modified an injunction restraining peaceful picketing, stating at page 284 of 26 N.E.2d:

"Second, the injunction forbids defendant to engage in activities which are altogether lawful. It has often been said by the courts of this State that an injunction is protection for the future and not punishment for the past. Nann v. Raimist, supra [255 N.Y. 307, 174 N.E. 690, 73 A.L.R. 669]; J. H. & S. Theatres, Inc., v. Fay, supra [260 N.Y. 315, 183 N.E. 509]. That defendant has committed acts of violence, which would be repeated but for the staying hand of equity entitles plaintiffs to protection against such conduct; but just as plaintiffs are entitled to engage in their lawful pursuits, free from unlawful interference, so defendant is entitled for its lawful purposes to employ all means which are lawful. Senn v. Tile Layers Protective Union, 301 U.S. 468, 483, 57 S.Ct. 857, 81 L.Ed. 1229; Goldfinger v. Feintuch, supra, 276 N.Y. [281], at page 288, 11 N.E.2d 910, 116 A.L.R. 477. It is not the function of courts to supervise labor controversies. The task is sufficiently difficult when confined to preventing the parties from overstepping the bounds of lawful conduct. Section 876-a clearly confirms the right to engage in peaceful picketing and other lawful modes of persuasion. The injunction, therefore, was improper in including many peaceful and lawful activities which are enumerated among the proscriptions.

"In Nann v. Raimist, supra, it was held to be beyond the power of this court to review the exercise of the 'chancellor's discretion' in restraining all activities if violence had been committed. Even so, the discretion of the 'chancellor' was allowed only a narrow scope. Wise Shoe Co. v. Lowenthal, supra [266 N.Y. 264, 194 N.E. 749]. And now, since the enactment of section 876-a, the 'chancellor' is confined to restraining only unlawful acts. Thus the right of peaceful picketing is clearly established in this State (cf. Hague v. Committee for Industrial Organization, 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954, 83 L.Ed. 1423; Schneider v. State of New Jersey, Town of Irvington [308 U.S. 147], 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. [155], decided November 22, 1939, and the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature has been recognized. Goldfinger v. Feintuch, supra [276 N.Y. 281, 11 N.E.2d 910, 116 A.L.R. 477].

"In the Busch case a majority of this court read the record as disclosing a situation completely permeated by violence and as affording no ray of hope that the defendant would engage in other than violent picketing. The rule of that case presents an exception which is verbal rather than real, for since defendant would have engaged only in violent picketing, the unqualified prohibition of picketing operated only on the one kind of picketing present in that situation, viz., violent picketing. In that case peaceful picketing was out of the question. In the case at bar there is no finding to that effect, and so far as the record bears upon this issue, it appears that defendant has reformed its conduct in a more peaceful direction since the institution of this suit." (Emphasis added.)

See also, Miller v. Gallagher, 176 Misc. 647, 28 N.Y.S.2d 606.

From an examination of the record in the case at bar, it is obvious that no consideration whatsoever was given to the theory upon which the Meadowmoor case was decided, and neither the evidence nor the findings are sufficient to justify the application of the doctrine announced in that case to this case. The attempt by the majority of this court to apply the doctrine of the Meadowmoor case to the case at bar cannot be justified upon any rational theory, and when the facts of this case as determined by the trial court are considered in the light of the rules of law applicable thereto, as announced in the authorities which I have cited herein, it necessarily follows that the judgment should be reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 432

ROSE v. ROSE.

Civ. 11993.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 12, 1942.

1. Divorce ⇨287

Where trial court found that husband had inflicted extreme cruelty upon wife but did not make finding on effect of such cruelty on wife's health, income, or dependence on husband for necessities, reviewing court could not determine whether trial court erred in refusing alimony to wife, but would remand cause for further proceedings.

2. Divorce ⇨249(3)

Court's power to apportion property upon decreeing a divorce is limited to community property and the homestead of the parties.

3. Divorce ⇨249(1)

Court has no power in divorce decree to order cancellation of note given by husband to wife.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action for divorce by Leonard Medley Rose against Mary Wysong Rose, wherein defendant cross-complained for divorce. From portions of interlocutory decree granting divorce to cross-complainant, which denied alimony and ordered cancellation of a note given to defendant, defendant appeals.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

S. S. Hahn and W. O. Graf, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cecil L. Lacy, of Monrovia, and John Oliver, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McWILLIAMS, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff in this action brought suit against his wife for divorce on the ground of cruelty. The defendant answered and also cross-complained asking for separate maintenance but afterwards amended the prayer of her cross-complaint and asked for a divorce. The lower court granted a divorce to cross-complainant on the ground of cruelty. She has appealed from the portion of the interlocutory decree that denied her alimony and also from the portion of the decree which ordered the cancellation of a $500 promissory note that respondent had given to appellant for a loan made to him out of separate funds of appellant.

On the trial of the case much testimony was introduced by the parties in support of the charges of cruelty made by each respectively against the other. The testimony offered by each party was ample if believed by the lower court to justify that court in granting a decree of divorce to either. The action of the trial court in granting a divorce to appellant has effectively disposed of the question of her right to such divorce. It will therefore not be necessary to review the evidence on the issue of cruelty.

In its decree the lower court adjudged that the parties owned community property of an aggregate value of $5,900. It awarded to respondent a $1,600 equity in a small shop that was operated by the parties and which they had contracted to purchase for the sum of $3,800. Of the sum paid on the purchase price $500, represented by the promissory note of respondent referred to above which the court ordered cancelled, had been loaned to respondent by appellant. The court also awarded to respondent an automobile of the value of $400.

To appellant the court awarded a $1,000 life insurance policy on which the parties had borrowed the sum of $500. It also awarded to appellant jewelry of the value of $400. It also gave to appellant the household furniture valued at $2,000 and a $1,000 equity in the home of the parties located at San Marino, California. The court found that this latter real property had a value of $7,500, and also found that the unpaid balance on the purchase price was payable in installments of $50 per month. To summarize, the appellant was awarded community property of the value of $3,900 and to respondent was awarded the remaining community property of the value of $2,-

000. The court awarded the custody of one of the children to respondent and the custody of the other to appellant, and also awarded to appellant the sum of $35 per month for the support of the child whose custody was given to her.

[1] Appellant first contends that the trial court abused its discretion in denying her alimony. In our opinion that question cannot properly be determined by this court in view of the state of the record. A summary of certain features of the case should make clear our reasons for this conclusion. The parties were married in 1920. Two children, aged fifteen and eighteen respectively at the time of the commencement of the action, were the issue of the marriage. The plaintiff in her cross-complaint set out in detail the cruelty said to have been inflicted on her by respondent which cruelty she alleged had had the effect of seriously imperiling her health. She also alleged that the respondent was an able-bodied man and in receipt of an income sufficient to enable him to pay a reasonable sum for the support of herself and their two children and to defray the costs of her medical requirements. She further alleged that she had no income and that she was entirely dependent upon respondent for the necessities of life and for the support and maintenance of the two children. The answer of respondent denied that appellant had no income. He also denied that he was in receipt of any income in excess of $200 per month, out of which sum he said he was obliged to pay $50 per month on the purchase price of the business above referred to. Although the trial court found that respondent had inflicted extreme cruelty upon appellant it failed to make any finding as to the effect of respondent's cruelty on the health of appellant. It also failed to make any finding on the issue of appellant's lack of income or on the issue of the dependence of appellant on respondent for the necessities of life. However, the court concluded that appellant was not entitled to any alimony. Whether or not the lower court abused its discretion in not granting alimony to appellant would depend on various circumstances including the state of appellant's health. Substantial evidence was introduced on behalf of appellant on that subject. She testified that she had suffered with malaria for sixteen or seventeen years. She further testified that she had suffered with neuritis for a period of eight years as the result of a sacroiliac sprain. No finding was made by the court on this issue. Whether or not the lower court erred in refusing alimony to appellant in the circumstances shown by the evidence cannot properly be determined by this court until the lower court has passed upon all the issues made by the pleadings and the evidence introduced by the parties.

It is the more necessary that all of the issues be passed upon in a case of this kind in which the lower court has held that the wife was entitled to a divorce on the ground of the extreme cruelty of her husband but has denied her alimony since as has been pointed out by this court, a man past middle age can usually rehabilitate himself in life following a divorce but a woman of that age can seldom do so. Farrar v. Farrar, 41 Cal.App. 452, 457, 182 P. 989.

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that the lower court erred in ordering the cancellation of the $500 promissory note that had been given by respondent to appellant. According to the findings of the lower court the note was the separate property of appellant. The law is settled in this state that the power of a court to apportion property upon decreeing a divorce is limited to community property and the homestead of the parties. Carlson v. Carlson, 10 Cal.App. 300, 303, 101 P. 923; Heintz v. Heintz, 126 Cal.App. 106, 14 P.2d 317; Conard v. Conard, 5 Cal.App.2d 91, 41 P. 2d 968. Moreover, when a husband borrows money from his wife and gives her a promissory note to evidence the indebtedness, a court has no power in a divorce decree to order the cancellation of the note. Mann v. Mann, 1932, 136 Kan. 331, 15 P.2d 478.

Those portions of the judgment that have been appealed from are reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 292

AUSTIN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.

Civ. 11882.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 3, 1942.

1. Master and servant 🔑8(3)

The fact that employment of railroad employee was from month to month and, therefore, terminable at will, did not deprive employee of protection of such rights as he might have under the employment. St.1937, pp. 261, 262, §§ 2922, 3001–3003.

2. Injunction 🔑118(2)
Master and servant 🔑80(4)

In action by railroad employee to be restored to his proper status on seniority lists, to enjoin interference with such status, and for payment of money due him, complaint, alleging that plaintiff was employed by railroad as a chef in 1911 and had worked continuously for same employer for 28 years and that in 1933 he was reduced in rank to second cook and never restored to his former rating, was insufficient for failing to allege nature of seniority status or why employee was entitled thereto by alleging when and how seniority rights had become fixed. St. 1937, pp. 261, 262, §§ 2922, 3001–3003; Railway Labor Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

3. Master and servant 🔑16

Under Railway Labor Act, a railway employee, if he voted for union as bargaining agent, or even if union was elected as bargaining agent by a majority of railway personnel despite employee's adverse vote, would not necessarily know of, or be entitled to notice of, negotiation of contract between railroad and union relating to seniority rights and working conditions. Railway Labor Act § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151a, 152.

4. Pleading 🔑8(15)

In action by railroad employee to be restored to his proper status on seniority lists of railroad and union, employee's allegations that his status was "fraudulently and arbitrarily determined" in secret agreement between railroad and union presented no issue of fact. Railway Labor Act § 2, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151a, 152.

5. Master and servant 🔑16

A railway employee's grievance with respect to loss of seniority when he was demoted from chef to second cook was within purview of Railway Labor Act provision for settlement of disputes between individual employees and employer. Railway Labor Act § 3(i), 45 U.S.C.A. § 153(i).

6. Master and servant 🔑16

An action by railroad employee to determine his seniority rights may be brought, at his election, either in a court or settled by the administrative remedies prescribed by Railway Labor Act, the act not providing an exclusive remedy or tribunal. Railway Labor Act §§ 1 et seq., 3(i), 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 151 et seq., 153(i).

7. Master and servant 🔑16

Where railway employee made election to invoke jurisdiction of Adjustment Board to determine question of his seniority rights, award or determination of board was final and conclusive. Railway Labor Act § 3 (m), 45 U.S.C.A. § 153(m).

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by P. B. Austin against Southern Pacific Company and another for restoration of plaintiff to his proper status on the seniority lists as a railroad employee, to enjoin interference with such status and for payment of money due him. From a judgment for defendants after their demurrer to the third amended complaint without leave to amend was sustained, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

H. L. Richardson, of Oakland, for appellant.

John J. Allen, Jr., of Oakland, Henley C. Booth and Burton Mason, both of San Francisco, and Vaughns & Larche and Frank M. Larche, all of Oakland, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

This appeal was taken from a judgment for respondents after the demurrer of each of them to the third amended complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

It appears from said complaint that appellant was employed by respondent railroad in January, 1911, as a chef and had worked continuously as a cook for the same employer ever since; that in June, 1933, he was reduced in rank from chef to second cook and was never restored to his former rating; that his seniority entitled him to chef's rating, and that others, junior in service, had been advanced over him and given that rating; that in 1933 he had been "held out of service" for two months, at which time he was entitled to a salary of $147.50, but as second cook had received only $110 a month, and that he had run as second cook from September, 1933, until July, 1938, when he was "displaced from his employment * * * because of lack of seniority." (This last allegation is hard to reconcile with the allegation of continuous service.) Further, that there are now working for the respondent railroad numerous chefs whose seniority status is not as high as his, in preference to whom he should now be employed, and that his position with respondent railroad "is at a hazard."

The complaint alleges on information and belief that prior to this action, the exact date of which plaintiff does not know, respondent railroad "secretly, deliberately, and without notifying plaintiff, entered into a written contract" with respondent union "defining the seniority status of its dining car employees" whereby "the seniority status of plaintiff as an employee with said company was fraudulently and arbitrarily determined by said contract in such fashion that plaintiff lost his correct seniority ranking" and that he "was not given any notice of the making of said contract, and does not know its exact terms and conditions and has no way of ascertaining" them. Further, that respondent railroad's action in denying him his correct seniority status is due solely to the action of the respondent union in making said contract, and that unless the union is restrained from interfering with his seniority status he will lose his employment with respondent railroad for a considerable portion of time as well as the difference of $27.50 per month between the pay of chef and that of second cook; that his dispute with the respondent railroad did not arise because of any dissatisfaction with his services; that he is 66 years old, knows no other kind of work, and the earning of his livelihood is threatened. A demand for restoration was alleged and its refusal, and finally, that "plaintiff took the matter of his seniority status up with the National Railroad Adjustment Board * * * and submitted to them the facts herein set forth" but that the board denied him any relief.

The prayer is for the restoration of appellant by respondent railroad "to his proper status on their seniority lists"; that the respondent union be restrained from interfering with him, his employment, and his seniority status, and that the respondent railroad be required to pay appellant such money as may be due him.

[1, 2] It should be noted that two distinct contracts are mentioned in the pleading, the first, appellant's contract of employment with respondent railroad by which, presumably, he acquired his claimed seniority, the second, the contract between respondent railroad and respondent union, by which he claims to have lost it. With respect to the first contract: Although an unbroken service of over 28 years is pleaded, the allegations show nothing more than an employment from month to month (sections 3001, 3002, 3003, Labor Code, St. 1937, pp. 261, 262) terminable at the will of either party (section 2922, Id.). The circumstance that the employment was merely at will does not mean that the employee is without protection of such rights as he might have thereunder (Truax v. Raich, 239 U.S. 33, 36 S.Ct. 7, 60 L.Ed. 131, L.R.A.1916D, 545, Ann.Cas.1917B, 283), but the inquiry arising upon the face of this complaint is, just what are those rights? Counsel for appellant concedes that the employment was at will, terminable at any time, but couples that concession with the claim "that the employer, as long as he keeps the employee in his employment, should give him the seniority status that he is entitled to by virtue of a long term of service with said employer * * *." But in the pleading there is nothing to tell the court what is "the seniority status that he is entitled to" or why he is entitled to it. The complaint alleges that in June, 1933, when he was demoted "plaintiff was entitled to a rating as a chef cook * * * because of his seniority status" with the respondent railroad. That is the only allegation connecting his contract of employment with his claimed seniority. If he bases such seniority on his contract of employment it would seem that to make out any kind of a case, appellant should have alleged when and how the seniority right became fixed,—whether by an express promise made to him or to somebody acting on his behalf; whether by statute, or by a rule, practice, or custom of the employer; its extent or limit; by what terms or to what extent the employer bound itself to respect it, how it might be forfeited, lost or otherwise terminated, and perhaps how it affected appellant's contemporaries and juniors in service. The demurrers of both respondents specially directed attention to this defect in the pleading. The case of Battle v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 132 Ga. 376, 64 S.E. 463, 465, cited by respondent union, decided (1909) before the enactment of the Railway Labor Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq., is directly in point. There the plaintiff sued two railroads after a consolidation, on the ground that he had acquired seniority. There were as here, general and special demurrers to the complaint. The court said: "* * * No cause of action was set out against either defendant. While the petition made frequent references to the plaintiff's 'rights' of priority in the line of promotion in his work, it failed to show that there was any such legal right, or exactly what it was, or how it arose. It showed no contract on the part of any of the companies mentioned, made with him, to employ him for any definite length of time, or not to discharge him except under certain specified circumstances, or that it would promote him in any particular manner." Again: "But it was not shown that he had any contract with the first company which gave him any definite rights, privileges, or rank, or that he had any contract with the second company on that subject." The action of the court in sustaining the demurrers was affirmed.

The appellant has not charged a breach of the contract of an employment itself, for the complaint alleges a continuous service. The alleged grievance is the loss of appellant's "seniority status," but there is nothing to tell the court the right upon which the suit is based, or the source of such right except the bald statement that the appellant was entitled to the rating as chef because of his seniority status. Taking this allegation at its face value it shows the loss of rating in 1933 by the sole action of the respondent railroad without any interference by the union. Apparently at that time, so far as the complaint shows, no contract had been entered into between the railroad and the union.

[3, 4] With respect to the second contract, the complaint alleges that "the seniority status of plaintiff as an employee with said company was fraudulently and arbitrarily determined by said contract in such fashion that plaintiff lost his correct seniority ranking." It is not possible to tell from this whether appellant claims his seniority status was initiated by this contract or destroyed by it. The language would indicate the latter. Without proper allegations as to the origin of the right it is difficult if not impossible to determine the legal consequences of its loss. A number of cases cited by respondent railroad indicate that such seniority rights as those here discussed arise generally, and for the most part, from contracts entered into between a union, acting as the bargaining representative for employees of a class or group (whether members of the union or not) on the one hand, and the railroad-employer on the other. See, Capra v. Local Lodge, etc., 102 Colo. 63, 76 P.2d 738; Estes v. Union Terminal Co., 5 Cir., 89 F.2d 768, at page 774, and cases therein cited. In the Estes case Judge Hutcheson in a concurring opinion says, with respect to seniority agreements, "Under the theory and purpose of the statute [Railway Labor Act, 44 Stats. 577, as amended, 45 U.S.Code Ann. sec. 151 et seq.] neither the employee favored, nor those disfavored, by the carrier, have individual legal rights which they can press against the carrier as rights personal to themselves, apart from the collective agreement under which they work. Their rights are those of the class covered by the agreement, arising to the class and to them as members of the class, by virtue of the agreement, and by virtue of it alone. [Citing cases.]" The Railway Labor Act (sec. 151a, title 45, U.S.C.A.) provides, inter alia, that it is adopted "(5) to provide for the prompt and orderly settlement of all disputes growing out of grievances or out of the interpretation or application of agreements covering rates of pay, rules, or working conditions." The next section (152, title 45, U.S.C.A.), subdivision First, provides that "It shall be the duty of all carriers, their officers, agents, and employees to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions, and to settle all disputes, whether arising out of the application of such agreements or otherwise, in order to avoid any interruption to commerce or to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees thereof." Subdivision Third of the same section provides that representatives shall be chosen without coercion from carriers or employees and that representatives of the employees need not be in the employ of the carrier. Subdivision Fourth provides that "Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The majority of any craft or class of employees shall have the right to determine who shall be the representative of the craft or class * * *." It will be observed that this last sentence leaves it to the majority of any craft or class, regardless of union affiliation, to say who their representative shall be. It is not alleged whether this appellant is a member of respondent union. It would seem that would be immaterial for if a majority of dining car personnel voted for the respondent union as its bargaining representative, such it would become according to the wording of the act regardless of whether those voting were members of the union, and despite the fact that some of the individuals voting might have voted for an opposing candidate,—union or otherwise. Thus we have seen that the act supplies the machinery for the negotiation of a contract such as one dealing with seniority of railroad employees comprised of this, that or the other "craft or class." We have seen, furthermore, under the preceding discussion, that there is no allegation in this complaint which establishes any basis for the seniority status which is claimed by appellant under his contract of employment with the respondent railroad. Appellant alleges that the contract between the railroad and the union was negotiated "secretly, deliberately, and without notifying plaintiff" and that therein his seniority status was "fraudulently and arbitrarily determined" to his detriment. Under the act, if appellant had voted for the respondent union as bargaining agent—or, for that matter, if respondent union had been elected as such by a majority of dining car personnel even despite appellant's adverse vote—he would not necessarily know of, or be entitled to notice of, the negotiation of the contract itself. As far as the allegations of fraud are concerned, the appellant's statements that his status was "fraudulently and arbitrarily determined" present no issuable facts (12 Cal.Jur., 801-803). With respect to the allegation that appellant does not know and has no way of ascertaining the exact terms and conditions of the contract between the railroad and the union, it is sufficient to say that appellant could have invoked the provisions of sec. 1000, Code Civ.Proc., as soon as the action was commenced and those of sec. 2021, Code Civ.Proc., as soon as the first demurrers were filed. Notwithstanding these avenues were open, counsel stated to the court when the final ruling was made that he could not change his complaint in any appreciable way, whereupon, on sustaining the demurrers, the court denied leave to further amend.

[5-7] The fourth section (sec. 153, U.S.C.A. Title 45) establishes the National Railroad Adjustment Board. Subdivision (i) thereof provides that: "The disputes between an employee or group of employees and a carrier or carriers growing out of grievances or out of the interpretation or application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, including cases pending and unadjusted on June 21, 1934, shall be handled in the usual manner up to and including the chief operating officer of the carrier designated to handle such disputes; but, failing to reach an adjustment in this manner, the disputes may be referred by petition of the parties or by either party to the appropriate division of the Adjustment Board with a full statement of the facts and all supporting data bearing upon the disputes." It will be observed that this language clearly contemplates a dispute between an individual employee and his employer. The appellant's grievance with respect to loss of seniority was clearly within the purview of this section. The face of the complaint shows that appellant invoked the jurisdiction of the board, as follows: "That prior to the commencement of this action, plaintiff took the matter of his seniority status up with the National Railroad Adjustment Board, Division Three thereof, and submitted to them the facts herein set forth, and said National Railroad Adjustment Board on November 9, 1938, denied him any relief." The act does not provide an exclusive remedy or tribunal. In Moore v. Illinois Central R. Co., 312 U.S. 630, 61 S.Ct. 754, 85 L.Ed. 1089, the Supreme Court held that an aggrieved employee was not compelled under the act to exhaust the administrative remedies granted him by it. Following this decision the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals in Adams v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., 121 F.2d 808, 810, held that "the employees' action may be brought, at their election, either in a court, or settled by the administrative remedies prescribed by said Act." The appellant, according to the face of his complaint, made his election and invoked the board's jurisdiction. Subdivision (m) of the last-mentioned section of the act provides "* * * the awards shall be final and binding upon both parties to the dispute, except insofar as they shall contain a money award. * * *"

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 281

PEOPLE v. COLLINS.

Cr. 2199.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 2, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑706, 1171(1)

Where from the record it may be definitely determined that a prosecuting officer has deliberately framed a question in such a manner as to make it appear that it is a proper question, but which in truth is designed to elicit an answer which prosecuting officer knows will place before jury inadmissible evidence, conduct of prosecuting officer in so doing is grossly improper and under some circumstances may demand a reversal.

2. Criminal law 🔑1154

Whether prosecuting officer has deliberately framed a question in such a manner as to make it appear that it is a proper question, but which in truth is designed to elicit an answer which he knows will place before jury inadmissible evidence, must in most cases be left to trial court.

3. Criminal law 🔑867

Where prosecuting officer asked police officer on direct examination whether defendant had stated to him what his occupation was, and police officer answered that defendant had told him that he was unable to work and had been a thief since nine years old which testimony was stricken out upon defendant's objection, trial court did not abuse its discretion in thereafter refusing to declare a mistrial on ground that prosecuting officer was guilty of "misconduct".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

4. Criminal law 🔑683(1), 1169(2)

In burglary prosecution, refusal to permit defendant to be asked question whether he was suffering from any disease, which question was offered for purposes of showing that it would have been impossible for defendant to have run in manner burglar was described by witnesses as having run in flight from scene of crime, was improper, but did not constitute prejudicial error, where it appeared that purpose for which question was asked was fully accomplished by further interrogation by defendant's counsel and by having defendant partly disrobe so that jury could observe his physical condition.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Tom C. Collins was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Leo A. Sullivan and William A. Sullivan, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Dennis Hession, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The appellant was charged with the crime of burglary and five previous convictions of felony. He entered a plea of not guilty to the burglary charge, and denied having suffered the previous convictions. During trial two of the latter charges were dismissed, and the jury found him guilty of first-degree burglary, and that the charges involving the three remaining previous convictions were true. He was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison, and this appeal was taken from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It appears from the evidence that about 4 a. m. on July 4, 1940, Bernard Schwalm, a college student residing in Berkeley, was awakened by a noise in his bedroom. He sat up in bed, looked toward the window and saw the figure of a tall, thin man, disappear hurriedly from the room. Schwalm got out of bed, and, barefooted and clad in pajamas, pursued the burglar for several blocks, in and out of backyards, through alleys and along the streets. Shortly after the chase started he caught up with the burglar, who stopped, turned around and facing Schwalm said, "Stay away * * * or I'll kill you." The burglar then turned and ran. Schwalm pulled a picket from the fence, continued the chase, and when the burglar paused to open a gate Schwalm broke the picket over the burglar's head, but it did not stop him in his flight. About this time a young man named Dean joined Schwalm in the pursuit, and succeeded in overtaking the burglar, whereupon the burglar stopped momentarily, faced Dean, and calling him a vile name displayed a knife in a threatening manner. Dean then left to summon the police, but Schwalm continued the chase. The burglar finally ran into a backyard surrounded by a ten-foot fence, and upon reaching the fence turned around, faced Schwalm, and in a menacing manner raised his arm. Schwalm having meanwhile picked up two milk bottles, hurled them at the burglar. The second bottle struck the burglar on the jaw, felling him to the ground. He lay there for a minute or two, then arose slowly and the chase was on again. After running two or three more blocks the burglar stopped, and as related by Schwalm the following conversation took place: "He said 'Let me alone,' and I said, 'No, not until I find out what you took from me.' He said, 'All I got was your wallet, and it's back there where you knocked me down.' * * * I said I had $12.00 in my wallet and I wanted that, and he said, 'If I give you $12.00 out of my own pocket will you let me go?' And I agreed." Thereupon the burglar laid $12 in currency on the pavement and hastily walked away. Later Schwalm found his empty wallet where the burglar said he had dropped it. It was dawn when the chase started, but Schwalm testified that it was "completely light" before it ended, so that each time the burglar stopped his features were clearly discernible. Subsequently Schwalm examined more than two thousand pictures in the police files and picked the photograph of appellant as being that of the burglar. In December of the same year appellant was apprehended in southern California and returned to Berkeley, where Schwalm and Dean, at different times and out of the presence of each other, positively identified appellant in a line-up of ten or more persons, as being the burglar. In all respects he fitted the description previously furnished the police by Schwalm and Dean; moreover they again identified him at the trial as being the burglar.

The fact that a burglary was committed was not disputed, but appellant, testifying in his own behalf, claimed he was in Los Angeles at the time of the commission of the crime. However, he was unable to state where he was then living, or name any persons with whom he came in contact, nor did he produce any witness or establish any circumstance to corroborate his asserted alibi. He admitted having served the three prior convictions, and that his true name was Truman Thomas Crowley, the name set forth in the records of said prior convictions. The first was obtained in 1922 in Kansas, the charge being grand larceny "and escape from jail"; the second was for burglary, committed in 1933 in Missouri; and the third was for an attempted burglary, in Kansas in 1936.

Appellant makes no point that the evidence is insufficient to support the jury's verdict, but as grounds of appeal urges misconduct on the part of the prosecuting officer, and that the trial court erred in sustaining an objection to a question propounded to appellant on direct examination. It is our conclusion that no ground for reversal has been established.

The first point arises out of the following situation: By the testimony of a police inspector of the Berkeley Police Department who brought appellant from Glendale where he was arrested to Alameda County for trial, the people sought to prove a series of admissions which it was claimed appellant had made to the police inspector, and one of the questions propounded to the witness by the prosecuting officer was whether appellant stated "what his occupation was." Appellant's counsel objected to the question upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered in the affirmative. Thereupon, after fixing the time and place of the conversation and the persons present, the witness was asked: "What did you say and what did he say in regard to what his occupation was?" Appellant's counsel again objected on the same general grounds; the objection was overruled, and the witness replied: "I asked him where he had been last employed and he told me that he was unable to work, he had been a thief all his life, since 9 years old." Appellant's counsel asked that "that all go out," and "that the jury be instructed to disregard it," adding, "I am going to ask for a mistrial, it couldn't be responsive, it couldn't under any circumstances. The district attorney must have known the answer. It couldn't do anything but prevent the defendant from receiving a fair and impartial trial, it's done deliberately.

"The Court: Motion granted. The answer may be stricken out."

Appellant's counsel thereupon asked the court to declare a mistrial, saying he cited "the remark" as prejudicial misconduct Following the denial of the motion for mistrial appellant's counsel stated: "At this time I am going to ask the Court to admonish the jury they are not to be biased or prejudiced by that statement of the officer and absolutely that they are not to draw any unfavorable inference therefrom.

"The Court: The jury will be instructed at the proper time to disregard any testimony that has been stricken out."

Such an instruction was subsequently given in the following words: "You are hereby further instructed that you are not to consider for any purpose any testimony or evidence which has been struck out by the Court, nor the offer of any evidence which was not admitted by the Court."

As will be noted from the foregoing, appellant's complaint that he was prevented from receiving a fair trial was based upon the fact that the witness included in his answer a prejudicial statement not responsive to the question propounded to him by the prosecuting attorney. But as will be noted also, on appellant's motion the trial court immediately struck out the entire answer and later instructed the jury that testimony so stricken was not to be considered by the jury for any purpose. In that state of the record it cannot be presumed that the jury disobeyed such instruction.

[1-3] Regarding the accusation made by appellant's counsel that the prosecuting officer "must have known" what the answer of the witness would be, it may be said that where from the record itself, as distinguished from a mere accusation of opposing counsel, it may be definitely determined that a prosecuting officer has deliberately framed a question in such a manner as to make it appear that it is a proper question, but which in truth is designed to elicit an answer which he knows will place before the jury inadmissible evidence, his conduct in so doing is not only grossly improper, but under some circumstances may demand a reversal. However, the determination of questions of this kind must necessarily, in most cases, be left to the trial court, which, of course, should not hesitate to take appropriate action, even to the extent of granting a new trial, when convinced that such misconduct has prevented a defendant from having a fair trial. Obviously the trial court here did not believe that the accusation so made by appellant's counsel against the prosecuting officer was justified; and the record on appeal fails to disclose anything which would warrant this court in holding, as a matter of law, to the contrary. Moreover, in considering the question of whether the objectionable portion of the answer of the police inspector operated to appellant's prejudice, it must be remembered that according to appellant's own admissions before the jury his criminal career, which included the crimes of larceny and burglary, extended back as far as 1922.

[4] With respect to the second point, the record shows that upon taking the witness stand in his own behalf appellant testified that his age was 37, that his height was 6 feet 1 inch, and that he weighed 120 pounds. Shortly afterwards his counsel put this question to him: "I will ask you, Mr. Crowley, if you are suffering from any disease?" Objection was made upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and the objection was sustained. Thereupon counsel stated that his purpose in asking the question was to show that appellant was "suffering from an advanced stage of tuberculosis," and that "it would be impossible for him in his physical condition to have ever run in the manner described that the man on July 4, 1940, was supposed to have run * * *." Further objection was made that the question called "for hearsay and for his medical conclusions"; and in reply his counsel stated that he was not asking for a conclusion, but was "asking him of his own knowledge, if he is suffering from tuberculosis." The court again sustained the objection, but immediately thereupon, according to the reporter's transcript, the following proceedings tooks place:

"Mr. Sullivan: All right. I will ask you this question. On the 4th day of July, 1940, were you physically able to do any running or anything of that nature? A. No sir.

"Q. For how long a time have you been in a physical condition where you would be unable to run or take any great exertion? A. For about a period of four or five years.

"Q. Take you coat off, if you will. Step down in front of the jury, step down over here, roll up your sleeves, if you will, both of them. (The witness stepped down before the jury.) Now, were you in the same physical condition on July 4, 1940, as you are at the present time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Put your coat on. (The witness returned to the stand.) Was your weight approximately the same then as now?

"The Court: Just a moment.

"Mr. Sullivan: Q. Your weight as of July, 1940? A. It was just about the same, wouldn't vary one way or the other."

The assignment of error here relied upon is directed against the ruling upon the original question, to wit, whether appellant was "suffering from any disease," and it would seem that in view of the evidence showing the circumstances attending the flight and the pursuit of the burglar from the scene of the crime, and considering the purpose of the question as disclosed by appellant's counsel, the trial court should have permitted appellant to answer it, notwithstanding that, as stated by the prosecuting officer, appellant was not "a doctor." However, it cannot be said that the ruling complained of operated to appellant's prejudice, because as will be seen, the real purpose for which the question was asked was fully accomplished by further interrogation by appellant's counsel, and by having appellant partly disrobe so that the jury could observe his physical condition.

After an examination of the entire record including the evidence it is our conclusion that no ground for reversal has been established, and that the verdict has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The judgment is affirmed.

GOODELL, J. pro tem., concurred.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

I concur in the conclusion contained in the majority opinion, but not in the reasons given for that conclusion. The majority opinion holds that the prosecuting officer was not guilty of misconduct in asking the question of the officer concerning the admissions made by defendant to him relating to his occupation. It is held that it does not appear from the record that the prosecutor can be charged with deliberately trying to get inadmissible evidence before the jury. I cannot agree with that construction of the record. The question asked of the officer was, "What did you say and what did he say in regard to what his occupation was?" The answer was, "I asked him where he had last been employed and he told me that he was unable to work, he had been a thief all his life, since 9 years old." Obviously, the question called for the entire conversation concerning the occupation of the defendant, and just as obviously the answer was responsive to that question. The reference to the fact that the defendant is supposed to have said that "he had been a thief all his life, since 9 years old" clearly is responsive to the question concerning the defendant's occupation. It is also perfectly clear to me, the answer being responsive to the question, that the prosecutor, as a matter of law, is chargeable with knowledge of the answer the witness was going to give. The witness was the prosecution's witness. Under such circumstances, the law is clear that the prosecutor is chargeable, as a matter of law, with knowledge of the responsive answers to questions asked by him.

The attorney general concedes the law to be that the character of a defendant cannot be attacked unless he puts his character into issue by producing character witnesses. That is undoubtedly the law. People v. Arlington, 123 Cal. 356, 55 P. 1003; People v. Adams, 76 Cal.App. 178, 244 P. 106; People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 P. 1078; People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 114 P. 829. It, therefore, follows that in this case it must be held that the prosecutor deliberately attempted to get the bad character of the defendant before the jury when that issue was not before the court. Such tactics should not be condoned. The defendant is entitled to a fair trial, and cannot be convicted simply because he may be a bad man or may have a bad record. It is the duty of prosecuting officials to protect the rights of the defendant, and certainly they have no lawful right to invade intentionally such rights.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the prosecutor in this case was guilty of deliberate misconduct in asking the question for the purpose of eliciting an improper answer. That was error, but not every error requires a reversal. Here the record shows that the trial judge struck the improper evidence from the record, and instructed the jury not to consider stricken evidence for any purpose. While that will not, in all cases, cure the error, it cannot be held in the present case that after an examination of the entire record "the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice" within the meaning of art. VI, Sec. 4½ of the Constitution. In the present case the defendant admitted that he had served three prior terms for similar offenses. His criminal career admittedly started in 1922 when he was but eighteen years of age. In view of the fact that the improper evidence was stricken and the jury properly instructed to disregard such evidence, and, in view of the evidence properly in the record, it cannot be said, under the circumstances, that there has been a miscarriage of justice as a result of the error under consideration.

50 Cal.App.2d 189

RIPPE et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

Civ. 12733.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Feb. 26, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Automobiles 🔑276

As regards city's liability for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant land and plunged over adjacent bluff, city had "constructive notice" of defective condition of highway from continuance thereof for some three years. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Constructive Notice".

2. Automobiles 🔑306(5)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, evidence sustained finding that city had actual knowledge of defective conditions of highway at place of accident. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

3. Automobiles 🔑306(5)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, evidence that earthen fill was placed there by city's responsible agents sustained finding that city had knowledge of such inherently dangerous condition which city created, especially in view of trial judge's personal inspection of area involved. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑764(1)

In determining whether requisite conditions under Public Liability Act are present so as to impose liability on city for injuries sustained because of dangerous or defective condition of street, each case must depend upon its own state of facts and no hard and fast rule can be applied. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

5. Automobiles 🔑306(4)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, evidence sustained finding that a dangerous and defective condition of street existed at place of accident so as to render city liable under Public Liability Act. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, the question of contributory negligence of deceased driver was for trier of facts. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630; Vehicle Code, § 525, St.1935, p. 181.

7. Automobiles 🔑306(8)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, proceeding at the rate of six to twenty miles per hour during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, struck a pole, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant rough land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, evidence sustained finding that deceased motorist was not contributorily negligent so as to preclude recovery for death and injuries. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630; Vehicle Code, § 525, St.1935, p. 181.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1012(1)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, struck a pole off the road, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant rough land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, the presence of pole adjacent to curb not directly in line with path of automobile did not furnish such irresistible proof of negligent speed, manner of operation, or of proximate cause as to require a conclusion contrary to that reached by trial court that motorist was not contributorily negligent. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630; Vehicle Code, § 525, St. 1935, p. 181.

9. Automobiles ⟹306(7)

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, struck a pole off the road, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant rough land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, evidence sustained finding that defective condition of highway was proximate cause of death and injuries. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630.

10. Automobiles ⟹257, 278, 279

In action against city for death and injuries when automobile, during darkness and heavy fog, passed terminus of street at point where there was no guardrail or light and where curb was concealed by earthen fill placed there by city, struck a pole off the road, traversed 85 to 100 feet of vacant rough land, and plunged over adjacent bluff, the concealed curb, the fill, the absence of any barrier, light or other visible marker at the danger point, the dimness of double center line, the absence of lines or markers, the grade of the street, and similar matters, were all proper for consideration in determining city's liability. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630; Vehicle Code, § 525, St.1935, p. 181.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy Hight, Judge pro tem.

Action by Pansy M. Rippe and others against the City of Los Angeles to recover damages for wrongful death and for personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Leonard Husar, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Raycraft and Rufus C. Porter, both of San Pedro, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant city of Los Angeles from a judgment rendered in favor of three plaintiffs after trial by the court without a jury in an action for wrongful death and for personal injuries arising out of an accident in which an automobile being operated by Budd Rippe, the husband of plaintiff Pansy M. Rippe, during darkness and a heavy fog, passed the southern terminus of Pacific Avenue in San Pedro at a point where there was no guard rail or light and where the curb was concealed by an earthen fill, placed there by the defendant city, traversed eighty-five to one hundred feet of vacant land, and plunged over an adjacent bluff ninety-five feet high. The accident was found to be the proximate result of a dangerous and defective condition of the highway of which the defendant city, but not the deceased driver, had notice and knowledge. In such accident Mr. Rippe was killed and his two guest-passenger companions, plaintiffs Clarence Comer and Chris Jones, were injured, the plaintiff Comer falling with the automobile and the driver Rippe over the cliff and the plaintiff Jones being thrown from the car after it left the highway but before it fell down the precipice.

Defendant city claims neither an exorbitant award of damages nor any error of law but avails itself of the legal right of appeal, arguing in effect that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings. It states its "points" as follows:

"Point I. There was no dangerous or defective condition of the street at the scene of the accident.

"Point II. The dangerous and defective condition found by the court to exist was not the proximate cause of the accident.

"Point III. The evidence fails to show that the City of Los Angeles had notice or knowledge of the dangerous or defective character of the condition complained of."

In its closing brief appellant splits its Point II and elaborates its position with the direct contention that "The proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the driver of the car."

Appellant's points are devoid of merit.

The record discloses that Pacific Avenue is a main through highway with a concrete paved roadway fifty-six feet in width, running in a northerly and southerly direction through the San Pedro area of Los Angeles. Near the scene of the accident it slopes downward at a one and one-half per cent. grade to its southern terminus which is about eighty-five to one hundred feet from the edge of the Point

Fermin Cliffs which at that point are about ninety-five feet above mean sea level. At such terminus it is joined by Paseo del Mar, a street which runs in a general northeasterly and west southwesterly direction, the joinder being on a curve of about sixty degrees banked slightly lower on the outside than on the inside. The outside (southerly and easterly sides) of this curve had been marked by a curb and by a white-painted fence approximately three feet six inches in height, but about three years before the accident in question a truck had crashed through the fence and made a gap twenty-eight feet wide of which gap a space of sixteen feet was directly opposite and in line with the westerly sixteen feet of roadway of Pacific Avenue. This condition was allowed to exist for three years, up to the time of the accident. The point sixteen feet east of the west curb line of Pacific (extended) was marked by a utility pole adjacent to the south curb of the curve. From this pole, for a distance of about sixty feet along the curve to the west and across all of the twenty-eight feet of fence gap mentioned above the defendant city had thrown in a dirt fill, approximately curb height, so that the curb itself as stated by a witness "for a distance * * * was just barely visible and then disappeared entirely." This dirt fill on the inner or street side was sloped or banked up about six inches and along the edge was surfaced with oil. At the curb it filled the gutter and made the elevation of the street inside the curb exactly the same as that of the land immediately adjacent to the curb outside the street limits. Aside from "hundreds of dents" from previous accidents the pole was marked only with four dull, corroded aluminum strips. On a post of the fence to the east of the pole were the remains of a red glass reflector which was "broken to smithereens and had been hanging in that condition for months and months."

Northerly from a point one block north of its terminus Pacific Avenue was a white-line-marked four-lane highway but at Shepard Street, one block (123 feet) north of its joinder with Paseo del Mar the white lines, other than the double center line, ended. The double center line, which curved around to join Paseo del Mar, was described as being "worn and dim," and as having been painted six or seven months before the accident. There were no zig-zag lines to indicate a turn or intersection. In an area beginning some one hundred fifty feet north of Shepard Street, in the easterly of the two traffic lanes on the west side of Pacific Avenue, there were painted, and apparently under favorable conditions dimly visible, the words "Curve" and "Slow" and an arrow. The car in which decedent Rippe and plaintiffs Comer and Jones were riding on the fateful occasion was not in such easterly lane but, in accordance with law (Vehicle Code, sec. 525, St.1935, p. 181) and caution, was proceeding in the lane next to the right hand or westerly curb. This lane was not favored with any cautionary device or symbol.

Into this setting, during early morning darkness and a dense fog (at about 5:30 o'clock a. m.) on March 15, 1939, the decedent Budd Rippe, with the plaintiffs Comer and Jones, "trying to creep his way along," at a speed not over twenty miles per hour and perhaps as low as six miles per hour, looking for the intersection of a street he never found, drove his light delivery truck south along Pacific Avenue in his right hand (the westerly) traffic lane of Pacific Avenue. He missed the curve into Paseo del Mar, drove over the curb-high dirt fill, sideswiped the utility pole, his car careened into the somewhat rough ground adjacent to the southerly terminus of the highway and the left wheels sank into a gully or channel running from this point out and generally down grade to the edge of the cliff. The plaintiff Jones was thrown from the car while it was crossing the rough ground but the driver and plaintiff Comer remained in the vehicle, which followed the slope about eighty-five to one hundred feet to the precipice edge and crashed to the beach below. The deceased driver was not familiar with the street conditions at the scene of the accident.

The trial court found on sufficient evidence that "on said date and for a long time prior thereto, said defendant failed to erect or maintain a barricade, fence, barrier, visible curb, or any other object at the south end of the west side of Pacific Avenue, which at night time, ordinarily would indicate to a motorist driving south on the right or west side of material change in its course; that the defendant had fomerly [sic] maintained a white fence across said space, but that the same had been broken down and carried away a long period of time prior to March 15, 1939; that on March 15, 1939, the defendant * * * maintained a white barricade or fence along the curb line on the portion of the curve at the south end of the east half of Pacific Avenue and extending slightly to the west of the extended center line of Pacific Avenue; that on March 15, 1939, there was no street light or warning light of any kind at the south end of Pacific Avenue * * * that the defendant, City of Los Angeles, and its proper officers and agents with authority to make necessary improvements and repairs, had knowledge and notice of the dangerous and defective condition existing at the south end of the said Pacific Avenue for a sufficient length of time prior to March 15, 1939, in which to have made all necessary improvements or repairs; that the conditions existing on March 15, 1939, at the south end of Pacific Avenue had existed for a period of three years prior thereto."

[1, 2] In addition to the constructive notice arising from the long continued defective condition of the highway (see Hook v. City of Sacramento, 1931, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643; Wise v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, 9 Cal.App.2d 364, 366, 49 P. 2d 1122, 50 P.2d 1079; Cressey v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 745, 747, 53 P.2d 172; Bauman v. City and County of San Francisco, 1940, 42 Cal.App.2d 144, 157, 108 P.2d 989), there was ample evidence that the defendant city had actual knowledge of the conditions. Three members of the city council who were members of the public works committee and two deputy city engineers examined the premises in 1936 or 1937 and the conditions found were reported to the Board of Public Works. A council member who discussed the conditions with the president of the board of public works admitted that the city council in 1936 had received a letter from Mr. Rufus C. Porter, a resident of the district, in which letter it was stated, among other things, with reference to the locality in question, that:

"I desire to repeat to you again, in as strong language as I can make it, that said corner is a very dangerous one, and is becoming more so from time to time as public travel increases.

"Not one but quite a number of deaths have occurred there, and much property has been destroyed. The city lamp post located there have [sic] been destroyed time and again. The large city electric poles or telephone poles have been broken, and destroyed. Since your committee was here, a city lamp was destroyed, and the numerous scars on the posts there are mute but unanswerable signs of what is constantly happening on that corner * * * I venture to say that there has been a greater loss of life and a greater destruction of property at said corner of Pacific Avenue, Paseo del Mar and Bluff Place within the last five years than has occurred by reason of faulty street crossings, at any half dozens corners of Broadway in the City of Los Angeles in the same length of time." Concerning the matters referred to, the councilman testified that in a conversation with the president of the board of public works, early in 1937, he "called his attention to the letter from Mr. Porter * * * that there was a needed improvement * * * I told him it was a corner that needed attention. It was in a deplorable condition, and it needed attention." While it does not appear that the attention of the council or of the board of public works was specifically directed to the precise portion of the curve, the defective condition of which was responsible for the tragedy involved in this case, it would be unjustifiable for us to hold in the light of all the circumstances depicted in the record that as a matter of law the trial court's findings of notice and knowledge are unsupported.

[3] As a result of Mr. Porter's vigorous demands, extending from 1935 to 1937, it appears that the defendant city finally improved to some extent the conditions at the junction involved, so far as the southeasterly corner thereof was concerned but left the southwesterly side subject to the defective conditions which existed on March 15, 1939. The words "slow," "curve" and the arrow were painted in the easterly roadway north of Shepard Street but no such warning signs were placed in that portion of the roadway which vehicles obeying the law (Vehicle Code, sec. 525) traveling south under dark and foggy conditions such as the car in this case encountered would be traversing. Furthermore the dirt fill concealing the curb at the place where it was most needed for the protection of persons traveling under the conditions decedent Rippe encountered was placed there by the defendant city's own responsible agents; and under the circumstances shown, the trial court was justified in finding that defendant had knowledge of this inherently dangerous condition which it created. Wise v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, supra; Sandstoe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 1938, 28 Cal.App.2d 215, 219, 82 P.2d 216. In this connection it should be noted that the trial judge himself inspected the area and had the benefit of his own observations as of the trial date in interpreting the conditions shown by the photographs and testimony of witnesses to have existed on March 15, 1939, and prior thereto.

[4, 5] It has been repeatedly held in this state that when dealing with cases falling under the provisions of the Public Liability Act of 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 675; Deering's Gen. Laws, 1937, Act 5619, p. 2630), as does this case, each of such cases must depend upon its own state of facts and that in the majority thereof no hard and fast rule can be applied. Rafferty v. City of Marysville, 1929, 207 Cal. 657, 661, 280 P. 118; George v. City of Los Angeles, 1938, 11 Cal.2d 303, 309, 79 P.2d 723; Arellano v. City of Burbank, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 248, 254, 255, 89 P.2d 113. As tested by the discussions of the law in the cases cited the evidence in the case before us clearly supports the trial court's conclusions that a dangerous and defective condition of the street existed at the place of the accident and that defendant city had both actual knowledge and constructive notice of such conditions.

[6, 7] Likewise the question of contributory negligence of the deceased driver was a problem for the trier of facts. Appellant calls our attention to Smyth v. Harris & Devine, 1934, 3 Cal.App.2d 194, 197, 198, 38 P.2d 862, and invokes the doctrine quoted by that case from Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 1920, 46 Cal.App. 148, 158, 189 P. 462, which in turn was based on the Wisconsin case of Lauson v. Town of Fond du Lac, 1909, 141 Wis. 57, 123 N.W. 629, 25 L.R.A.,N.S., 40, 135 Am.St.Rep. 30. The latter case held flatly that it was negligence on the part of a driver to operate his car at night at such a rate of speed as would prevent the car from being stopped within the radius of illumination of the car lights. It should be noted that the District Court of Appeal in Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., 1930, 107 Cal.App. 467, 472, 473, 290 P. 684, 686, discussed the Wisconsin case and declined to accept the rule "in all of its fullness." We have also examined the cases of Haynes v. Doxie, 1921, 52 Cal.App. 133, 198 P. 39; Wurl v. Watson, 1924, 67 Cal.App. 625, 630, 228 P. 43; Gammon v. Wales, 1931, 115 Cal.App. 133, 300 P. 988; and Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co., 1934, 1 Cal.App.2d 265, 36 P.2d 701, and have considered the implications of language used therein with respect to a stricter rule of accountability being applicable to a driver whose vehicle contacts obstructions or defects in the highway bed itself rather than placed thereon (Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co., 1930, supra) or who is not familiar with the road being traversed, but find none of such cases to be conclusive here.

A statement in Haynes v. Doxie, 1921, supra, is, however, pertinent. The facts in that case were that the night was dark and rainy, the windshield of the car was wet and fairly hard to see through, the road ran downgrade and was slippery and the car more or less inclined to skid; the driver did not see an unlighted truck in the highway until he was within twenty-five or thirty feet from it and at the rate of speed he was traveling, eighteen miles per hour, was unable to stop or turn sufficiently to avoid striking it. The court said, at page 136 of 52 Cal.App., at page 40 of 198 P.: "On these facts we are asked to declare it to be the rule that it is negligence for the driver of an automobile to drive on the highway on a dark night at such a rate of speed that he cannot avoid objects after they come within the area lighted by his lights." The court then quotes from Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 1920, supra, and proceeds: "The fact that respondent was not able to see, and did not see, the unlighted truck until he was within 25 or 30 feet of the same does not fully establish the facts necessary to give appellant the benefit of the rule above stated. Notwithstanding the facts stated, it may also be true that if the truck had been lighted, as required by law, plaintiff would have been able to see it, and would have seen it, while at a distance great enough to enable him to stop his automobile, and avoid the collision." Substantially the same statement may be made here. It may be true that if the highway had been properly constructed and maintained the driver could and would have seen the curb, the barrier, the light, the reflector, the lines or cautionary words or symbols in the roadway or adjacent to it in ample time to turn into Paseo del Mar or to stop. The difficulty in this case was that there was nothing of the sort for the careful driver to see. The speed of the car was somewhere between six and twenty miles per hour. If we hold that on the facts presented it was negligence per se for the driver to proceed it will practically amount to a holding that any vehicular movement whatsoever under such conditions is negligence. It would license municipalities to construct and maintain highways with defects dangerous and concealed under conditions other than those of good visibility. Such a rule would not be in accord with the standards of governmental care, skill, and integrity in public improvements which citizens have a right to expect and for which the users of highways well pay. We cannot even conclude with certainty that any amount of familiarity with the streets in question would have enabled driver Rippe to avoid the disaster he encountered.

[8] It should be observed also that the doctrine of negligence in speed at night suggested in the cited cases and sought to be applied here by appellant is predicated on the premise (as stated in the case of Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 1920, supra, 46 Cal.App. at page 159, 189 P. at page 467) "if he drives at a rate of speed which will not permit him to stop or slow up within the radius illuminated by his lights, and the accident is proximately caused thereby." (Italics added.) The evidence before us does not require a finding that the car at the speed it was traveling could not have been turned safely into Paseo del Mar or even entirely stopped within the radius of its lights if there had been anything for those lights to illuminate reasonably sufficient under the circumstances to warn the driver that the roadway ended or turned. It was the defective and dangerous condition of the highway, unmarked and not readily visible, which was the proximate cause of the accident, not the speed of the car. The dark colored utility pole with four corroded aluminum plates which the side of the car struck was out of the roadway and striking it no more conclusively proves negligence of the driver than would striking an unlighted vehicle standing in the street. Its presence adjacent to the curb not directly in line with the car's path does not furnish such irresistible proof of negligent speed, manner of operation, or of proximate cause, as to require a conclusion contrary to that reached by the trial court, which under the circumstances is conclusive. Van Praag v. Gale, 1895, 107 Cal. 438, 444, 40 P. 555; Arellano v. City of Burbank, 1939, supra.

[9, 10] While it seems at first thought strange that decedent's automobile should have traversed the somewhat rough terrain between the end of the highway and the edge of the bluff for a distance of approximately one hundred feet without his having been able to stop it, we cannot hold, merely because it seems strange, that it was impossible or that it irresistibly imports a foreign link in the chain of proximate cause. The evidence supports the finding that prior to and at the time of leaving the roadway and striking the pole at the obscured curb the decedent had been driving carefully; it would be unnatural to assume that he saw the conditions and deliberately directed his car away from the highway and across the rough land; it is more reasonable to infer that the sideswiping of the pole and the lurching of the vehicle from that impact and its own impetus and the careening which the rough ground would produce wrenched the controls from his grasp. The plaintiff Jones was thrown out by the violence of the motion and the car "seemed to gain new life." The very roughness of the ground (as depicted by photographs in evidence) over which the car passed without overturning suggests to us not a high rate of speed or negligent operation as contended by appellant but rather a moderate speed and a reasonable explanation for the failure of the driver at such speed to regain control. His foot might easily have been jolted from brake or clutch, at least momentarily, to accelerator; it was shown that the left wheels followed a gully or channel which apparently was sufficient to guide the vehicle to its disaster, and the slope of the land became sharper as it neared the brink.

The matters recited and other circumstances which we need not enumerate all unite in supporting the conclusion that it was the defective condition of the highway within its own boundaries which was the proximate cause of the death and the injuries suffered; the concealed curb, the dirt fill inside the curb to the same level with the ground beyond the twenty-eight-foot-wide gap in the white fence, the absence of any barrier, light, or other visible marker at the danger point, the termination of the westerly lane white line one hundred twenty-three feet north of the street end or curve, the dimness of the double center line, the absence of zigzag or other lines or markers on the westerly side of the street adjacent to its end or curve into Paseo del Mar, the grade of the street; all of these items were proper for the consideration of the trial judge. Such facts as that the dirt fill was banked up about six inches inside the street, that the utility pole was opposite a point about sixteen feet east of the west curb line extended, that on the pole were four aluminum plates (dull and corroded, but markers of a sort) do not sweep away the force of the contrary circumstances; they but create a conflict of inferences and that conflict has been determined adversely to defendant.

As suggested above the three points urged by appellant in its opening brief and the four as noted in its closing brief, in the final analysis are but an attack on the sufficiency of the evidence. We have surveyed that evidence and find it sufficient. The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN and PARKER, WOOD, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 327

LANE v. WHITAKER.

Civ. 11988.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 4, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑594

A court may not arbitrarily disregard uncontradicted testimony which is not inherently improbable.

2. Trusts 🔑372(1)

Where action by administratrix of settlor's son was based on theory that the settlor transferred all his personalty to his divorced wife under an oral trust providing that on a certain contingency the estate of the son would on son's death become entitled to one-half of the trust property and that defendant acquired trust property without consideration and with knowledge of the existence of the trust, defendant's possession created a presumption of ownership in defendant. Civ.Code, § 654.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1012(1)

Where action by administratrix of settlor's son was based on theory that the settlor transferred all his personalty to his divorced wife under an oral trust providing that on a certain contingency the estate of the son would on son's death become entitled to one-half of the trust fund, and that defendant acquired trust property without consideration and with knowledge of the existence of the trust, presumption of defendant's ownership arising from defendant's possession constituted "evidence" the weight of which was for determination of trial court.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Evidence".

4. Evidence 🔑89

A trial court may properly conclude that a presumption outweighs in evidentiary value the testimony of many witnesses.

5. Trusts 🔑21(2)

The declaration of a trust, whether written or oral, must be reasonably certain in its material terms, including subject matter involved, beneficiaries, the nature and quantity of interest they are to have and manner in which the trust is to be performed.

6. Trusts 🔑44(2)

Where action by administratrix of settlor's son was based on theory that the settlor transferred all his personalty to his divorced wife under an oral trust providing that on a certain contingency the estate of the son would on son's death become entitled to one-half of the trust fund, and that defendant acquired trust property without consideration and with knowledge of the existence of the trust, record sustained determination that the administratrix had not made out a sufficiently clear case to authorize judgment in her favor.

7. Jury 🔑14(5)

Where complaint alleged the existence of a trust which it asked that the court decree and carry into effect and asked that defendant as trustee be required to account for the trust res, equity court had exclusive jurisdiction of issues presented, and plaintiff's demand for jury trial was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action to enforce a trust by Hazel Lane as administratrix of the estate of Harry C. Lane, deceased, against Nell Whitaker. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Conroy & Conroy, Edward L. Conroy, and Alvin Wendt, all of Hollywood, for appellant.

Earle M. Daniels, Hallam Mathews, and John A. Gilligan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

McWILLIAMS, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff, who sues as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, from a judgment in favor of the defendant. The action was tried on the fourth amended complaint of plaintiff. The complaint alleges three causes of action. The first cause of action is based upon the theory that plaintiff's husband was a beneficiary under an oral trust by the terms of which plaintiff, as his administratrix, claims to be entitled to certain personal property in the possession of defendant. The property in controversy, according to the complaint, was acquired by the defendant without consideration and with knowledge of the existence of the trust. Plaintiff alleges that the exact amount of the property so held by defendant is peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant but that according to plaintiff's information it had a reasonable value when so acquired by defendant of approximately $125,000. The second cause of action is likewise based upon the existence of the same alleged trust. In view of the nature of plaintiff's contentions its allegations need not be further set out. The third cause of action was held by the trial court not to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and defendant's objection to the introduction of evidence under that count was sustained on that ground. Appellant does not question the correctness of the court's ruling on that cause of action. The prayer of the complaint is in brief that the defendant be required to account for all of the trust estate alleged to have been received by her and that the trust be carried into effect.

In somewhat greater detail the facts pleaded in plaintiff's first cause of action may be stated as follows. In the year 1900 Chester M. Lane was divorced from Ellen Dora Lane in the State of Illinois. In 1913 Mrs. Lane came to California where she continued to reside until her death in 1938. In 1915 Mr. Lane came to California where he resided until his death in 1934. Plaintiff alleges that in 1927 Chester M. Lane transferred all of his personal property to his divorced wife under an oral trust. The precise terms of the trust need not be set forth. It is sufficient to state that it provided that on a certain contingency the estate of his son, Harry C. Lane, would on the death of the son become entitled to one-half of the trust fund. The complaint alleges that the son, Harry C. Lane, died on July 19, 1937, leaving surviving him his wife, the plaintiff herein, and a daughter, Helen Hambright. The plaintiff, as the administratrix of the estate of her late husband, contends that she is entitled to maintain this action and to enforce the alleged trust.

Appellant's principal contention is that upon the trial of the case the testimony of her witnesses was unimpeached and uncontradicted, that she was therefore entitled to judgment and that the lower court erred in holding otherwise.

[1-4] Plaintiff's case, upon the trial, was made up almost exclusively of admissions claimed to have been made by the alleged trustee, Ellen Dora Lane, during her lifetime, coupled with evidence of payments claimed to have been made by her pursuant to the provisions of the trust, which payments it is contended constituted evidence of the recognition of the trust by the trustee. Defendant did not cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses and offered no evidence in her own behalf. Counsel for appellant, in support of their contention that the judgment for defendant should be reversed, argue and cite numerous cases as holding that a court may not arbitrarily disregard uncontradicted testimony which is not inherently improbable. Unquestionably the general rule is as contended for by appellant. But appellant is in error in assuming that the case made by her was uncontradicted. She overlooks the fact that the property in controversy, according to her complaint, had been transferred to the defendant who now has possession of it. That possession raises a presumption of ownership in the defendant. This presumption to have substance must refer to and embrace the equitable as well as the legal title, since ownership is the right of a person to possess and use a thing to the exclusion of others. Civ.Code, sec. 654. Since a presumption of ownership, like all presumptions, is evidence in this state, it was for the lower court to determine the weight to be given to it. That court may properly have considered that the case made out by the plaintiff was not so clear and unequivocal as to justify it in holding for the plaintiff in the face of the presumption. It must be borne in mind that a trial court may properly conclude that a presumption outweighs in evidentiary value the testimony of many witnesses. See People v. Chamberlain, 7 Cal.2d 257, 60 P.2d 299.

[5, 6] Moreover, the case presented by plaintiff was made up almost exclusively of testimony of conversations had some years before with a person since deceased. Situations of that kind were considered by our Supreme Court in the case of Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 29, 84 P. 417, 419. In that case the plaintiff had likewise sought to prove an oral trust by the evidence of witnesses to declarations said to have been made by an alleged settlor of a trust. As in the instant action no written memorandum by the settlor was offered to substantiate the case of the plaintiff. In affirming a judgment in favor of the defendant the court said: "In considering what evidence may be regarded as clear and convincing in the establishment of such a trust it must be borne in mind that the Code enjoins caution in the reception of evidence of the oral admissions of a person (Code Civ.Proc., § 2061), even when that person is living. When he is dead and when, from the very nature of the evidence offered, it is impossible generally to contradict the witnesses who testify, reason suggests even a greater degree of caution, and it is not stating it too strongly to say that evidence so given under such circumstances must appear to any court to be in its nature the weakest and most unsatisfactory. [Citing cases.]" Another principle that was alluded to above which must be taken into consideration in reviewing appellant's case has been stated by Mr. Pomeroy as follows: "The declaration of trust, whether written or oral, must be reasonably certain in its material terms; and this requisite of certainty includes the subject-matter or property embraced within the trust, the beneficiaries or persons in whose behalf it is created, the nature and quantity of interests which they are to have, and the manner in which the trust is to be performed. If the language is so vague, general, or equivocal that any of these necessary elements of the trust is left in real uncertainty, then the trust must fail." Pomeroy's Eq.Jur., 4th Ed., sec. 1009, quoted with approval in Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 227, 259 P. 947, 952. In the circumstances shown by the record we cannot hold that the lower court erred in its conclusion that the plaintiff did not make out a sufficiently clear case to authorize a judgment in her favor.

[7] Another point of secondary importance is urged by appellant. She contends that the lower court committed error in denying her a jury trial since her suit was one at law and not in equity. In our opinion the contention is unsound. The complaint alleges the existence of a trust which it asks that the court decree and carry into effect and also that the defendant, as trustee, be required to account for the trust res which is alleged to be in her possession. In California courts of equity have exclusive jurisdiction of suits involving such issues. Woolsey v. Woolsey, 121 Cal.App. 576, 581, 9 P.2d 605. The case of Austin v. Wilcoxson, supra, upon which appellant relies in this connection, does not support her contention. As the court there pointed out the action was not one to enforce a trust but was one at law to recover a specified sum of money of which the defendant was alleged to have taken possession and which he refused to pay to plaintiff. The court also referred to the fact that the enforcement of a trust in equity has in contemplation, among other things, the terms, conduct and management of the trust which matters were not involved in the case before it.

It is of course settled that when a balance has been ascertained an action at law may be maintained by either the beneficiary or the trustee in certain instances. Vail v. Pacific Fish Products Co., 76 Cal.App. 58, 78, 243 P. 869. But such is not the case before this court.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 362

FOX v. SCHUSTER et al.

Civ. 13154.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 6, 1942.

Negligence 🔑90

Under statute imputing the negligence of the driver of an automobile to the owner for all purposes of civil damages, the negligence of a driver operating an automobile with owner's permission is imputable to owner in an action by owner against the driver of another automobile for injuries sustained in a collision. Vehicle Code, § 402(a), St. 1937, p. 2353.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert F. Shippee, Judge pro tem.

Action for personal injuries by Lilly S. Fox against Charles Schuster and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Reginald I. Bauder, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James S. McKnight and Mark F. Jones, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff commenced this action to recover damages for injuries which she suffered when the automobile in which she was riding collided with defendants' automobile. A jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $2,821. Defendants have appealed from the ensuing judgment.

At the time of the collision plaintiff was riding in her own car, which was being driven by one Klinepeter with her consent. The trial court instructed the jury that "the driver's negligence, if any, may not be imputed to the plaintiff, * * * therefore, you shall find that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff." The only issue which requires determination on this appeal concerns the contention of defendants that the court erred in giving this instruction.

Since the filing of the briefs a decision was rendered by our Supreme Court in Milgate v. Wraith, 19 Cal.2d 297, 121 P.2d 10. It was there held that by virtue of the 1937 amendment of subdivision (a) of section 402 of the Vehicle Code the negligence of one who is driving an automobile with the permission of the owner is imputable to the owner in an action by the owner against the driver of another car. The decision in the Milgate case makes necessary a reversal of the judgment in the case now before us. It is so ordered.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 247

HAYWARD LUMBER & INVESTMENT CO. v. AMERICAN NAT. BANK OF SAN BERNARDINO.

Civ. 2947.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 27, 1942.

1. Trusts 🔑236

Where bank entered into trust agreement with lumber company and individual to loan necessary funds for real estate development at eight per cent. interest and to handle trust on condition that bank should receive its advances and interest from the first funds derived from the sale of houses and units, in absence of an agreement to the contrary, bank was entitled to repay itself for advances from the general funds of the trust, and was not required to repay itself for advances made in respect of each unit from the particular unit, even though bank had entered a separate account for each unit for the purpose of handling the payment of bills. Code Civ.Proc. § 1866.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1008(3)

Where the construction given an instrument by the trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the parties making it, an appellate court will not substitute another interpretation even though it seems equally tenable.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by the Hayward Lumber & Investment Company against the American National Bank of San Bernardino for the interpretation of an agreement, for an accounting, and for money had and received, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint for the recovery of principal and interest. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Philip T. Lyons and Le Roy B. Lorenz, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. Bruce Findlay, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

In this action appellant, by its amended complaint, seeks an interpretation of the terms of a certain agreement, asks for an accounting based thereon, and in several separate money had and received counts prays for a recovery from respondent for the amount found due thereunder. Respondent, in its answer, admitted the execution of the agreement, denied appellant's interpretation thereof, and denied the necessity of an accounting or that it was indebted to appellant in the sum sought. By way of cross-complaint it seeks a recovery from appellant in the sum of $4,700 principal, plus interest and costs of suit. Each party pleaded a bar to the other's causes of action by virtue of the statute of limitations. After the trial of the case the parties entered into a form of stipulation reciting in part: "* * * that the court may make its order vacating * * * the order heretofore made * * * referring this matter to * * * a referee, for an accounting * * * that the court shall now finally decide the issue, which was raised upon the trial * * *" as to the proper interpretation of the agreement; that "if the court decides such issue in favor of the trustee bank, the court shall not order an accounting, but shall merely declare the rights of the parties under the said agreement with respect to an accounting." Thereupon the court made findings interpreting the agreement in accordance with the contentions of the respondent. It also found that plaintiff's causes of action for an accounting were not barred by the statute of limitations; that plaintiff was entitled to an accounting but under the stipulation it did not order an accounting or reference on the matter for such purpose "but will do so upon proper application therefor being hereafter made." It was further found that the cross-complainant was not entitled to a personal judgment against appellant herein for any deficiency but was compelled to obtain the repayment of any money due it from appellant from the funds or property of a certain trust.

As a conclusion of law the court determined that the cross-complainant was entitled "to judgment for the unpaid portion of any of its advances and interest; however, payable only from the property of said trust * * * as may hereafter be determined upon an accounting."

The court then signed a form of judgment decreeing that plaintiff was "entitled to an accounting" under the interpretation given the contract by that court; that defendant was "authorized to reimburse itself for its advances" under the agreement as so interpreted; that the parties, or either of them, "upon proper further application being made by it therefor," were "entitled to an order of reference herein for the taking of such an accounting."

It appears from the evidence that during the year 1926, one Thomason instituted a campaign to build and sell houses and chicken units or equipment on parcels of land in a tract in the northern part of San Bernardino known as the Fishelton Farms Poultry Colony. He approached appellant and made some kind of arrangements with it to furnish the building material for the improvements. About forty or fifty houses or units were begun under these arrangements when it was discovered that the "jobs" were going "sour." The project needed new finances. It became apparent then that without this new life blood the entire investment of the appellant was in grave jeopardy. Thomason and the appellant approached the respondent bank relative to these finances. The respondent agreed to advance the funds under certain conditions, one of which was that it should receive from the first funds derived from the sale of the houses and units its advances and interest. The disputed agreement was drawn for the purpose of reducing to writing the understanding of the parties. It reads in part as follows:

"This agreement, made * * * this 7th day of April, 1927, by and between Hayward Lumber & Investment Company, a corporation * * * as party of the first part, and American National Bank of San Bernardino, a corporation, * * * as party of the second part, and R. M. Thomason * * * party of the third part, Witnesseth:

"Whereas, the party of the first part is engaged in the business of selling lumber and other building materials * * *

"Whereas, the party of the second part is engaged in the banking business * * *

"Whereas, the party of the third part is engaged in the development of a large tract of land * * *

"Whereas, the title to portions of said land is in different individuals and/or corporations, and it is the plan of third party, in connection with the development thereof, to secure purchasers for portions of said tract and to establish an escrow in connection therewith, and to pay through said escrow the balance due the present holder of the legal title to the portion of the property so sold * * *

"Whereas, third party also intends to make all arrangements for the construction of the houses and other improvements to be placed on the pieces so purchased, and in connection therewith third party intends to purchase materials for said improvements, provide the labor therefor, and attend to all matters in connection therewith; and,

"Whereas, third party desires to purchase the materials for said improvements to be erected from first party which are handled by it; and,

"Whereas, the second party is willing to provide the necessary funds covering the balance due for the releasing of the lots upon which the buildings are to be built and to pay the labor claims thereon;

"Now, therefore, it is agreed,

"First: That the necessary papers covering the remaining unpaid balance of the purchase price of each individual parcel be made between the purchaser thereof and the third party;

"Second: That the above mentioned papers in the form of a first and second deed of trust mentioned heretofore be filed for record and recorded prior to the furnishing of any material or before any work of any kind is commenced;

"Third: That the first and second deeds of trust heretofore mentioned shall be assigned absolutely to the second party by the said third party to be held in trust to sell and dispose of pursuant to the provisions of this agreement;

"Fourth: The third party agrees to purchase from the first party and the first party agrees to sell to the third party all of the materials for use in the houses and * * *

"Fifth: The second party agrees to advance sufficient moneys to secure the conveyance to the purchaser of the lot upon which buildings are to be situated so that title may be shown in the name of the purchaser subject to the two deeds of trust heretofore mentioned;

"Sixth: The second party agrees to advance the necessary funds as the building progresses to pay the labor necessary in the completion of the building; * * *

"Eighth: The second party will exercise reasonable efforts to sell the said deeds of trust and the notes secured thereby, but agrees not to sell any notes secured by first deeds of trust for less than ninety-eight per cent (98%) of its face value * * * without the consent of the first party and shall apply the proceeds received therefrom in the following manner and with priorities as follows:

"[a] Return to the second party any moneys advanced covering the release of the lot * * *;

"[b] Return to the second party all moneys advanced for labor together with interest thereon at eight per cent, or any other expenses in connection therewith;

"[c] Payment to the first party of any and all remaining funds to and until such time as their bill for materials is paid in full together with interest at eight per cent from completion;

"[d] The return to the second party as trustee under the trust agreement drawn between third party in favor of various colonists and creditors of any and all remaining funds;

"Ninth: The first party in consideration of the covenants and agreements herein expressed agrees to waive any and all lien rights and to accept in lieu thereof the beneficial interest in the first and second deeds of trust herein mentioned and in accordance with the terms and provisions of this agreement; * * *"

It is not clear who actually drew the agreement, but it is clear that it was not drawn by the respondent bank. It was written on stationery of the appellant and presented to the bank for its approval. The bank advanced funds under the agreement and handled each of the six deals in the trust. On June 8, 1928, the bank submitted to appellant a statement showing that it had advanced to the trust a total of $14,074.62, and that it had repaid to itself the sum of $8,500 from the general funds of the trust, leaving a balance of $5,574.62 payable to it. The record discloses that this method of repayment to itself by the bank was not questioned by appellant until April 21, 1931. This was after the beginning of the depression and the continuing deflation of property values. Then for the first time appellant advanced the contention that the respondent could repay itself for any advances it made to complete "Unit A" only from the funds derived from the sale of "Unit A," not from "Unit B" or "Unit C" or the general funds of the trust.

[1] The only issue herein at the present time is the proper interpretation of the contract and particularly paragraph eighth thereof. The trial court found in favor of the bank's interpretation, i e., that under the agreement the bank was authorized to repay itself for its advances, from the general funds of the trust, and not from each particular job, for the advances made to each job.

It appears from the contract itself and other evidence produced, that the trial court was justified in adopting the interpretation placed upon the contract by respondent. The deals of Thomason and appellant had gone "sour." They needed more money and the benefit of the services of an organization to orderly handle their affairs. The bank agreed to handle the trust without compensation and in addition thereto to loan the necessary funds at 8 per cent interest. It had nothing to lose by refusing to enter into the agreement. Section 1866 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "When a statute or instrument is equally susceptible of two interpretations, one in favor of natural right, and the other against it, the former is to be adopted." Our attention has not been called to any case where a bank has agreed to loan money to any person at a specified rate of interest and provide for the repayment of the loan and interest only in case the borrower makes a profit on the transaction. One would naturally expect the entire loan and interest to be paid from the profits or collections in the general trust, without regard to any particular transaction included within it, in the absence of some agreement to the contrary.

[2] Appellant contends that the respondent bank was required, under the terms of the contract, to keep and render separate accounts on each of the several construction jobs, share its loss thereon, if any, and that it may not pool or consolidate all of the jobs in one general account, so as to set off losses in one or more jobs against gains or profits in others. In this connection, it argues that because the bank originally entered a new escrow for each job, that it thereby showed that it at that time interpreted the agreement as appellant now contends it should be interpreted. The agreement in question created a trust and not an escrow. The bank, for the purpose of better handling the payment of bills due on each house and out-building under the trust, entered a separate account for each. Such an arrangement is a logical one for handling the affairs of each improvement during the process of its construction. To contend that because the jobs were separated for that purpose and that purpose only, the bank thereby admitted the contention of appellant, is not justified. In June, 1928, the respondent showed that it considered the contract as one involving the whole and not each separate job, for in defendant's exhibit "C", the bank informed appellant that it had applied $8,500 upon its advances. Those advances were set up therein under schedules 2 and 4 in one lump sum of $14,074.62. There was no segregation. The $8,500 came from the general funds of the trust. On June 7, 1928, the respondent presented appellant with a statement which clearly showed and indicated the bank's interpretation of the contract. This statement should have shown appellant, if it did not already know it, what respondent believed regarding the interpretation of the contract. In any event, on April 21, 1931, appellant knew of respondent's attitude because, on that date, a letter was written by appellant to respondent questioning the right of the bank to pay itself out of the general fund. The action herein was started approximately six years later. The question immediately arises: "Why did appellant wait for such a long period before asserting its interpretation of the contract?" While there was evidence of delay or evasion on the part of the respondent, more than eleven years elapsed before appellant attempted to enforce its interpretation of the agreement. Appellant should have moved with reasonable dispatch thereafter to enforce the trust as it interpreted it. Such a delay has been held to amount to laches. Baxter v. King, 96 Cal.App. 415, 274 P. 610. However, we are convinced that the time-honored rule must here be applied, i. e., when the construction given an instrument by the trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the parties making it, courts of appellate jurisdiction will not substitute another interpretation even though it seems equally tenable. Tide Water Associated Oil Co. v. Curtin, 41 Cal.App.2d 884, 895, 107 P.2d 945. The judgment of the trial court cannot be disturbed.

In view of the conclusion reached, it becomes unnecessary to consider certain other points which are raised.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

FIRST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF PASADENA et al. v. CITY OF PASADENA.*

Civ. 12002.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 9, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 8, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑977

Where city by ordinance set up its own complete taxing system and city charter required presentation of "all claims" within six months and provided that, unless so presented, no suit should be brought upon any claim for money or damages against the city, a complaint, in action to recover portion of taxes paid under an alleged overassessment of properties through use of erroneous methods of valuation, which complaint contained no allegations showing compliance with claims provision of the charter, stated no cause of action.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑977

If any provision of ordinance whereby city set up its own complete taxing system was construable as eliminating necessity for presentation of a claim for tax refunds or as specifying a longer period for such presentation than that provided by claims provision of charter of city, then the ordinance provision would be void because in conflict with superior charter provisions.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑977

In action against city to recover portion of taxes paid under alleged overassessment of properties through use of erroneous methods of valuation, city was not precluded by "waiver" or "estoppel" from raising defense of noncompliance with charter provision requiring all claims to be presented within six months, because of alleged practice of city officials of making tax refunds in cases where claims had been filed more than six months after payment or because city attorney had told plaintiffs' counsel that it was unnecessary to file claims within six months.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel" and "Waiver".

4. Estoppel 🔑62(4)

The doctrine of estoppel may be invoked against a municipal corporation only in rare cases.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by the First Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena, a banking corporation, and others, against the City of Pasadena, to recover a portion of taxes paid by plaintiffs under an alleged overassessment of plaintiffs' properties through the use of erroneous methods of valuation, wherein defendant filed a demurrer. From a judgment of dismissal after sustaining the demurrer, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Holbrook & Tarr and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold P. Huls, City Atty., and H. Burton Noble, Asst. City Atty., both of Pasadena, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action seeking to recover a portion of the taxes paid by plaintiffs to the city of Pasadena for the tax year 1933-1934, which portion was alleged to have resulted from an over-assessment of plaintiffs' properties through the use of erroneous methods of valuation. Defendant's demurrer to plaintiffs' amended complaint was sustained. Plaintiffs elected to stand upon said amended complaint and refused to plead further. Thereupon a judgment of dismissal was entered and from said judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

---

* Subsequent opinion 130 P.2d 702.

It is conceded by plaintiffs that their amended complaint contained no allegation showing compliance with the so-called claims provision of the Pasadena charter and that if compliance with said claims provision was required, then the ruling of the trial court was correct. Plaintiffs contend, however, that they were not required to allege compliance with said claims provision of said charter; that their amended complaint was sufficient in all respects; and that the trial court erred in sustaining said demurrer.

The above mentioned claims provision of the Pasadena charter is found in article II thereof. Said article requires the presentation of "all claims" within six months and further provides that unless a claim has been so presented, "No suit shall be brought upon any claim for money or damages" against the city of Pasadena.

Plaintiffs state that the trial court based its ruling on Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v. City of Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 655, 91 P. 795, and they devote considerable space in their briefs to an attack upon the decision in that case. They call attention to the fact that the cited case was decided by a divided court and they refer to it as "only a much criticized, never followed, frequently distinguished decision, out of line with the controlling rule of law." They concede, however, that it has never been expressly overruled.

One of the most recent cases in which the cited case is discussed is that of Brill v. County of Los Angeles, 16 Cal.2d 726, 108 P.2d 443. The majority opinion in the Brill case distinguishes the Farmers Bank case at page 731 of 16 Cal.2d, at page 446 of 108 P.2d. It is there said: "In support of its contention that the filing of a claim with it prior to suit was indispensable, the city places great reliance on the case of Farmers, etc., Bank v. City of Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 655, 91 P. 795, 797. That case is factually distinguishable from the present one and does not require a conclusion herein that the filing of a claim with the city was an indispensable prerequisite to the commencement of these actions. There, as distinguished from the present case, the city itself had directly provided a complete scheme for the assessment and collection (which, as shown, includes refund) of taxes by city officers though, pursuant to charter provision, such scheme was to be 'substantially' the same 'as the mode and manner' for the collection of state and county taxes. Though patterned after the county plan, the city had there set up its own complete taxing system and four of the justices thereupon concluded that under such circumstances the refunding procedure of such city system was subject to and controlled by the charter provision as to the necessity for filing a claim prior to suit to recover money."

The minority opinion in the Brill case gives unqualified approval to the decision in the Farmers Bank case and states on page 740 of 16 Cal.2d, page 450 of 108 P.2d that: "The decision in that case has never been overruled directly or by implication. It has stood for over thirty years, and must now be regarded as the settled law of this state." It was the view of the minority in that case that the Farmers Bank case could not be distinguished there and it was said in the minority opinion on page 739 of 16 Cal.2d, page 450 of 108 P.2d: "That case, in respect to the applicability of the law requiring presentation of a claim before suit, is the exact counterpart of the present action."

[1, 2] In our opinion, there is no essential ground for distinction between the Farmers Bank case and the instant case. Here as there, the claims provision of the charter contained a "sweeping requirement" (Brill v. County of Los Angeles, 16 Cal.2d page 741, 108 P.2d 443) which covered "all claims" against the city. Here as there the city had set up by ordinance its "own complete taxing system." See Brill v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 16 Cal.2d page 731, 108 P.2d page 446. If any provision of said ordinance is to be construed as eliminating the necessity for the presentation of a claim for a tax-refund or as specifying a longer period for such presentation than that provided by the claims provision of the charter of said city, then such "ordinance provision must necessarily be held void because in conflict with the superior charter provisions." Farmers & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 151 Cal. page 659, 91 P. page 797.

[3, 4] Plaintiffs further contend that even assuming that said claims provision of the charter was applicable to claims for tax refunds, "administrative construction of charter and tax ordinance and acts of city officials constituting estoppel bar raising defense in this case." The claimed waiver or estoppel is based upon the allegations of the amended complaint alleging the existence of a practice on the part of the city officials of making tax refunds in cases where the claims had been filed more than six months after payment and alleging that the city attorney had told plaintiffs' counsel that it was unnecessary to file claims within the six months period.

We find no merit in plaintiffs' claim of waiver or estoppel. Spencer v. City of Calipatria, 9 Cal.App.2d 267, 49 P.2d 320; Johnson v. City of Glendale, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 55 P.2d 580; Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Riley, 194 Cal. 624, 229 P. 957; Ritter v. United States, 3 Cir., 28 F.2d 265; United States v. Globe Indemnity Co., 2 Cir., 94 F.2d 576; New York City Employees' Retirement System v. Eliot, 267 N.Y. 193, 196 N.E. 23; 87 A.L.R. 988. It is only in rare cases that the doctrine of estoppel may be invoked against a municipal corporation (Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court, 3 Cal.2d 309, 44 P.2d 547; City of Los Angeles v. County of Los Angeles, 9 Cal.2d 624, 72 P.2d 138, 113 A.L.R. 370; 10 Cal.Jur. 651) and we do not believe this case to be one of them.

It follows that plaintiffs' amended complaint was insufficient and that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer thereto.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 242

HELBACH v. CITY OF LONG BEACH.

Civ. 12882.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑733(1, 2)

Under Public Liability Act of 1923, making municipalities generally liable to be sued in tort actions for damages occasioned by dangerous condition of public streets, buildings, grounds or property if municipality had knowledge of danger and failed to remedy such condition or protect public therefrom within reasonable time, municipality's liability, in so far as it derived from instrumentalities used for purely governmental functions, is a liability created by such act, and without such act, municipality would be liable only if instrumentality was used in proprietary enterprise. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑756, 847, 848

The general law, requiring any person injured as result of dangerous condition of public street, highway, building or property, to file written verified claim for damages with municipality within 90 days after accident, was not "amendatory" of, dependent upon or limited by public liability act making municipality generally liable to be sued in tort actions for damages occasioned by dangerous condition of public streets, buildings, grounds or property if municipality had knowledge of danger and failed to remedy such condition or protect the public therefrom within a reasonable time. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1, and Act 5619.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Amendatory".

3. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)

The District Court of Appeal must accept and apply the law as the legislature has written it.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑1021

If claimant's right against city exists independently of statute and is limited by enactment requiring presentation of claim within prescribed time, reasonableness of operation of limitation can be considered, but if the right against city is created by statute, the claimant has only what the statute, however narrow, gives him, and that would be by way of "bounty".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bounty".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑812(2), 857

The general law requiring any person injured as result of dangerous condition of public street, highway, building or property to file written verified claim for damages with municipality within 90 days after accident, is "mandatory". Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

6. Municipal corporations 🔑64, 70

The opening and maintenance of public streets is a "municipal affair", but liability for defective streets, including procedure for enforcing such liability, is a matter of "general state concern".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "General State Concern" and "Municipal Affair".

7. Municipal corporations 🔑64, 70

The erection and maintenance of public building by city is a "municipal affair", but liability for defective or dangerous condition in building used by public, including procedure for enforcing liability, is a matter of "general state concern", whether building is operated in a governmental or in a proprietary capacity.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑64

The liability of municipality for tortious acts or omissions of its servants, including procedure for enforcement of liability, is a matter of "general state concern", and not a "municipal affair".

9. Municipal corporations 🔑79

A city's liability for damages arising out of defective condition of building maintained by city, including procedure for enforcement thereof, was a matter of "public concern", and not a "municipal affair", whether building was operated in governmental or proprietary capacity, and hence plaintiff suing city for injuries, sustained when she fell down exterior stairway into basement of building maintained by city, must file claim within 90-day period provided by general law, and not within six months' period provided by charter, in absence of showing that 90-day period was unreasonable or that claimant could not as well have filed her claim within 90 days as within six months. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1, and Act 5619; St.1921, p. 2151, § 338.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Concern".

10. Municipal corporations 🔑79

Since liability for tort was not a "municipal affair", charter provisions that claim against city must be filed within six months was not applicable to tort claims, where general law provided that such claims must be filed within 90 days. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1; St.1921, p. 2151, § 338.

11. Municipal corporations 🔑857

Where general law required any person injured as result of dangerous condition of public street, highway, building or property, to file written verified claim for damages with municipality within 90 days after accident, city could not extend or diminish the 90-day period for filing a claim for damages arising out of defective condition of building erected and maintained by city. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5149, § 1.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action by Marguerite Helbach against the City of Long Beach for personal injuries allegedly sustained when she fell down a stairway into the basement of a building erected, maintained and operated by the city. From a judgment for the plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed with directions.

Irving M. Smith, Nowland M. Reid, and Clifford E. Hayes, all of Long Beach, for appellant.

Doyle, Clark & Thomas, of Long Beach, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff recovered judgment against the city of Long Beach for personal injuries sustained when, during darkness, she fell down an unlighted exterior stairway into the basement of a building erected, maintained and operated by the defendant city. She failed to file her claim for damages within the ninety-day period provided for by section 1 of act 5149, Deering's General Laws, 1937, page 2204 (Stats.1931, p. 2475) but did file such claim within the six-month period ordained in section 338 of the charter of such city (Stats.1921, p. 2054, 2151). Appellant (defendant) seeks reversal of the judgment on the ground, among others, that the requirements of the general law (act 5149, supra) are applicable and mandatory. This position is well taken.

Respondent (plaintiff) endeavors to avoid the effect of the statute by arguing (1) that the building involved was operated by the defendant city in a proprietary capacity, that therefore it is liable for its tort regardless of the provisions of the Public Liability Act of 1923 (act 5619, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, p. 2630, Stats.1923, p. 675) and that the limitation period of act 5149, supra (Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, p. 2204, Stats.1931, p. 2475) controls claims under the Public Liability Act but has no application to claims based on proprietary operations; (2) that the maintenance of the building was a purely municipal affair and that claims arising therefrom are controlled exclusively by the charter provision, which reads as follows: "Sec. 338. All claims for damages * * * must be presented to the city council, and filed with the city clerk within six months after the occurrence for which the damages arose." (Stats.1921, p. 2054 at 2151.)

[1] The Public Liability Act of 1923, supra, makes a municipality (or county or school district) generally liable to be sued in tort actions for damages to person or property occasioned by the dangerous or defective condition of its public streets, buildings, grounds, or property, when its governing or managing board, or person having authority to remedy the condition, had knowledge or notice of the defect or danger and failed to remedy such condition or protect the public against it, within a reasonable time. This liability, insofar, as it derives from instrumentalities used for purely governmental functions, is one created by the statute; without the statute the city would be liable only if the instrumentality was used by it in some proprietary enterprise. We deem it unnecessary, however, to determine whether the defendant city acted in a governmental or in a proprietary capacity in erecting and maintaining the building with which we are concerned, because in either case the limitation prescribed by act 5149 is applicable. The language of that statute is clear. "Whenever it is claimed that any person has been injured * * * as a result of the dangerous or defective condition of any public street, highway, building, * * * or property, a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with the clerk or secretary of the legislative body of the municipality * * * within ninety days after such accident has occurred." (Sec. 1, act 5149, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, p. 2204, Stats. 1931, p. 2475.)

[2, 3] That act is not amendatory of, dependent upon, or limited by, the Public Liability Act of 1923, supra (act 5619, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, p. 2630, Stats. 1923, p. 675; see Johnson v. City of Glendale, 1936, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 392, 393, 55 P.2d 580); it purports to declare the limitation applicable "whenever" any person claims damages against a municipality arising out of the defective condition of "any" public street, highway, building, etc. To uphold respondent's position we should, in effect, have to write into that law words of limitation and exception making it read, "Only when it is claimed that any person has been injured * * * as a result of the dangerous or defective condition of any public street, highway, building, * * * or property not owned or operated or maintained in a proprietary capacity, a verified claim for damages shall be presented," etc. We perceive no justification and have no authority for such judicial legislation. We must accept and apply the law as the legislature has written it.

[4, 5] Some of the decisions applying such law in cases where its constitutionality has been questioned, which cases were based upon the Public Liability Act, have suggested the fact that liability under such act is of purely statutory creation and that therefore it may be limited as the legislature sees fit (see Johnson v. City of Glendale, 1936, supra, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 395, 55 P.2d 580; Young v. County of Ventura, 1940, 39 Cal.App.2d 732, 735, 104 P.2d 102; Wilkes v. City, etc., of San Francisco, 1941, 44 Cal.App.2d 393, 397, 112 P.2d 759.) If we were confronted with the question as to whether the ninety-day period was reasonable in the light of particular circumstances, such as that the plaintiff by reason of the very injuries for which she seeks to recover had been so incapacitated that she was physically or mentally unable to file her claim within the prescribed period, we might have occasion to inquire as to whether her cause of action existed at common law or was created by statute; i. e., whether the maintenance of the building was in a proprietary or in a governmental character. If it was created by statute she at best would have only what the law, however narrow, gave her, and that would be by way of bounty; but if her right existed independently of statute and were limited by some enactment, the reasonableness of operation of the limitation could be considered (see Johnson v. City of Glendale, 1936, supra, 12 Cal.App. 2d 389, 395, 55 P.2d 580). Here, however, we have no showing that the ninety-day period was unreasonable or that plaintiff could not as well have filed her claim within ninety days as within six months. It is on its face a reasonable provision (Young v. County of Ventura, 1940, supra, 39 Cal.App.2d 732, 737, 104 P.2d 102) and is mandatory (Thompson v. County of Los Angeles, 1934, 140 Cal.App. 73, 78, 35 P.2d 185; Johnson v. City of Glendale, 1936, supra, 12 Cal.App.2d 389, 393, 55 P.2d 580; Von Arx v. City of Burlingame, 1936, 16 Cal.App.2d 29, 36, 60 P.2d 305; Cooper v. County of Butte, 1936, 17 Cal.App. 2d 43, 45-50, 61 P.2d 516; Wilkes v. City, etc., of San Francisco, 1941, supra, 44 Cal. App.2d 393, 397, 112 P.2d 759; Douglass v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, 5 Cal.2d 123, 128, 53 P.2d 353; Hall v. City of Los Angeles, 1941, 19 Cal.2d 198, 120 P.2d 13.) It is therefore immaterial whether the defendant city was acting in a governmental or in a proprietary capacity; in either event the ninety-day limitation of act 5149 was applicable.

[6-9] Respondent also urges, as before noted, that the erection and maintenance of the building was a purely municipal affair and that therefore the procedure, including limitation of time, for filing claims against the city arising out of its tortious acts or omissions in connection with such building is likewise exclusively of municipal concern and governed by its charter. Even if we assume respondent's premise her asserted conclusion does not follow. The opening and maintenance of public streets is typically a municipal affair (Byrne v. Drain, 1900, 127 Cal. 663, 667, 60 P. 433; Black v. Southern Pac. Co., 1932, 124 Cal.App. 321, 335, 12 P.2d 981) but liability for defective streets, including the procedure for enforcing it, is a matter of general state concern (Wilkes v. City, etc., of San Francisco, 1941, supra, 44 Cal.App.2d 393, 397, 112 P.2d 759; Douglass v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, supra, 5 Cal.2d 123, 128, 53 P.2d 353). Likewise, while a city can erect and maintain a public building as a municipal affair, any defective or dangerous condition in that building, if used by the public, is a matter of general state concern. This is true whether the building be operated in a governmental or in a proprietary capacity. As hereinabove stated, if the building be a proprietary undertaking the city is liable for its torts regardless of the provisions of act 5619, supra (Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, p. 2630; Stats.1923, p. 675) and if it be governmental in character liability is imposed by that act. In either case the liability for tort, including procedure for its enforcement, is a matter of public concern. It was said in Douglass v. City of Los Angeles, 1935, supra, 5 Cal. 2d 123, at page 128, 53 P.2d 353, at page 355, that "The important question of the liability of municipalities * * * for the tortious acts or omissions of their servants is a matter of general state concern, and not, as contended by the plaintiff, a municipal affair." In Department of Water & Power v. Inyo Chemical Co., 1940, 16 Cal.2d 744, at page 753, 108 P.2d 410, at page 416, the Supreme Court reiterated that rule, declaring "It is undisputed that the matter of the liability of and payment by a city for its tort is not a municipal affair." The reasons for applying this rule to cities in proprietary enterprises are fully as cogent as when they are engaged in exclusively governmental activities. So also is it true that the benefits to be obtained from the early filing of claims required by act 5149 are fully as important to cities (and to their taxpayers) when the claims arise from proprietary undertakings as when they derive from conduct of governmental functions. We find nothing in the case of Jackson v. City of Santa Monica, 1936, 13 Cal.App.2d 376, 57 P.2d 226, or of Cathey v. City and County of San Francisco, 1940, 37 Cal.App.2d 575, 99 P.2d 1109, which requires a conclusion contrary to that which we have reached. In the former case obviously the point was not before the court and in the latter it does not appear to have been considered.

[10, 11] Since liability for tort is not a municipal affair the charter of defendant city (sec. 338, Stats.1921, pp. 2054, 2151) is non-operative in this case. The city had no power either to extend or to diminish the time fixed by the state law for filing a claim for damages arising out of the defective condition of a building erected and maintained by it (see Young v. County of Ventura, 1940, supra, 39 Cal. App.2d 732, 736, 104 P.2d 102; Kelso v. Board of Education, 1941, 42 Cal.App.2d 415, 420, 109 P.2d 29; Wilkes v. City, etc., of San Francisco, 1941, supra, 44 Cal. App.2d 393, 397, 112 P.2d 759).

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment dismissing the action.

SHINN and PARKER WOOD, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 332

In re TURNER'S ESTATE.

DIXON v. MOUNTS et al.

Civ. 13436.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
March 5, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators ⚷216(2), 497, 501

Whether an executor or his attorney is entitled to extraordinary compensation for services is a question committed to the sound discretion of the probate court, and its conclusion will not be set aside in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion.

2. Executors and administrators ⚷497

Where California executor made a trip to Kansas and Nebraska and was appointed ancillary administrator of testator's estate in Nebraska, and thereafter he made a second trip to Nebraska to close the ancillary proceedings and distribute the Nebraska estate and effect a sale of testator's land in Kansas, and for executor's services in connection with Nebraska estate he received a statutory fee of $200 and certain expenses were paid in connection with sale of the Kansas land, California court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing executor compensation for "extraordinary services" performed in connection with ancillary administration of the estate.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Extraordinary Services".

3. Executors and administrators ⚷111(6)

Court did not abuse its discretion in reducing to $75 allowance of $115 for executor's attorney in excess of statutory fee allowed in domiciliary estate for services performed by attorney in rendering executor legal advice in connection with ancillary administration of testator's realty, which was located in other states and which was appraised at $6,400.

4. Executors and administrators ⚷109(4)

A personal representative is entitled to traveling expenses of himself and his attorney or agent, when necessarily incurred to enable them to perform the duties of the trust properly, but no allowance should be made where there is no necessity for travel, as where the matter can as well be attended to by mail.

5. Executors and administrators ⚷109(4)

Traveling expenses incurred by a personal representative to procure appointment as a special administrator are not allowable even if the personal representative's services should prove to be of great value to estate.

6. Executors and administrators ⚷109(4)

Traveling expenses which pertain solely to the administration of an estate in a foreign country should be paid from that part of the estate located in the foreign country.

7. Executors and administrators ⚷510(11)

Where court, on conflicting evidence, found against executor's claim that those objecting to his account were estopped from contending that it was unnecessary for executor to make trips to foreign state, and to recover his reasonable expenditures for traveling expenses on such trips, for the reason that they consented to those trips, the District Court of Appeal had no power to interfere.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Orlando H. Rhodes, Judge pro tem.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Georgianna Turner, deceased, wherein Asa E. Dixon, as executor, etc., filed a final account and supplemental account, and wherein Harriet Turner Mounts and others interposed objections to the accounting in so far as certain items were concerned. From an order disallowing certain items, Asa E. Dixon, as executor, etc., appeals.

Order affirmed.

E. R. Simon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. Blair Gibbens, of Santa Monica, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Testatrix died in Los Angeles County on July 21, 1937, leaving a will naming appellant as executor and bequeathing her entire estate to respondents, her daughters and only heirs at law. Letters testamentary duly issued to appellant on August 19, 1937, and he retained E. R. Simon as his attorney to conduct the probate proceedings in California.

In addition to real property appraised at $2,000 and a postal savings certificate valued at $25, which comprised the California estate, testatrix died seized of 1600 acres of farm land located near North Platte, Nebraska, having an appraised value of $5,000, which was leased for farming purposes under a share crop contract; and also 160 acres of farm land situated near the city of Mankato, Kansas, appraised at $1,400, occupied by a tenant but from which no income was being derived by testatrix at the time of her death.

Appellant's attorney advised him that ancillary probate proceedings were necessary in Nebraska, and that appellant could be appointed ancillary administrator if he went to Nebraska and petitioned for appointment as such. Also, that the Kansas property could be transferred directly to the respondents without further proceedings upon the filing of the will in that state.

Appellant thereupon conferred with respondents with respect to such ancillary proceedings, respondents testifying at the trial that appellant told them it was necessary for him to make a trip to the said states to handle the property there as administrator and that "it all tied in with the settling of our estate here"; appellant, on the other hand, testified he told respondents, "If I was to be appointed the administrator there it was necessary for me to go there."

At any rate, in November of 1937, appellant made a trip to Kansas and Nebraska, and was appointed ancillary administrator of the estate in the latter state. In August of 1938, he made a second trip to Nebraska to close the ancillary proceedings and distribute the Nebraska estate and to effect a sale of the land in Kansas. For his services in connection with the Nebraska estate he received a statutory fee of $200, and the attorney who represented him in that state received the same amount. The Kansas land was sold for $1,600 and when the proceedings there were closed, the attorney handling the same was paid a fee of $55 and the real estate broker who negotiated the sale was paid $80.

In his final account, report and petition for extraordinary commissions and fees, and supplemental account of executor, appellant petitioned the court to allow as a charge against the domiciliary estate in California traveling expenses incurred by him on the two trips to Nebraska and Kansas in a total sum of $363.48; and also the sum of $125 in excess of his statutory fee on account of extraordinary services performed by him for the estate in making two trips and effecting the sale of the Kansas property. He further petitioned the court for an allowance of $115 for his attorney in excess of the statutory fee allowed in the domiciliary estate for services performed by him in rendering legal advice in connection with the ancillary administration.

Respondents interposed their objections to the said accounting in so far as the items above enumerated were concerned, and the court thereafter entered its order allowing executor's attorney the sum of $75 for extraordinary services instead of the sum of $115, as prayed for; and disallowed the sum of $125 on account of extraordinary services claimed to have been performed by executor, as well as the sum of $363.48 for traveling expenses incurred by said executor in making the two trips to Kansas and Nebraska in connection with the ancillary proceedings in those two states. This appeal is prosecuted from such order.

The said items were disallowed by the court upon the theory that executor "has been paid by the Nebraska probate the compensation to which he is entitled and that it would be improper under the circumstances for the court to allow the expenses out of this state (the domiciliary proceedings in California)."

[1] The question of whether an executor or his attorney is entitled to extraordinary compensation for services is a question "committed to the sound discretion of the probate court and its conclusion will not be set aside in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. In re Estate of Carr, 175 Cal. 387, 165 P. 958; In re Estate of Hedrick, 127 Cal. 184, 59 P. 590; In re Estate of Miller, 15 Cal.App. 557, 115 P. 329." In re Estate of Fritz, 16 Cal.App.2d 519, 520, 60 P.2d 1008.

[2, 3] Under the circumstances presented by the instant situation, there was no abuse of discretion in disallowing compensation for extraordinary services performed by executor in connection with the ancillary administration of the estate, nor in reducing from $115 to $75 the compensation on account of extraordinary services performed by executor's attorney.

[4-6] With respect to traveling expenses, "The representative is entitled to traveling expenses of himself and of his attorney or agent, when necessarily incurred to enable them to properly perform the duties of the trust. But no allowance should be made where there is no necessity for travel, as where the matter can as well be attended to by mail. * * * So also traveling expenses incurred to procure appointment as a special administrator are not allowable even if his services should prove to be of great value to the estate. (In re Estate of Emerson, 175 Cal. 724, 167 P. 149.) Traveling expenses which pertain solely to the administration of the estate in a foreign country should be paid from the part of the estate located there. (In re Estate of Ortiz, 86 Cal. 306, 24 P. 1034, 21 Am.St.Rep. 44, saying that if these expenses might be allowed, then all the expenses of administration in the other country might be charged to the California estate.)" 11b Cal.Jur. 481, section 1039.

Again in the same work, page 854, section 1336, it is stated: "The expenses pertaining to the foreign estate should be paid from that part of the estate and not from the estate in California, although the domiciliary administration is here. In re Estate of Ortiz, 86 Cal. 306, 24 P. 1034, 21 Am.St.Rep. 44." See, also, In re Estate of Price, 136 Cal.App. 257, 28 P.2d 717.

The record reveals that appellant received a statutory fee of $200 in connection with the ancillary administration in the state of Nebraska and that certain expenses were paid in connection with the sale of the Kansas land before the appellant accounted for the same in the domiciliary proceeding in this state. Consequently, it would appear that the traveling expenses incurred by executor in connection with the ancillary administration should have been presented for allowance at the time the ancillary proceedings were closed and not in the final accounting of the domiciliary estate in California.

[7] Appellant contends that respondents "are estopped from contending it was unnecessary for appellant to make either of the two trips to Nebraska and to recover his reasonable expenditures for traveling expenses on said trips, for the reason that, as is shown by the evidence of appellant, heretofore set forth, they consented to these trips to Nebraska." The evidence upon this subject was conflicting and the court found against appellant's claim, therefore this court has no power to interfere in this regard.

For the reasons stated, the order appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 398

In re REISS' ESTATE.

REISS v. REISS.

Civ. 11983.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 11, 1942.

1. Wills ⚿31

Mere proof of mental derangement or of insanity in a medical sense is not sufficient to invalidate a will, but the contestant must prove either such complete mental degeneration as denotes utter incapacity to know and understand those things which the law prescribes as essential to the making of a valid will, or the existence of specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will involved.

2. Wills ⚿50

A testatrix is of "sound and disposing mind" and memory if, at the time of making her will, she has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act she is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of her property, and to remember and understand her relations to the persons who have claims upon her bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Sound and Disposing Mind".

3. Wills ⚿55(1)

In will contest, evidence sustained finding that testatrix did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute will.

4. Wills ⚿302(1)

In will contest, evidence sustained finding that deceased did not execute the will.

5. Wills ⚿386

In will contest, the proponent's testimony was to be weighed by the trial court.

6. Wills ⚿166(1)

In will contest, evidence sustained finding that execution of will was procured by undue influence exercised by proponent who was the son of the deceased.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Rosa Reiss, deceased, wherein Moses Joseph Reiss filed an application for an order admitting to probate the purported will of the deceased, which was opposed by Max Reiss, who filed a contest. From an adverse judgment, Moses Joseph Reiss appeals.

Affirmed.

Mark F. Jones and Sydney Tannen, both of Los Angeles, and H. O. Wallace, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Swaffield & Swaffield and Charles K. Chapman, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

After the death of Rosa Reiss, her son, Moses Joseph Reiss, applied to the trial court for an order admitting to probate the purported will of the decedent. Max Reiss, her surviving husband, appeared and filed a contest. The petitioner answered the contest and the proceeding was heard before the trial court sitting without a jury. The contest was based on the grounds of lack of testamentary capacity, lack of proper execution, and on undue influence alleged to have been exercised by the petitioner. The trial court made findings in favor of the contestant on all three grounds and caused an order to be entered denying the application of the petitioner. From that order the latter has appealed. We will discuss each of the grounds of contest in the order above stated.

1. The decedent Rosa Reiss and Max Reiss were husband and wife. Rosa had been married twice. Her first husband's name was Katz. They had two sons, the petitioner, Moses Joseph, and a younger brother, Bernard. Both boys took the name of their stepfather. All were natives of Austria but came to America and located in the southern part of this state. At the time of her death Rosa was about sixty-six years of age. For some years she had been afflicted with diabetes. In January, 1934, she suffered a stroke and thereafter was paralyzed on the right side. Her face was distorted, she had little or no use of her right arm, and so little use of her right leg that she dragged it as she walked. Arterio sclerosis commenced to develop at a time prior to the stroke. Her family physician was Dr. L. D. Mahannah. He testified that he commenced to treat her in 1934. "Her mouth hung slightly open and her face was expressionless. There was not much expression in her eyes. The pupils reacted to light. One eye did not close. I tried to talk to her and it was difficult to carry on a conversation. Her speech was very thick and it was difficult to understand much, and her answers were not logical. I do not think she understood. She spoke slowly. I do not think she had the mental capacity to answer questions. She had no ability to carry on a coherent conversation. This continued to the time of her death. It existed in January, 1935. I made a diagnosis of arterio sclerosis. This is the hardening of the arteries as the different parts of the body do not get enough nourishment. There is not enough nourishment to the brain. There is a consequential effect on the brain making the patient mentally deficient. I have an opinion as to the degree of her mentality. She had the capacity of a six or eight year old child—if that old."

The petitioner and his wife and Max Reiss and the decedent all lived at Long Beach. It appears that the residences were not far apart. During the year 1934 the families visited each other at different times. In the latter part of July, or the first part of August, the decedent went to the house of Moses and remained there a few days. During that period of time Moses took her to his attorneys, Doyle, Clark and Thomas. Mr. Doyle waited on her. He prepared certain conveyances and a will. None of those papers were executed but remained in the possession of the attorneys. After the papers had been prepared the decedent did not return to execute them but did return to her own home and rejoined her husband. A few months later, on January 23, 1935, the decedent again went to Moses' house. The next day he again took her to the office of Mr. Doyle. All of the documents purport to have been signed on that date. If we understand the record correctly, on the afternoon of the same date the decedent again returned to her home. The next day the decedent and her husband called on Mr. Doyle and asked for the return of the papers. They were not returned and litigation followed. On February 26, the decedent was adjudged incompetent and her husband was appointed her guardian. A little later, in the month of March, a petition to restore her to competency was filed by her son Moses. Max Reiss appeared and opposed the petition. The trial court appointed Dr. Victor Parkin and Dr. P. E. Bowers to examine the alleged incompetent and report to the court. The examination was made and a very full report was thereafter made to the court. The petition to restore was denied and the litigation over the above mentioned documents continued. On January 12, 1936, Rosa died. A little later her son Moses sought to have the purported will admitted to probate. On the hearing of the contest the testimony of Dr. Parkin and Dr. Bowers was brought forth by the contestant. It will serve no purpose to state it in detail. However, among other things it may be recited that Dr. Parkin testified: "The arterio sclerosis of Rosa Reiss had affected her mentality in and of itself. I know that arterio sclerosis existed prior to the stroke. Arterio sclerosis could not be cured prior to the paralysis. I am certain she had a stroke of paralysis. I do not think she was much worse in March when I examined her than she was in January, 1935. The changes are too gradual to see. In that short time no noticeable change had taken place." Dr. Bowers testified: "I asked her if she had grown children and she said yes but she did not know how many. She did not know how long she had lived in America nor how long she had lived in California. She said she had had a stroke; she could not tell what happened; she did not know how long she had been in the hospital; she did not know who was president of the United States, or the mayor of Long Beach, or the governor of California. She said she did not know anything. * * * She was in a state of deterioration due to the effect of the disease of the blood vessels of the brain and of the body generally, and to the fact that she had chronic diabetes which also contributed to this condition. She was just an automaton, following the suggestion of anyone at all. She was incompetent, she was deteriorated and mildly demented, and had been so for not less than eighteen months to two years. * * * In my opinion Rosa Reiss was so affected; she had a state of chronic mental deterioration from which there was no change or recovery and no lucid intervals. It was a down-hill process every day. * * * She did not have an acute insanity but she had a dementing process, going down-hill, a mental deterioration; and since there was no recovery from that kind of a condition, then they have no lucid intervals. She was incompetent, demented, deteriorated."

There was not a particle of testimony by any medical expert in any manner controverting what has been recited above.

[1-3] Each party called witnesses who expressed opinions as laymen and as intimate acquaintances of the decedent respecting the mental sanity of the latter. Such evidence addressed to the capacity of of an automaton of course has little, if any, weight. In this state "It is well settled that mere proof of mental derangement or even of insanity in a medical sense is not sufficient to invalidate a will, but the contestant is required to go further and prove either such a complete mental degeneration as denotes utter incapacity to know and understand those things which the law prescribes as essential to the making of a valid will, or the existence of a specific insane delusion which affected the making of the will in question." (Italics ours.) Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 359, 237 P. 1079, 1080. In the instant case there is no testimony whatever tying the case to the second class. The testimony was directed wholly to the first class. It is also settled law that "A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember, and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument." Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 764, 251 P. 778, 780. By its findings of fact the trial court found in effect that the mind of the decedent was unsound within the rule just quoted. A most cursory examination of the evidence hereinabove recited discloses that the finding of the trial court was clearly supported.

[4] 2. Passing to the claim that there was a lack of proper execution of the will, additional facts should be recited. Max Reiss and the decedent were a frugal couple. They accumulated a large amount of property. Both worked hard to contribute to the accumulation. Some of their funds were invested in real estate and some were in bank deposits. Apparently all stood under joint tenancy agreements. There is evidence that the decedent at times expressed a wish to so arrange her affairs that her share should stand of record in her name. She expressed that wish to the end that she should remain independent and have funds to live on. The record does not disclose a particle of evidence that she ever asked anybody to prepare a will for her. The proponent in numerous places testified that she never mentioned will to him and he did not to her. When she called on Mr. Doyle he expressed the opinion to her that the joint tenancy agreement could be broken by making certain conveyances and he undertook to prepare and cause those conveyances to be made. However, the making of the will arose purely collaterally and, as hereinabove stated, without any request being made by the decedent. A photostatic copy of the instrument is contained as an exhibit in the record. At the end of it there are some scratches in ink where the signature should be. It is quite impossible to say that the two scratches are the writing of Rosa Reiss. That is of the date of January 24, 1935. The same comment is equally applicable to a document written on the same day by Mr. Doyle addressed to Farmers and Merchants Bank and claimed to have been signed by the decedent. Another document written on January 25, 1935, acknowledged before a notary public on the same date, contains a signature that is quite plain and distinct. Another exhibit is a photostatic copy of the signature of the decedent written on a card when opening a savings bank account on June 30, 1931. That signature is quite plain and quite distinct. Bearing in mind that the trial court had all of the documents before it, and saw and heard the witnesses, we are quite unable to state that said court erred in finding as a fact that the decedent never executed the will.

[5, 6] 3. The remaining attack is the assertion that there is no evidence showing the will was made by undue influence exercised by the decedent's son Moses. As shown above it was the contention of Moses in the trial court that his mother never sought to make a will, that he never sought to have her make a will, and that Mr. Doyle never did. However, the evidence is clear that Moses was the son of the decedent, that down to the year 1934 their relations had been agreeable and that in many respects he had acted and was acting as a confidential agent of his mother. At the time the will was written the decedent was a guest in the home of Moses. At the time the will was signed the decedent was again a guest in the home of Moses. On different occasions Moses had taken his mother to different attorneys. Among others he took her to Mr. Doyle. Mr. Doyle was not of her selection, was not her attorney, and there was evidence to the effect that Moses promised to pay Mr. Doyle for his services. After the papers above mentioned were written in August, Moses continued to remain active and obtain data so that Mr. Doyle could draw up legal papers. Just why the papers were not signed in August the record is not clear. However, when the decedent returned to Moses' house in January, he said to Mr. Doyle, "Now is the time, let's go. I don't want to take any more chances." Moses testified to making that statement. His brother Bernard Reiss testified that in January, just before their mother died, Moses said to him, "I fixed it all right. If Max wants as much as four cents he has got to ask me about it, and if there is even a button off a shoe you and I get half of it." Immediately after the funeral, at Moses' house, he told Bernard of the papers that had been signed. Moses' wife interposed, "You know she was not right mentally." Moses answered, "What matters—she signed." Immediately after the papers had been signed by the decedent, and on the same day, she was allowed to leave Moses' home and return to her own home. In presenting his case the proponent never explained any of the foregoing facts. He interposed some denials but the truth of those denials was properly to be weighed by the trial court. In the case entitled Estate of Graves, 202 Cal. 258, commencing on page 262, 259 P. 935, commencing on page 936, the court said: "Three well-established facts, among others, which are recognized as being indicative of undue influence, or a subversion of a decedent's volition, stand out clearly in the record: The relations between appellant and the decedent afforded to appellant an opportunity to control the testamentary act; the decedent's condition was such as to permit of a subversion of her freedom of will; the appellant was active in procuring the instrument to be executed." We think that the instant case falls clearly within the classifications so indicated, and that this court may not say that the trial court erred in making the finding complained of.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 229

MAKZOUME v. MAKZOUME.

Civ. 11997.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

1. Husband and wife 🔑278(1)

Separation agreements, made in contemplation of divorce, providing for division or adjustment of property rights, and not procured through fraud, undue influence, or coercion, are highly favored in the law. Civ. Code, § 159.

2. Divorce 🔑249(2)

A wife suing for divorce, by pleading and proving a prior separation agreement relating to division or adjustment of property rights, including both community and separate property, "waived" her claim to an adjustment by the court of the respective rights in the community property, and asked for alimony in the sum agreed upon. Civ.Code, §§ 146, 159.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

3. Divorce 🔑235

The matter of awarding the innocent spouse alimony is left, in first instance, to trial court's discretion, but this discretion is not arbitrary, but must be exercised along legal lines, taking into consideration circumstances of parties, their necessities, and financial ability of husband; and in a legal sense discretion is "abused" whenever, in its exercise, a court exceeds bounds of reason, all the circumstances before it being considered. Civ.Code, § 137.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Abuse of Discretion".

4. Divorce 🔑249(2)

The provision, in a property settlement agreement between husband and wife made in contemplation of divorce, that $75 monthly, which husband, earning $400 a month, agreed to pay as alimony, was in itself evidence that the amount agreed to be paid, was a reasonable and fair sum for that purpose.

5. Divorce 🔑249(2)

There is no rule requiring that terms of property settlement in separation agreement be adopted in divorce decree, but, unless court specifically declares agreement to be illegal and against public policy, agreement stands, and may be treated as independent contract subject to such construction and judicial disposition as terms and circumstances warrant.

6. Divorce 🔑249(2), 261

Where divorce decree modifies or supersedes some provision of property settlement agreement, one party may have concurrent remedies, but a defaulting party may be bound by both the decree and the agreement.

7. Divorce 🔑254

Where wife suing for divorce prayed for custody of minor child, for award for support of child, and for alimony for herself, in accordance with prior separation agreement, interlocutory decree accepting portion of settlement agreement relating to custody and maintenance of child and attorney's fees, but not mentioning other portions of settlement agreement, required reversal as leaving parties in doubt whether decree intended to adopt or reject agreement, and as not determining issue presented.

8. Judgment 🔑20

A judgment must be "definitive", in that decision itself must purport to decide finally rights of parties on issues submitted by specifically denying or granting remedy sought by action, and converse is also true, and every definitive determination of rights of parties in proceeding before a competent tribunal is a "judgment".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Definitive" and "Judgment".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action for divorce by Gladys Charles Makzoume against Victor Antoine Makzoume. From so much of an interlocutory decree for plaintiff as did not mention a prior separation agreement and property settlement between the parties and failed to confirm property settlement agreement and to award any alimony, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Mark M. Cohen and Irwin M. Fulop, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

No appearance for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued for divorce on the grounds of cruelty, and prayed for the custody of the minor child of the marriage, for an award for support and maintenance of the minor child, and for alimony for herself, all in accordance with the terms of a prior separation agreement and property settlement. The defendant defaulted and a trial was had upon the complaint. All the material allegations of the complaint were proved and the separation agreement was received in evidence. The trial court entered an interlocutory decree upon the grounds alleged, awarded plaintiff custody of the child, made provision for its maintenance, but did not specifically mention the agreement of the parties, and made no provision for the support of the plaintiff. The latter has appealed from that portion of the decree failing to confirm the property settlement agreement and failing to award her any alimony. The respondent does not contest the appeal.

[1] The agreement in evidence made a division or adjustment of the respective rights of the parties in both community and separate property. It is specially authorized by section 159 of the Civil Code. When such agreements are not procured through fraud, undue influence, or coercion, they are highly favored in the law. Hensley v. Hensley, 179 Cal. 284, 287, 183 P. 445.

[2] Having pleaded and proved the agreement, the appellant waived her claim to an adjustment of the respective rights in the community property, and asked for alimony in the sums agreed upon. If the agreement is to be ignored the community property should be awarded appellant in accordance with the provisions of section 146 of the Civil Code. The record fails to disclose any reason why the agreement should not have been approved.

[3] In all actions of this character the matter of awarding the innocent spouse alimony is left in the first instance to the discretion of the trial court. Sec. 137 of the Civ.Code. But this discretion is not arbitrary. "* * * it must be exercised along legal lines, taking into consideration the circumstances of the parties, their necessities, and the financial ability of the husband. * * * In a legal sense, discretion is abused whenever, in its exercise, a court exceeds the bounds of reason,—all the circumstances before it being considered." 1 Cal.Jur. 965.

[4] Here the evidence is that the husband had an income of $400 a month; there is no evidence that the wife had any income or property of any disclosed value. The property settlement agreement was itself evidence that the sum of $75 a month, which the husband agreed to pay as alimony, was a reasonable and fair sum for that purpose. See 27 Cal.Jur, 232, and Divani v. Donovan, 214 Cal. 447, 455, 6 P.2d 247, for the analogous rule that the contract price is some evidence of reasonable value, though the contract itself be unenforceable. There was also evidence that the defendant was able to pay the amount agreed upon, and that it was necessary for the support of the wife. There was thus a sufficient showing to entitle plaintiff to some award in the nature of alimony, and no showing to the contrary.

[5, 6] The failure to approve or disapprove the settlement agreement leaves the issues of the litigation unsettled and in confusion. There is no rule requiring that the terms of such an agreement be adopted in the decree, but "Unless the court specifically declares the agreement to be illegal and against public policy, the agreement stands and may be treated as an independent contract subject to such construction and judicial disposition as the terms, facts and circumstances warrant. Roberts v. Roberts, 83 Cal.App. 345, 256 P. 826; Gummerson v. Gummerson, supra [14 Cal.App.2d 450, 58 P.2d 394]; Armstrong v. Armstrong, supra [132 Cal.App. 609, 23 P.2d 50]. If the decree modifies or supersedes some provision of the agreement, one party may have concurrent remedies, but a defaulting party may be bound by both the decree and the agreement." Robertson v. Robertson, 34 Cal.App.2d 113, 117, 93 P.2d 175, 178.

[7, 8] Herein lies the detriment to the appellant in the form of the decree appealed from. If the agreement had been approved by the trial court she would have the concurrent remedies of enforcing its terms, either by direct action on the contract, or by summary proceedings in the divorce action. The form of the decree entered does not determine this issue, which was properly presented and tried. By accepting the portion of the agreement relating to the custody and maintenance of the minor child, and the portion relating to attorney's fees, the judgment leaves the parties in doubt whether it was intended to adopt or reject the agreement. The rule applicable here is well stated in 33 C.J. at page 1102, et seq.: "A judgment must be definitive. By this is meant that the decision itself must purport to decide finally the rights of the parties upon the issue submitted, by specifically denying or granting the remedy sought by the action. The converse of this proposition is also true, and every definitive determination of the rights of the parties in a proceeding before a competent tribunal is a judgment."

The portions of the decree appealed from are reversed, and the cause is remanded for the modification of the decree in accordance herewith.

STURTEVANT and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

ADOLPH COORS CO. v. CORBETT et al.

Civ. 11713.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

March 2, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 1, 1942.
Appeal Dismissed Aug. 17, 1942.

1. Constitutional law 🔑77

The rule of the state board of equalization fixing size of containers for beer at 11, 12, 16, 22, 24, 32 and 64 ounces, where Legislature had fixed merely the maximum size at 64 ounces, was "substantive legislation" which board had no power to enact. Const. art. 20, § 22, as amended in 1934; Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3796, §§ 38, 38e, 53.6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Substantive Legislation".

2. Constitutional law 🔑77

A ministerial officer may not under the guise of a rule and regulation, thought to be necessary to carry out and accomplish the purpose of an act, vary or enlarge the terms or conditions of a legislative enactment.

3. Statutes 🔑208

In seeking to discover legislative intent, proximity of language to subject under discussion is not essential.

4. Constitutional law 🔑62
Intoxicating liquors 🔑15

Even if statute fixing maximum size for containers of beer contained express authorization for rules and regulations by state board of equalization with respect to sizes smaller than the maximum size fixed by statute, that would be an improper "delegation of legislative power" to enact substantive legislation. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3796, § 53.6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Delegation of Legislative Power".

5. Intoxicating liquors 🔑7

The statute fixing maximum size for containers of beer at 64 ounces does not authorize state board of equalization to make rules and regulations with respect to sizes smaller than the 64-ounce maximum. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 3796, § 53.6.

6. Intoxicating liquors 🔑7

The statute dealing with wholesale selling price of beer, publication of prices, and the maintenance of such prices and providing, immediately following a penal provision designed to prevent violation of the effective posted prices, that state board of equalization adopt other rules and regulations which will foster and encourage the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distributing of beer does not authorize a rule of the board fixing sizes of containers for beer, since the doctrine of "ejusdem generis" applies and the rules authorized are those having to do with stabilization of wholesale prices of beer. Gen. Laws 1937, Act 3796, § 38e.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ejusdem Generis".

7. Statutes 🔑194

The doctrine of "ejusdem generis" means that where general and specific words, relating to the same things are associated together, they take color from each other, and the general words are restricted to a sense analogous to that of those less general.

KNIGHT, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action by Adolph Coors Company against John C. Corbett and others for declaratory relief and for an injunction to prevent the enforcement of a rule establishing the size of beer containers. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Laurence Berger, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Corbet & Selby, John Selby, Russel Shearer, and Paul Thomas, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ, on behalf of appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem.

This suit for an injunction and declaratory relief was brought by the appellant, a Colorado corporation, and Albion Brewing Co., Inc., a California corporation, to prevent the enforcement of a rule establishing the size of containers, adopted by the State Board of Equalization under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act on June 15, 1938, effective July 16, 1938. The litigation was commenced between those dates, and a preliminary injunction was issued. Notwithstanding a judgment in defendants' favor, the injunction was continued in force which stayed the enforcement of the rule pending the appeal.

The challenged rule fixes the size of containers for beer, other than draught beer, at 11, 12, 16, 22, 24, 32 and 64 ounces, and prohibits its wholesale marketing or distribution in containers of other sizes.

The complaint alleged that the appellant, whose product is manufactured in Colorado, was the only distributor and importer selling beer in California in 8 oz. bottles, and that it had invested approximately $50,000 in bottles and equipment to handle such 8 oz. bottles here; that there was a definite demand among the consumers here for beer in bottles of that size; that appellant's sales thereof had increased from approximately 3,000 cases a month in 1937 to approximately 25,000 in 1938, such sales being in excess of $350,000 per annum, and that a good will "of inestimable value" had been established, which the enforcement of the rule would destroy. Appellant alleged further, and now claims, that the rule is arbitrary, without the jurisdiction of the board, discriminatory, an abuse of discretion on the part of the board, and an unwarranted interference with the right of plaintiffs to freely contract.

It was alleged in the complaint, and is urged on appeal, that article XX, section 22, of the state Constitution reserves to the state the exclusive right to regulate the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, and that the board has been granted only the power to license the same, and that any regulation not contained in the act is reserved to the legislature or to the people; that the rule is void because it bears no real or substantial relation to, and does not promote or protect, the public health, morals, safety or welfare.

A general demurrer was overruled and the defendants answered. At the trial the defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which objection was sustained and a judgment of dismissal entered, from which this appeal was taken.

The question presented for decision is, whether the board has the power to prohibit, by rule or regulation, the sale of beer in containers other than those of 11, 12, 16, 22, 24, 32 and 64 ounce sizes, where the legislature itself has gone no further than to fix the maximum size at 64 ounces.

The present Alcoholic Beverage Control Act was adopted in 1935 (Stats.1935, ch. 330, pp. 1123-1153; Deering's Gen.Laws 1937, Act 3796). In 1937 it was amended in many respects (Stats.1937, ch. 681, p. 1934; ch. 758, pp. 2126-2178) and again in 1939 and 1941; but it is with the act as it read in 1938, when the rule was adopted and the suit brought, that we are concerned.

The 1934 amendment of section 22 of article XX of the Constitution provides that the State of California "shall have the exclusive right and power to license and regulate the manufacture, sale, purchase, possession and transportation of intoxicating liquor within the State," and that "The State Board of Equalization shall have the exclusive power to license the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors in this State, and to collect license fees or occupation taxes on account thereof and shall have the power, in its discretion, to deny or revoke any specific liquor license if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals."

Although the act contains many scattered provisions empowering the board to adopt rules and regulations, section 38 seems to be the general authorization for rules and regulations. It provides that: "The board shall administer all of the provisions of this act and to that end shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations to carry out such provisions * * *."

It is not, however, under this section that the Board claims the power to make the rule in question; it is under section 38e that such power is claimed, and the notice of hearing so stated.

The rule in question reads in part as follows: "Beer containers for beer other than draught beer shall be of the following sizes: 11, 12, 16, 22, 24, 32 and 64 ounce; containers for draught beer shall be of the following sizes: ⅛, ¼, ½ and full barrels. No other sizes of containers shall be used in the wholesale marketing or wholesale distribution of beer in this State, whether such beer is manufactured in, or imported into, this State * * *."

That part of section 38e upon which the board relies as the basis for this rule, reads as follows: "The board may adopt such other rules and regulations as will foster and encourage the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distribution of beer; provided, that no such action shall be taken by the board except after public hearing and ten (10) days notice to all licensed manufacturers of beer in California of the time and place of such hearing and of the character of the action intended to be taken by the board."

Is the rule merely a regulation designed to administer and carry out the provisions of the act, or is it, in reality, a piece of legislation?

At the time the rule was promulgated section 53.6 of the act provided (and still provides) that no beer intended for sale in California (except for export) "shall be contained in bottles, jugs or cans having a capacity of more than 64 ounces." It expressly permitted the possession and sale of "draft or unpasteurized beer * * * in metal or wood kegs of a capacity of three and one-half (3½) gallons or more." For bottled beer, then, the legislature prescribed no minimum container capacity at all; for draught beer, however, it saw fit to prescribe a minimum container capacity but prescribed no maximum.

The same section prescribed that "wine shall not be packaged or bottled in any flask containers of less than one-half gallon which are of the same or similar type used for the packaging or bottling of distilled spirits."

The fixing of the 64-ounce maximum was, of course, the exercise of a legislative function. That being true, it follows that the fixing, by rule 35a, of the 11-ounce minimum was likewise the exercise of a legislative function. As the amici curiae brief puts it: "This shows quite clearly that Rule 35A adds a restriction to the Act because, giving validity both to the Act and to the rule, the law would be, beer must not be sold in containers larger than 64 ounces, and shall only be sold in containers of 11, 12, 16, 22, 24, 32 and 64 ounces." (The emphasis is counsel's.)

[1, 2] The rule does not speak upon an administrative subject or upon a question of procedure. It is just as positive with respect to minimum and intermediate sizes of containers as is the act itself with respect to the maximum size. Lewis' Second Edition of Sutherland on Statutory Construction, volume I, section 89, has this to say with respect to legislative power: "The constitution vests this power in the legislature; it must there remain by force of the constitution. It is exclusively vested in the legislature. The legislature cannot divest itself of the power, nor impart it to others, except in accordance with this distinction, though there are some recognized exceptions which will presently be considered. Legislative power is delegated contrary to the maxim stated when the legislature attempts to confer on others a power of substantive legislation, to be exercised independently or in conjunction with the legislature * * *." (Emphasis ours.) The minimum and intermediate provisions found in the rule are, in our opinion, just as certainly "substantive legislation" as the maximum provision found in the act. In Boone v. Kingsbury, 206 Cal. 148, 161, 273 P. 797, 804, the Supreme Court said, "That a ministerial officer may not, under the guise of a rule and regulation, thought to be necessary to carry out and accomplish the purpose of an act, vary or enlarge the terms or conditions of a legislative enactment, has often been the subject of judicial decision." This was said with respect to a regulation promulgated by the surveyor-general under a rule-making power in which he "attempted to impose burdens upon the applicant not imposed by statute by requiring personal service of notice, and, under certain circumstances, publication of notice of the filing of an application for a permit." This, it will be observed, was a matter of procedure as distinguished from the drawing of a line, or the fixing of a limit, as was attempted by rule 35a. In that case the court on this point (206 Cal. at pages 162, 163, 273 P. at page 804) quoted from United States v. George, 228 U.S. 14, 21, 33 S.Ct. 412, 57 L.Ed. 712; Williamson v. United States, 207 U.S. 425, 462, 28 S.Ct. 163, 52 L. Ed. 278; United States v. United Verde Copper Co., 196 U.S. 207, 215, 25 S.Ct. 222, 49 L.Ed. 449; and Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S. 466, 467, 1 S.Ct. 423, 27 L.Ed. 267; and cited Waite v. Macy, 246 U.S. 606, 609, 610, 38 S.Ct. 395, 62 L.Ed. 892.

A case which bears upon this question rather directly is In re McLain, 190 Cal. 376, 212 P. 620, where the legislature in the 1919 Motor Vehicle Act fixed the maximum rate of speed at 35 miles per hour. However, section 22a of the act provided that the Highway Commission could fix the maximum rate of speed at less than the rate established by law over certain parts of a highway. The commission established the maximum rate at 15 miles at the point in question; McLain drove at 28, and was prosecuted under the act for a violation of the commission's rule. On a writ of habeas corpus the court held that this was an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, saying (190 Cal. at page 379, 212 P. at page 621): "It is settled, of course, beyond controversy, that the power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by it to any subordinate body." It must be borne in mind, in comparing the McLain case with the case at bar, that in the 1919 Motor Vehicle Act the legislature by the use of unequivocal language made the delegation, while here, as will be presently developed, it is more than questionable if the act, either in section 38e or elsewhere, pretends to make any such delegation. But if it does, the reasoning of the McLain case applies. See, also, In re Peppers, 189 Cal. 682, 688, 209 P. 896.

[3-5] In the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act there is not to be found in or around the place where ordinarily it would be looked for, any indication by the legislature that the board should have any rule-making power with respect to the size of containers. Nowhere in section 53.6 where the 64-ounce maximum is prescribed, is there a word as to rules or regulations with respect to other sizes, or vesting the Board with any discretion, in this or any other respect. At the same time, throughout the act there are numerous instances where the legislature, in dealing with a specific subject, has then and there empowered the board to make rules in connection with such subject; for example, in section 4 (sale of a stock of liquor after revocation or surrender of license); in section 5 (proportionate license fee for a fractional year); in section 6(r) (sales to non-licensees within government reservations or parks); in section 6.5 (giving away of samples); in section 21 (notice of hearing of protests); in section 22a (annual report of wine manufacturers); in section 23b (claims for exemption of tax); in section 38a (additional and supplemental reports). There are other places where the legislature authorizes the board to prescribe forms; for example, in section 21 (notices of intention to engage in business, and of application for on-sale licenses); in section 24.4 (the keeping of records); in section 24.7 (bonds); in section 26 (statement of quantity of wine and beer sold); in section 67.5 (reports by boats and railroads). Sections 23b and 24.2 expressly leave it to the board to fix the tolerance in accounting for beverages lost. Section 25 prescribes the exact form of bond to be furnished, but leaves it to the board to fix its amount. We are mindful of the fact that in seeking to discover legislative intent proximity of language to the subject under discussion is not essential, but when it is borne in mind that in the large number of instances in this act where the legislature has taken the trouble to immediately tie in the authorization for rules and regulations with individual subjects—many of them comparatively unimportant—the absence of similar language in section 53.6 is conspicuous. Under the rule quoted from Sutherland even if the section contained express authorization for rules and regulations with respect to sizes smaller than the 64-ounce maximum, that would be an improper delegation of the power to enact "substantive legislation." The fact remains, however, that no such authorization is found in section 53.6 at all.

In addition to section 53.6 prescribing a minimum with respect to draught beer, and a minimum with respect to certain wine containers, it is interesting to note that the legislature in 1937 (before rule 35a was promulgated) amended section 34 of the act dealing with distilled spirits licensees. The 1935 act (p. 1141) made it unlawful to sell distilled spirits in packages containing more than one gallon, thus providing, as it does with respect to beer, simply a maximum. In 1937, however, Stats.1937, p. 2155, section 34e, the legislature saw fit to add a minimum provision. It permitted the one-gallon maximum provision to stand and added that after December 31, 1937, it should be unlawful for any rectifier or wholesaler to deliver, or for any on or off-sale distilled spirits licensee to sell or have in his possession, distilled spirits in packages containing less than one-half pint.

To sum up: In 1937 the legislature saw fit to prescribe a minimum provision for wine, maximum and minimum provisions with respect to distilled spirits, and a maximum provision only with respect to bottled beer (it provided a minimum of 3½ gallons for beer in metal or wooden kegs). The board, however, within a year thereafter, by rule 35a, wrote into the law a minimum provision respecting beer containers thereby "legislating" upon a subject with respect to which the law-making body in its wisdom had seen fit to remain silent, and at the same time "legislating" with respect to intermediate sizes of bottled beer containers.

In Adolph Coors Co. v. Liquor Control Commission, 99 Utah, 246, 105 P.2d 181, a divided court held that the liquor board of that state had no power to legislate as to the minimum size of beer containers where the statute, as in the instant case, provided nothing but a maximum. This case is relied upon by appellant. Although we are in accord with the reasoning of the majority opinion, no reliance need be placed thereon for the reason that the statutory and constitutional provisions were dissimilar from those here involved.

[6] For other reasons we are satisfied from the language and structure of the act, and particularly from a consideration of the company in which section 38e is found, that that section was not designed to cover such a subject as is found in rule 35a. In the brief of amici curiae in support of the appellant this point is presented and the ejusdem generis and noscitur a sociis rules are invoked. We think they apply in this case. As already pointed out, the respondents rely upon section 38e of the act. That being so, an examination of that section is in order. Section 38e was added to the act in 1937 (pp. 2159–2161). It is lengthy and is broken up into six paragraphs. By this section each manufacturer, importer and wholesaler of beer is required to file and thereafter maintain on file with the board a written schedule of his sale prices for beer sold in this state; such schedules may be changed from time to time by filing new ones. The first schedule becomes effective immediately; the amendatory ones become effective ten days after being filed. Then there is a proviso with respect to the filing of schedules "to meet lower posted and filed competing prices in a trade area" and provision, in such cases, as to effective dates. Such price schedules, the section says, are subject to public inspection and are in no sense confidential. Upon the filing of these schedules—original or amendatory—"all prices therein stated shall be strictly adhered to by the filing licensee and any departure or variance therefrom * * * shall constitute and be a misdemeanor." There are two provisions vesting the board with power to prescribe the form of the schedules. The section then goes on to provide that "Any director, officer, agent or employee of any licensee who knowingly assists or aids in the violation of this section or any effective posted price or any rule or regulation of the board passed to carry out the provisions of this section shall be guilty of such violation equally with the licensee." Then follows the paragraph authorizing "other rules and regulations" quoted above, which is followed by another paragraph, again dealing with prices and marketing, reading as follows: "No manufacturer, importer or wholesaler mentioned in this section shall be prohibited the right of choice of customers, nor shall any such licensee be prohibited from dividing his customers into functional classes and establish different prices for the same articles for such different functional classes, such different functional classes being based upon the manner in which such classes sell beer, as wholesaler or retailer." The succeeding paragraph sets up the machinery for court action by any trade association to enjoin violations "of this section," with damages as well. The last paragraph provides safeguards for the licensee against the revocation of his license for "a violation of the provisions of this section."

[7] From the foregoing review of section 38e it will be seen that what the legislature dealt with therein was the wholesale selling price of beer; the publication of prices; the maintenance of such prices and strict adherence to them. Immediately following a penal provision designed to prevent the "violation" of effective posted prices is found the language relied upon to support rule 35a, viz., "The board may adopt such other rules and regulations as will foster and encourage the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distribution of beer * * *." A reading of section 38e shows that the preceding and succeeding parts of that section do, in fact, deal with "the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distribution of beer." On behalf of the appellant it is argued that when, in the middle of this section, the legislature speaks of "other rules and regulations" the word "other" must be limited to wholesale marketing and distributing practices of the same kind, to wit, relating to prices, price cutting, meeting competitive prices and adequate disclosure of prices. Rules and regulations were mentioned in the earlier part of the section in connection with a specific subject—the filing of price schedules, therefore, it is not at all surprising to find provision for "other rules and regulations" later on in the same section. The interpretation for which appellant contends finds support in the fact that that part of the section next following the rules and regulations provision continues to deal with the subject of prices, price discrimination and different prices for customers in different functional classes. In short, that part of section 38e upon which the respondents rely to support a rule dealing with the size of containers finds itself sandwiched in between two provisions dealing with price stabilization, a subject utterly foreign to that of the size of containers. As already noted, the general grant of the rule-making power is found in section 38, yet the respondents do not rely upon that section, and section 53.6 which does deal with the size of containers is utterly silent with respect to rules and regulations. "The doctrine of 'ejusdem generis' simply means that where general and specific words, relating to the same things are associated together, they take color from each other, and the general words are restricted to a sense analogous to that of those less general." 23 Cal.Jur., 755, section 130. We are satisfied that that doctrine applies in this case and that the language found in section 38e was not designed to authorize such a rule as 35a, but must be confined to such rules for "the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distribution of beer" as have to do with the stabilization of the wholesale prices of that beverage.

Other points are urged by appellant. One is that in rule 35a certain beverages defined in the act as "beer" were excluded from the operation of the rule, the argument being Tux Ginger Ale Co., Ltd., v. Davis, 12 Cal.App.2d 73, 54 P.2d 1122 that where the act has defined a beverage the board cannot by rule supply a different definition. Another, that rule 35a is an improper exercise of the police power in that it does not tend to promote or protect the public health, safety, morals or welfare. It is not necessary to discuss these and other points, in view of the conclusion at which we have arrived.

In our opinion, the judgment appealed from should be, and it is, reversed.

PETERS, P. J., concurred.

KNIGHT, Justice (dissenting).

I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached in the majority opinion that the matter of fixing the size of containers in which beer shall be marketed and distributed at wholesale in this state constitutes a legislative function that can be accomplished only by the passage of an act of the legislature. In so holding the majority opinion not only reverses the judgment of the trial court, but the effect of the decision, as I construe it, is to strike from the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act that paragraph of section 38e whereby the legislature has expressly authorized the Board of Equalization to adopt such "rules and regulations as will foster and encourage the orderly wholesale marketing and wholesale distribution of beer," and to throw into a state of uncertainty the question of the validity of other rules and regulations adopted by the board pursuant to section 38 of said act, wherein the legislature has declared that "The board shall administer all of the provisions of this act and to that end shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations to carry out such provisions." It is my conviction that the authority to fix the size of beer containers does not constitute a purely legislative act, but is a matter the legislature, under well-settled principles of constitutional law, may properly delegate in whole or in part to the Board of Equalization, and that by appropriate legislation it has so delegated such authority, with certain limitations by the enactment of that portion of section 38e above quoted.

In considering the question of delegation of power, it should be kept in mind that the state Constitution, unlike the federal Constitution, is not a grant of power, but is a limitation of power; consequently the legislature is not restricted as to its legislative powers nor the mode of their exercise unless restrained by express words of the Constitution or by necessary implication therefrom. Sheehan v. Scott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 P. 350; Mendenhall v. Gray, 167 Cal. 233, 139 P. 67; Mitchell v. Winnek, 117 Cal. 520, 49 P. 579; Beals v. Board of Sup'rs of Amador County, 35 Cal. 624. It is a fundamental principle of constitutional law, therefore, that while the legislature may not delegate to a state board or officer its power to enact laws, it may nevertheless, and in many situations must necessarily, authorize things to be done by others which it may properly do itself. To quote from California Jurisprudence (vol. 5, p. 678): "This rule that the legislature cannot delegate its powers, is, however, only true in its most general sense. It has been said that to establish a principle that whatever the legislature may do, it shall do, or else it shall go undone, would be almost to destroy the government. While the legislature cannot delegate its general legislative authority, still it may authorize many things to be done by others which it might properly do itself. Necessarily regarding many things, especially affecting local or individual interests, the legislature may act either mediately or immediately. The object to be accomplished, or the thing permitted, may be specified, and the rest left to the agency of others, with better opportunities of accomplishing the object, or doing the thing understandingly." And again on page 681 it is said: "It is an equally well-recognized principle that the legislature, notwithstanding it may do things itself, may nevertheless authorize them to be done by ministerial officers or boards when it believes that they can do them more effectively than it can itself." In fact it is expressly noted in the quotation from Sutherland on Statutory Construction, set forth in the majority opinion, that to the general rule prohibiting delegation of power "* * * there are some recognized exceptions. * * *" Where authority is thus delegated, the commission or board upon which it is conferred is, of course, accountable to the courts for any abuse or unjust exercise of the discretion with which it is vested. 5 Cal.Jur. 681.

Here as pointed out in the majority opinion the legislature fixed the maximum size of beer containers, but manifestly it does not follow as a matter of law necessarily or at all from the fact that it has done so, that the function of fixing the size of beer containers constitutes a purely legislative act; and it seems clear that by authorizing the Board of Equalization to adopt such rules as will foster and encourage the orderly wholesale marketing and distribution of beer, the legislature fully intended to delegate to the board the right of standardizing containers in any size within the maximum fixed by the legislature, if in the judgment of the board such action was deemed necessary. The general object of most regulations for the standardization of weights and measures is the prevention of fraud, and to provide a method by which purchasers of commodities may protect themselves from short weights and measures and be able to obtain the quantity of the property purchased. Such was evidently one of the purposes in the adoption of rule 35a here assailed.

In support of the conclusion that there has been an illegal delegation of power, the majority opinion cites and to a large extent relies upon the cases of In re McLain, 190 Cal. 376, 212 P. 620, and In re Peppers, 189 Cal. 682, 209 P. 896. But an examination of the decisions therein clearly demonstrates that neither case is in point for the reason that there the legislature attempted to delegate to a state board the power to declare by rule what acts would constitute a crime; and it is well settled that the legislature may not delegate any such power. That is not the situation here. Violations of rule 35a at most subject the violator to a revocation of his license to market and distribute beer at wholesale.

Nor in my opinion can it be said that there is anything in Boone v. Kingsbury, 206 Cal. 148, 273 P. 797, that is here controlling. The question of delegation of power was not discussed, and apparently was not a determining factor. It was a case where a state officer under the guise of general rule-making authority attempted to enlarge upon a legislative act by promulgating a rule prescribing a certain requirement inconsistent with and repugnant to the law itself. In the Utah case (Adolph Coors Co. v. Liquor Control Commission, 99 Utah 246, 105 P.2d 181), which as will be noted was instituted by the appellant herein, the same question here involved was there presented, but as stated in the majority opinion herein the statutory and constitutional provisions there under consideration were dissimilar to those here involved. However, I do not understand that the majority members of the court there held that because the legislature fixed the maximum, the liquor board did not have the power to fix the minimum size of beer containers. As I read the case, three of the five members of the court expressly dissented from that view.

Furthermore, in the present case, more or less significance is attached to the wording of the constitutional provision itself wherein it declares that "the State of California * * * shall have the exclusive right and power to license and regulate the manufacture, sale, purchase, possession and transportation of intoxicating liquor within the State * * *." (Italics ours.) But when the provision is considered in the light of its historical background, the real purpose in so wording it becomes apparent. That is to say, prior to the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, the power to license and regulate the sale of liquor in this state was vested in cities and counties, and not in the state; and following the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment by Congress but before the repeal was ratified by a sufficient number of states, California, in 1932, in anticipation of such ratification, amended the state Constitution by adding section 22 to article XX whereby the licensing and regulating of the sale of liquor was not returned to cities and counties, but was made a state affair; and the present 1934 amendment merely enlarged upon the provisions of the 1932 enactment. It would seem unreasonable to hold, therefore, that because the new state constitutional provision was so worded it was the intention to prohibit the legislature from delegating any of its powers of regulation to the Board of Equalization.

The judgment of the trial court, in my opinion, should be affirmed.

WEST KEY NUMBER SYSTEM

---

50 Cal.App.2d 337

CORPORATION OF AMERICA et al. v. DURHAM MUT. WATER CO., Limited.

Civ. 6687.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 5, 1942.

1. States 🔑104

Where state government acts in a proprietary or business capacity, its contracts and dealings are construed by same rules and with like effect as those of private citizens.

2. States 🔑104

Verbal contract executed between State Land Settlement Board superintendent and a landowner regarding water rights must be considered in light of rules of law governing similar contracts between private individuals.

3. Frauds, statute of 🔑144
States 🔑68

Where oral contract between State Land Settlement Board's superintendent and landowner regarding delivery of water to the owner's land was carried out by delivery of water under the board's jurisdiction from 1919 to 1928 and from 1928 to 1938 under supervision of the board's successor in interest, latter would be bound by the superintendent's acts under the doctrine of "ostensible authority" and was "estopped" to raise the statute of frauds as a defense to the validity of the contract in view of the presumption that the superintendent had performed his official duty in making the contract. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop" and "Ostensible Authority".

4. Estoppel 🔑114

In action for declaratory relief regarding water rights, plaintiffs could claim that defendant and its predecessor in interest were estopped from asserting invalidity of oral contract regarding water rights, although estoppel was not specifically pleaded, where the contract regarding water rights was alleged to have been an executed one, since in such case it is not necessary to anticipate a defense thereto by pleading estoppel.

5. Frauds, statute of 🔑144

Although a contract may be within the statute of frauds, yet, if the conduct of the party relying thereon has been such as to raise an equity independent of the contract, he may be estopped to make that defense.

6. States 🔑68

Where one who was superintendent and executive officer of State Land Settlement Board was in charge of office and negotiated contracts for sale of land and was in charge of matters relating to the irrigation system, plaintiffs' predecessor, who made oral contract with such superintendent regarding water rights, was reasonably justified in dealing with such superintendent.

7. Action 🔑6

In action for declaratory relief involving an oral contract alleged to have been entered into by predecessors in interest of the respective parties concerning delivery of irrigation water to lands of plaintiff, court had jurisdiction to render judgment upholding validity of contract where, in addition to usual allegations for declaratory relief, complaint contained allegations for specific performance and court found that oral agreement had been made and fully performed for 19 years, since, the proceeding being equitable in nature, court should not be restricted in determining issues of entire controversy. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

8. Waters and water courses ⚷247(1)

In action involving oral contract made between predecessors in interest of the respective parties concerning delivery of irrigation water to lands of plaintiff, judgment in effect that contract, providing for delivery perpetually and without cost to plaintiff's predecessor of two second feet of water, with right of accumulation, was valid and existing, was not erroneous because placing no limitation on plaintiffs' right to accumulate their flow of water since right to accumulate water was of necessity limited to capacity of ditch.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; James O. Moncur, Judge Assigned.

Action for declaratory relief by corporation of America and others against Durham Mutual Water Company, Limited. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Grayson Price, of Chico, for appellant.

Jerome D. Peters, of Chico, for respondents.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action for declaratory relief.

The question presented involves an oral contract alleged to have been entered into by the predecessors in interest of the respective parties hereto concerning the delivery of irrigation water to the lands of the plaintiffs. The trial court found the agreement to exist and upheld its validity.

To facilitate an understanding of the situation we consider it necessary to set forth the facts in some detail. The record discloses that plaintiffs' predecessor in interest, one Robert W. Durham, was the owner of certain lands known as the "Durham Ranch," together with appurtenant riparian water rights, situate near the town of Durham in Butte County, west of and adjacent to Butte Creek; that the State Land Settlement Board, predecessor in interest of the defendant herein, which was created by an act of the legislature (Statutes of 1917, page 1566) for the purpose of acquiring land for rural farms, purchased a considerable acreage including riparian rights on Butte Creek, which project became known as "Durham Land Colony," and included an area on both sides of Butte Creek. These lands were sold in small parcels with the appurtenant water rights to individual farmers, the board agreeing to deliver the water to the respective parcels at cost. By a decree rendered in the Superior Court of Sutter County in 1920, the plaintiffs' predecessor, Robert W. Durham, was adjudged to be the owner of two cubic feet per second (80 miner's inches) of the waters of Butte Creek, and the State Land Settlement Board to be the owner of forty second feet or sixteen hundred miner's inches. In 1919 the board desired to deliver water to certain parcels of land west of Butte Creek and south of the Robert W. Durham lands, and in preparation therefor it became necessary to obtain rights of way for a high line ditch to transport such water. The plan of supply was by gravity flow, and a diversion dam was built on Butte Creek some four or five miles upstream, and the water then taken by means of a ditch on the easterly side of Butte Creek down to the Colony lands. At a point approximately a mile northerly on the Robert W. Durham lands a portion of such waters was diverted west across Butte Creek by means of a siphon to supply Durham's land and those above referred to lying south of Durham's land.

The board's superintendent, George C. Kreutzer, contacted the landowners west of Butte Creek in connection with obtaining the necessary rights of way for the new ditch, and in one instance secured a written agreement from one of the owners granting such right of way across their lands directly north of Durham's land. It appears that Durham was not willing to sign such an agreement as the one proposed, and insisted that in consideration of granting the right of way across his land, the board agree to deliver to him perpetually and without cost to him, his two second feet of water, with the right of accumulation, that is, to allow it to accumulate so that if he did not use his allotment one day he would be entitled to twice that amount the second day, and so on to the capacity of the ditch.

It is Durham's testimony that Kreutzer agreed to this, and the ditch was constructed accordingly. In addition Durham paid to the board the sum of $125 toward the construction of the permanent diversion dam on Butte Creek, which circumstance lends support to the suggestion of permanence of the plan or agreement in question. The Durham lands, prior to this agreement, had its own system of ditches which had supplied water to the lands for many years.

Upon completion of the ditch in question the waters were delivered without cost by the board, and later by its successor the defendant herein, from 1919 until 1938, when appellant demanded that the plaintiffs, the present owners of the Durham lands, place their lands and water rights upon the same basis as other land owners served with water, and pay for the delivery thereof in the same manner. Plaintiffs refused to do this, and appellant thereupon declined to deliver further water to them without cost. The instant action followed.

[1, 2] One of the main contentions urged by the appellant on this appeal is that the verbal contract found to have been executed between Kreutzer and Durham, which appellant disputes, is not legally enforceable for the reason that Kreutzer, the superintendent, acted without authorization of the board, and being a public official representing a public body, one dealing with him as such, comes within the rule of being charged with knowledge of, and is bound at one's peril to ascertain the extent of his power or authority to bind the public body for which he purports to act. While this is the rule as applied to functions of the state government acting in a governmental capacity, the rule has been relaxed in cases where public bodies contract with private parties and thus act in a proprietary or business capacity. In such an event its contracts and dealings are construed and measured by the same rules and with like effect as those of private citizens. Brown v. Town of Sebastopol, 153 Cal. 704, 96 P. 363, 19 L.R.A.,N.S., 178; Sacramento County v. Southern Pac. Co., 127 Cal. 217, 59 P. 568, 825; and also Meyer v. State Land Settlement Board, 99 Cal.App. 337, 278 P. 452. It will be seen, therefore, that the contract here must be considered in the light of rules of law governing similar contracts between private individuals.

[3] Appellant contends that the board was unaware of the terms of the oral contract, although the record is silent in that regard. The superintendent, George C. Kreutzer, had died prior to the trial and no member of the board as it had theretofore existed, and which consisted of five members, was called to testify. The arrangement for the delivery of the water to the Durham lands continued from 1919 to 1928 under the board's jurisdiction, and from 1928 to 1938 under the supervision of the appellant, without inquiry or dispute whatsoever upon the part of either as to the conditions or terms upon which the water was being so delivered. It would appear, therefore, that insofar as knowledge of the arrangement is concerned that the legal effect of the doctrines of ostensible authority and estoppel in pais would apply and render the contract valid and enforceable, supported with the presumption "That official duty has been regularly performed." Code Civ.Proc., section 1963; American System, etc., v. Breakers Hotel Co., 217 Cal. 67-71, 17 P.2d 138; West American Finance Co. v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 17 Cal.App.2d 225-236, 61 P.2d 963.

[4] Appellant next questions the validity of the contract under the statute of frauds. Respondents claim that the board and its successor, the defendant here, are estopped from asserting its invalidity under the doctrine just referred to, while appellant urges that this claim is not available to the respondents for the reason that estoppel was not specifically pleaded. This is true in cases where the doctrine is relied upon as a defense, however, in a plaintiff's pleading, such as we have here, where the contract is alleged to have been an executed one, it is not necessary to anticipate a defense thereto by pleading an estoppel. The instant case is factually similar to the case of Corporation of America v. Harris, 5 Cal.App.2d 452, at pages 461, 462, 43 P.2d 307, 311, wherein it is said:

[5] "Factually the case is similar to Feeney v. Clapp, 126 Cal.App. 729, 15 P.2d 178, 180. There a lease was entered into by Margaret Feeney, as lessor, and W. O. Clapp, as lessee. The former believed that the firm of F. H. Woodruff & Sons was the real party at interest, a member of said firm having advised Mrs. Feeney's agent that it would be convenient to name Clapp as lessee and that the latter would be given written authority to act. The authority was not given and in a suit against the firm to recover installments of rent the plaintiff prevailed. The doctrine of estoppel was invoked to sustain the judgment and, in commenting on the subject, the appellate court says: 'The firm members claim that the contract alleged was within the statute of frauds, * * * and consequently that they were not bound, but it is plaintiff's position that they were estopped to assert the statute. On this question the finding was that defendants Woodruff immediately after the execution of the lease entered into possession, paid the rent, and received the crops and other benefits thereunder; and this finding is also supported. Although a contract may be within the statute of frauds, yet if the conduct of the party relying thereon has been such as to raise an equity outside of and independent of the contract, he may be estopped to make that defense.' See, also, Schlesinger & Sons v. Kohler & Chase, 103 Cal.App. 195, 284 P. 244; Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, supra [209 Cal. 241, 286 P. 1001].

"Appellant's claim that estoppel must be pleaded is without merit. It has been held that when the doctrine is relied upon as a defense, it must be pleaded if there is an opportunity to do so (Peerless Motor Co. v. Sterling F. Corp., 139 Cal.App. 621, 34 P.2d 738); but the rule does not apply to a plaintiff's pleadings (McCreery v. Charlton, 185 Cal. 37, 195 P. 670; Llewellyn Iron Works v. Abbott Kinney Co., 172 Cal. 210, 155 P. 986). The court, however, must make a finding on estoppel when its decision is based thereon, which finding is sufficient if it recites facts from which an estoppel necessarily follows. Zenos v. Britten-Cook Land, etc., Co., 75 Cal.App. 299, 242 P. 914."

[6] It appears that Kreutzer, the superintendent and executive officer of the board, was in charge of the office of the board and negotiated contracts for the sale of lands within the colony as well as for the purchase of rights of way for irrigation ditches, and was generally in charge of all matters pertaining to the irrigation system serving the lands of the colony. Under such circumstances Durham, as well as all others having occasion to transact matters of business with the board, were reasonably justified in dealing with Kreutzer, who was held out, tacitly at least by the board as having authority to negotiate and consummate all transactions necessary to put into operation the working plan for which the colony was created.

[7] Appellant further contends that the trial court had no jurisdiction to render judgment in this matter because declaratory relief (Section 1060, Code Civ.Proc.) is not applicable to disputed oral contracts, and that the parties must pursue their remedy at law for a determination of such disputed facts. The case of Transport Oil Co. v. Bush, 114 Cal.App. 152-161, 1 P.2d 1060, is cited in support thereof. While the cited case contains language which suggests support to such contention, the later case of Herrlein v. Tocchini, 1933, 128 Cal.App. 612-617, 18 P.2d 73, 74, appears to have expressly overruled it on this point as dicta. There the court said: "The first point relied on for reversal is that the trial court had no jurisdiction of the action. In support of this contention it is urged that declaratory relief, as provided for in part 2, title 14, chapter 8, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not applicable to disputed oral contracts and hence was not available to plaintiffs in the present action. The point is without merit. Appellants cite the case of Transport Oil Co. v. Bush, 114 Cal.App. 152, 1 P.2d 1060, as containing the proper construction of our declaratory relief statute. A careful examination of this case reveals that the language relied on by appellants is dicta. Moreover, in the later case of Tolle et al. v. Struve et al. [124 Cal.App. 263], 12 P.2d 61, 62, the same question is elaborately considered and determined adversely to appellants' position here. In that decision the court declares: 'We do not feel called upon to follow appellant into the field of foreign legislation and decision on this point, nor to engage in an analysis of the provisions of our own declaratory relief statute, for the reason that we consider this question to be definitely foreclosed by the decision of our own Supreme Court in Hess v. Country Club Park (213 Cal. 613), 2 P.2d 782. In that case the plaintiff, who held certain real property under a deed containing certain restrictive provisions, sought and secured declaratory relief adjudging that by reason of the change in condition and character of the neighborhood, it was no longer suitable for residence purposes, and hence the restrictions were no longer binding or enforceable. The sole question involved in that proceeding was dependent upon the determination of a question of fact. * * * Unless the Supreme Court sees fit to recede from the position taken in this case, which seems entirely improbable, it can be no objection to a proceeding for declaratory relief that it involves and depends upon the determination of a question of fact.' "

It is true the complaint here contains the usual allegations for declaratory relief, but it also contains allegations for specific performance, and the court found that an oral agreement had been entered into and had been fully performed for a period of nineteen years. While the court refused to decree specific performance because of the indefinite length of time involved requiring constant personal supervision, the judgment in effect is that the contract is valid and existing, and it would follow that in case of breach thereof a remedy at law for damages would be available to respondent.

The proceeding being equitable in nature the court should not be restricted in determining the issues of the entire controversy and thereby avoid further litigation in that regard.

[8] Appellant further complains that the judgment is erroneous in that it placed no limitation on respondents' right to accumulate their flow of water, and therefore illegally interferes with the water rights of others not parties to the action. We fail to find merit in this contention. The right to accumulate or pool the water must of necessity be limited to the capacity of the ditch. When the oral agreement was entered into the ditch had not been built, and the evidence fails to show its size or capacity. However, by way of illustration let us assume it will carry ten second feet. Respondents own a flowage of two second feet which, if used continuously, would amount to sixty second feet per month of thirty days. By pooling the accumulation they would be entitled to ten second feet for a period of six days in one month, and the remaining twenty-four days appellant would be entitled to the entire flowage, including the water belonging to the respondent. This operation is nothing more or less than rotating the water supply to the end that it will be applied most beneficially, thereby securing the maximum benefits from the increased supply of water. The other owners and users of water in the colony are members of appellant here, and as such are so represented in this action.

From an examination of the entire record we are satisfied that the conclusion reached by the trial court is proper and finds substantial evidentiary support therein. The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 855

BABIONE v. SANGUIENETTI et al.

Civ. 3039.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
March 11, 1942.

Appeal and error ⚷787

Where clerk's certificate showed that no request for transcript was ever filed, that no proceedings for a bill of exceptions were instituted or pending and that time to institute such proceedings had expired, and a letter from appellant's attorney stated that appellant had abandoned appeal, appeal was dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Warren Stockton, Judge.

Action by T. E. Babione against H. Sanguienetti and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. On defendants' motion to dismiss appeal.

Motion granted and appeal dismissed.

J. W. Heard, Jr., of Bakersfield, for appellant.

L. M. Linneman, of Dos Palos, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

The respondents have regularly moved to dismiss this appeal on the ground that neither the transcript or appellant's points and authorities have been filed within the required time or at all. It appears from the clerk's certificate that no request for the transcript was ever filed; that no proceedings for a bill of exceptions were instituted and none are now pending, and that the time to institute such proceedings has expired. A letter to the court from the attorney for the appellant states in effect that the appellant has abandoned the appeal.

The motion is granted and the appeal is dismissed.

50 Cal.App.2d 306

SALADA BEACH PUBLIC UTILITY DIST. v. ANDERSON.

Civ. 6633.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 3, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1942.

1. Limitation of actions 🔑43

The statute of limitations in a declaratory action does not begin to run against the right to maintain it until an actual controversy has accrued or occurred. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338, 340, 343, 345.

2. Limitation of actions 🔑43

In action by public utility district for declaratory judgment establishing rights and duties of parties in respect to sale of bonds of district to defendant when he was a director of district, in which action defendant filed cross-complaint for amount of bonds and interest, finding that action was barred by limitations was not warranted. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 6391; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 337, 338, 340, 343, 345.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑231(1)

A sale of bonds issued by public utility district to director of district was a "contract" within statute prohibiting any director or other officer of district from being interested in any contract awarded by board of directors, and sale was therefore void, but validity of bonds was not affected thereby. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 6391, § 47.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contract".

4. Action 🔑6

Where sale of bonds of public utility district to director of district was void under statute prohibiting director to have any interest in contract awarded by directors, district was entitled to retain proceeds from the sale and was not "estopped" from maintaining suit for judgment for declaratory relief for purpose of establishing rights and duties of parties in respect of the sale without first restoring or offering to restore benefits received from sale. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 6391, § 47.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑231(1)

The statute providing that no director of a public utility district shall be interested in any contract awarded by directors, covers all contracts, irrespective of their character, as against contention that it does not apply to district's sale of its bonds to a director because contract is one wherein directors have no discretion as to terms and price. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 6391, §§ 32, 47.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge Assigned.

Action by Salada Beach Public Utility District against M. O. Anderson for declaratory relief respecting the sale of the district's bonds, in which defendant cross-complained for judgment for the amount of bonds and interest due thereon. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with directions.

R. A. Rapsey, of San Bruno, for appellant.

Durward Herndon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This action was commenced to secure a judgment under declaratory relief, with the object and purpose of establishing the rights and duties of the parties in respect to the sale of bonds issued by appellant. Respondent filed a cross-complaint asking for judgment against appellant in the amount of the face value of the bonds, and interest due thereon. Findings were made in favor of respondent upon all issues, and judgment was entered against appellant in the amount prayed for in the cross-complaint. The appeal is from the judgment.

Appellant is a public utility district, organized under the provisions of chapter 560, Statutes of 1921, p. 906, Deering's Gen.Laws, 1937, Act 6391. To cover the cost of proposed improvements, it issued and sold to respondent, for par and accrued interest, bonds with a face value of $7,000. Respondent paid for the bonds in cash. At the time of the purchase, the latter was a director of said district. He was present at the directors' meetings which authorized such sale, but did not vote on the authorizing resolutions. The bonds matured at various times, commencing with 1936. At one of such meetings, held February 21, 1931, $5,000 worth of bonds were sold, while on a later date, June 31, 1931, $2,000 worth were sold.

The trial court found that the action was barred by the provisions of sections 337, 338, 340, 343 and 345 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No attempt is made by either party to point out the particular section relied upon. However, respondent does state his position, in support of the finding, as follows: "The statute of limitation begins to run against appellant from the date of the delivery of the bonds for a valuable consideration, since the purpose of the action is to cancel its obligation to pay the value of the bonds (Sechrist v. Rialto Irr. Dist., 129 Cal. 640, 62 P. 261.)"

[1, 2] The action here, however, is not to cancel the bonds, but to secure an adjudication relative to the validity of the sale to respondent. Furthermore, "The statute of limitations in a declaratory action does not begin to run against a right to maintain the same, until an actual controversy has accrued or occurred. * * *" Anderson on Declaratory Judgments, page 281, sec. 108. Respondent does not point out wherein the action is barred under the foregoing rule. It is fair to assume, however, that the controversy arose shortly before, or at the time of the filing of the complaint. In any event, the record does not show that the bar of any of the statutes can be interposed under the rule stated above. The finding has no support, and may be disregarded.

[3] It is next contended that as respondent was a director of appellant when he purchased the bonds, the sale to him was void under the following provisions of the chapter mentioned above: "No director or any other officer of the district shall in any manner be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract awarded or to be awarded by the board of directors, or in the profits to be derived therefrom; and for any violation of this provision such officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and such conviction shall work a forfeiture of his office, and he shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Appellant relies chiefly upon the case of Shasta County v. Moody, 90 Cal.App. 519, 265 P. 1032. There, Moody, while a supervisor, did printing and advertising for the county, and presented a claim therefor. The claim was paid, and the action was brought to recover the amount of such payment, upon the ground that the transaction was void, as contravening section 920 of the Political Code, which provides as follows: "Members of the legislature, state, county, city, and township officers, must not be interested in any contract made by them in their official capacity, or by any body or board of which they are members." The opinion holds that the contract was void. The language of the section in question here is very similar, except that it provides a penalty.

A sale is a contract. 55 C.J. 36, sec. 1. In Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 128, 57 P. 777, 780, 45 L.R.A. 420, 73 Am.St. Rep. 31, it is said: "Our statutes are general in prohibiting any officer from being interested in such contracts, and, if ever there was an occasion for its strict enforcement, it certainly exists in a case such as this, where the contractor is a member of the common council, whose duty it is to make such contracts on behalf of the city. He cannot be permitted to place himself in any position where his personal interest will conflict with the faithful performance of his duty as trustee, and it matters not how fair upon the face of it the contract may be the law will not suffer him to occupy a position so equivocal and so fraught with temptation."

In Stockton Plumbing & Supply Co. v. Wheeler, 68 Cal.App. 592, 229 P. 1020, 1024, this court observed: "The principle upon which public officers are denied the right to make contracts in their official capacity with themselves or to be or become interested in contracts thus made is evolved from the self-evident truth, as trite and impregnable as the law of gravitation, that no person can, at one and the same time, faithfully serve two masters representing diverse or inconsistent interests with respect to the service to be performed. The principle has always been one of the essential attributes of every rational system of positive law, even reaching to private contractual transactions, whereby there are created between individuals trust or fiduciary relations. The voice of divinity, speaking from within the sublimest incarnation known to all history, proclaimed and emphasized the maxim nearly two thousand years ago on occasions of infinite sacredness."

It is our opinion that, following the numerous adjudications of the question in this state, the sale comes within the scope of section 47 of the chapter mentioned, and that the transaction was therefore void. This, however, does not in any manner effect the validity of the bonds in question.

It is the contention of respondent that the sale was not such a contract as is contemplated by section 47. It is there provided that no director shall be interested in "any contract." We are unable to accept such a narrow construction. The tendency of the law is to widen, rather than circumscribe such statutes.

[4] It is also contended by respondent that appellant may not retain the benefits received, and that the proceeds from the sale were expended for lawful purposes. The answer to such contention is found in the Moody case [90 Cal.App. 519, 265 P. 1034] where numerous authorities are cited. It is there said: "Appellant strenuously contends that the county is estopped from maintaining this action without first restoring, or offering to restore, to him the benefits received from the job work, printing, advertising, etc. There is no merit in this contention. The contracts being void under the express provisions of the statute, and also being against public policy, there is no ground for any equitable considerations, presumptions or estoppels."

[5] In this connection respondent further contends that the contract was one where the directors had no discretion as to terms and price, and that the rule in the Moody case could not be reasonably applicable to such a situation. Section 32 of the chapter gives the directors the right to fix the rate of interest upon the bonds. This is at least one instance in which they may exercise a measure of discretion. We believe, however, that the section should be construed to cover all contracts irrespective of their character. The legislature has made no exceptions.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to make its findings and enter judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and HELD, Justice pro tem., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 254

WEADON et al. v. SHAHEN et al.

Civ. 2965.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Feb. 27, 1942.

1. Judgment 🔑222

A judgment from which it could be determined that it was rendered for $1,213.76, principal, $233.93, accrued interest, and $10 costs, was not void because it was carelessly drawn, and contained statement that it was for total sum of $1,213.76 with interest from date of judgment, and the latter statement could be disregarded as "surplusage".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Surplusage".

2. Abatement and revival 🔑45

An action by superintendent of banks to recover an indebtedness owed to a bank which had been taken over by the superintendent did not abate by reason of termination of the office of the superintendent and could be continued by his successor in the name of the original superintendent, since the office of superintendent is a continuing state office without regard to individual who may fill it, and the superintendent as an individual had no interest in the action. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 385, 674.

3. Judgment 🔑244

Where action was brought by superintendent of banks on an indebtedness owed to a bank which had been taken over by the superintendent, the fact that judgment was rendered and recorded in the name of the superintendent, although at time judgment was rendered the superintendent had been succeeded by another, did not render the abstract of judgment void as against subsequent purchasers of the judgment debtor's land, since the judgment was an incident of the office of the superintendent of banks and not of the individual superintendent. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 385, 674.

4. Judgment 🔑768(1)

The fact that abstract of judgment which was recorded in county recorder's office contained abbreviations which were in common use and easily understandable did not render the abstract void as against subsequent purchasers of judgment debtors' land.

5. Judgment 🔑768(1)

The omission of dollar marks before figures, showing amount of judgment in abstract of the judgment which was recorded in county recorder's office, did not render the abstract void as against subsequent purchasers of judgment debtors' land.

6. Banks and banking 🔑63½

The fact that superior court, on day of hearing of petition to confirm sale of remaining assets of bank which had been taken over by superintendent of banks, permitted amendment of petition by inserting a judgment among the listed assets, and required no new notice to be given, did not render entire proceeding void, and purchaser of assets could enforce lien of another judgment which was originally included among the assets sold, in absence of anything indicating fraud in the sale, especially since order confirming sale had become final long before the attack on the sale was made. St.1909, p. 87.

7. Execution 🔑172(4)

Testimony of special deputy superintendent of banks that he regarded a certain judgment listed among assets of bank which were sold by superintendent of banks to be of no value and so informed the purchaser could not negative purchaser's testimony that he regarded the judgment of value and included his estimate of such value in total price paid by him, and therefore execution sale of land owned by judgment debtors at time judgment was rendered could not be restrained on ground that no "consideration" was paid for the judgment.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Consideration".

8. Action 🔑63

The doctrine of "laches" is based on knowledge of facts and acquiescence in them to the damage of the other party.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

9. Execution 🔑75

Where judgment in favor of superintendent of banks on an indebtedness of bank which had been taken over by superintendent was entered September 18, 1936, and thereafter investigation was made to discover any assets belonging to judgment debtors, but the superintendent did not learn that debtors owned certain lands, or that it was subsequently sold to parties who improved it, purchaser of remaining assets of the bank could not be restrained from selling the land under execution which was issued October 11, 1940, on ground that superintendent and purchaser were guilty of "laches".

10. Estoppel 🔑52

Generally, in order for doctrine of "estoppel" to apply, the party estopped must be apprised of facts and must intend that his conduct shall be acted on, or so act that party asserting estoppel had right to believe it was so intended, and the party asserting estoppel must be ignorant of the true state of facts, and must rely on the conduct to his injury.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estoppel".

11. Estoppel 🔑70(3)

Where purchaser of remaining assets of bank which had been taken over by superintendent of banks did not know that a judgment included among assets constituted a lien on land and did not know that the land was subsequently sold, and that improvements had been placed thereon, the purchaser was not "estopped" from enforcing his judgment by execution sale of the land, since knowledge is an essential element of "equitable estoppel" and without knowledge there could be no such estoppel.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Equitable Estoppel" and "Estop".

12. Execution 🔑171(1)

Where land which was subject to a judgment lien was sold by judgment debtors and was thereafter improved, a subsequent owner of the judgment could not be restrained from selling the land under execution because he refused an offer to accept admitted value of land without the improvements, on ground that he had refused an offer to do equity.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank A. Leonard, Judge.

Action by Claude T. Weadon and others against Elias Shahen and others, to restrain sale of plaintiffs' property under execution issued on judgment rendered in a certain action. From judgment restraining the sale, the defendants appeal, and plaintiffs move to dismiss the appeal.

Motion to dismiss denied, and judgment reversed.

John A. Hadaller, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Guthrie & Curtis, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment restraining the sale of plaintiffs' property under an execution issued on a judgment rendered in the case of Edward Rainey, Superintendent of Banks of the State of California v. Clarence C. McIntosh and Metta McIntosh. Plaintiffs have moved to dismiss this appeal. Defendant Shay is sued in his official capacity as Sheriff of San Bernardino County. Hereafter we will refer to Elias Shahen as the defendant.

Prior to September 17, 1936, Clarence C. McIntosh and Metta McIntosh were indebted to the San Bernardino County Savings Bank which had been taken over by Edward Rainey, then the Superintendent of Banks of the State of California. In his official capacity Rainey brought suit against Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh and judgment was recovered against them. The judgment was dated September 17, 1936, and was filed and entered the following day. Friend W. Richardson had succeeded to the office of Superintendent of Banks but was not substituted as plaintiff in the action. The important part of that judgment reads as follows: "It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that Plaintiff recover of and from Defendants the sum of Twelve Hundred Thirteen and 76 ——— dollars ($1213.76), together with the sum of $233.93 interest from April 16, 1934, to date hereof; together with attorney's fees in the sum of xxxx, total of $1213.76, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from date hereof until paid, and with plaintiff costs and disbursements amounting to the sum of $10.00."

On September 22, 1936, Friend W. Richardson, as Superintendent of Banks, caused the following abstract of judgment to be recorded in the office of the County Recorder of San Bernardino County:

"In the Superior Court of the State of California. In and for the County of San Bernardino. Edward Rainey, Superintendent of Banks of the State of California, Plaintiff, -vs- Clarence C. McIntosh and Metta McIntosh, Defendants. No. 37045. Date of Entry of Judgment: September 18th, 1936. Judgment Debtors: McIntosh, Clarence C., McIntosh, Metta. Judgment Creditors: Edward Rainey, Supt. of Banks, etc. Amount of Judgment: Judg. 1213.76. Int. 233.93. Costs. 10.00. Where entered in Judgment Book: Vol. 70. Page 287."

Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh owned the two lots in question, situated in the mountains north of San Bernardino. By deed, dated September 6, 1938, and recorded September 10, 1938, they conveyed these lots to Elienor H. Braniger. She paid $250 for them but obtained no certificate of title.

On September 6, 1938, Mrs. Braniger agreed to sell the lots to Claude Weadon and Raymond L. Cannon for $250. When the purchasers had paid the full purchase price Mrs. Braniger conveyed one of the lots to Claude T. Weadon and Madge Weadon, his wife, and the other to Raymond L. Cannon and Opal Lee Cannon, his wife. Both deeds were recorded on March 31, 1939. No search of title to the lots was made and it is admitted that neither Mrs. Braniger nor her grantees had any actual notice or knowledge of the judgment against Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh nor of the recorded abstract of that judgment.

In October, 1938, Mr. and Mrs. Weadon commenced the construction of a mountain cabin on their lot. This cabin was completed about June 1, 1940, at a cost of about $2,300. $300 of this amount was expended after January 8, 1940.

In April, 1939, Mr. and Mrs. Cannon commenced the construction of a mountain cabin on their lot which they completed about October 1, 1940, at a cost of about $2,300, $400 being expended after January 8, 1940.

During the last of December, 1939, E. W. Wilson, who had succeeded to the office of Superintendent of Banks, filed his petition in the Superior Court of San Bernardino County for an order authorizing him to sell the remaining assets of the San Bernardino County Savings Bank to Elvin E. Webb who had bid $12,600 for them. The petition was set for hearing for January 8, 1940, and notice was ordered to be given by the posting of a copy of the court's order for five days.

A list of the assets to be sold was attached to the petition. When the matter came on for hearing it was discovered that one judgment had been omitted. By leave of court there was added to the list, under the heading "Judgments," "Claud A. Adams 3,102.39 (now on appeal re execution after 5 years 4 Civ. No. 2465)." Included among the judgments originally listed was "5920—C. C. McIntosh 1,213.76."

Elias Shehan, defendant here, bid $21,500 for the assets which bid was accepted and the sale confirmed, and the assets, including the Adams judgment were subsequently assigned to him.

A special deputy superintendent of banks, in charge of the liquidation of the San Bernardino County Savings Bank, gave the following testimony about a conversation with Shahen concerning the value of the judgments: "We discussed the value of every asset that we had for sale, including the sale of these judgments, or the value of these judgments, and I told him I did not think the value of the judgments —they had no value, there was no value to them. I didn't know as they had. It seems that they do, but I told him they did not."

On the other hand, Shahen testified that in estimating the value of the assets to be sold for the purpose of determining the amount of his bid, he placed an estimated value of between seventy-five and eighty per cent of their unpaid balances on the secured notes, and between fifty and sixty per cent on the unsecured notes and judgments.

A former deputy superintendent of banks produced a copy of a letter to the depositors in the San Bernardino County Savings Bank in which the assets of the defunct bank were listed and no value was placed on the judgments. There is nothing in the record to suggest that Shahen had any knowledge of this letter.

The trial court found that the abstract of judgment did not comply with the provisions of section 674 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that, therefore, there was no lien created on any property belonging to Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh.

Counsel for plaintiffs seek to support this finding upon two grounds: (1) That the judgment is too uncertain to be intelligible; and (2) that the abstract of judgment was not in due form in that (a) Rainey was not Superintendent of Banks when the judgment was recovered, (b) that unintelligible abbreviations were used in it, and (c) that there are no dollar signs before the figures there appearing.

[1] It must be admitted that the judgment was most carelessly drawn. However, we experience no difficulty in gathering from it that judgment was rendered for $1213.76, principal, $233.93, accrued interest, and $10 costs. See, Snodgrass v. Hand, 220 Cal. 446, 31 P.2d 198. The words and figures "total of $1213.76, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from date hereof until paid," are surplusage and may be disregarded.

[2, 3] The argument that the abstract of judgment is void because Edward Rainey had ceased to be Superintendent of Banks and had been succeeded by Friend W. Richardson at the time the judgment was rendered and the abstract recorded lacks merit. The office of Superintendent of Banks is a continuing state office without regard to the individual who may fill it. The Superintendent of Banks, as an individual divorced from his office, had no interest in the action. The judgment, therefore, was an incident of the office and not of the individual. The action was brought to perform a duty pertaining to the office which was especially enjoined by statute. Such an action does not abate by reason of the termination of the term of office of the incumbent (1 Am.Jur. 49) and we can see no good reason why it may not be continued by the successor in the name of his predecessor in office. Sec. 385, Code Civ.Proc. The abstract of judgment certainly conveyed the information to any one who might inquire that the Superintendent of Banks of the State of California had secured a money judgment against Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh.

There is nothing in Huff v. Sweetser, 8 Cal.App. 689, 97 P. 705, to the contrary.

This case involved the lien of a judgment rendered against Grace B. M. Emerson after she had married and when her true name was Grace B. M. Odell and under which name she had sold the property upon which the lien of the judgment was claimed. The court was of the opinion that no lien was created because a search of the record by the purchaser would not have disclosed any judgment rendered against his grantor, Mrs. Odell, which was her correct name when he purchased the property and when the judgment was obtained against her in the name of Emerson. We have no such situation here. A search of the record would have disclosed the judgment against Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh.

[4] We need not consider the argument made as to each of the abbreviations used in the abstract of judgment. They are all in common use, are easily understandable, and do not render the instrument void. See, 6 Cal.Jur. 289, and cases cited; Hanford Mercantile Store v. Sowlveere, 11 Cal.App. 261, 104 P. 708.

[5] We cannot regard the omission of the dollar marks before the figures in the abstract of judgment important. Those figures follow the words "Amount of Judgment." Such judgments for which liens may be secured are rendered for dollars and cents. See, Dyke v. Bank of Orange, 90 Cal. 397, 27 P. 304.

We therefore must conclude that the recording of the abstract of judgment created a valid lien on the real property in San Bernardino County owned by Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh.

The trial court found that on the day of the hearing of the petition to confirm the sale of assets, the superior court permitted the amendment of the petition by the insertion of the judgment against Claud A. Adams among the listed assets and required no new notice to be given. Plaintiffs argue that as no notice of the hearing of the petition, as amended, was given, the entire proceeding is void and that Shahen acquired no title to any of the property described therein. It cannot be questioned that if the Adams judgment had not been written into the petition on the day of the hearing the notice given was entirely proper. Adams is not contesting the validity of the sale of the judgment against him.

We are cited to no decisions under the Bank Act, St.1909, p. 87, on this problem. However, there might be an analogy between this class of sales and sales under execution.

The case of Mitchell v. Alpha Hardware & Supply Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 52, 45 P.2d 442, 444, involved the legality of a sale under execution where the notice of sale described part of the property sold as being in the wrong county. In upholding the validity of the sale the court said: "We find no allegation in the complaint and no testimony in the record indicating any fraud in the sale conducted by the sheriff, nor do we find anything in the record indicating that the amount of the bid was not adequate, or that the properties were not sold for all that they were reasonably worth. Neither is there anything in the complaint or in the record indicating that any errors made by the sheriff in his notice of sale misled any purchasers, or prevented a fair and honest sale of the properties. The notice indicating the properties to be sold referred to the judgment, and in some part of the notice mentioned Nevada instead of Sierra county. There being nothing in the record and nothing in the complaint indicating that the notice was misleading, prejudicial, or injurious, we think the rule set forth in the case of Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 P. 820, 822, applicable, to wit: 'A failure to give the proper notice of a sale of real estate under execution does not invalidate the sale'."

[6] As there is nothing before us to indicate fraud or wrong in the sale, other than, perhaps, the error in allowing the amendment to the petition, the rule announced in the Mitchell case should be applied here. Further, the order confirming the sale has long since become final.

The trial court found "that said judgment was appraised at no value by said Superintendent of Banks, and was represented to said defendant, Elias Shahen, to be of no value, and was considered to be of no value by said defendant, Elias Shahen, at the time he purchased the same; that said defendant, Elias Shahen, paid no consideration for said judgment * * *."

[7] We can find no evidence in the record supporting the important part of this finding. Evidence by the special deputy superintendent of banks that he regarded the McIntosh judgment to be of no value and so informed Shahen cannot negative Shahen's testimony that he regarded the judgments of value and included his estimates of those values in the total price bid by him. The assets were sold as a unit and certainly the price of $21,500 paid for them is a substantial consideration. In view of Shahen's testimony a portion of that sum must be held to have been paid for the McIntosh judgment.

The trial court found that the conduct of Shahen and the Superintendent of Banks constituted laches which prevented Shahen from enforcing his lien. The argument on this question points out the lapse of time between September 18, 1936, the date of filing and entering the McIntosh judgment, and October 11, 1940, when execution on that judgment was issued. Plaintiffs further point to the fact that during this time they spent money in purchasing the lots and erecting their cabins. Particular stress is laid on the admonition of the law to the Superintendent of Banks to promptly collect the assets of a bank which he takes over.

[8] The doctrine of laches is based on knowledge of the facts and an acquiescence in them to the damage of the other party. Verdugo Canon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 152 Cal. 655, 93 P. 1021; Garstang v. Skinner, 165 Cal. 721, 134 P. 329; 10 Cal.Jur. 528, et seq., and cases cited.

[9] The evidence is undisputed that the deputies superintendent of banks, or at least one of them, caused an investigation to be made after September 18, 1936, to discover any assets that might belong to Mr. or Mrs. McIntosh; that some heavily encumbered property was found in Los Angeles County but that none was discovered in San Bernardino County; that he, or they, did not know that Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh owned the lots in question and did not know of the sales to Mrs. Braniger or to the plaintiffs; that they did not know that the plaintiffs had improved the properties. With this undisputed evidence in the record they cannot be held guilty of laches as the important element of knowledge is lacking so that no inference of acquiescence can be drawn.

Shahen testified he first learned in September, 1940, that Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh had formerly owned the lots in question; that prior to that time he knew nothing of those lots nor of the McIntosh ownership of them nor that plaintiffs had any interest in them or had improved them. This evidence is undisputed. There is an entire lack of anything pointing to knowledge or acquiescence upon which laches must be based.

The trial court found that Shahen was estopped to enforce his judgment by execution sale.

[10] The necessary elements of estoppel are set forth in 10 Cal.Jur. 627, as follows: "In general, four things are essential to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel: first, the party to be estopped must be apprised of the facts; second, he must intend that his conduct shall be acted upon, or must so act that the party asserting the estoppel had a right to believe it was so intended; third, the other party must be ignorant of the true state of facts; and fourth, he must rely upon the conduct to his injury."

[11] We have already summarized Shahen's testimony concerning his lack of knowledge of the lots in question, of their ownership, and of the improvements placed upon them by plaintiffs. Knowledge is an essential element of equitable estoppel and without knowledge there can be no such estoppel.

[12] Finally, the trial court found that as plaintiffs had offered to do equity, and as their offer had been refused, defendant should be enjoined from proceeding with his execution sale. The offer referred to is an offer made by plaintiffs in open court to pay defendant $300, which was then the admitted value of the two lots without the improvements. In arguing this question counsel for plaintiffs makes frequent, if veiled, reference to that famous trial of fiction where Portia starred.

No matter how seriously the plaintiffs may expect sympathy because of the predicament in which they find themselves, we must find a lawful reason to support the judgment if it is to be affirmed. This we cannot do. We cannot, as Portia did, find a convenient statutory penalty to defeat the claim against them. The question of the power of a court of equity to permit plaintiffs to remove their improvements before the sale, if a sale may still be made, is not now involved and need not be considered.

The motion to dismiss is denied. The judgment is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 413

ARMER v. DORTON et al.

Civ. 2674.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 11, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Damages ⇨159(5)
Pleading ⇨126

Where complaint alleged that plaintiff was deprived of the use of his automobile for 21 days and that the reasonable value of the use was $105, denial contained in the answer, which merely stated that defendants denied each of the allegations, and did not deny that reasonable value of use of automobile was a lesser sum, constituted a "negative pregnant" so far as value of the loss of use was concerned, and was an "admission" that reasonable value of the loss of use was any sum less than $105, and authorized judgment for $104 for loss of the automobile without proof of value of such loss.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Admission" and "Negative Pregnant".

2. Automobiles ⇨244(35, 37)

Evidence sustained judgment against truck driver and owner of truck, for damage to plaintiff's automobile which was parked along curb and was struck by the truck after it collided with another vehicle, on ground that truck driver was negligent in exceeding speed limit in crossing intersection at which view was obstructed, and that such negligence proximately contributed to the collision which resulted in the striking of the plaintiff's automobile. Vehicle Code, § 511, St.1935, p. 177.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1012(1)

It was the function of the trial court as trier of facts to weigh the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Warren Stockton, Judge.

Action by Arvel B. Armer against R. H. Dorton and others for damage to automobile and loss of use thereof, as a result of striking of automobile by a truck which had come in contact with the named defendant's vehicle. From an adverse judgment, defendant T. F. Knafla and another appeal.

Judgment modified and as modified affirmed.

Brittan & Mack, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Harvey, Johnston & Baker, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

In an action by respondent against defendant Dorton and defendants and appellants Knafla and Mohawk Petroleum Corporation, respondent recovered judgment against all three defendants for damages to his automobile and for the loss of the use thereof. Appellants appeal from such judgment.

Truxton Avenue, in Bakersfield, runs east and west and contains in the center a parkway protected by a cement curb. The parkway is 25 feet 6 inches wide and the pavement on each side is 28 feet 8 inches wide. B Street runs north and south and is 54 feet 10 inches wide. The parkway on Truxton Avenue does not extend to the extended curb line of B Street but stops 14 feet from it on each side. The parkway is grown up with trees and shrubs and the intersection is a so-called "blind" intersection.

According to the evidence, appellant Knafla was operating the truck of appellant Mohawk Petroleum Corporation easterly along Truxton Avenue, and defendant Dorton was operating his automobile in a westerly direction on said avenue. Respondent's automobile was parked at the south curb of Truxton Avenue, close to the corner of B Street and in front of Mercy Hospital. As appellant Knafla was proceeding across the intersection of B Street and Truxton Avenue, the front of defendant Dorton's automobile came in contact with the right rear side of the truck, just ahead of the rear wheels. As a result of the impact the driveshaft and brake line controlling the hydraulic brakes on the truck broke and the rear of the truck swung around to the south in an arc and before it came to rest it struck the parked automobile of respondent, causing damage to it.

The trial court found that the damage to respondent's automobile was caused by the combined and concurring negligence of defendant Dorton and appellant Knafla, and awarded respondent judgment against all three defendants for $312.58 damages and $105 for loss of the use of the automobile.

Appellants contend that there is no evidence supporting the judgment in any sum for the loss of the use of respondent's automobile. It must be conceded that the only evidence in the record on this point, not stricken out by the trial court, was that respondent had to travel 39 miles to and from work each day, that he was deprived of his automobile for six weeks while it was being repaired, that he borrowed another automobile to use, and that he estimated that the reasonable cost per mile of operating his automobile was five cents. Such evidence is, of course, insufficient to show the value of the loss of use of the automobile.

[1] However, as respondent points out, the complaint alleged that respondent was deprived of the use of his car for 21 days and that the reasonable value of such use was $105, and the only denial in appellants' answer is a denial of each of said allegations, without any denial that the reasonable value of the use was a lesser sum. Respondents contend that this constitutes an admission of a loss in any sum less than $105, and that no proof is required. Under the authorities it must be held that a denial in such form is a negative pregnant, so far as the value of the loss of use is concerned, and that appellants' answer must be taken as an admission that the reasonable value of the loss of use was any sum less than $105. In the case of Preston v. Central California, etc., Irr. Dist., 11 Cal.App. 190, 104 P. 462, 465, the court said:

"The answer * * * is as follows: 'Said defendant denies that the defendant became justly or otherwise indebted to B. E. Hooper for a balance on account for labor and services, or labor or services, rendered said defendant by said B. E. Hooper between the 1st day of March, 1907, and the 1st day of September, 1907, or any other time, in the sum of $413.56.'

"It is at once apparent that the foregoing denial involves a negative pregnant, the denial being in the precise sum alleged in that count of the complaint, and therefore an admission of an indebtedness of any lesser amount. Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 638; Towdy v. Ellis, 22 Cal. 650; Estee's Pleadings, § 3174."

In Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Most, 39 Cal.App.2d 634 at page 640, 103 P.2d 1013, at page 1017, where the answer of defendant merely denied that the specific amount alleged in plaintiff's complaint to be due was due, the court said: "Under proper rules of pleading the allegations might be construed as an admission that all but a single dollar of the amount claimed due was actually due and payable. The allegation of the answer, containing as it does a negative pregnant, was evasive and wholly insufficient to raise the issue of payment. Blankman et al. v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 638, 639, 645; Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 622, 624; Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 663, 48 P. 800; Provident Gold Min. Co. v. Haynes, 173 Cal. 44, 48, 159 P. 155; Janeway & Carpender v. Long Beach [Paper & Paint] Co., 190 Cal. 150, 153, 211 P. 6; Motor Investment Co. v. Breslauer, 64 Cal.App. 230, 240, 221 P. 700."

[2, 3] Appellant next contends that there is no evidence that appellant Knafla was negligent. We find no merit to this contention. Section 511 of the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 177, provides that the prima facie speed limit is 15 miles per hour when traversing such an intersection, "if during the last one hundred feet of his approach to such intersection the driver does not have a clear and unobstructed view of such intersection and of any traffic upon all of the highways entering such intersection for a distance of 100 feet along all such highways." It is admitted by all parties that this was a so-called "blind" intersection. There was evidence that appellant Knafla was operating the truck at the rate of 30 miles an hour when he entered the intersection and it is admitted that after his brakes were applied the front of his truck moved forward just a few feet but due to the fact that the driveshaft and brake line broke the rear end of the truck swung to the right in an arc until it was farther to the east than the front of the truck, striking and damaging respondent's automobile, from which the court might reasonably infer that the truck must have been traveling at a speed of more than 15 miles per hour. It is perhaps true that defendant Dorton, in making a left turn into the south half of the intersection, was more negligent than appellant Knafla, but the trial court was certainly justified in holding that the excessive speed at which appellant Knafla was traveling proximately contributed to the collision which resulted in the rear of the truck striking respondent's automobile, and that the concurring negligence of defendant Dorton and appellant Knafla combined to make them both liable. It is the function of the trial court to weigh the evidence and the record abundantly sustains the judgment in this case.

The judgment is modified by reducing it to the sum of $416.58, and as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. Respondent is to recover his costs on appeal.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concur.

50 Cal.App.2d 344

PRENTICE v. BERTKEN et al.

Civ. 2657.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 5, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 30, 1942.

1. Malicious prosecution 🔑42

A justice of the peace, district attorney, and deputy district attorney were "judicial and quasi-judicial officers" so as to be exempt from civil liability for malicious prosecution, even though there may have been malicious or corrupt conduct in exercise of jurisdiction.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Officer" and "Quasi-Judicial Officer".

2. Malicious prosecution 🔑42

Highway patrol officer who swore to complaint against plaintiff for allegedly operating an overloaded truck could not be considered either a "judicial officer" or a "quasi-judicial officer" so as to be exempt from civil liability for malicious prosecution even though there might have been malicious or corrupt conduct. Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93.

3. Malicious prosecution 🔑42

Public policy does not require that doctrine of immunity be extended so far as to exempt from civil liability a peace officer who maliciously and without cause initiates a prosecution against a citizen.

4. Appeal and error 🔑917(1)

In passing upon question whether demurrer was properly sustained, court must accept as true the allegations of the complaint.

5. Malicious prosecution 🔑51

In action for malicious prosecution, it must be alleged that prosecution is at an end either by alleging that defendant was acquitted of the charge or by alleging facts showing legal termination of the prosecution complained of in favor of defendant prior to commencement of the action.

6. Malicious prosecution 🔑51

In malicious prosecution action, allegation that defendant attempted to coerce plaintiff to be arraigned on certain charges but that plaintiff refused to be arraigned, and that thereupon and prior to commencement of malicious prosecution action, all proceedings relating to and taken upon the second complaint legally ceased and terminated favorably to plaintiff, did not allege facts showing that prosecution had terminated in favor of plaintiff, since the refusal to be arraigned does not terminate criminal proceeding and mere allegation that all proceedings had legally ceased and terminated was but a "conclusion".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Conclusion".

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; William L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Burr H. Prentice against G. M. Bertken and others for damages for malicious prosecution. From a judgment of dismissal entered after defendant's general demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint had been sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Burr H. Prentice in pro. per., for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thomas Scott, Dist. Atty., and John B. Young, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Appellant appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered after respondents' general demurrer to appellant's amended complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

Briefly summarized, the amended complaint alleged: that plaintiff was doing business under the fictitious name of "Smileage Company"; that defendant Anderson was the Justice of the Peace of the Fourth Township in Kern County; that defendants Scott and Palmer were, respectively, District Attorney and Deputy District Attorney of Kern County; that defendant Bertken was a California Highway Patrol Officer; that on October 5, 1937, said defendants "entered into a collusion and conspiracy, and in furtherance thereof" filed in said justice's court a complaint against appellant and one T. R. Driskell, alleging falsely that they had violated the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93, by operating an overloaded truck and trailer on the highway; that said case was heard in said justice's court on November 3, 1939; that appellant was found guilty; that an appeal was taken to the superior court and said conviction was reversed and a new trial ordered in the superior court; that on April 26, 1940, said charge was dismissed in the superior court; that on December 22, 1939, said defendants "further conspired and colluded together, and in furtherance thereof did falsely, maliciously and fraudulently and without probable cause therefor," cause to be filed a second criminal complaint wherein appellant, designated as the "Smileage Company," was charged with the same offense as was charged in the first complaint; that defendants "falsely, fraudulently, maliciously and without probable cause" caused a summons to be issued in which defendant Smileage Company was ordered to appear in said justice's court, which summons was served on appellant, and that upon appellant appearing in said court, said defendants "in furtherance of said unlawful conspiracy, falsely, fraudulently, maliciously and without probable cause therefor, unlawfully attempted to coerce appellant to be arraigned" on said charge, but appellant refused to be arraigned and prior to the commencement of this action all proceedings upon said second complaint legally ceased and terminated favorably to appellant; that respondents knew that the justice's court had no jurisdiction to proceed on said second charge; and that respondents did all of these things "with the deliberate design and intent to institute and maintain false and fraudulent charges against plaintiff * * * maliciously and without probable cause. * * *"

It will be noted that respondents are respectively justice of the peace, district attorney, deputy district attorney and highway patrol officer. The principal question discussed in the briefs is whether or not the respondent public officials are liable in a civil action for damages alleged to have been sustained through the prosecution of a criminal action with malice and without probable cause.

The case of Cooke v. Bangs, C.C., 31 F. 640, was a case where a justice of the peace committed a person for contempt, and on such person being liberated on habeas corpus, recommitted him on a fresh warrant for the same offense. It was held that the justice of the peace was not amenable to a civil action for false and malicious imprisonment although his action in making the second commitment was erroneous, and although it was alleged that he acted maliciously. In an opinion written by Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, sitting as a circuit justice, the court said, at page 642 of 31 F.: "With respect to all judicial officers,—justices of the peace, as well as judges of the higher courts,—the settled law of the supreme court of the United States, and I think the plain intimation of the supreme court of this state, is that, where they act within their jurisdiction, they are not amenable to any civil action for damages. No matter what their motives may be, they cannot be inquired into."

In Pearson v. Reed, 6 Cal.App.2d 277, at page 287, 44 P.2d 592, at page 597, the court, in reversing three separate judgments against the city prosecutor of Los Angeles, said: "The office of public prosecutor is one which must be administered with courage and independence. Yet how can this be if the prosecutor is made subject to suit by those whom he accuses and fails to convict? To allow this would open the way for unlimited harassment and embarrassment of the most conscientious officials by those who would profit thereby. There would be involved in every case the possible consequences of a failure to obtain a conviction. There would always be a question of possible civil action in case the prosecutor saw fit to move dismissal of the case. Not only would the prosecutor himself be subjected to groundless suits, but his deputies likewise would be accused. The apprehension of such consequences would tend toward great uneasiness and toward weakening the fearless and impartial policy which should characterize the administration of this office. The work of the prosecutor would thus be impeded, and we would have moved away from the desired objective of stricter and fairer law enforcement. We are well aware of the fact that in thus shielding the public prosecutor against actions of this sort the rule may work hardship and injustice in individual cases. But there is no middle ground to be occupied in the matter; either all such suits are to be tolerated or none. We are confronted with the not unusual situation that calls for the subordination of the rights of the few to the interests of the whole body of the public. The doctrine of immunity is not for the benefit of the few who might otherwise be compelled to respond in damages. It is for the benefit of all to whom it applies, that they may be free to act in the exercise of honest judgment, uninfluenced by fear of consequences personal to themselves. This again is not for their personal advantage or benefit. It is only that they may be enabled to render a better public service."

In White v. Brinkman, 23 Cal.App.2d 307, at page 313, 73 P.2d 254, at page 257, the court said: "District attorneys and public prosecutors are vested with certain quasi judicial powers; and in the official exercise of those powers they enjoy civil immunity as fully as judges themselves, even though they act with evil motives or corruptly. Says the court in Smith v. Parman, 101 Kan. 115, 116, 165 P. 663, L.R.A. 1917F, 698: 'The public prosecutor, in deciding whether a particular prosecution shall be instituted or followed up performs much the same function as a grand jury. If, while he has a question of that kind under advisement, he is charged with notice that he may have to defend an action for malicious prosecution in case of a failure to convict, his course may be influenced by that consideration, to the disadvantage of the public. * * * We think the reason for granting immunity to judges and grand jurors applies with practically equal force to a public prosecutor in his relations to actions to punish infractions of the law. There is no great danger that abuse of power will be fostered by this exemption from civil liability, for the prosecutor is at all times under the wholesome restraint imposed by the risk of being called to account criminally for official misconduct * * * or of being ousted from office on that account.' In the same strain the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in Re Bentine, 181 Wis. 579, 587, 196 N.W. 213, 214, 216, quoted from Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344, 354, the following passage: 'A public prosecutor is a quasi judicial officer, retained by the public for the prosecution of persons accused of crime, in the exercise of a sound discretion to distinguish between the guilty and the innocent, between the certainly and the doubtfully guilty.'"

And again at page 317 of 23 Cal.App.2d, at page 259 of 73 P.2d: "The principle is one so well established as to have become elementary; and it affords protection in general to officers and public servants exercising judgment and discretion in the discharge of their duties, howsoever they may be called. Among those in whose behalf the rule has been successfully invoked have been members of a board of health, county supervisors, food inspectors, registrars of voters, election inspectors, and other officers and commissioners charged with duties of various kinds involving judgment and discretion." See, also, Cooper v. O'Connor, 69 App.D.C. 100, 99 F.2d 135, 118 A.L.R. 1440.

[1, 2] It seems clear from the authorities that the respondents Anderson, Scott and Palmer come within the rule exempting judicial and quasi-judicial officers from civil liability even though there may be malicious or corrupt conduct in the exercise of jurisdiction. However, we believe that the respondent Bertken, the highway patrol officer who swore to the complaint, cannot be considered either a judicial or a quasi-judicial officer, and that it would be a dangerous doctrine to extend the rule exempting public officials or officers from civil liability further than it has already been extended.

As was said in the case of Cooper v. O'Connor, supra, at page 141 of 99 F.2d: "In several of the cases in which the rule of immunity has been applied the rationalization used has been that the particular defendant was a judicial officer, or was engaged in a judicial determination, or was so closely associated with the judicial process as to make necessary his protection from harassment in order to protect the judicial process. It must be admitted that this rationalization does not apply with equal force to the appellees, other than Rover and Goldstein. Even police, detectives and investigators—the group into which Simon falls—are generally not trained for participation in judicial determinations; and are sometimes apt to become oppressive in administration of their duties, unless kept under close restraint by prosecutors and judges. In the case of the other appellees, it can be persuasively argued that even though their assistance was necessary for successful prosecution, it was possible for the Attorney General or the United States District Attorney to appoint them special assistants for the purpose, as was done in the case of Yaselli v. Goff, supra [2 Cir., 12 F.2d 396, 56 A.L.R. 1239]; thus avoiding an undue extension of a rule which may come to be a dangerous limitation upon the rights of a free people."

Some confusion has arisen as to just how far immunity should be extended, and it has been held to apply to such public officials as members of a board of health, registrars of voters, election commissioners, building inspectors and other officers and commissioners charged with duties of various kinds involving judgment and discretion. These cases have sought to show that the particular officer or officers involved were performing quasi-judicial functions. No case has been cited, and we have been unable to discover any, in which a police or peace officer was held to be exempt from civil liability in an action for malicious prosecution, where he has acted maliciously and without probable cause.

[3, 4] While it may be considered as settled public policy that judicial and quasi-judicial officers acting within the scope of their jurisdiction are exempted from liability for malicious prosecution, even though they have acted without probable cause and with malice, it seems to us that courts have already extended the rule to a dangerous extent. We do not believe that public policy requires that the doctrine of immunity be extended so far as to exempt from civil liability a peace officer who maliciously and without cause initiates a prosecution against a citizen. The briefest reflection will lead one to conclude that to do so might be dangerous to the rights of a free people and lead to great oppression and injustice. In the instant case we are, of course, only passing upon the question as to whether or not the demurrer was properly sustained and must necessarily accept as true the allegations of the complaint.

[5] In actions for malicious prosecution it must be alleged that the prosecution is at an end either by alleging that defendant was acquitted of the charge or by alleging facts showing the legal termination of the prosecution complained of in favor of defendant prior to the commencement of the action. Holliday v. Holliday, 123 Cal. 26, 55 P. 703; Carpenter v. Nutter, 127 Cal. 61, 59 P. 301; Plum v. Becket, 120 Cal.App. 507, 7 P.2d 1111; Wilson v. Troy, 19 Cal.App.2d 156, 64 P.2d 1141.

[6] We believe that the amended complaint fails to allege facts showing that the prosecution in question terminated in favor of appellant. Paragraph VIII sets forth, in substance, that defendants attempted to coerce plaintiff to be arraigned on said charges but that plaintiff refused to be arraigned; "and that thereupon, and prior to the commencement of this action, all proceedings relating to and taken upon said second complaint legally ceased and terminated favorably to this plaintiff." This allegation falls far short of alleging facts showing that the prosecution in question terminated in favor of appellant. In fact, it does not allege facts showing that said prosecution ever terminated. At most, appellant alleged that he refused to be arraigned on the charge, and "that thereafter all proceedings * * * legally ceased and terminated favorably to the plaintiff." A refusal to be arraigned does not terminate a criminal proceeding and a mere allegation that all proceedings legally ceased and terminated is but a conclusion without any other facts alleged to support it. There is no other allegation on this subject.

In view of the foregoing, we conclude that the amended complaint does not state a cause of action, and that the court below properly sustained the demurrer thereto.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 417

PEOPLE v. HERNANDEZ.

Cr. 546.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 11, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑1023(9, 10)

Where after jury found the defendant guilty of failing to provide for a minor child he applied for probation and court suspended the imposition of sentence and granted probation and no judgment or sentence was pronounced the order granting probation was not appealable. Pen.Code, § 270.

2. Criminal law 🔑1130(4)

Where defendant appealing from nonappealable order granting probation obtained on affidavit an extension of time in which to file his opening brief to March 2, 1942, and no brief was filed and no appearance in opposition to motion to dismiss was made at the time set for hearing on March 10, 1942, the motion to dismiss would be granted and the appeal would be dismissed.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

A Rudy Hernandez was convicted of failing to provide for a minor child and he appeals from an order granting probation. On motion to dismiss the appeal.

Motion granted and appeal dismissed.

J. M. Lopes, of Visalia, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

[1] The defendant was charged with the violation of section 270 of the Penal Code in failing to provide for a minor child. A jury having found him guilty, he applied for probation. The court suspended the imposition of sentence and granted probation. No judgment or sentence was pronounced and it follows that the order granting probation is not appealable. In re Phillips, 17 Cal.2d 55, 109 P.2d 344, 132 A.L.R. 644, and cases there cited.

[2] The appellant obtained, on affidavit, an extension of time in which to file his opening brief to March 2, 1942. No brief was filed and no appearance in opposition to the motion to dismiss was made at the time set for hearing which was on March 10, 1942.

The motion is granted and the appeal is dismissed.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 475

STEELDUCT CO. v. HENGER-SELTZER CO. et al.

Civ. 13281.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 16, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 8, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Contracts 🔑155

Where manufacturer's selling agents were responsible for the terms of a letter contract between the parties, all ambiguities in the contract were required to be resolved against agents.

2. Principal and agent 🔑9

Where original contract between manufacturer and its selling agents provided that either party might cancel contract on ten days' written notice to the other, and subsequent letter contract for five years, intended to continue relationship for a definite period of time, was induced by agents' letter stating that they might find themselves "out on a limb" if there was a change in manufacturer's officer personnel, provision for cancellation on ten days' written notice was impliedly eliminated from and was superseded by letter contract.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Suit by the Steelduct Company against the Henger-Seltzer Company and others for injunctive relief, for an accounting, and for damages. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Evans, Pearce & Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Derthick, Cusack & Ganahl, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is a controversy between a manufacturer of steel conduits and tubings and its agents who had exclusive right to sell the products in Southern California and Arizona. The primary question is whether the agents had a right to cancel the contract, which was made for a definite period, and if not, what are the rights and remedies of the manufacturer.

In the court below the manufacturer, conceiving that it was entitled to an injunction, an accounting and damages, instituted its suit in equity. On the hearing the trial court interpreted the contract between the parties as permitting either to cancel it on ten days' written notice, and, as the agents had given such notice, concluded that there was no basis for either an accounting or damages, nor for an injunction because of alleged inequitable acts. From the judgment entered against it the manufacturer has appealed.

The original written contract entered into between the parties on September 1, 1928, provided that either party thereto might cancel the contract on ten days' written notice to the other. In March, 1938, respondents by letter urged that a new contract be made, as their investment in the agency was heavy and they might find themselves "out on a limb" if in due course there was a change in the officer personnel of appellant. A few days later respondents submitted a letter contract addressed to themselves for signature by appellant, stating that it, or something substantially similar, would meet their views. This letter contract was signed by appellant and forwarded to respondents, who endorsed their acceptance thereon. It reads as follows:

"Youngstown, Ohio,
"May 31, 1938.

"J. H. Collier,
"President & Treasurer,
"Henger-Seltzer Company,
"Los Angeles, Calif.

"Gentlemen:

"This is to confirm our agreement appointing the Henger-Seltzer Company as our exclusive agents for Southern California for a period of five years on such lines of our manufacture as they have been regularly handling heretofore.

"It is understood that they will, throughout this period, maintain an organization sufficient to adequately represent us in that market and that they will handle no lines conflicting with our own.

"The basis of remuneration will be the same as is now in effect, or as may be mutually agreed upon from time to time.

"The purpose of this agreement is to continue the mutually satisfactory relationship we have had with each other for some years with an understanding for a definite period of time which we hope may be further extended at the end of this period.

"Yours very truly,
"The Steelduct Company,
"J. C. Collier,
"President."

[1, 2] Respondents on March 10, 1939, having been appointed agents for another competing manufacturer, gave written notice to appellant that they were terminating the agreement. Appellant by wire refused to accept the cancellation and advised respondents it would expect them to maintain their contract. Respondents' position here is that they were entitled to cancel on ten days written notice, as the ten-day provision, in the original contract was not superseded by the letter contract of May 31, 1938. We see no merit in the contention.

It is abundantly clear from the letter of respondents, which induced appellant to execute the letter contract, that respondents desired a definite term contract without a right of cancellation. A contract that was to endure for a term of five years with a right of cancellation on ten days written notice with or without cause, would have left them "out on a limb", exactly as they felt they were by the terms of the contract of September 1, 1928. The letter contract did not in terms adopt or reject the provisions of the earlier contract, but it is plain from the language used that the terms thereof were to govern, except the provision for cancellation, which we think was impliedly eliminated. The respondents were responsible for the terms of the letter contract, and so all ambiguities therein are to be resolved against them. The court's finding that the contract was validly terminated ten days after the notice was given is not sustained by the record.

Respondents' further contention that they had just cause for cancellation is plainly an afterthought. Such cause, if any, was not made the basis for cancellation. Moreover, the evidence does not sustain the contention and there is no finding on it.

Appellant contends that the court committed further error in that (1) it did not direct an accounting and (2) in denying an injunction. It is obvious that the trial court could not award an accounting in view of its finding that the contract had been validly terminated. That the trial court did not purport to adjudicate on that issue is fully borne out by the findings. Moreover, it seems evident from the record that the trial court disposed of the claim for injunction on exactly the same basis. What the trial court might have found in respect to these issues, if it had concluded there was no right to cancellation, we have no means of knowing. Hence we leave the matter open.

Without pronouncing definitely on the matter, it appears to us that on this record appellant has misconceived its remedy. It would seem, as indicated in Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., 13 Cal.2d 158, 88 P.2d 698, 89 P.2d 386, that its remedy is at law and not in equity. As that case is a sufficient guide for the parties we see no need to expand upon it.

Judgment reversed.

MOORE, P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

* * *

---

50 Cal.App.2d 467

SHAW v. McCASLIN et al.

Civ. 13194.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑441(11)

Contention that a note was given with the understanding that it created no legal obligation of the makers and that payee would not attempt directly or indirectly to enforce it constituted no legal defense to suit on the note; showing of facts supporting such contention being barred by the parol evidence rule.

2. Evidence 🔑441(11)

In suit on a note, parol evidence that note was given with the understanding that it should create no legal obligation of the makers and that payee would not attempt to enforce it was inadmissible under the "parol evidence rule".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Parol Evidence Rule".

3. Bills and notes 🔑103(1)
Fraud 🔑12

Representations, allegedly made by payee to induce execution and delivery of a note, that payee wanted note to show to commissioner of corporation to prove that transaction involving advances to makers was a loan rather than illegal sale of interest in oil and gas lease in which makers were the lessees and to use as collateral were not "false representations" as to then existing fact but merely "promissory representations" as to future conduct which were neither actionable nor matters of defense in suit on the note.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "False Representation" and "Promissory Representation".

4. Bills and notes 🔑451(1)

In suit on a note, a defense based on written contract entered into by parties to the note coincident with execution and delivery of the note must be measured by the terms of the contract and by such evidence only as is necessary to solve ambiguities of the contract.

5. Bills and notes 🔑451(1)

A written contract, entered into by the parties to a note coincident to execution and delivery of the note, in so far as such contract purported to be a security for the note in that makers agreed to hold 50 per cent. of the working interest in an oil and gas lease, in which makers were lessees, as security and to account to holder of note for 50 per cent. of net proceeds from sales of hydrocarbon products from leaseholds, gave rise to no defense against suit on the note.

6. Mortgages 🔑36

In suit on a note, the burden of proving that written contract entered into by parties coincident to execution and delivery of note constituted a mortgage of realty so that action could not be maintained on the note except by way of a foreclosure action was upon defendants.

7. Bills and notes 🔑451(1)

Where written contract, entered into by parties to note coincident to execution and delivery of note, purported to make 50 per cent. of the working interest in an oil and gas lease, in which makers were lessees, security for the note, portion of contract indicating that note represented a one-half interest in the working interest in lease and that if a permit to transfer to payee such interest could not be procured from commissioner of corporations, the makers and payee would operate total working interest as limited partners did not constitute a legal defense against suit on the note.

8. Pleading 🔑8(4)

Defendants' allegations with respect to the alleged meaning of a contract, entered into by the parties to note sued on coincident to the execution and delivery of the note, and pleaded in support of their defense of want of consideration for note had no effect in making out such defense, where conclusions of pleader as to meaning of contract were not supported by the language thereof.

9. Appeal and error 🔑757(1)

It is the duty of counsel to submit their case to the District Court of Appeal in their briefs and not to expect the court to read the entire record.

10. Pleading 🔑370

Issues are made by the pleadings, and not by the evidence introduced at trial.

11. Appeal and error 🔑171(3)

Where trial court's findings go beyond what appear to be the issues as made by the pleadings, it may be assumed, in the absence of any claim to the contrary, that counsel and trial court united in trying the case on the theory that such matters were within the issues, and the theory, as thus disclosed, is binding on review.

12. Pleading 🔑427

The admission of evidence outside the issues as made by the pleadings does not enlarge the issues, except where the trial court permits an amendment of the pleadings to conform to proof.

13. Pleading 🔑236(5)

Whether an amendment of pleadings to conform to proof should be granted rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.

14. Appeal and error 🔑236(2)

In order to preserve a right of review on a theory allegedly supported by evidence in the record, but not within the issues as made by the pleadings, request should be made for permission to amend the pleadings to conform to proof.

15. Appeal and error 🔑757(3)

In order to sustain contention that there is no substantial evidence to sustain trial court's findings, appellant must set forth in his brief the evidence bearing on such question, or at least refer the District Court of Appeal to the pages and lines of the transcript where such testimony appears.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis Howell Smith, Judge.

Suit by Frank L. Shaw against W. E. McCaslin and others to recover on a promissory note, with a separate count for money had and received. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Milo W. Horn, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Frank L. Simons, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is a suit upon a promissory note in the principal sum of $15,000, with a separate count for money had and received. Respondent, who was the payee of the note, recovered judgment against appellants, its makers, for the sum of $13,500 and attorney fees of $500, less certain amounts which the court found had been paid by appellants to respondent. As the evidence disclosed that plaintiff had advanced to the defendants the sum of $13,500, and the court found that this sum represented the consideration for the note, the trial court concluded the recovery should be limited to that sum and so gave judgment accordingly.

Essentially the only question presented to us by appellants is whether there was substantial evidence to sustain the judgment. However, as the solution of that question depends largely on the issues, we think it will help clarify the controversy to narrate briefly a part of the factual background.

The defendants were lessees in an oil and gas lease, which while duly executed had not been delivered to them and it was not deliverable until they should bring in an oil well on the property and comply with certain conditions. The defendants proceeded with the drilling of a well, but shortly ran out of ready money to carry on the operation. At that time, March, 1939, plaintiff was induced to advance defendants $5,000, with the understanding that thereby he was to have an undivided interest in lessees' interest in the lease. He was told that an application for a permit to sell interests was on file with the corporation commissioner but no permit had been issued. Later the defendants found they were again short of money and so plaintiff was again induced to invest $5,000. Under like conditions he made further "investments" until his total outlay was $13,500. The well was completed and placed on production on April 25, 1939. It was a small producer. Prior to August 4, 1939, the commissioner of corporations initiated an investigation to ascertain whether the defendants had sold interests in their lease. The record indicates that the defendants told the commissioner that they had not sold any interests but that the money they had received from plaintiff represented a loan by him to them. A controversy ensued between plaintiff and the defendants, and as a result defendants on August 4, 1939, gave plaintiff the note in suit and coincident therewith the parties entered into a written contract. The contention of the appellants as to the effect of these documents is set up in their answer.

The first defense urged in the answer is that the note was without consideration, that it was made and delivered with the understanding and agreement of the parties thereto that it created no legal obligation on the part of the makers and that plaintiff as payee thereof agreed he would not directly or indirectly enforce or attempt to enforce collection of it. The second defense was predicated on the terms of the written contract above referred to. Shortly stated, the contract recites that appellants mortgage to respondent a one-half working interest in the oil and gas lease (mentioned above) to secure payment of a certain note made by them to respondent (the note in suit); that the note evidences a one-half interest in the working interest in the lease; that as long as the note is outstanding appellants will pay over to respondent one-half of the proceeds of any oil or gas sold from the leasehold, subject to the lessor's interest therein, except that they will retain one-third of such half until they have in their hands therefrom the sum of $1,500; that the parties shall make a joint application to the commissioner of corporations for a permit enabling appellants to transfer title to a half interest in the lease to respondent; that if such permit is not granted respondent and appellants shall operate the leasehold as a limited copartnership, so that respondent shall have a one-half working interest and all profits therefrom; that the well already drilled on the leasehold constitutes a joint venture of appellants and respondent. On the issues as thus made the case went to trial.

[1-3] We think it self-evident that the first defense is not a legal defense, and so evidence to sustain it was inadmissible. The private understanding or intent entertained by appellants was immaterial. What they promised was determined by the normal meaning and implications of their written promissory note, not by their intent as to the effect it should or should not have or what respondent would or would not do with it. Appellants attempted to make out that respondent led them to make the note on the ground he wanted it for two purposes: first, to show it to the commissioner of corporations so as to indicate his transaction with appellants involved a loan of money and not a purchase of securities for which a permit was required; second, to use the note as collateral with his bank. Whatever the truth may have been, it is evident that the parol evidence rule barred the appellants from submitting their version of the transaction. Moreover, on their own theory of it, as set forth in the first defense, it is evident that the claimed representations were but promissory representations as to future conduct and not false representations as to then existing facts. Promissory representations are neither actionable nor matters of defense. Yuba Mfg. Co. v. Stone, 39 Cal.App. 440, 179 P. 418; Hartke v. Abbott, 106 Cal. App. 388, 289 P. 206; First Nat. Bank v. Sagerson, 283 Pa. 406, 129 A. 333; Investors' Finance Co. v. Bodnar, 87 Colo. 498, 289 P. 599; Bushnell v. Elkins, 34 Wyo. 495, 245 P. 304, 51 A.L.R. 13.

[4-7] The second defense being based on the written contract is to be measured by its terms, aided by such evidence only as is necessary to solve its ambiguities. In its essence the contract purports to be a security for the note, in that appellants agree to hold 50% of the "working interest" in an oil and gas lease as security for the note and to account to the holder of the note for 50% of the net proceeds from any sales they may make of hydrocarbon products from the leasehold. By the terms of the contract the security represented by it is denominated a mortgage. It is apparent that this phase or portion of the contract gives rise to no defense against a suit on the note. If the pleader intended to raise the point that the contract was a mortgage of realty and that the action could not be maintained on the note except by way of a foreclosure action, he utterly failed to make any such issue. It was for the defendants and not the plaintiff to carry the burden. State Savings Bank v. Albertson et al., 39 Mont. 414, 102 P. 692; cf. Crescent Lbr. Co. v. Larson, 166 Cal. 168, 135 P. 502. The other phase or portion of the contract contains recitals and agreements indicating that the note sued upon represented a one-half interest in the "working interest"; that the parties, respondent and appellants, would join in an application to the commissioner of corporations for a permit so that appellants could transfer to respondent the one-half working interest they held in their names to secure the note; that if such a permit could not be procured the parties would operate the total working interest as limited partners, the share of respondent to be 50% thereof. On the face of the contract, with one exception shortly to be noted, there is nothing which would indicate that any transmutation of the working interest as a result of a permit or because one could not be procured should vary the fact that the 50% working interest should continue as a security to the note until it was paid. The fact that the contract recited that the note represented 50% of the working interest does not detract from the terms of the contract. That statement could imply either that respondent had sold to appellants a 50% "working interest" or that he had loaned funds in the amount of the note which in turn represented the value of such interest. The one exception above referred to is found in the last paragraph of the contract, reading: "The parties hereto do state and agree that the drilling of a well upon the herein described premises has been, is and will continue to be a joint venture, according to the terms and arrangements agreed upon from time to time by and between the parties hereto under the varying circumstances as they develop. And the rights herein expressed and set forth are to be considered in the conjunctive and/or disjunctive and are cumulative." But the pleadings failed to interpret the paragraph and so created no issue with respect to it. We think it plain, then, that there is nothing in the contract which is inconsistent with the notion that it was a security merely to the note, much less that it was in any manner a defense to a suit on the note.

[8] However, in the second defense appellants not only set up the written contract but averred that the parties thereto, prior to its execution, had entered into an oral agreement by the terms of which respondent had agreed to enter into a mining copartnership or joint adventure with them to drill an oil well on the leasehold, and that he had agreed to supply $13,500 in cash towards the venture and an additional $1,500 out of his share of the profits; that while respondent had supplied cash in an amount of $13,500 towards the venture, it had been supplied strictly for that purpose and so did not represent any consideration for the note; that the written contract embodied and was intended to embody simply the oral agreements theretofore existing, and for that reason there was no valid consideration for the note; that the contract "was a novation of the right of the plaintiff under an implied contract to sue defendants for the return of money [for] * * * securities issued without permit"; that it was an account stated. These embellishments in the defense must be rejected for the simple reason that the conclusion of the pleader as to the meaning of the contract or its effect may not be entertained where it is not supported by the language of the contract.

[9-11] Entirely apart from these defenses, which created no legal issue, counsel for appellants contends that upon the trial below he introduced evidence entirely adequate to sustain defenses other than those set up in the answer, and that the trial court committed error in not sustaining them. Accordingly, he not only invites us to, but insists that we must, read the entire reporter's transcript, not only to ascertain that fact but, what is more, that we will then necessarily come to the conclusion that no credence can be given to respondent's testimony and that there is no substantial testimony to sustain the case of respondent. In asking us to read the record below from cover to cover, including such matters as might be material along with all that is immaterial, counsel for appellants is altogether too generous with our time. We think his invitation requires us to suggest that it is the duty of counsel to submit their cases to us in their briefs. Initially, it needs to be observed that issues are made by the pleadings, not by the evidence introduced. For the trial court's conclusion reached upon the issues we turn, in a jury waived case, as here, to the findings and conclusions. Where the findings go beyond what appears to us to be the issues as made by the pleadings we are justified, in the absence of any claim to the contrary, in assuming that counsel and the trial court united in trying the case on the theory that such matters were within the issues. In that situation the theory as thus disclosed cannot be rejected when the case comes before us for review.

[12-14] But where, as here, the claim is made that issues not disclosed by the pleadings or the findings were nevertheless tendered upon the trial below, it is evident that various possibilities inhere in the suggestion. One is that the parties and the court united in trying the case on a theory not disclosed by the pleadings. But this, it is apparent, is quite improbable where, as here, the findings do not suggest such a theory. Another possibility is that while one of the parties submitted evidence on a theory not within the issues, it rested alone in his own mind. But it is fundamental that such evidence does not enlarge the issues, except where the trial court permits an amendment of the pleadings to conform to proof. In the instant case there is no showing in the briefs or by the clerk's transcript that there was a request for permission to amend, much less that it was either granted or denied. In any case, it rests largely in the discretion of the trial court as to whether an amendment of pleadings to conform to proof should be granted. In the absence of a request to amend, the record would not disclose that either the trial court or the opposing party was advised of the theories of defense resting in the mind of appellants' counsel, unless the record perchance should disclose the fact by comment either from the court or counsel for the other party. Even if it did, this would not give rise to reversible error. The proper way to preserve a right of review, in such a situation, is to request permission to expand the issues as made by the existing pleadings. Unless this be done counsel will too often find himself with a theory in his own mind but with no right to a review of the action of the trial court for failing to have guessed what he had in his mind.

[15] Where, as here, counsel contends there is no substantial evidence to sustain the findings he should have set forth in his brief the evidence bearing on that question, or at least have referred us to the pages and lines of the transcript where the testimony appears. However, it is evident from what we have said that a reading of the transcript could not change our views as to the disposition that must be made of the case.

As the pleadings set up no legal defense except want of consideration—and it is patent there was consideration—the evidence either way is without materiality where, as here, no legal defense is alleged.

Judgment affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 457

Ex parte OCHOA.

Cr. 2217.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 13, 1942.

Contempt 🔑21

Where, in discovery proceeding instituted by minor's guardian, trustee of minor's alleged trust fund obeyed citation to appear in probate court and submitted to oral examination concerning the withdrawal of the fund, but claimed title thereto, no legal ground existed for adjudication of contempt, and order directing that the trustee pay over the money and be imprisoned until she did so constituted an invalid exercise of probate court's jurisdiction. Probate Code, §§ 613, 614, 1552.

Habeas corpus proceeding by Violet M. Ochoa.

Writ of habeas corpus granted.

Alexander Mooslin and Joseph A. Brown, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Raymond D. Williamson and Edward D. Mabson, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This is a proceeding in habeas corpus. At the time the writ was issued and served the petitioner, Violet M. Ochoa, was being imprisoned in the county jail by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco pursuant to a commitment issued by the superior court in and for said city and county "In the Matter of the Guardianship of the Estate of Violet Consuelo Giersch, a Minor."

The allegations of the petition for the writ have not been controverted, and it appears therefrom that the proceedings which led up to the issuance of the commitment were these: The guardian of the minor filed an affidavit in said court averring that the minor was the beneficiary of a trust fund established in a San Francisco bank, which fund was to be turned over to the minor when she reached her majority; that Violet Ochoa was the trustee of said fund, and that on October 20, 1941, the guardian was informed by said bank that on September 30, 1941, the trust funds had been withdrawn by the trustee. The guardian asked, therefore, that the trustee and the bank be cited to appear before said court "and be examined on oath, regarding said trust account * * *"; and a citation was issued directing the petitioner and the bank to show cause "why the trust account * * * was closed" and "what became of the funds on deposit therein." At the hearing, so the petition alleges, petitioner "averred and alleged and claimed that the money was her own and that she claimed title to said monies and that it was in truth and in fact not the property of the said minor." The minutes of the court recite that as a result of the hearing it was "ordered [that] Violet Ochoa be adjudged guilty of contempt of Court and ordered confined in the County Jail until the money withdrawn from Bank be paid to the Guardian."

Pursuant to such adjudication and order the following commitment was issued: "The citation hitherto issued for Violette Ochoa, also called Violette Crouzziare, citing her to show what became of certain funds on deposit in the above entitled estate coming on regularly for hearing this day and it appearing to the Court that the said Violette Ochoa, alias Violette Crouzziare, had used for her own use the sum of $400.00 belonging to the above named minor, and the said Violette Ochoa, alias, having refused in open court to obey the Order of this court requiring restitution of said funds: It is therefore ordered that Daniel C. Murphy, the sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco, take said Violette Ochoa, alias, and confine her to the County Jail of the City and County of San Francisco until she pays unto the Estate of the above named minor the sum of $400.00, and this is your warrant for commitment."

The discovery proceeding in the guardianship matter resulting in the adjudication of contempt was initiated and heard under the authority of section 1552 of the Probate Code, the material provisions of which are substantially the same as those embodied in section 613 of said code, pertaining to estates of deceased persons; and the concluding clause of section 1552 provides that the probate court may proceed against the person cited for examination in the same manner as in the case of estates of deceased persons. Probate Code, sec. 614. In defining the powers granted by the code sections pertaining to the estates of deceased persons, it is held that while the probate court is vested with full authority thereunder to compel a person to appear and be examined on an order relating to the discovery of the property such person is charged with having embezzled, concealed, smuggled or fraudulently disposed of and may punish as a contempt any disobedience to the orders the court has made in that respect, "the power of the probate court ends with the discovery of the property and the enforcement of the remedial provisions of the statute and does not extend beyond that. Accordingly, where the dispute between the persons cited and the representative of the estate involves the title to the property, the court of probate cannot in such proceedings determine the issue nor convict one of contempt for not obeying an order to deliver up such property, at least where his claim is supported by some evidence, for he is entitled to be heard according to the forms of law in an appropriate tribunal." 11A

Cal.Jur. 463, 464. Stated another way, "This provision of the code does not authorize the court, after the examination, to order such property to be delivered up to the executor or administrator or to be deposited as the court may order, when the title thereto is in dispute, and to imprison the respondent for contempt in failing to surrender disputed property to the court's control." 11A Cal.Jur., p. 467. Among the cases so construing said code sections are Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 P. 118; Koerber v. Superior Court, 57 Cal.App. 31, 206 P. 496; Estate of Escolle, 134 Cal. App. 473, 25 P.2d 860.

Therefore in the present case, since petitioner obeyed the citation to appear in court and submitted to the oral examination concerning the withdrawal of said trust funds but claimed title thereto, no legal ground existed for the adjudication of contempt, and the order directing that she pay over the money and be imprisoned until she does so constitutes an invalid exercise of the probate court's jurisdiction. Counsel for the guardian so concedes.

It is ordered that the petitioner be discharged from custody and that the cash bail deposited with the clerk of this court be returned to the person by whom it was deposited.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 478

BEAUDRY v. PETERSON.

Civ. 6665.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 16, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 15, 1942.

See 124 P.2d 637.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Sales 🔑459

Title to personalty, sold under conditional sales contract, is reserved in seller, though contract does not expressly so provide.

2. Sales 🔑479(1)

On default of buyer under conditional sales contract, seller has option to repossess property sold or sue for purchase price.

3. Sales 🔑479(15)

The seller's right to sue buyer for balance due on purchase price of personalty under conditional sales contract after buyer's default was not defeated by destruction of property by fire while in buyer's possession. Civ.Code, § 1742.

4. Sales 🔑467

A buyer, taking possession of personalty sold under conditional sales contract, assumes risk of loss thereof, as by fire. Civ. Code, §§ 1721 et seq., 1742.

5. New trial 🔑79

In action for balance due on purchase price of personalty, sold under conditional sales contract and destroyed by fire while in buyer's possession, where sufficiency of evidence to justify judgment for plaintiff was not mentioned in trial court's order granting defendant's motion for new trial, but memorandum of decision in document containing order stated that loss of thing sold follows title thereto and that title to personalty remained in plaintiff, such order was erroneous as not intended to permit re-examination of facts, but to apply different and erroneous view of law to court's findings, which supported judgment. Civ.Code, § 1742; Code Civ.Proc. § 657.

6. Sales 🔑467

In action for balance due on purchase price of mining machinery and equipment sold under conditional sales contract, where defendant never requested extension of time for required payments on ground that operation of mill, in which property was located when destroyed by fire, was prohibited by causes beyond his control and not due to his fault or negligence, as authorized by supplementary contract, but denied all liability under sales contract and was in default before fire, its occurrence was no excuse for his failure to make payments.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Dal M. Lemmon, Judge.

Action by W. A. Beaudry against M. R. Peterson for the balance due on the purchase price of personal property sold to defendant by plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Ronald D. Wolfe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, for respondent.

DEIRUP, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff sued upon a common count to recover the sum of $4,000 and interest. The trial court found in his favor and judgment was entered as prayed. Thereafter the court made an order granting a new trial, from which this appeal has been taken.

The findings of fact disclose that the plaintiff and the defendant M. R. Peterson (doing business under the name of Giant King Mining Company), who is the sole defendant in the action, entered into an agreement on October 11, 1939, for the sale and purchase of personal property. The agreement, omitting the description of the property, reads as follows:

"This Agreement, made October 11, 1939, between W. A. Beaudry, Seller, and Giant King Mining Company, Buyer, Witnesseth:

"That Seller agrees to sell and Buyer agrees to buy that certain mining machinery, equipment, etc., situate at the Three Star Mine, near Ophir, in Placer County, California, to-wit: * * * for the full purchase price of Six Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($6,500.00), payable as follows:

"Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00) down, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by Seller, and the balance of Four Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($4,500.00) at the rate of Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00) or more per month on the 1st day of each month, commencing January 1, 1940, and until the full purchase price be paid, with interest at the rate of four per cent (4%) per annum, payable monthly in addition to the above mentioned monthly payments.

"Buyer may have immediate possession thereof, and shall keep the same in good order, condition and repair, usual wear and tear excepted.

"The failure or default of Buyer in any particular hereunder shall, at the option of Seller, cause all Buyer's rights in and to said property, and the whole thereof, to cease and terminate, and in such event Seller may retake said property, and the whole thereof, without necessity of force or legal action therefor, and all amounts paid him hereunder shall be retained by him as rental and as liquidated damages. The waiver of any failure or default of Buyer shall not be considered or construed as a waiver of any further or future failure or default.

"Time is of the essence of this agreement and contract, which is executed in duplicate and which binds the parties, and their and each of their heirs, successors, administrators, and assigns."

On the same day, and presumably at the time of the execution of the contract, the parties agreed as follows:

"The undersigned agrees that extension of time for payments will be made if necessary on account of the following reasons:

"If operations must stop or be delayed as a result of war in which the United States is a party, prohibition of operations by Federal Agencies or law, strikes, serious accidents prohibiting the operation of said property or mill, inability to obtain necessary operating materials in the open market, weather conditions, acts of God or other causes beyond control and due to no fault or negligence on your part.

"15% discount will be allowed if Mill is paid within one year."

Defendant took possession of the machinery after making the initial payment called for by the contract and installed it in a quartz mill. Thereafter he made further payments amounting to $500, leaving a balance of $4,000 unpaid on the principal. On May 16, 1940, virtually all of the machinery was destroyed by fire without fault on the part of either buyer or seller. The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff on all the issues raised by the pleadings. In reference to the supplementary agreement it found that the defendant "never requested an extension of time for payments due or to be due under said contract, but at all times since May 16, 1940, has denied any liability to pay said sum of $4,000.00 and interest or any part thereof."

[1-4] It is clear to us that the judgment is fully supported by the findings. The agreement was a conditional sales contract and the title was reserved in the plaintiff even though the contract does not so provide expressly. Katz v. People's Finance, etc., Co., 101 Cal.App. 552, 281 P. 1097; Bailly v. Loock, 103 Cal.App. 220, 284 P. 235. In the event of default the seller had the option to repossess the property or to sue for the purchase price.

Johnson v. Kaeser, 196 Cal. 686, 239 P. 324; Smith v. Miller, 5 Cal.App.2d 564, 43 P.2d 347. His right to bring such an action was not defeated by the destruction of the property, for it is now the law in this state, as it has been for years in the great majority of other jurisdictions (24 R.C.L. 494; 2a Uniform Laws Annotated, 196), that one who contracts to buy personal property by an agreement of this nature and takes possession of it assumes the risk of loss. This is provided unequivocally in section 1742 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not, except that:

"(a) Where delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer, or to a bailee for the buyer, in pursuance of the contract and the property in the goods has been retained by the seller merely to secure performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract, the goods are at the buyer's risk from the time of such delivery.

"(b) Where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either the buyer or seller the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault."

Up to the time of the adoption of the Uniform Sales Act by the California Legislature in 1931 (Stats.1931, p. 2234, Civ. Code, sec. 1721 et seq.), it was the law of this state that the risk of loss followed the title to goods even though possession had been transferred under a conditional sales contract. Kirtley v. Perham, 176 Cal. 333, 168 P. 351; Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 334, 104 P. 432, 25 L.R.A., N.S., 609; Ross v. McDougal, 12 Cal.App. 2d 172, 55 P.2d 574; Cocores v. Assimopoulos, 4 Cal.2d 82, 47 P.2d 699. Holding that this was the established rule in California, the court said in Kirtley v. Perham, supra [176 Cal. 333, 168 P. 353]: "It is a well-settled proposition that an agreement of sale may transfer the right of possession to the vendee without transferring to him the title. Such was the effect of this agreement. The case, therefore, comes within the rule stated in Potts [Drug Co.] v. Benedict, supra [156 Cal. 322, 334, 104 P. 432, 25 L.R.A.,N.S., 609], that upon an executory agreement of sale, where title is retained in the vendor, although possession is given to the buyer, the loss entailed by the destruction or extinction of the subject-matter, without fault by either party, falls upon the vendor, and that he cannot recover any balance of the purchase price remaining unpaid, and is liable to the buyer for the repayment of the portions of the price previously paid."

It is obvious that the enactment of section 1742 of the Civil Code made this rule entirely obsolete and transferred the liability for loss from the seller to the purchaser under a conditional sales contract. In Kelly v. Smith, 218 Cal. 543, 24 P.2d 471, 474, it is said that the case of Kirtley v. Perham, supra, "is no longer of any authority, for the reason that the rule was changed by legislative enactment in 1931. * * * It will be observed that this legislative enactment is in keeping with the extensive use of the so-called conditional sales contract and the great expansion of credit which has accompanied it. The same reasons which prompt the application of the majority rule respecting risk of loss in California to personal property ought to be given consideration when considering the loss of improvements to real property. Besides bearing in mind the great development of trade through the medium of such contracts with reservations of title as security, we ought to consider upon whose shoulders devolves the responsibility of so caring for the property that fire will not occur, and how improper care will contribute to the hazard thereof."

The risk of loss should be borne by the purchaser because he is the one who has the use of the property and is in a better position to protect it. The record discloses that the defendant purchaser caused the quartz mill, including property described in the contract, to be insured and that he filed a proof of loss after the fire in which he made a claim for damages to at least a portion of the property. The record does not show how much, if anything, he collected from the insurer as compensation. This is immaterial in our view of the case, but these facts indicate that he recognized the legal obligation imposed by the contract to protect himself against loss.

[5] The order of the trial court was that: "The motion for a new trial is granted." Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment is not mentioned. But the signed document in which the order appears contains a memorandum of decision in which the judge of the trial court states that: "It is fundamental that where the thing sold is destroyed, the loss follows the title" and that the title to the personal property under consideration remained in the plaintiff, as was held in Sere v. McGovern, 65 Cal. 244, 3 P. 859. This statement of law is not equivalent to the declaration required by section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure that, in the opinion of the court, the evidence was insufficient to justify the judgment and that the new trial was granted on that ground. On the contrary, it is obvious that the attention of the court was not directed to the provisions of section 1742 of the Civil Code, as enacted in 1931, and that its sole reason for granting a new trial was that, in its opinion, the findings did not support the judgment. There are authorities to the effect that where the nature of the order itself necessarily implies that the trial court deems it necessary to re-examine the facts, a statement in the order that the evidence is insufficient is not essential. Lucerne Country Club v. Beal, 21 Cal.App.2d 121, 68 P.2d 408; Secreto v. Carlander, 35 Cal.App.2d 361, 95 P.2d 476. But such an inference cannot be drawn in this case. The evidence was, in the opinion of the judge of the trial court, sufficient to justify the findings of fact and the findings did, as a matter of law, support the judgment. The purpose of the order was not to permit a re-examination of the facts in the case, but to apply a different view of the law to the findings. Since the court decided the case correctly in the first instance, a new trial should not be required.

[6] It was provided in the supplementary contract that the plaintiff would extend the time of payments under the contract if operations were delayed for certain reasons, including "causes beyond control and due to no fault or negligence" on the part of the defendant. Counsel for respondent contends that the fire in the mill must have prohibited the operation of the mill and was therefore an excuse for the failure to make payments under the contract. His position is not tenable. As found by the trial court, the defendant at no time requested an extension of time for this reason, but denied all liability under the contract. And the record shows that the defendant was in default before the time of the fire.

The order appealed from is reversed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 407

Ex parte KORNER.

Cr. 1792.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 11, 1942.

1. Constitutional law 🔑190
Criminal law 🔑1206(1)

The statute, giving the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles power to determine and redetermine the length of time of imprisonment within minimum and maximum terms prescribed by law without granting a hearing to the prisoner, was not "retroactive", and hence did not affect validity of an order of the board, made prior to the effective date thereof, revoking a prior order fixing term of imprisonment and fixing a longer term. Pen. Code, § 3020.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Retroactive".

2. Criminal law 🔑1208(9)

The effect of judgment, sentencing one convicted for first degree robbery to imprisonment for not less than five years, was to sentence the accused to imprisonment for the maximum term prescribed by the statute, which was life, the accused being thereupon turned over to administrative board which was empowered under statute to determine how long he should be kept in prison. Pen.Code §§ 213, 671, 1168(1).

3. Criminal law 🔑1208(9)

The power of Board of Prison Terms and Paroles to redetermine the length of time of imprisonment under the 1935 amendment to the indeterminate sentence law was not limited insofar as any increase in the term was concerned by a provision added in 1931, to the effect that term could be lengthened after a hearing in the event of an infraction of the rules or an escape, but board was empowered to redetermine a sentence by the same process as had governed its action in first fixing term of imprisonment, taking into account such further facts as had come to its attention. Pen.Code § 1168(1).

4. Habeas corpus ⚿23

Where Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, by an order, entered on June 3, 1941, without granting a hearing to prisoner, rescinded prior action of the board, refixing alien prisoner's term of imprisonment at eight years with condition that he then be deported or released to employment, and put into effect its original order fixing the term at 50 years, Board did not act illegally under the indeterminate sentence law as it then existed so as to entitle prisoner to release from custody on writ of habeas corpus after expiration of the eight-year term, where prisoner by refusal to sign application for a transit visa had made his deportation impossible. Pen.Code § 1168(1).

Proceeding in habeas corpus by George Korner to secure release from custody.

Writ discharged.

George Korner, in pro. per., and Mervin H. Reith, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DEIRUP, Justice pro tem.

A writ of habeas corpus was issued by this court after a similar writ had been discharged by the Superior Court in and for Sacramento County. It appears from the record that the petitioner, George Korner, was convicted of first degree robbery in Santa Clara County and was sentenced to serve a term of not less than five years, Pen.Code, § 213; that he was received in the State Prison at San Quentin on May 11, 1936, and transferred to the State Prison at Folsom on February 25, 1937, and has been confined at that place ever since. The Board of Prison Terms and Paroles fixed his sentence at 50 years on November 30, 1938, and at the same time granted him a parole to become effective when he had served four years with the condition that he be released to the United States Immigration authorities for deportation to Germany. He did not take advantage of the parole. On October 3, 1940, the board issued an order in which it determined that the original sentence was excessive and refixed his term at eight years, with the last year on parole with the condition that he be deported or, in the event of a dismissal of the detainer by the immigration authorities, that he be released to employment in the State of California satisfactory to the State Parole Officer. On June 3, 1941, the board rescinded the action which it had taken on October 3, 1940, and put into effect the original order of November 30, 1938, in which the term was fixed at 50 years. This was done after information had been received from the immigration authorities to the effect that the petitioner had refused to sign an application for a Soviet transit visa to Germany, thereby making it impossible to deport him. If the order of October 3, 1940, had not been rescinded the petitioner would have been entitled to a release from prison on June 11, 1941, for at that time his term of eight years, reduced by normal credits and also by additional credits which had been allowed him for extra meritorious services, would have expired. It is the contention of the petitioner that the order by which the board reduced the term from 50 to eight years was valid but that the subsequent order in which it restored the original term was beyond its jurisdiction.

The following are the statutory provisions in the Penal Code, § 1168, which were in force at the time when the sentence was fixed at 50 years:

"(1) Imprisonment. Every person convicted of a public offense, for which imprisonment in any reformatory or State prison is now prescribed by law shall, unless such convicted person be placed on probation, a new trial granted, or the imposing of sentence suspended, be sentenced to be imprisoned in a State prison, but the court in imposing the sentence shall not fix the term or duration of the period of imprisonment.

"It is hereby made the duty of the warden of any of the State prisons to receive such person, who shall be imprisoned until duly released as provided for in this section. The term of imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum or be less than the minimum term of imprisonment provided by law for the public offense of which such person was convicted.

"The Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, or any board or commission that may be hereafter given authority so to do, may determine and redetermine after the expiration of the minimum term of imprisonment provided by law, except that in cases in which the minimum term of imprisonment is more than six months, the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles may determine after the expiration of six months from and after the actual commencement of such imprisonment, what length of time, if any, such person shall be imprisoned, unless the sentence be sooner terminated by commutation or pardon by the Governor of the State.

"When a prisoner has imposed upon him two or more cumulative or consecutive sentences, the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles may determine after the expiration of six months of his first sentence, what length of time he shall serve on all such cumulative or consecutive sentences.

"In case any convicted person undergoing sentence in any of the State prisons commits any infraction of the rules and regulations of the prison board, or escapes while working outside such prison under the surveillance of prison guards, or violates his parole, the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles may revoke any order theretofore made determining the length of time such convicted person shall be imprisoned, and make a new order determining such length of time not exceeding the maximum penalty provided by law for the offense for which he was convicted, unless the sentence be sooner terminated by commutation or pardon by the Governor of the State. Such revocation and redetermination shall not be had except upon a hearing upon the question of such infraction or escape or violation and an adjudication by the board that such prisoner was guilty thereof, which adjudication shall be final. At such hearing such prisoner, unless outside the walls of the prison as an escape and fugitive from justice, shall be present and entitled to be heard and may present evidence and witnesses in his behalf."

In quoting these provisions we have placed emphasis upon the portions of the section which are most pertinent to the legal question involved in this proceeding.

Section 1168 of the Penal Code, also known as the indeterminate sentence law, enacted in 1917, Stats.1917, p. 665, contained no express provision in reference to the change of a sentence once fixed until 1929. In that year by amendment it was provided that:

"The term of imprisonment so fixed by the state board of prison directors, shall not thereafter be increased or diminished by said board for any reason whatsoever except as in this section provided." Stats. 1929, p. 1930.

[1] This new provision was eliminated in 1931 and the one which enabled the board to increase the term, after a hearing, in the event of an infraction of the rules or an escape was inserted. Stats.1931, p. 1053. In 1935 the power to redetermine the length of time of imprisonment was given to the board. Stats.1935, p. 1700. Aside from the substitution in 1937 of the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles for the State Board of Prison Directors, no further changes in the law relative to the fixing of terms were made until the act was revised in 1941, Stats.1941, p. 1080, and the provision for a change in the term in the event of an infraction of the rules or an escape was eliminated. The board now has power to determine and redetermine the length of time of imprisonment, within the minimum and maximum terms prescribed by law, in any case, without granting a hearing to the prisoner. Pen.Code, § 3020. This amendment, however, took effect after petitioner's term was lengthened and, of course, was not retroactive.

[2] It is to be borne in mind that what was done by the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles was not judicial in its nature. The judicial proceedings were terminated by the pronouncement of judgment by the trial court. That court, in legal effect, sentenced the petitioner to imprisonment for the maximum term prescribed by the statute, which is life. Pen.Code, §§ 213, 671; People v. Gonzales, 36 Cal.App. 782, 173 P. 407. Thereupon he was turned over to an administrative board which was empowered to determine how long he should be kept in prison. In re Daniels, 106 Cal. App. 43, 288 P. 1109; In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958; People v. McNabb, 3 Cal.2d 441, 45 P.2d 334; People v. Hayes, 9 Cal.App.2d 157, 49 P.2d 288. The powers of the board are defined by statute, and, as we have shown, the legislature has, from time to time, either placed limits upon the exercise of its discretion or given it more freedom of action. Thus it removed all doubt about the right of the board to redetermine a sentence by providing that it could not do so; then enabled it to do so in the event of a violation of rules or an escape; then gave it express power to redetermine as well as determine the term of imprisonment.

[3] Petitioner contends that the power to redetermine a sentence as given by the amendment of 1935 is limited, in so far as any increase in the term is concerned, by the provision added in 1931 to the effect that the term could be lengthened, after a hearing, in the event of an infraction of the rules or an escape; that otherwise it would be within the power of the board to penalize a prisoner who had broken the rules without permitting him to defend himself. It is clear to us, however, that the Legislature intended only to empower the board to redetermine a sentence by the same process as had governed its action in the first place, taking into account such further facts as had come to its attention which would satisfy it that the first order it had made was improper. There is much to be said in favor of allowing the board to correct its errors. Obviously, where there was a charge that the prisoner had violated rules, the board would grant a hearing if required by statute to do so.

[4] Petitioner calls attention to the discussion in the opinion In re Lee, supra, to the effect that the indeterminate sentence law was enacted in view of the modern penological thesis that the punishment should be made to fit the criminal rather than the crime, and that the purpose of the law was to aid in the rehabilitation of the prisoner by giving him an inducement to cooperate in order to secure an early release. Starting from this premise, he argues that to permit the board to increase the term would allow it to defeat the purpose of the statute. But the discussion in In re Lee must not be taken as being by way of a limitation upon the power of the Legislature to authorize the board to determine and redetermine the time of imprisonment. It merely indicated the most compelling reason for the enactment of such a law. But in the last analysis, the interests of society must predominate. Ordinarily those interests are conserved best by rehabilitating a criminal so that he can fit into our social system when he is released, and the promise of a short sentence as a reward for good behavior helps toward rehabilitation. But the Legislature has left the whole problem to the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles, and we cannot say that the board has not exercised its discretion fairly. It is apparent from the record that it took into account the nature of the crime, the reports that were given it by the judge of the trial court and the district attorney and other information that came to its attention, including the admitted fact that the petitioner was a citizen of a country with which this nation was in a state of undeclared war. We cannot evaluate all of the factors in relation to each other in this proceeding because they are not before us. We must therefore hold that the action of the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles was legal and proper.

It is ordered that the writ be, and it is, discharged.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 418

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF SAN FRANCISCO UNIFIED SCHOOL DIST. et al. v. MULCAHY.

Civ. 11886.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 12, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Courts 🔑1

Where a court is accorded the power to hear and determine according to the law the truth of the charge made against a person, the court is exercising a "judicial function" and not an "administrative function". Const. art. 3, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Administrative Function" and "Judicial Function".

2. Courts 🔑1

In the exercise of an "administrative function" there is lacking the power to determine according to the law, and the most that such a function can embrace is the power to ascertain a fact or state of facts which will justify a course of action, but where it is concluded how the law operates upon a set of facts, the law must of necessity be declared. Const. art. 3, § 1.

3. Constitutional law 🔑74

Schools and school districts 🔑141(5)

The statute providing for judicial determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, whether they constitute sufficient grounds for teacher's removal, cast upon the court a "judicial function", and not an "administrative function" contrary to the Constitution. School Code, § 5.654; Const. art. 3, § 1.

4. Jury 🔑19(1)

The failure of statute setting up a special proceeding to provide for trial by jury does not render statute unconstitutional. Const. art. 1, § 7.

5. Jury 🔑12(1)

The constitutional guarantee of right to "trial by jury" refers to the right as it existed at common law, and does not secure right to trial by jury in any case which was not triable by jury as of right under common law of England. Const. art. 1, § 7.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Trial By Jury".

6. Jury 🔑19(12)

The failure of statute providing for judicial determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, whether they constitute sufficient grounds for teacher's dismissal, to provide for jury trial, does not render statute unconstitutional, since statute sets up a special proceeding, and constitutional guarantee of "trial by jury" does not secure the right in special proceedings. School Code, § 5.654; Const. art. 1, § 7.

7. Statutes 🔑96(1)

The legislation setting up machinery for dismissal of teacher who has attained permanent status under school code is not unconstitutional as "discriminatory" legislation attempting to deal with a particular class of teachers. School Code, §§ 5.653, 5.654; Const. art. 4, § 25.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Discriminatory".

8. Statutes 🔑96(1)

The provision in statute authorizing appeal direct from judgment in special proceeding for determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, sufficiency of charges as grounds for teacher's dismissal, without extending trial court's power of granting new trial, did not render statute unconstitutional as "discriminatory". School Code, § 5.654; Const. art. 4, § 25.

9. Judgment 🔑201

Where a reference is general, findings in report of referees form sufficient basis to support the judgment of the court.

10. Pleading 🔑271

The failure to verify complaint or petition is a defect in pleading not affecting jurisdiction of court, and such defect can be cured by amendment.

11. Schools and school districts 🔑141(5)

That complaint filed within 30-day period of limitation was not verified did not deprive court of jurisdiction in proceeding for judicial determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, sufficiency of charges as grounds for teacher's dismissal, where properly verified complaint in identical language was filed long before the action was tried. School Code, § 5.654.

12. Schools and school districts 🔑141(5)

In proceeding for judicial determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, sufficiency of charges as grounds for teacher's dismissal, teacher was not entitled to 90-day notice and opportunity to correct alleged deficiencies, where charge against teacher was mental condition unfitting her to instruct or associate with children. School Code, §§ 5.652, 5.654.

13. Schools and school districts 🔑141(5)

In action for determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, sufficiency of charges as grounds for teacher's dismissal, any error in admitting testimony of psychiatrist in the first instance was rendered harmless by referees in disregarding such testimony. School Code, § 5.654.

14. Schools and school districts 🔑141(4)

In action for determination of truth of charges against teacher, and if true, sufficiency of charges as grounds for teacher's dismissal, charge of mental condition unfitting teacher to instruct or associate with children was sufficient to support judgment that teacher could be dismissed, where charge was sustained by the evidence. School Code, § 5.654.

15. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Where there is evidence of a substantial nature to support finding, the finding will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Action by the Board of Education of the San Francisco Unified School District and others against Margaret Clare Mulcahy for a determination as to whether charges against defendant constituted sufficient grounds for her dismissal as a teacher. From the judgment, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

Chas. N. Douglas, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., and Irving G. Breyer, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem.

This action was instituted under the provisions of section 5.654 of the School Code by the Board of Education of the San Francisco Unified School District. The defendant is a teacher who has been employed in the schools of the district for a number of years and who has enjoyed the privileges of tenure under the school system. On September 14, 1937, the superintendent of schools of the district filed charges against her with the Board of Education, notice of which she received. She thereupon requested that a hearing be had on the charges pursuant to the provisions of section 5.653 of the School Code. The plaintiffs then exercised the election accorded them under the provisions of section 5.654 and filed this action. In due course the defendant filed an answer to the complaint and the case was set down for trial. Acting in accordance with the stipulation of the parties and the provisions of section 5.654 the court appointed three referees to conduct the hearing and report their findings to the court. The findings of the referees sustained all of the charges against the defendant. Exceptions to the findings and report were then presented to the trial court. After exhaustive hearings the findings and report of the referees were confirmed by the court as they were originally presented, and a judgment entered that the board might dismiss the defendant as an employee of the school district. It is from this judgment that the defendant appeals.

The charges against the defendant were on four separate grounds: "1. Mental condition unfitting her to instruct and/or associate with children. 2. Unprofessional conduct. 3. Evident unfitness for service. 4. Refusal to obey a reasonable regulation prescribed for the government of the Public Schools by the San Francisco Board of Education."

The sections of the School Code under which the action has been taken have been attacked on several different constitutional grounds. It is contended that class legislation is effected in violation of section 25 of article IV; that the right of trial by jury is denied in contravention of section 7 of article I; and that administrative functions are cast upon the court contrary to section 1 of article III.

[1-3] As is said in Board of Education v. Ballou, 21 Cal.App.2d 52, 55, 68 P.2d 389, 391: "The Legislature in 1935, by amending the School Code, brought about very significant changes in the procedure for dismissing permanent teachers for cause. Administrative school officials were deprived of the power to dismiss permanent teachers for cause and it was made necessary for the governing board, in order to bring about a dismissal, to file a complaint in the superior court 'asking that the court inquire into such charges and determine whether or not such charges are true, and if true, whether or not they constitute sufficient grounds for the dismissal of such employee, under the provisions of this code, and for judgment pursuant to its findings.' The Legislature has placed upon the judges the duty of determining whether a teacher should be dismissed when charges such as incompetency are filed. A duty essentially administrative has been withdrawn from administrative officials and imposed upon officials exercising judicial functions."

That a judicial determination as to the competency of a teacher against whom charges are made may be interpolated between the initial charge and the final order of dismissal is supported by both reason and authority. It is both fair and logical that the existence of proper grounds should be judicially determined before a teacher may be deprived of her right to tenure. In Wheatley v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 722, 279 P. 989, it is held that it may first be judicially determined by the superior court that the lands of an individual are susceptible of benefits before they may be included in a bridge and highway district. The procedure is not dissimilar to that here provided, where the superior court must first determine that the charges made against a teacher are true before she may be dismissed from her employment. It cannot be said that where a court is accorded the power to hear and determine according to the law the truth of a charge made against a person, the court is exercising an administrative and not a judicial function. In the exercise of an administrative function there is always lacking the power to determine according to the law. The most that it can embrace is the power to ascertain a fact, or state of facts, which will justify a course of action. Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, 8 Cal.2d 444, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1. But when it is concluded how the law operates upon a set of facts the law must of necessity be declared.

[4-6] A statute which sets up a special proceeding such as we have in this case, but which does not provide for a trial by jury, is not for that reason unconstitutional. Cline v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 331, 193 P. 929. There is no provision in the constitution guaranteeing the right to a trial by jury in all cases. As is said in Cline v. Superior Court, supra, at page 339 of 184 Cal., at page 932 of 193 P., "It is a settled proposition of law in this state that the right of trial by jury there referred to is the right as it existed at common law, and that it does not secure the right to a trial by jury in any case which was not triable by a jury, as of right, under the common law of England." Actions which are to be tried by a jury are enumerated in section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section was amended in 1874 narrowing the number of actions to be so tried, and in speaking of this amendment the court in Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 556, 147 P. 238, 243, said: "It is evident that this amendment made a radical change regarding the right to a jury trial. Under its provisions, in all actions except those enumerated in the opening clause, the issues of fact are to be tried by the court. The language is too clear on this point to require interpretation or to permit construction. The amendment was evidently framed with a view of adopting the principle decided in Koppikus v. State [Capitol Com'rs], 16 Cal. 248, that is, that the constitutional guaranty of the right to jury trial, in section 7, of article 1, applies only to common-law actions and that it does not confer such right with respect to any action as to which it did not previously exist. Accordingly it has always been held that this guaranty does not secure the right in special proceedings. Dorsey v. Barry, 24 Cal. [449] 453; [People ex rel.] Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. [579] 596."

[7] The contention of the defendant that the legislation setting up the machinery for the dismissal of a teacher who has attained a permanent status under the School Code is special and discriminatory and violative of section 25 of article IV in that it attempts to deal with a particular class of teachers, was made in the case of Grigsby v. King, 202 Cal. 299, 260 P. 789. It was there held that school boards are merely administrative agencies of the state created by statute, deriving all of their powers from the statute, and subject to all of the limitations imposed upon them by the legislature, and that a teacher is left free to seek employment in any district which she may select, the law operating only incidentally upon her. Such incidental operation, of course, affords no grounds of constitutional prohibition.

[8] Nor does the failure of section 5.654 to make mention of the power to grant a new trial render the section invalid under the provisions of section 25 of article IV of the constitution, as contended for by the appellant. A motion for a new trial is only a statutory remedy. Young v. Briggs, 17 Cal.App.2d 338, 61 P.2d 1223. There is nothing in the constitution pertaining to it, and if the legislature has seen fit to authorize an appeal direct from the judgment in a special proceeding of this character without extending to the court the power of granting a new trial, no discrimination is set up. As the court said in Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 326, 156 P. 486, 487, "It cannot be doubted that the Legislature could still further limit such grounds at will, or even altogether abolish the right to make such a motion on any ground." The fact that it may be extended by the legislature to certain kinds of cases and not to proceedings of a different character creates no discrimination. The law in either instance is open to all who may by their acts bring themselves under it, and it operates only incidentally upon those who do.

[9] Another argument advanced by the appellant is that no findings were made by the court. The reference, however, was general and for the purpose of a complete hearing by the referees. When the reference is general, the findings and report of the referees form a sufficient basis to support the judgment of the court. Blalock v. Dunger, 205 Cal. 782, 272 P. 1048.

[10, 11] An additional contention is that the action was not commenced within the time limited by the statute, in that the complaint filed within the thirty-day period of limitation was not verified. The argument of appellant in this respect is predicated on the assumption that verification of the complaint is a jurisdictional requirement. While it is true that in certain actions, such as to quiet title, and practically all special proceedings, the law requires the complaint or petition to be verified, it is the established rule that failure to do so constitutes only a defect in pleading not affecting the jurisdiction of the court, and which may be cured by amendment. Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 184 Cal. 173, 193 P. 102; Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Leale, 14 Cal.App. 307, 111 P. 759. The defect in the complaint here was corrected by a properly verified complaint in identical language filed long before the action was tried.

[12] The position taken by the appellant—that the case comes within the provisions of section 5.652 of the School Code, and that she was entitled to a ninety-day notice and an opportunity to correct the alleged deficiencies—is not tenable. This section expressly excepts physical and mental disability. In support of her position she makes the contention that the evidence produced is not sufficient to establish the charge of unfit mental condition. If this contention were sound, the case against her would, of course, fall, as the other charges come within the provisions of said section. Fresno City High School Dist. v. De Caristo, 33 Cal.App.2d 666, 92 P.2d 668.

[13-15] Criticism is particularly directed at the testimony of Dr. Twitchell, a psychiatrist. It is argued that the opinion given by him—that the appellant is a prosecutory type of a paranoid state, with no likelihood of improvement—is based entirely on hearsay, notwithstanding the doctor testified that he examined the appellant first in 1928 and again in 1937. The findings of the referees upon this particular charge, however, are not based upon the testimony of Dr. Twitchell. The report expressly states that the testimony of Dr. Twitchell was disregarded by the referees, and that they based their determination on other testimony in the case, particularly that of Miss Mulcahy herself. In the language of the report, "This state of mind is not only established by reputable witnesses whose honesty and integrity cannot be questioned, but its existence is also implicit in Miss Mulcahy's own testimony even when she is making denials." If any error occurred in admitting the testimony of Dr. Twitchell in the first instance, it was rendered harmless by the referees in disregarding it. The record discloses no prejudicial error, and contains ample evidence to support the finding of mental unfitness. This charge, being sustained by the evidence, is sufficient to support the judgment. In all cases where there is evidence of a substantial nature to support a finding it will not be disturbed on appeal. Webster v. Board of Dental Examiners, 17 Cal.2d 534, 110 P.2d 992.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 405

In re MILLER'S ESTATE.

MILLER et al. v. MILLER.

Civ. 13269.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

Executors and administratrix 🔑469(1)

Contentions that probate court was without jurisdiction to determine title to corporation stock and to determine whether corporation is alter ego of deceased, in probate proceeding, and that the issues could be raised only in connection with settlement of final account and not in settlement of account current, were without merit under the circumstances.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dudley S. Valentine, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Robert Miller, deceased, wherein Louise Miller filed objections to appointment of Emma Miller as administratrix with will annexed and petitioned for appointment of Louise Miller as administratrix. From judgment approving account current of William Jones as executor and denying petition of Emma Miller, Emma Miller appeals.

Affirmed.

Willcox & Judson and Rupert B. Turnbull, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

No appearance for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from two judgments of the Superior Court sitting in probate.

Robert Miller died on October 3, 1935. On November 5, 1935, William Jones was appointed executor of his will. On October 21, 1936, Raymond R. Hails filed a petition for revocation of letters and for his appointment as administrator with the will annexed of said estate. On December 31, 1936, Emma Miller filed an amended and supplemental petition for revocation of letters and for denial of petition of Raymond R. Hails for appointment as administrator of said estate, and for her appointment as administratrix with the will annexed. Thereafter, and on October 8, 1938, Louise Miller filed objections to the appointment of Emma Miller as administratrix with the will annexed and petitioned for her appointment as administratrix with the will annexed. Thereafter and on October 19, 1938, William Jones, as executor of the estate of said decedent, filed his account current and report of executor. Thereafter and on November 14, 1938, Emma Miller filed objections to the account current and report of executor. Thereafter the account current and petitions of the various parties came on regularly for hearing, at the conclusion of which appropriate findings of fact and conclusions of law in re account current were filed and the judgment followed.

At the same time there was heard the petition for letters of administration of R. R. Hails, objections of Emma Miller to his appointment, petition of Emma Miller for letters of administration, objections of Louise Miller to petition of Emma Miller, and petition of Louise Miller for letters of administration. These matters were also heard in the same court at the same time, before the same judge; findings filed and judgment entered accordingly. This appeal is from the two judgments above mentioned.

Without going into further details as to the facts, it is contended by appellant that the probate court is without jurisdiction to try and determine the title to corporation stock, and to determine whether a corporation is the alter ego of deceased, in a probate proceeding. Appellant relies on Stevens v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 148, 99 P. 512; Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820, 821. The cited cases are not in point. It is there held that: It is undoubtedly the rule "that the superior court, sitting in probate, is without jurisdiction to try the question of title to property as between a representative of the estate and strangers to the estate." (Italics added.) See, also, Estate of Roach, 208 Cal. 394, 281 P. 607. No such state of facts is presented in the within appeal.

It is also contended that the issues decided could only be raised in connection with the settlement of the final account. No authorities tending to sustain appellant in this regard are cited in appellant's brief, the only one filed. Although the point is not therein mentioned, the action upon which the issues arose in the Stevens case, supra, was based on the "first annual account."

The judgments are affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 436

AUSTIN et al. v. BOARD OF CIVIL SERVICE COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 12778.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 12, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨218(9)

A civil service employee is not necessarily denied right to have his case reviewed by the court because city charter provides that finding of civil service commission shall be conclusive, but test as to right of review is whether there was arbitrary action on part of city officers.

2. Mandamus ⟹72

Where a board or commission acts arbitrarily against vested rights of individuals, mandamus will lie to compel a recognition of such rights which it has denied in abuse of its discretion.

3. Municipal corporations ⟹206

Where city of Los Angeles, after purchasing utility owned by electric company, elected to retain former employees of company in its employ, as authorized by amendment to city charter, employees so retained were exempt from civil service provisions of charter, including any rule adopted by civil service commissioners pursuant thereto. St.1935, p. 2356, § 431.

4. Municipal corporations ⟹206

Where city of Los Angeles elected to retain former employees of electric company in city's employ after purchase of utility from company, as authorized by amendment to city charter providing that employees so retained shall be exempt from civil service provisions of charter, city properly laid off civil service employees before laying off retained company employees, where there was insufficient work for all employees. St. 1935, p. 2356, § 431.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Proceeding for writ of mandate by George E. Austin and others against the Board of Civil Service Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles and others to require city to suspend all former employees of electric company acquired by city who were retained in city's employ without complying with civil service requirements before civil service employees were suspended on account of a lack of work. From an adverse judgment, petitioners appeal.

Affirmed.

Leo B. Wayland and Frank L. Stearns, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., S. B. Robinson, Chief Asst. City Atty., and Gilmore Tillman, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

The City of Los Angeles, under a power contained in its city charter, owns and operates an electrical distributing system. The city charter also provides that employees of the city, carrying on this enterprise, are entitled to the benefits of a civil service system.

In 1937 a public utility owned by Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company was acquired by the city. Anticipating the acquirement of this, and possibly other utilities, and in order to fix the status of employees thereof who would thereby become employees of the city, the city charter was amended in 1935 by adding section 431, reading as follows: "Sec. 431. All persons employed in the operating service of any public utility hereafter acquired by the city, or any department thereof, at, and for at least one year immediately prior to, the date of such acquisition, may be retained and employed by the city, or such department, in their respective positions, as nearly as may be, and, so long as continuously so retained and employed in such positions, shall be exempt from the civil service provisions of this charter; provided, however, that no person not a citizen of the United States, shall be so retained and employed and that persons so retained and employed shall, within three months after such acquisition, conform to any residence requirements applicable to employees of said city, or department, in like positions." (Stats.1935, p. 2356.)

Upon the acquirement of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company property and in accordance with the above charter provision, a number of employees of the public utility became employees of the city. At the same time, and since then, there were and have been employed in the operation of the municipally owned system a number of civil service employees. For the purpose of distinction, we will hereafter refer to these two classes of employees as "public utility employees" and "civil service employees."

December 10, 1937, certain civil service employees were suspended for lack of work by the city. The city through its department of water and power, is empowered to determine the existence of a lack of work, and to suspend employees for that reason. In the event this is done, the Board of Civil Service Commissioners of the city determines whether such suspension violates any civil service rights of the suspended employee. The charter provides such determination shall be "final and conclusive." It is conceded that at the time there was in fact a lack of work which required the city to dispense with the services of at least some of its employees. These suspended civil service employees petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate, which, if granted, in effect would have required the city to discharge all public utility employees first when there was lack of work. Demurrer was interposed to this petition; it was by the court sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was rendered as against the petitioners. From this judgment they have appealed.

Respondents contend that the judgment should be affirmed for two reasons: (1) Because the courts have no right to review on the merits the suspension of a civil service employee when such suspension has been sustained by the Board of Civil Service Commissioners; (2) assuming there is a power of review in the courts, if there is lack of work, the city may suspend civil service employees and retain public utility employees, in accordance with the right so to do specifically given to it by said section 431 of the charter.

Appellants contend (a) that there is a right of review in the courts by application of the writ of mandate; (b) that the charter does not give to public utility employees the right of retention as against civil service employees when there is lack of work; and (c) that by laying off civil service employees, public utility employees were given a preferred position.

[1, 2] A civil service employee is not necessarily denied the right to have his case reviewed by the courts, because a city charter provides that the finding of the Civil Service Commission shall be final and conclusive. The test as to the right of review is to be found in the answer to the query as to whether there was arbitrary action on the part of the officers clothed with authority under the charter. As was said by this court in Lotts v. Board of Park Commissioners, 13 Cal.App.2d 625, 634, 57 P.2d 215, 220: "* * * it has been uniformly held that if a board or commission acts arbitrarily against the vested rights of individuals under the law, and therefore against the law itself, the board has not strictly, as is frequently said, 'abused its discretion'—a term which is responsible for some confusion of ideas on this subject—but in contemplation of law, under those circumstances, the board has not exercised its discretion at all, but has sought to substitute its arbitrary determination in opposition to rights guaranteed individuals by law." Under proper circumstances there may be a right of review by the courts of the state in cases of this kind.

[3, 4] This leaves for consideration then the single question which is determinative of this case: Was the action of the city in laying off civil service employees before laying off all of the public utility employees proper under the provisions of the city charter, in view of the amendment embodied in section 431?

This question has been before our Supreme Court, and by that court determined adversely to all of the contentions of the appellants.

In the case of Wallis v. Board of Civil Service Commissioners, 11 Cal.2d 430, 80 P.2d 972, 81 P.2d 428, the status of the class of employees of the City of Los Angeles which we have herein denominated public utility employees was settled. In that case at page 435 of the reported decision, at page 975 of 80 P.2d, the court points out that section 431 of the charter is a special provision applicable to the class to which these public utility employees belong. "The people of the city have so provided in their charter and there can be no question of their power so to do." Also, on the same page the court says: "When the conditions are present, as here, and the employing board has elected to exercise that power, the persons employed are exempt from all the civil service provisions of the charter, which would necessarily include any rule adopted by the civil service commissioners pursuant to the civil service provisions of the charter. To hold otherwise would be to accord greater force to the rule than to the charter itself and to nullify the latter."

In the case at bar, there was nothing arbitrary in the action of the city in laying off civil service employees before public utility employees when there was lack of work. The city was authorized under its charter to do exactly what was done as recited in the complaint presented to us on the appeal.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

YORK, P.J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 45

JANSSEN v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

HIBBARD v. SAME.

Civ. 12622.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 19, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 16, 1942.
Hearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Appeal and error ⟹74

Minute orders granting nonsuits were not "appealable orders" where they were superseded by judgments of dismissal from which appeals were taken, but propriety of such orders could be reviewed on the appeal from the judgment of dismissal. Code Civ. Proc. § 956.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Appealable Order".

2. Eminent domain ⟹122

In condemnation proceedings, all damages present and prospective that are the natural, necessary or reasonable incident of taking the property sought to be condemned must be assessed. Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Eminent domain ⟹243(2)

Where issues in condemnation proceeding were what was the market value of a parcel taken in 1935, and what damages would accrue to portion of land not condemned by reason of severance from portion condemned, and by reason of construction of improvement of San Gabriel river in manner proposed, and it could not have been anticipated at time of condemnation that as natural incident to improvement of river, landowners' land would be washed down the river, landowners were not precluded from recovering from flood control district for damages caused by washing away of land and destruction of trees on theory that such damage was an issue in condemnation proceeding and was finally determined therein. Const. art. 1, § 14.

4. Evidence ⟹10(5)

It is a matter of common knowledge that the San Gabriel river until recently flowed over and across lands privately owned.

5. Levees and flood control ⟹36

Where flood control district obtained easements from adjoining landowners for the purpose of construction and maintenance of a definite channel for the San Gabriel river and thereafter piling was driven alongside of bed of river, and material excavated from official channel was placed on strip of land back of piling and a wire fence in the form of a levee or embankment, and flood waters thereafter washed away part of adjoining landowners' land, adjoining landowners could not recover from district for damages on ground that plan to confine the waters of river in a single definite channel was inherently dangerous and wrong.

6. Levees and flood control ⟹36

Where flood control district obtained easements, drove piling and constructed embankment along land of abutting owners in effort to confine San Gabriel river to definite channel and thereafter flood waters damaged abutting owners' lands, owners alleging in effect that "from time immemorial" natural channel of river was sufficient and that certain trees removed by district had protected lands "from time immemorial" could not recover from district on ground that damage resulted from changing natural channel in absence of allegations or proof showing that river had a permanent channel, since allegation "from time immemorial" which is counterpart of expression since memory of man runneth not to the contrary and a poetic equivalent of "a long time" which is relative and indefinite was not sufficient as allegation of permanency.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "A Long Time" and "From Time Immemorial".

7. Levees and flood control ⟹36

Where no duty devolved on state to protect landowners from menace of flood waters of the San Gabriel river, flood control district could not be held liable for damage to landowners' land resulting from an unsuccessful attempt to confine waters of the San Gabriel river to a definite channel.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Goodwin J. Knight, Judge.

Consolidated actions for damage to land by Daisy Janssen and Hudson P. Hibbard, as trustee, etc., against the County of Los Angeles and others. From judgments of dismissal and from orders granting nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgments affirmed. Appeals from orders granting nonsuits dismissed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

Hibbard & Kleindienst and J. Garrison Gemmill, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and J. F. Moroney and Arthur Loveland, Deputies Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

The above-entitled actions, consolidated for trial, were brought by the respective plaintiffs, the legal owners of adjoining realty abutting the San Gabriel River, to recover damages for injury to their respective parcels of land. The defendants in each case are the county of Los Angeles, the Los Angeles County Flood Control District, C. H. Howell, who for a time was the chief engineer of said district, and Harold E. Hedger, Sr. (sued as Howard E. Hedger, Sr.) who was senior assistant chief engineer of the district from 1934 to 1938 and in charge of the work done in the San Gabriel River in 1935 and 1936, under the supervision of Chief Engineer Howell.

The injury here complained of is alleged to have been occasioned by the changing of the channel of the San Gabriel River by defendant in such a way that portions of plaintiffs' property and improvements were washed away during the heavy rains of March, 1938. The two parcels of land will be referred to in this opinion as the Janssen property and the Hibbard property.

[1] At the close of plaintiffs' case, defendants' motions for nonsuit were granted and judgments of dismissal were entered. Plaintiffs prosecute this appeal from the judgments of dismissal, as well as from the orders granting the nonsuit. While a minute order granting a nonsuit is not appealable where it was superseded by a judgment from which an appeal has been taken (Skaggs v. Taylor, 77 Cal.App. 519, 525, 247 P. 218; see, also, Scrimsher v. Reliance Rock Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 382, 390, 36 P.2d 688, and cases there cited), the propriety of such order may be reviewed upon the appeal from the judgment of dismissal. Sec. 956, Code Civ.Proc.

The record herein reveals that a resolution of the board of supervisors of said flood control district, dated October 30, 1935, provided that public necessity required the acquisition by the district of a heavily wooded strip of land across the east end of the Hibbard property for the construction and maintenance thereon of the official channel of the San Gabriel River. Accordingly, the county counsel was directed to institute proceedings for the purpose of condemning an easement across said land. The owner of the Janssen property granted a similar easement to the district.

In June, 1936, under a contract with said district, an independent contractor began installing a row of creosoted pilings driven into the ground approximately ten feet apart, along the west side of the river-bed from Florence Avenue (Easy Street) "upstream several hundred feet to and opposite * * * the Janssen property. On that piling was placed heavy redwood fencing held with wire." The top of the piling was approximately ten feet above the bed of the stream and five or six feet higher than the surface of the land adjoining the easement. Between the line of piling and the new east line of appellants' properties was a thirty-five foot strip of land which was a part of the easement acquired by the district through eminent domain proceedings and the grant from Janssen, as heretofore stated. The material which was excavated from the official channel was placed on this strip of land "back of the row of piling and wire fence * * * in the form of a levee or embankment." Before the contemplated improvement of the channel was made, the river made a sharp bend toward the south as it approached the Janssen property. This bend was changed to a gradual curve to the south in widening the channel of the river, the north line of the Janssen property being approximately at the center of such gradual curve. In straightening the channel it was necessary to clear away a thick growth of trees from the thirty-five foot strip, above referred to, which theretofore had afforded protection to appellants' land from the ravages of the river. At the time the work was begun there was in existence a row of untreated pilings covered with wire netting, northeast along the westerly bank of the river, commencing at the northerly edge of the Janssen property and extending upstream, but there is no evidence as to when or by whom such work was done.

In March, 1938, heavy rainfall on the drainage area of the river caused a flood which filled the river and washed a strip off the east end of the Janssen property and about 77/100ths of an acre from the northeast corner and east end of the Hibbard property. The flood waters also washed away some of the untreated pilings north of the Janssen property, as well as some of the creosoted pilings; debris and trees were carried back of these pilings, and some of the debris lay upon the pilings which were left in place. A portion of the dike west of the pilings was eroded. The soil on both properties adjacent to the river "is alluvial soil which erodes quite easily."

Appellants contend that respondents "are liable under Article I, Section 14 of the California Constitution because of damage resulting necessarily from planning, constructing and maintaining works that changed the natural channel of the river, and destroyed natural protection from the waters thereof." It is also urged that the court erred in sustaining objections to evidence which, it is claimed, tended to prove not only "the negligence of the District in planning and constructing works which changed the course of the San Gabriel River so as to divert waters upon plaintiffs' lands, but also * * * of taking and damaging private property for public use without compensation."

The consolidated appeal is presented to this court upon a bill of exceptions specifying twenty-seven erroneous rulings of the trial court in sustaining objections to proffered evidence.

It is urged by respondents (1) that "the trial court adopted the view early in the proceedings that the Los Angeles County Flood Control District as a state agency is not liable for damages resulting solely from the negligence of its officers and employees," and made its rulings rejecting appellants' proffered evidence "in conformity with such view"; and (2) that "the question of damage to the Hibbard property by the construction of the protection work contemplated in 1935 was completely adjudicated in the eminent domain proceeding."

In connection with point 2 above, the record shows that respondents were permitted to file an amendment to their answer herein alleging that the right of appellant Hibbard to be compensated for the destruction of the trees upon the parcel condemned was an issue in the condemnation proceedings and was finally determined therein. The judgment roll in the condemnation proceedings was introduced at the trial herein, from which it appears that two issues were presented to the jury in said proceedings, to wit: "First, what was the market value of said parcel (sought to be taken) on the 30th day of October, 1935? Second, the damages, if any, which will accrue to that portion of the land of said defendants not sought to be condemned by reason of its severance from the portion sought to be condemned and by reason of the construction of the improvement of the San Gabriel River in the manner proposed."

On the question of severance damages, the jury was instructed as follows:

"Severance damages, so-called, are the amounts to be awarded the defendants when the remaining property owned by them is depreciated in its market value by reason of the severance therefrom of the part sought to be condemned. In this case the taking of the part sought to be condemned will sever from the entire property owned by the defendants a portion of such property and you are called upon to find what extent, if at all, such remaining portion will be depreciated in its market value. In so doing you may consider what detriment, if any, such remaining portion will sustain by reason of the taking and severance therefrom of the part sought to be condemned and the construction thereon of the improvement, to-wit, the removal of all trees therefrom and the construction of a channel for the San Gabriel River. If you believe that such remaining portion will not suffer any depreciation in its market value by reason of such severance, the treatment of the part severed, and such construction, then it is your duty to find that no severance damages shall be awarded.

"If you find from all of the evidence that the property of defendants not herein sought to be condemned has sustained severance damages, you should award to the defendants such amount as you shall find such property to have been damaged, that is, the difference between the market value of the property on October 30, 1935, and before its severance from the property sought to be condemned in this action, and its value after such severance and with the improvements made in the manner proposed by the plaintiff."

The record does not disclose that any severance damage was awarded in the condemnation proceedings, and it is so asserted as a fact by appellants in their closing brief, where they call attention to the fact that the only issue respecting the property not condemned "was the diminution in market value by reason of the severance therefrom of the land condemned and by reason of the construction of the improvement;

no award was made covering the actual taking, i. e., the actual invasion 'by superinduced additions of water' (Pumpelly v. Green [Bay & M. Canal Co.], 13 Wall. 166 [20 L.Ed. 557]), resulting in the inundation and washing away of plaintiff's land, thus making it a part of the stream-bed itself." (Italics included.)

[2] In Sutro Heights Land Co. v. Merced Irr. Dist., 211 Cal. 670, 694, 296 P. 1088, 1097, the court, quoting from Farmers' Reservoir & Irr. Co. v. Cooper, 54 Colo. 402, 130 P. 1004, said: " 'In condemnation proceedings all damages, present and prospective, that are the natural, necessary, or reasonable incident of taking the property sought to be condemned, must be assessed.' " (Italics added.)

Again, in Turpen v. Turlock Irr. Dist., 141 Cal. 1, 3, 74 P. 295, it is held that "damages caused by the seepage from faulty construction of the canal could not have well been anticipated, and were not included in the condemnation proceeding."

[3] It surely could not have been anticipated at the time of the condemnation proceedings in 1935 that as a natural, necessary or reasonable incident to the improvement of the San Gabriel River, appellants' land would be washed down the river. From what can be ascertained from the excerpts from the condemnation proceedings appearing in the record now before this court, it seems clear that the damages which appellants here allege they have sustained were neither considered nor determined in those proceedings.

Referring to respondents' argument, heretofore noted, to the effect that appellants' proffered evidence was properly rejected in conformity with the view adopted by the trial court early in the proceedings, it is shown by the record that the greater portion of the rejected evidence was offered in an attempt to prove that the plan for improvement of the channel of the San Gabriel River was inherently wrong in its inception.

Appellant states the major question as follows: "Does the inundation and washing away of privately owned land abutting a river, resulting from the change by a county and county flood control district of the natural channel of the river, followed by failure to provide adequate protection against, and a waterway sufficient to carry, the water which reasonably might be expected to flow in such river, when such adequate protection and sufficient waterway existed before said change, constitute taking and damaging of private property in violation of Article I, section 14, of the California Constitution?"

Appellants' opening brief sets forth the following under the heading "Opening Statement":

"The above entitled actions, consolidated for the purpose of trial and appeal, were brought by Daisy Janssen and Hudson P. Hibbard, Trustee for Kathryn Kleindienst Schlens and Louis Ball Kleindienst, the legal owners, respectively, of parcels of realty abutting the San Gabriel river in the county of Los Angeles, California, to recover damages for injury to their parcels of land occasioned by the changing of the channel of said river by the defendants in such a way that portions of said land and improvements were inundated and washed away.

"The complaint in each case alleges that more than one-half of the precipitation and runoff of the waters originating in Los Angeles County occur in the San Gabriel mountain area; that the principal stream of said area is the San Gabriel river which flows in a southerly direction into the Pacific Ocean; that such realty was and is situated on the western bank of the San Gabriel river, a short distance northerly of the point where said river is crossed by a road known as Florence avenue, formerly called Easy street, a public highway in Los Angeles County; that during periods of heavy rainfall the flow of water in this river reaches enormous proportions, and, if unchecked, would erode and inundate large areas of land adjacent thereto, which facts were known to defendants and each of them at all times mentioned; that in order to protect riparian lands, other than those of the plaintiffs, from inundation and erosion, defendants Los Angeles County and Los Angeles Flood Control District excavated, widened, straightened and executed works along the banks of said river." (Italics added.)

Briefly, it will be seen from the foregoing that the cause of action as argued by appellants is based on the contention that respondents changed the natural channel of the San Gabriel River in such a way that the alleged damage resulted. In this connection, it is not urged that the damage resulted from the negligence of officers and employees of a public corporation, but that the alleged damage resulted from the negligence of the corporation itself; that "the negligence or wrongful act of the state agency itself in planning and causing to be constructed works which reasonably should have been expected to," did in fact "cause the damage complained of." Quoting from appellants' brief: "Correctly stated, our contention is that defendants are liable under Article I, Section 14, of the California Constitution, because of damage resulting necessarily from planning, constructing and maintaining works that changed the natural channel of the river, and destroyed natural protection from the waters thereof. Not only was this point an issue raised by the pleadings, but evidence was offered and rejected in proof thereof * * *." Again quoting from appellants' brief for the purpose of setting forth in greater detail appellants' position, the following appears:

"For the convenience of the Court, and because of its importance to the real issues of this case, we quote the question as to which objection was sustained resulting in this exception:

"'Assuming that the work and the plan thereof consisted of piling or posts driven into the ground at intervals of ten feet, with heavy fence wire nailed to it on the river bed side, while piling or posts were driven in a line parallel to and 35 feet east of the easterly line of the present Hibbard-Kleindienst property, which piling or posts so driven extended from a point east of the northerly line of said property to Easy street, and that in connection with said piling an excavation was made on the east side thereof to the avenue level, and that the dirt from said excavation was placed on the west side of said line of piling or posts to act as protection against the flood waters that might get through the fence; basing your answer upon these assumptions, I will ask you, was such a plan and construction proper engineering?'

"We reiterate that respondents admit the witness' qualifications as an expert. Each assumption made in this hypothetical question was either actually in evidence or covered by an offer of proof that it was an accomplished fact and, in addition, was shown to have been a part of the plan under which defendants performed the work. The specific question based on this assumption goes to the very heart of the point at issue: Was the plan and construction proper engineering? In other words, was the plan inherently dangerous and wrong? If the answers to these questions were negative and affirmative respectively, it follows irresistibly that the District itself, as distinguished from its servants and employees, performed a wrongful act as to which it cannot claim immunity." (Italics included.)

In other words, it is appellants' contention, adopting substantially the language of appellants' brief, that if the Flood Control District, as a governmental agency, by planning and causing to be constructed works which were inherently dangerous and wrong, even though negligence of the governmental agency itself be a part of such planning and construction, all as distinguished from mere misfeasance of agents, servants and employees in negligently executing a proper plan, caused the injury complained of, such governmental agency must respond in damages.

The respondent Flood Control District's reply to the above argument is as follows, quoting from respondents' brief: "The improvements constructed by the District did not divert or propel the water of the river upon plaintiffs' lands. They merely failed to prevent said waters from going in the direction which they would have gone if there had been no protection work there at all. The plaintiffs were damaged in spite of what defendants did, not because of what defendants did." (Italics included.) Perhaps a more accurate statement would be, that the improvements merely failed to prevent said waters from going in the direction which they could or might have gone, if there had been no protection work there at all. Whether they "would have gone" is problematical. That the waters did in fact follow such a course is conclusive proof, however, of the possibility that they could or might do so.

Before giving further consideration to the contentions of the parties, it is important at this point to describe the San Gabriel River and as well the character of the territory traversed by its waters. For that purpose, although a matter of common knowledge, a description by those peculiarly qualified may be adopted with propriety. Referring to the territory as a large continuous plain, Mr. Fenneman describes it as follows:

"This plain represents mainly the combined deltas of the Los Angeles, San Gabriel and Santa Ana Rivers. Like the plains more remote from the sea, this one is therefore composed of detritus washed down from the mountains. * * *

"The western (area) traversed by the San Gabriel River is separated by the San Jose Hills from the larger eastern basin of the Santa Ana River. The alluvial slope near the mountains may be as steep as 500 feet to the mile, but it quickly flattens and near the southern margin may be 50 feet to the mile. * * * In this arid climate and with this porous material, such slopes are insufficient for erosion, and the surface of the plain remains essentially without local relief. * * *

"The streams of this section are actively degrading their mountain courses and are aggrading their valley reaches with corresponding rapidity. The amount of porous alluvium already laid down is so large that all streams sink in and disappear within a few miles of the mountain base, sometimes within a few hundred feet. Beyond the point of their disappearance in dry weather, their courses may be traced as dry 'washes' or 'sand washes,' used only in time of flood when the stream reaches farther out on the alluvial slope. Such stream courses commonly consist of a network instead of a single channel. The larger streams have more or less continuous washes reaching to the sea but all such streams are 'interrupted,' i. e., their courses consist of alternating stretches of dry wash and flowing water. Where the alluvium is deep and porous, the water percolates slowly through it in a down stream direction but does not appear at the surface except in time of flood. Where the underlying rock approaches the surface and obstructs percolation, the stream flows at the surface." (Physiography of the United States by Nevin M. Fenneman.)

Mr. Hill, in referring to the San Gabriel River, among others, describes them as follows:

"It is a further anomaly that the older portions of our rivers, as seen in the areas of our valley plains, are apparently the least indented ('canyoned'), inasmuch as their traces are constantly being filled and abandoned by processes of distributive aggradation." Robert T. Hill, Southern California Geology, p. 215.

Manifestly, the above descriptions refer to conditions in their natural state. It is at once evident that from the very nature and character of the underlying processes that built the coastal plain, above described, the waters of the so-called San Gabriel River, in their natural state, were migratory. Such conditions existed at the time the lands first passed from their wild and natural state to the state ordinarily subject to civilized use. Such uncontrolled waters were a constant menace to landowners, for the processes of aggradation were bound to continue until and unless such waters were controlled.

[4] It is further an historical fact and a matter of common knowledge that the San Gabriel River, until recently, flowed over and across lands privately owned. Under such conditions, it was only natural that landowners undertook to and did in fact in many instances protect their land against vagrant waters and flood damage as well. This action on the part of some owners only increased the hazard as to others, but the common enemy rule under such circumstances clearly applied and no liability accrued. As a result of such individual efforts, however, the waters of the San Gabriel River had the appearance of a channel at various points throughout its general course, but such channel obviously was artificial and at most only temporary.

It was the above-described condition, which is a matter of historical and common knowledge, that the respondent Flood Control District sought to remedy.

Pursuant to such a purpose, a strip of land was purchased or condemned, within which it was intended the waters of the so-called San Gabriel River should be confined and a definite channel thereby established.

[5] Returning now to a consideration of appellants' contentions, it is at once apparent that the argument, in substance to the effect that respondent Flood Control District changed the natural channel of the San Gabriel River, is untenable. The further contention that the so-called "plan" was "inherently dangerous and wrong" is equally untenable. The argument, which is clearly fallacious, proceeds from a false premise, and evidently is the result of not only a confusion of terms, but also an unwarranted assumption of facts. Whether by the term "plan" is meant the purpose of the Flood Control District to confine the waters in a single definite channel, or the manner in which such purpose was to be effected, in either case the invalidity of the argument remains, for obviously neither the purpose nor the manner can be successfully assailed as inherently dangerous and wrong. It may be true that the specifications may have been faulty and as a result inadequate dikes or barriers constructed, but such faults at most merely indicate errors of judgment of employees of the district, and in no sense signify anything inherently dangerous or wrong in the "plan."

[6] Equally without merit is the argument that respondents changed the natural channel of the river. In this connection it is significant that the channel is not alleged to be permanent. Had the facts and the evidence thereof supported such a description, other doctrines clearly would apply. But, the nearest approach to an allegation of permanency in the Janssen case is, "That the natural channel of said river had from time immemorial served as a sufficient waterway * * *." And in the Hibbard case, "That several acres of plaintiff's realty consisted, prior to works and alterations erected by defendants, as hereinafter more fully set forth, of a dense stand of large cottonwood, oak, elm, black walnut and willow trees which from time immemorial had served to turn the flow of water to the south and at the same time protect plaintiff's realty from being washed away." The expression "from time immemorial" is but the counterpart of the expression "since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." Such expressions are only the poetic equivalent of "a long time" which, being purely relative, therefore is indefinite. In no sense can such phrases be regarded as allegations of permanency. Nor indeed could it be truthfully alleged that the waters of the San Gabriel River at any time ever flowed in a permanent channel. The geological history of the area, as above described, definitely refutes such a contention. The conclusion is inevitable that, in so far as the asserted cause of action here considered is concerned, it cannot be based on the alleged changing of a channel when the fact is there was no channel to change. The action of the Flood Control District was an effort to locate, establish and maintain a channel, but not to change one.

[7] It should be noted that, under the circumstances alleged in the complaints herein, no duty, legal or moral, devolved upon the state to come to the rescue of landowners. Moreover, although the state may undertake to reduce or remove such menaces, no guaranty of complete success accompanies such an undertaking, and occasional failures of the character here considered create no liability. It may be that unfortunate victims may dispute the justice of such a doctrine, but on the other hand, if it were otherwise there would be slight if any incentive for the state to extend its aid at all.

Plaintiffs, ab initio, had no cause of action. That there is no liability for negligence of employees of the Flood Control District, there can be no question. But a cause of action based on the alleged negligence of the Flood Control District does not necessarily follow. The attempt to differentiate between the employees and the district, as such, and by a circuitous process of reasoning assail a so-called "plan" as negligent, does not affect the conclusion, above noted, that no cause of action exists. Therefore, there can have been no error in granting the motions for nonsuit.

The appeals from the orders granting the motions for nonsuit are dismissed, and the judgments appealed from are affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

ANDREWS v. POLICE COURT OF CITY OF STOCKTON.*

Civ. 6607.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 13, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 9, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 11, 1942.

Mandamus ⚷62

Mandamus would not issue to compel city police court to strike from and "expunge" from its records complaint and judgment and all records pertaining to a prosecution of petitioner, even if police court was without jurisdiction to hear the case, since there was no duty imposed upon the court to expunge from its records a void judgment. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 473, 1085.

"Expunge" means to destroy or obliterate; it implies not a legal act, but a physical annihilation.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Expunge".

---

* Subsequent opinion 133 P.2d 398.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by John Andrews against the Police Court of the City of Stockton. From a judgment denying petition for writ of mandate, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Alfred J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph C. Tope, City Atty., and H. C. Stanley, Asst. City Atty., both of Stockton, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment denying a petition for writ of mandate.

On June 20, 1935, a complaint was filed in the Police Court of the City of Stockton, charging petitioner with the crime of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Thereafter, petitioner appeared in said court with counsel, and pled guilty to said charge. He now seeks, through mandamus, to compel said court "to strike from and expunge from the records of said Police Court, the said complaint and judgment and all records pertaining to said case," upon the ground that said court had no jurisdiction over the offense.

Section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure, referring to mandamus, provides as follows: "It may be issued by any court, except a municipal, justice's or police court, to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station; or to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which he is entitled, and from which he is unlawfully precluded by such inferior tribunal, corporation, board or person."

Assuming that the Police Court was without jurisdiction, we can find no statute which makes it the duty of a court to expunge such documents from its records. It is true that void judgments and orders may be vacated under certain circumstances, but "expunging" the actual documents from the record is quite another matter. The latter term means to destroy or obliterate. Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed. It implies not a legal act, but a physical annihilation.

Appellant relies upon the following portion of Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "The court may, upon motion of the injured party, or its own motion, correct clerical mistakes in its judgment or orders as entered, so as to conform to the judgment or order directed, and may, on motion of either party after notice to the other party, set aside any void judgment or order."

We can find no legal duty imposed upon the court by said section which makes it the clear duty of said court to expunge from its records a void judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and STEEL, Justice pro tem., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 440

In re MURPHY'S ESTATE.

MURPHY v. KENDALL.

Civ. 6695.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 12, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 11, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Courts 🔑202(5)

The section of Probate Code relating to appealable orders, taken with section of Code of Civil Procedure relating to cases in which appeals may be taken from superior court, determines the right of appeal in probate matters. Probate Code, § 1240; Code Civ. Proc., § 963, subd. 3.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑20(10)

An order refusing to grant letters of administration is appealable. Probate Code, § 1240.

3. Appeal and error 🔑108

Findings of fact are not appealable.

4. Appeal and error 🔑74

An order refusing to vacate a final judgment is not appealable when grounds upon which order is sought existed before the entry of judgment and were therefore available on appeal from the judgment.

5. Appeal and error ⚿113(2)

An appeal does not lie from an order refusing to vacate an order itself not appealable.

6. Appeal and error ⚿792

Where an appeal does not lie, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and may dismiss it on its own motion.

7. Appeal and error ⚿907(4)

Where record did not contain all the evidence taken on trial, appellate court must presume that, had complete record been brought before the appellate court, it would appear therefrom that evidence would justify the findings upon which order appealed from was based.

8. Wills ⚿386

Whether the inharmonious relations between testator's wife and testator's daughter by a prior marriage influenced testator in disposing of his property, and, if so, to what extent, was a question for trial court.

9. Appeal and error ⚿1011(1)

The finding of trial court on conflicting evidence is final if reasonably supported.

10. Executors and administrators ⚿20(7)

Evidence warranted refusal to grant letters of administration to testator's daughter by a prior marriage, on ground that testator's will was not obtained by undue influence of testator's wife.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of S. S. Murphy, deceased, wherein W. S. Kendall, executor, etc., of the estate of Alice K. Murphy, deceased, objected to the petition of Lula Mignon Murphy for letters of administration. From an order refusing the petition of Lula Mignon Murphy for letters of administration, from an order refusing to vacate such order, from findings of fact, and from an order refusing to vacate an order denying sustitution of parties, Lula Mignon Murphy appeals.

Order refusing to grant letters of administration affirmed, and appeals in other respects dismissed.

Lula Mignon Murphy, in pro. per., for appellant.

John R. Cronin, of Stockton, for respondent.

HELD, Justice pro tem.

There is here an appeal from an order refusing appellant's petition for letters of administration, from an order refusing to vacate the order just referred to, from the findings of fact, and from an order refusing to vacate an order denying appellant's application for substitution of parties.

[1, 2] Orders appealable in probate are those designated in section 1240, Probate Code. That section, taken with subdivision 3, section 963, Code Civ.Proc., determines the right of appeal in probate matters. Estate of Olmstead, 216 Cal. 585, 15 P.2d 495; Estate of O'Dea, 15 Cal.2d 637, 104 P.2d 368. The order refusing to grant letters of administration is one of those mentioned in section 1240, Probate Code, and an appeal therefore lies therefrom. None of the other orders from which appellant purports to appeal here are designated in that section.

[3-5] It has been expressly held that there is no appeal from findings of fact. Muchenberger v. City of Santa Monica, 206 Cal. 635, 636, 275 P. 803; Ouzoonian v. Vaughan, 64 Cal.App. 369, 221 P. 958 (on rehearing); Mardesich v. City of Los Angeles, 113 Cal.App. 143, 298 P. 72. Nor is there an appeal from an order refusing to vacate a final judgment, when the grounds upon which the order is sought existed before the entry of judgment, and were therefore available on appeal from the judgment. Nagelmann v. McIntyre, 27 Cal.App.2d 621, 81 P.2d 466; Lawson v. Guild, 215 Cal. 378, 10 P.2d 459. As was said in People v. Palmer, 49 Cal.App.2d 579, 122 P.2d 114: "It also is well established that an order made after judgment is not appealable where the motion or application merely asks the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts." Nor, does an appeal lie from an order refusing to vacate an order itself not appealable. Christensen v. Lucerne Holding Co., 134 Cal.App. 215, 25 P.2d 261. The purported appeal arising out of the motion to substitute parties is, therefore, ineffective.

[6] Where an appeal does not lie, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to entertain the same, and may dismiss it on its own motion. Adams v. Christopher, 112 Cal.App. 37, 296 P. 85.

There remains, therefore, to be considered the appeal from the order refusing to grant appellant's petition for letters of administration.

The record here discloses that S. S. Murphy died on February 5, 1936, and left surviving a widow Alice K. Murphy, and appellant, Lula Mignon Murphy, a daughter by a former wife. Alice K. Murphy has since died, and respondent W. S. Kendall was appointed administrator of her estate.

On March 13, 1911, appellant instituted an action against her father, alleging in the complaint that she was a poor person, afflicted with disease, and unable to work to support herself, and that her father was financially able to contribute to her support. Judgment was rendered in that action on March 21, 1912, directing S. S. Murphy to pay to appellant herein the sum of $15 per month from January 5, 1912. In her efforts to realize on this judgment, the daughter instituted several actions prior to the death of her father. A history of the litigation is set forth in the decision of this court in Murphy v. Riecks, 40 Cal.App. 1, 180 P. 15.

Following the death of her father, appellant sought recourse against his estate, in her efforts to recover on the judgment aforesaid. The first action was one instituted on June 24, 1936, against Alice K. Murphy, as administratrix of his estate. It appearing, however, that defendant therein had not been appointed as administratrix, that action was abandoned. Thereupon, appellant, on August 3, 1936, filed a petition praying that Alice K. Murphy be appointed administratrix. She filed a similar petition on January 20, 1938, but the record fails to disclose what disposition was made of either petition. However, on August 10, 1938, appellant filed still another petition, again seeking the appointment of Alice K. Murphy as administratrix. In that proceeding, Alice K. Murphy appeared and declined to accept appointment as administratrix, and filed objections setting forth that S. S. Murphy left no estate, and also that he left a last will and testament, which was then placed on file with the clerk of the court. After a hearing, the court, on September 6, 1938, denied appellant's petition. No appeal was taken from this order. On December 12, 1938, appellant filed a petition seeking her own appointment as administratrix of her father's estate, in which was alleged the denial of the last prior petition, the execution of the will, and that said will was the product of undue influence exerted upon the deceased by Alice K. Murphy. The latter appeared by motion to strike from the files the pleading of appellant last referred to. This motion was granted by the court on April 24, 1939. On May 1, 1939, appellant filed a petition praying the admission of said will to probate, and three days later filed a contest of said will on the ground of undue influence. On June 21, 1939, appellant's petition for probate of the will was denied by the court, without prejudice. The reason for such denial does not appear in the record. However, on June 27, 1939, appellant filed her petition praying that the court vacate the order of June 21, 1939, and, on June 30, 1939, she filed an unverified petition for the issuance of letters of administration to herself; and on July 10, 1939, said petition was amended by the addition of a verification. On the same date, the court vacated its order of June 21, 1939. On October 20, 1939, respondent W. S. Kendall, as executor of the will of Alice K. Murphy, deceased, filed objections to the issuance of letters of administration to appellant. On November 10, 1939, a hearing was had on the petition of appellant and the objection of respondent. After the evidence was taken, the petition was denied by the court on that day. On December 6, 1939, findings were filed, and on December 7, 1939, judgment was entered denying appellant's petition for letters of administration. Prior to the filing of findings and the entry of judgment, the appellant, on November 15, 1939, gave notice of motion, accompanied by supporting papers, to vacate the order of November 10, 1939. After the findings were filed, and the judgment entered, appellant amended the supporting papers, and also added thereto a motion to strike portions of the findings. On December 19, 1939, the court ordered an amendment of the findings, and on December 27, 1939, denied appellant's motion to vacate the order of November 10, 1939.

The petition for letters of administration having been met with an allegation that there was an existing will, the trial court at the time of entering upon the hearing of November 10, 1939, and before the taking of testimony, in accordance with the rule laid down in Re Estate of Edwards, 154 Cal. 91, 97 P. 23, that it is more orderly to postpone the hearing of an application for intestate letters until it be determined whether a known will is or is not valid and admissible to probate, suggested suspension of the proceedings on the petition for letters of administration until a determination as to the validity of the will had been had. As an alternative, the court suggested that if jurisdiction were not involved, and if the petitions on file collectively presented the issue of validity of the will, the matter could, by stipulation of counsel, be heard in the trial then about to begin. Such a stipulation was entered into, and the court proceeded to hear the evidence. Formal proof of the execution of the will was made. Appellant then produced evidence in support of her allegations of undue influence. Respondent also produced evidence on the issue; and, on contradictory evidence, the court found the allegations of undue influence to be untrue, and found, also, that the will was valid in every respect; that it was the last will of deceased, and regularly and duly executed according to law. As a conclusion from these facts, the court determined that the petition of appellant should be denied. The judgment from which an appeal is taken was thereupon entered.

[7] The record upon which the court is now called upon to determine the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the lower court is brought here by bill of exceptions. This document is authenticated by the certificate of the trial judge, which certificate recites in part that "The foregoing, referred to as a bill of exceptions, contains excerpts from the evidence adduced at the trial." Confronted by the fact, as appears from this certificate, that the record does not contain all the evidence taken on the trial, we must presume that had the complete record been brought before this court, it would appear therefrom that the evidence would justify the findings upon which the order appealed from is based. Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476.

[8-10] However, we have carefully examined the evidence which is included in the bill of exceptions, and we find therein not the slightest indication that the beneficiary of the will attempted to influence the testator in its execution; indeed, it does not even appear that she had knowledge of the existence of the document prior to the death of her husband. There is some evidence given by appellant that the relations between herself and Mrs. Murphy were not harmonious, but whether this situation influenced the testator in disposing of his property, and if so, to what extent, was a question for the trial court. At the most, there was a conflict of evidence, on which the finding of the trial court is final, if reasonably supported. Homer Laughlin Engineers Corp. v. J. W. Leavitt & Co., 116 Cal.App. 197, 2 P.2d 511.

The appeals from the findings of fact, from the order denying the motion to vacate the order refusing to grant letters of administration to appellant, and from the order denying appellant's motion to vacate the denial of her application for substitution of parties, are each dismissed. The order refusing to grant letters of administration to appellant is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 492

PEOPLE v. SCRANTON.

Cr. 2218.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 17, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑1177

Where defendant who had pleaded guilty to second-degree burglary on application for probation admitted two prior convictions of burglary and of attempt to commit burglary and court entered order granting probation which order was revoked for violation of the probation and thereafter court entered a judgment of conviction, alleged error in granting probation did not prejudice defendant. Pen.Code, § 1203.

2. Criminal law 🔑1023(12)

Where defendant who had pleaded guilty to second-degree burglary in application for probation admitted two prior convictions, and court entered an order granting probation and thereafter revoked the order for violation of the probation and entered a judgment of conviction, and no appeal was taken from the judgment, defendant could not appeal from order denying motion to vacate the judgment since neither order granting probation, nor order revoking probation nor the judgment was void and defendant should have sought his remedy by appeal from the judgment. Pen.Code, § 1203.

3. Criminal law ⚿=1023(12)

Ordinarily a party who has a right to appeal from judgment or order is not allowed to move to set it aside and then appeal from an order denying his motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George J. Steiger, Judge.

Lester Scranton was convicted of second-degree burglary and appeals from an order refusing to vacate the judgment of conviction.

Affirmed.

Lester Scranton in pro. per.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendant made a motion to vacate a judgment of conviction previously entered, under which judgment he had been sentenced to state prison. His motion was denied and he filed a written notice of appeal stating that he appealed "from the order denying defendant's substantial rights." We will assume for the purpose of this discussion that said notice of appeal was sufficient as a notice of appeal from the order denying defendant's motion to vacate the judgment of conviction.

In 1939, defendant entered a plea of guilty to a charge of burglary. The degree was fixed as second degree and defendant applied for probation. While defendant had not been charged with any prior convictions, he admitted on the hearing of his application for probation that in 1927 he had been convicted of the crime of attempt to commit burglary and had served a term therefor in the state prison at San Quentin and that in 1935, he had been convicted of the crime of burglary and had served a term therefor in the state prison at Walla Walla, Washington. The trial court nevertheless entered its order granting probation to defendant for a period of five years, and further ordered, as a condition of probation, that defendant be confined in the county jail for one year. Defendant was so confined in the county jail but after his release therefrom, he violated his probation and a motion was made for the revocation thereof. On April 25, 1941, a hearing was had and motion to revoke probation was granted. A judgment of conviction was entered on the same day sentencing defendant to the state prison. No appeal was taken from said judgment.

[1] Defendant's motion to vacate said judgment was filed on November 5, 1941. It was stated therein that the motion was made upon the ground "That the trial court was without jurisdiction to sentence the defendant to the state prison by revoking a null and void order of probation and using null and void order of probation as basis for a valid judgment." Defendant's claim that the order granting probation was null and void was based upon the fact that he had suffered the above-mentioned prior convictions and was therefore not entitled to probation. We may assume, without deciding, that the trial court erred in granting probation under the circumstances, Penal Code, section 1203, but it is difficult to understand how defendant was prejudiced by such alleged error or how he can now be entitled to any relief based upon the claim that he was erroneously granted favorable action upon his own application for probation when he was not entitled to such favorable action.

[2, 3] We believe, however, that the complete answer to defendant's position on this appeal is that, upon the face of the record, neither the order granting probation, nor the order revoking probation, nor the judgment of conviction was void, and if defendant felt that any prejudicial error had been committed in the proceedings, he should have sought his remedy by an appeal from the judgment of conviction. He did not do so but long after the time for appeal from said judgment had expired, he made his motion to vacate said judgment. "Ordinarily a party who has a right to appeal from a judgment or order is not allowed to move to set it aside and then appeal from an order denying his motion." 8 Cal.Jur. 495, sec. 510; see, also, People v. Zolotoff, 48 Cal.App.2d 360, 119 P.2d 745; People v. Flohr, 30 Cal.App.2d 576, 86 P.2d 862; People v. Simpson, 41 Cal.App.2d 526, 107 P.2d 262; People v. Carkeek, 35 Cal.App.2d 499, 96 P.2d 132. While there are certain exceptional circumstances, as indicated in the cited cases, under which such a motion may be entertained by a trial court and an appeal will lie from an order of denial, we find nothing in the instant case showing such exceptional circumstances.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

GEORGE et al. v. BURDUSIS et al.*

Civ. 6630.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 13, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 11, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 11, 1942.

1. Good will 🔑6(1)

Although sale of good will of a business carried with it expectation on part of buyer of continued public patronage, seller had right to engage in a rival business, in absence of a restrictive agreement. St.1941, p. 702, § 14100.

2. Good will 🔑6(1)

The right of seller of good will of a business to engage in a rival business, in absence of a restrictive agreement, included right to seek trade by any honest method and to deal with old customers who chose to trade with him, but seller would not be permitted to canvass directly the old customers, endeavoring to dissuade them from dealing with the purchaser of the good will and soliciting them to trade with him. St. 1941, p. 702, § 14100.

3. Good will 🔑6(1)

Where bill of sale of linen supply business executed by one of partners to his copartners expressly reserved right of seller to solicit former customers of the firm, the words "former customers" included customers of partnership at date of transfer, as against contention that words included only those who had been customers at one time but were no longer such at date of the transfer, since withdrawal of one of partners wound up the partnership affairs, and anyone who had theretofore patronized it was its former customer. Civ.Code, § 2424.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Former Customer".

4. Partnership 🔑230

A member of partnership conducting a linen supply business, who sold good will of the business to his copartners pursuant to a bill of sale expressly reserving right of seller to solicit former customers of the firm, was within his rights when he solicited former customers of the firm, and, hence, copartners were not entitled to an injunction restraining seller from soliciting former customers. St.1941, p. 702, § 14100; Civ.Code, § 2424.

5. Injunction 🔑56

Where a member of partnership conducting a linen supply business sold good will of the business to his copartners pursuant to a bill of sale expressly reserving right of seller to solicit former customers of the firm, seller's brother, who had been an employee of the firm before seller's withdrawal therefrom, and thereafter so continued, would be enjoined upon leaving employment of the firm from using information concerning firm's patrons in soliciting patrons for a rival company established by seller, notwithstanding that firm had not directly furnished him with a list of patrons. St.1937, p. 260, § 2860.

6. Injunction 🔑56

If a person establishes a trade or business which depends for its continuance upon keeping secret the names of customers, an agent or employee having been intrusted with such secrets in the course of his employment may not thereafter utilize his secret knowledge against the interests or to the prejudice of such person.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence upon a question of fact, trial court's action will not be disturbed.

8. Injunction 🔑56

Fact that names of customers of a linen supply company solicited by a former employee were to be found in telephone directory and were otherwise available generally to public, did not establish that their identity was not of a confidential nature, or preclude company from right to an injunction enjoining employee from soliciting customers. St.1937, p. 260, § 2860.

---

* Subsequent opinion 130 P.2d 399.

9. Torts 🔑21

Where former employee of linen supply company solicited company's customers in behalf of a rival company operated by his brother, but jury found on conflicting evidence that former employee and his brother did not enter into a conspiracy to deprive company of its customers, employee's brother could not be held responsible for acts of employee in soliciting company's customers. St.1937, p. 260, § 2860.

10. Injunction 🔑197

In an action for injunctive relief to prohibit interference by a former employee with confidential business relations affecting individual customers of linen supply company, damages were allowable as incidental to the injunctive relief.

11. Injunction 🔑197

In action for injunctive relief to prohibit interference by a former employee with confidential business relations affecting individual customers of a linen supply company, where undisputed testimony showed that through efforts of former employee plaintiff company lost over 100 customers on a route serving 150, trial court's findings that plaintiff company suffered no financial loss, and hence was not entitled to money damages as incidental to the injunctive relief, were not supported by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Peter George and another against Aleck Burdusis and another for an injunction to restrain unfair competition and for damages, wherein the named defendant interposed a cross-complaint. From a judgment denying relief both upon the complaint and the cross-complaint, the plaintiffs alone appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part with directions.

Joseph A. Brown and A. E. Cross, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Marvin E. Lewis, of San Francisco, for respondents.

HELD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs and defendant, Aleck Burdusis, were at one time co-partners, but are now rivals in business. Defendant, Tom Burdusis was formerly in the employ of plaintiffs, but at the commencement of this action he was an employee of his co-defendant, Aleck Burdusis.

In the complaint herein, plaintiffs charge defendants with unfair competition, and seek injunctive relief, and damages. The defendant, Aleck Burdusis, interposed a cross-complaint, alleging that due to certain activities on the part of plaintiffs, and false representations made by them, he suffered loss of business and consequent damage. The trial court denied plaintiffs' prayer for an injunction and damages, and also denied relief on the cross-complaint. Plaintiffs alone appeal.

The record discloses that for some years prior to November 16, 1934, the plaintiffs and the defendant Aleck Burdusis were co-partners, operating under the trade name of "Stone's Linen Supply Company," and engaged in the business of supplying to meat markets, grocery stores and similar establishments, laundered aprons, gowns and towels, delivery of which was made at the customers' place of business at regular intervals, and over designated routes, by employees of the company. On November 16, 1934, defendant Tom Burdusis, a brother of said co-defendant, was, and for some three years prior thereto had been, one of the employees so engaged. Differences between the members of the co-partnership culminated, on or about November 16, 1934, in a sale by Aleck Burdusis, to plaintiffs, of his interest in the firm. The bill of sale evidencing the transaction included among the property transferred, the good-will of the business, and also the vendor's interest in four route books. Apparently one of these books was assumed to be in the possession of the vendor, for the bill of sale required him "to deliver up the route book in his possession." In the bill of sale was also a provision, as follows:

"The vendor does not agree not to engage in the same or a similar business in San Francisco, Oakland, or elsewhere, nor that he will not solicit former customers of said firm for business."

Following the transfer by Aleck Burdusis to plaintiffs, the latter carried on under the same firm name the enterprise in which Stone's Linen Supply Company had theretofore been engaged. Defendant Aleck Burdusis entered into a similar business under the name of "A B C Linen Supply Company." Defendant Tom Burdusis, however, continued in the employ of plaintiffs until January 18, 1935. On the following day, he accompanied his brother Aleck Burdusis over the route that the former had theretofore served for plaintiffs. They together called upon certain of plaintiffs' customers on that route, and on succeeding days defendant Tom Burdusis alone called on other customers on the route. On the calls so made by defendants, the customers of plaintiffs were solicited to give their business to defendant Aleck Burdusis. Such solicitation resulted in the loss of customers to plaintiffs.

It is obvious that the same principles of law do not apply to both defendants here. The obligations of defendant Aleck Burdusis arise out of his membership in the firm, and the sale of his interest therein to plaintiffs, while the obligations of defendant, Tom Burdusis, arise out of his relationship to plaintiffs as an employee.

[1, 2] The sale of the good-will of the business by defendant, Aleck Burdusis, to the plaintiffs, carried with it the expectation on the part of the latter of continued public patronage. Business & Professions Code, St.1937, p. 1229, § 14100, as added by St.1941, p. 702. In the absence of a restrictive agreement, the seller had the right to engage in a rival business. Diller v. Schindler, 88 Cal.App. 250, 263 P. 277. This included the right to seek trade by any honest method, and to deal with old customers who chose to come and trade with him. He would not be permitted to canvass directly the old customers, endeavoring to dissuade them from dealing with the purchaser of the good-will and soliciting them to trade with him. 24 Am.Jur. 817; Gibbons v. Hansch, 185 Minn. 290, 240 N.W. 901, 82 A.L.R. 1027; 13 Cal.Jur. 53.

[3] Here, the bill of sale, however, provided in effect that the vendor reserved the right to "solicit former customers of said firm for business." To that extent, the implied obligation arising out of the sale of the good-will was modified. Appellants contend that the word "former" as used in the bill of sale, includes only those who had been customers at one time, but were no longer such at the date of the transfer. We cannot agree with this contention. Here, the partnership was dissolved by the withdrawal of defendant Aleck Burdusis therefrom, and while this would not ordinarily effect a termination of the partnership, it did so in this case. Here, the withdrawal brought about not only a dissolution of the partnership, but wound up the partnership affairs, and therefore terminated the relationship. Civil Code, § 2424. The entity having gone out of existence, those who had theretofore patronized it were its "former customers." Any other construction would render meaningless the reservation of the right to solicit. As so construed, the word "former" is used in 24 Am.Jur. 817, note 1, and at page 811, note 12; also by the Supreme Court of California in Langendorf United Bakeries v. Phillips, 5 Cal.2d 150, at page 153, 53 P.2d 363.

In view of the express language of the bill of sale, reserving the right to solicit former customers, it cannot be said that the transfer of the route books was inconsistent with the right reserved.

[4, 5] It is our conclusion that respondent, Aleck Burdusis, was within his rights when he solicited the former customers of Stone's Linen Supply Company on behalf of his rival business. From the conclusion thus arrived at, it does not follow, however, that defendant, Tom Burdusis, had a right to do likewise. He had been an employee of the firm before his brother's withdrawal therefrom, and thereafter so continued. As such employee, and in the course of such employment, and by virtue thereof alone, he gained certain information concerning the patrons of his employer, and this information he used to the latter's prejudice. The information which he so acquired was property of his employer. Section 2860, Labor Code, St.1937, p. 260, provides that aside from compensation due him from the employer, everything which an employee acquires by virtue of his employment belongs to the employer.

The leading case upon the question here involved is Empire Steam Laundry v. Lozier, 165 Cal. 95, 130 P. 1180, 44 L.R.A.,N.S., 1159, Ann.Cas.1914C, 628, where the court held that an agent has no right to use information obtained by him in the course of his employment and for the benefit of his employer, against the interest of the latter. Such use, the court said, was contrary to the good faith of the employment. There, the court quoted with approval from Witkop & Holmes Co. v. Boyce, 61 Misc. 126, 112 N.Y.S. 874, 878, where it was said that equity will restrain acts such as those here committed by defendants, and that this jurisdiction "arises out of a violation of duty having its origin in the relation of employer and employed, and an implied contract that an employé will not divulge confidential knowledge gained in the course of his employment, or use such information to his employer's prejudice."

[6] In 14 Cal.Jur., at page 198, it is said: "If a person establishes a trade or business which depends for its continuance upon keeping secret the names of customers * * * no agent or employee having been intrusted with such secrets in the course of his employment may thereafter utilize his secret knowledge against the interests or to the prejudice of such person. If he does so, he is said to rob his employer."

In Santa Monica Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Rossier, 42 Cal.App.2d 467, 109 P.2d 382, 384, the case of Empire Steam Laundry v. Lozier, supra, was referred to, and the court said: "The leading case in this state on the subject, Empire Steam Laundry v. Lozier * * * has been followed repeatedly, and no authority to the contrary is cited. The later cases, such as Gloria Ice Cream, etc., Co. v. Cowan, 2 Cal.2d 460, 41 P.2d 340, and Langendorf United Bakeries v. Phillips, 5 Cal.2d 150, 53 P.2d 363, complete an unanimous adherence to the rule."

Other cases, in addition to those contained in the above quotation, which follow the rule laid down in the Empire Steam Laundry case, are: Cornish v. Dickey, 172 Cal. 120, 155 P. 629; New Method Laundry Co. v. MacCann, 174 Cal. 26, 161 P. 990, Ann.Cas.1918C, 1022; Mackechnie Bread Co. v. Huber, 60 Cal.App. 539, 213 P. 285; Pasadena Ice Co. v. Reeder, 206 Cal. 697, 275 P. 944, 276 P. 995; Golden State Milk Products Co. v. Brown, 217 Cal. 570, 20 P.2d 657; Dairy Dale Co. v. Azevedo, 211 Cal. 344, 295 P. 10; Scavengers' Protective Ass'n v. Serv-U-Garbage Co., 218 Cal. 568, 24 P.2d 489.

The factual situation in Gloria Ice Cream & Milk Co. v. Cowan, 2 Cal.2d 460, 41 P.2d 340, is similar to that in the case at bar. The decision there also disposes adversely to respondents of their contention, based on the case of Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, 122 Cal.App. 627, 10 P.2d 485, that knowledge of customers obtained under the circumstances shown here does not constitute information of a secret or confidential nature.

Respondents here place much stress upon the finding of the trial court that Tom Burdusis did not receive a list of customers from his employer. We find in none of these cases, as a requisite to relief, that the employee must have received directly from the hands of the employer a list of customers. While in many of the cases that have come before the courts, such a list was furnished the employee, none of these cases have turned upon that circumstance. In Pasadena Ice Co. v. Reeder, supra, the decision rested entirely upon the fact that the information was received by the employee in the course of his employment. In Dairy Dale Co. v. Azevedo, supra, it does not appear that a list of customers was furnished the employee, yet he was restrained. The same was true in Gloria Ice Cream & Milk Co. v. Cowan, supra. The case of Woolley's Laundry, Inc., v. Silva, 304 Mass. 383, 23 N.E.2d 899, 126 A.L.R. 752, cited by respondents, is recognized by the author of the note following it to be at variance with the rule in this state.

[7] Furthermore, the finding that defendant, Tom Burdusis, did not receive any confidential knowledge or information as to the customers of plaintiffs from his employers, is not borne out by the evidence. We are not unmindful of the well established rule that where, upon a question of fact, there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the action of the trial court will not be disturbed. Clark v. Abrams. 49 Cal.App.2d 497, 121 P.2d 750. Here, however, there is no conflict in the evidence. The defendants themselves testified, and this was not contradicted, that when defendant, Tom Burdusis, was first employed by Stone's Linen Supply Company, his brother, Aleck Burdusis, one of his employers, took him over the route for a period of two weeks and taught him the names of the customers. Some of these customers subsequently were lost, but others were added through the efforts of Tom Burdusis while in the employ of Stone's Linen Supply Company, under which name plaintiffs continued to operate after the withdrawal of Aleck Burdusis from the firm.

[8] It is also the contention of respondents that because the names of the customers solicited by Tom Burdusis were to be found in the telephone directory, and were otherwise available to the general public, their identity is not of a confidential nature. But this contention is disposed of by our Supreme Court in Dairy Dale Co. v. Azevedo, supra, quoting in part from Pasadena Ice Co. v. Reeder, supra, in the following language:

"Obviously it is not merely the knowledge of the identity of the customers, but the friendly contact with them, which is important to the solicitors: '* * * They became personally acquainted with the customers * * * their respective places of residence, their peculiar likes and fancies and other characteristics, a knowledge of which would greatly aid them in securing and retaining the business of said former customers.'"

It is to be noted, too, that the trial court here found that "the business of serving customers is purely personal to the route man, and is obtained and held chiefly as a matter of friendly feeling between the customers and the man on the route."

[9] The finding challenged by appellants, that respondents did not enter into a conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of their customers, was based by the trial court upon conflicting evidence. We are therefore bound by it. It follows that respondent Aleck Burdusis is not to be held responsible for the acts of Tom Burdusis.

The judgment as to respondent, Tom Burdusis, must be reversed.

[10] Respondents contend, also, that in an action such as this, damages may not be recovered. They cite Olschewski v. Hudson, 87 Cal.App. 282, 262 P. 43, and Adkins v. Model Laundry Co., 92 Cal.App. 575, 268 P. 939, 941. Neither of these cases support their contention. In the former case it was held that section 3336, Civil Code, merely purports to fix the measure of damages in a proper case, but does not give a right of action where none existed otherwise. In the Adkins case, it is expressly stated that the case "was not an equitable action for injunctive relief to prohibit interference with the good will of a business, or confidential business relations affecting individual customers of a particular laundry route, under which circumstances damages are merely incidental to the injunctive relief which is sought." The case here is just such an action as the Adkins case was not. Damages are incidental to the injunctive relief sought. Union Oil Co. v. Reconstruction Oil Co., 20 Cal.App.2d 170, 66 P. 2d 1215.

[11] The findings of the trial court that plaintiffs suffered no damage is not supported by the evidence, in view of the undisputed testimony that through the efforts of respondent, Tom Burdusis, alone, plaintiff lost over one hundred customers, on the route serving one hundred and fifty. It is inconceivable that this loss of business resulted in no financial loss to appellants.

The judgment as to respondent, Aleck Burdusis, is affirmed, and as to respondent, Tom Burdusis, the judgment is reversed, and remanded to the trial court, with directions to issue the injunction against respondent, Tom Burdusis, as prayed for, and to try the issue as to the amount of damages suffered by appellants by reason of the acts of said respondent, Tom Burdusis.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 460

PEOPLE v. TRACY.

Crim. 1790.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 13, 1942.

Hearing Denied April 9, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑741(1), 742(1)

The weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are for jury.

2. False pretenses 🔑51

In prosecution for making, uttering, and passing a check with intent to defraud payee of a sum of money, defendant's guilt was for jury. Pen.Code, § 476a.

3. Indictment and information 🔑176

The general rule with respect to proof of time when an offense is committed is that there is no "fatal variance" from the allegation that it was committed on a particular date, to show that it was actually committed on or about or near that date unless the variance results in misleading defendant so as to prevent him from making his defense to the charge or to deprive him of the benefit of a plea of former jeopardy in event of another trial for the same offense.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fatal Variance".

4. Indictment and information 🔑176

An information charging that accused uttered and passed a check "on or about September 4, 1941", with intent to defraud payee was not at "fatal variance" with proof showing that accused actually passed the check on date named or within a day or two thereof. Pen.Code, § 476a.

5. Criminal law ⇐678(1)

In prosecution for making, uttering, and passing a check, "on or about September 4, 1941", with intent to defraud payee, refusal to direct prosecution to elect to designate the exact date upon which it relied in proof of the commission of the offense was not error. Pen.Code, § 476a.

6. Criminal law ⇐829(1)

A requested instruction which was covered by instruction given was properly refused.

7. Criminal law ⇐772(4)

In prosecution for uttering and passing a check "on or about September 4, 1941", with intent to defraud payee, instruction that it was not necessary for prosecution to prove the commission of offense on September 4, 1941, but proof of commission by defendant at any time on or about that date and within three years of filing of information was sufficient, was proper. Pen.Code, § 476a.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; B. C. Hawkins, Judge.

George Tracy was convicted of making, uttering, and passing a check with intent to defraud the payee, and he appeals from an order denying his motion for new trial.

Order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

Gilbert Moody, of Turlock, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged and convicted, under Section 476a of the Penal Code, with making, uttering and passing to Alex Kamarenos his check on the Merced Branch of the Bank of America, for the sum of $15, with intent to defraud said payee of that sum of money. The check was dated September 4, 1941. A motion for new trial was denied. On application for probation the judgment was suspended and the defendant was admitted to probation on condition that he serve a term of six months in the Stanislaus County Road Camp. From the order denying the motion for new trial this appeal was perfected.

The defendant resides at Turlock. He was engaged in buying and selling fruit. Alex Kamarenos and Sam Sagres were partners engaged in raising fruit on a farm near Modesto. On August 6, 1941, Mr. Sagres sold the defendant thirty boxes of tomatoes, for which he paid cash. On or about Thursday, September 4th, the defendant again called at the Modesto farm, and purchased from Alex Kamarenos twenty boxes of tomatoes, for which he paid $15 in the form of a check drawn on the Merced Branch of the Bank of America. The check was written by the defendant in the presence of Kamarenos on the bank form in the handwriting of the defendant. The blank checks were printed on a form which read, "Modesto Branch, Bank of America." The word "Modesto" was scratched out, and the name "Merced" was written over that word. That transaction took place at the farm near Modesto early in the morning on or about September 4, 1941. Mr. Kamarenos said in that regard: "He (the defendant) came early in the morning between 6 and 7, maybe 8." His partner, Mr. Sagres, was not there on that occasion. He further testified through an interpreter regarding the defendant's writing of the check:

"Q. Did he ask you who to make the check out to? A. Mr. Kamarenos said to make the check out to Sagres but apparently Mr. Tracy didn't wish to, so he made it out to Mr. Kamarenos' name.

"Q. Did he ask you how to spell your name? A. Yes, he did.

"Q. Did he write the check out in front of you? A. Right in front of him (Mr. Kamarenos) yes, sir.

"Q. Does this appear to be the check (showing)? A. Yes, this is the check.

"Q. How much were those tomatoes? A. They were 75 cents a box, or $15 for the whole lot."

The check was presented for payment to the Merced Branch of the Bank of America on September 11th. Payment was refused on the ground that the defendant had no funds in that bank. The assistant cashier testified that the defendant never had an account in that bank.

To show the defendant's intention to defraud Kamarenos, another small check for $3, which was drawn in favor of H. Oletta, on September 2, 1941, on that same bank, was received in evidence. That check was also refused payment on the same ground. It was in the same handwriting.

The information was then filed against the defendant, charging him with making, uttering and delivering the $15 check to Alex Kamarenos, "on or about" September 4, 1941, with intent to defraud him of that sum of money. The defendant was found guilty as charged.

It is contended the verdict and judgment are not supported by the evidence, and that the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was therefore erroneously denied. The chief assertion, in that regard, is that the defendant established a complete alibi by proving he was in and about Sonoma from September 2d to the 5th day of that month, and that he therefore could not have uttered, published or passed the check in question at Merced "on or about" September 4th. A reversal of the order denying a new trial is sought on the ground that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury two instructions to the effect that unless the prosecution proved that the check was written and passed on the 2d, 3d, 4th or 5th day of September, the defendant must be acquitted.

[1, 2] There appears to be no reasonable doubt of the identity of the defendant as the man who uttered and passed the $15 check. He was engaged in the business of buying and selling fruit. He had purchased thirty boxes of tomatoes from Mr. Kamarenos' partner at that same farm about two weeks previous to this transaction. Kamarenos testified that the defendant bought the tomatoes from him about that date, and wrote the check in his presence. After the arrest of the defendant, Kamarenos visited the jail and promptly identified him among several other prisoners. Mr. Sherwood Morrill, a handwriting expert from the State Division of Criminal Identification, testified from an examination of the two fictitious checks, as compared with several documents which were acknowledged to have been written by the defendant, that the checks were written by him. He said in that regard: "In my opinion they were written by the same person." It is true that the defendant denied writing or passing the check in question. He denied that he purchased tomatoes from Mr. Kamarenos on September 4th, or at any other time. In fact, he denied ever having seem him before the time when he met him in jail after his arrest. But those denials are contradicted by the evidence which was adduced at the trial. The weight of evidence and the credibility of the witnesses are questions for the determination of the jury. Those issues were decided against the defendant. We have no power to disturb their conclusions in that regard.

The time of the commission of the offense was sufficiently established as on or about September 4, 1941, which is the date the fictitious check bears. A portion of the testimony of Mr. Kamarenos, which was taken at the preliminary examination, was read in evidence at the trial, from which it appears the tomatoes were sold to the defendant "on or about the date this check was dated, September 4th." He was asked that question and replied "yes." He was further asked, "How long after you got the check did you give it to Mr. Honeycutt? * * * A. It was about a week or over, or may be a day less." Mr. Honeycutt accepted the check as part payment for rent which was due from the partners on the ranch where the tomatoes were produced. Honeycutt testified he received the check September 10th. It was actually presented to the bank for payment on September 11th. That evidence corroborates the first statement of Mr. Kamarenos that he received the check from the defendant "on or about" September 4th. He was uncertain regarding the exact date, but the evidence is entirely satisfactory that it was written and delivered to him by the defendant within one or two days of the date which it bears. That evidence is sufficient under the circumstances of this case to conform to the requirement of the law in that regard.

[3] The general rule, with respect to proof of the time when an offense is committed, is that there is no fatal variance from the allegation that it was committed on a particular date, to show that it was actually committed on or about or near that date, unless the variance results in misleading the defendant so as to prevent him from making his defense to the charge or to deprive him of the benefit of a plea of former jeopardy in the event of another trial for the same offense. People v. Becker, 140 Cal.App. 162, 35 P.2d 196; People v. Ralls, 21 Cal.App.2d 674, 70 P.2d 265; People v. Harrington, 92 Cal.App. 245, 254, 267 P. 942; 23 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 1196a, p. 746. In the text last cited it is said in that regard: "Ordinarily, however, where time is not an essential and material element of the offense, an instruction as to the time should limit it to a date anterior to the date of the filing of the indictment or information, and within the limits included in the statute of limitations applicable to the offense charged, and should fix the time covered by the statute. Subject to this rule, it is proper to instruct that it is sufficient to prove that the crime was committed at or about the time alleged, or within a given period before the filing of the indictment or information."

In the present case the information charged the defendant with uttering and passing the check in question "on or about September 4, 1941." The evidence is convincing that he actually passed the check on the date named, or within a day or two thereof. If there is a doubt regarding the exact date, the defendant was not misled thereby or deprived of the benefit of his effort to prove an alibi. He introduced evidence tending to show that he was in or near Sonoma, at a distance of about 160 miles from Merced, on September 2d, 3d and 4th. He claimed he did not return to Merced County until September 5th. He was given notice at Sonoma by a traffic officer, September 4th, at 7:30 o'clock p. m., requesting him to have a defective tail-light corrected. It is not suggested how additional evidence upon the subject of his defense of an alibi could have benefited him even if the check were actually delivered within a day or two either before or after the 4th of September. The jury evidently considered all of the evidence which could have been adduced on the subject of an alibi. It was exclusively their province to determine the weight of that evidence and the credibility of the witnesses.

[4] Defendant's proof of the alibi is not conclusive. The fact that he drew the check and delivered it on or about September 4th is very convincingly shown by the evidence. Assuming that he was at Sonoma on the 2d and 3d of September does not preclude the possibility of his having returned to his home on the night of the 3d. Mr. Kamarenos testified that he purchased the tomatoes very early in the morning, "between 6 and 7, maybe 8" o'clock. Mrs. Ponton of Sonoma testified that she thought the defendant called at their home on September 4th "before noon." She fixed no definite time. When she was asked, "You recall what time of day he first came there on Thursday?" she replied, "Well, it was before noon." It thus appears that the defendant might have accepted delivery of the tomatoes at Merced at 6 or 7 o'clock that morning and he would have been able to reach Sonoma before noon. Or it may be true that the defendant actually delivered his check on the morning of September 6th, and that he inadvertently or purposely antedated it as of September 4th. Those were questions for the determination of the jury. In either event there was not a fatal variance from the allegations of the information.

[5] It was not error for the court to refuse to direct the prosecution to elect to designate the exact date upon which it relied in proof of the commission of the offense.

[6, 7] The court did not err in refusing to give to the jury defendant's proposed instructions numbers 9 and 10, which were refused on the ground that they were covered by instruction number 12, which was given to the jury. The rejected instructions directed the jury to acquit the defendant unless they found that the offense was committed "on September 2d, or 3d, or 4th, or 5th of the year 1941," or unless they found the offense was committed "on September 4th, 1941, or in close proximity thereto." The last-mentioned instruction was proper, but it was fully covered by instruction number 12 which was given to the jury in the following language: "It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the commission of the offense on September 4th, 1941, but proof of its commission by the defendant at any time on or about that date and within three years of the filing of the information is sufficient."

Under the circumstances of this case the foregoing instruction was a correct declaration of the law. Under the authorities previously cited, instruction number 10 was properly rejected. The other rejected instruction was fully covered by the last-mentioned one.

The order denying the motion for new trial is affirmed.

TUTTLE, J., and STEEL, Justice pro tem., concurred.

BUSINESS MANAGEMENT CORPORATION v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, DIVISION OF LABOR STATISTICS AND LAW ENFORCEMENT, CAL., et al.

Civ. 13500.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 6, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 4, 1942.

1. Licenses ⚿11(7)

"Place" as used in statute governing licensing of employment agencies, providing that no license shall protect "any place other than that designated in the license", means a place or places actually occupied either continually or at regular periods by a person or corporation or his or its clerks for the purpose of conducting a business, but a place where business is occasionally transacted not at stated periods is not properly termed a "place of business". St.1937, p. 234, § 1593.

> Every step in a long, complicated financial or commercial transaction is a "business" but when used in connection with the phrase "carry on business" a repetition of acts is indicated, the sum of which constitute the "business".
>
> See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Carrying on Business", "Place", "Place of Business", and "Business".

2. Licenses ⚿29

A motion picture employment agency maintaining a permanent office in Beverly Hills did not have its "place of business" within the city of Los Angeles so as to be required to pay the higher statutory license fee applicable to cities of such size because its agents were required to visit the various studios and other places in Los Angeles for the purpose of securing employment for their clients where such transactions were merely incidental to the conduct of the agency's business in Beverly Hills. St.1937, p. 230 et seq., § 1550 et seq.; St.1939, p. 2111, § 1588; St.1937, p. 234, § 1593.

◆

Proceeding in mandamus by the Business Management Corporation against the Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement of the state of California and others to compel issuance of a license to conduct an employment agency.

Writ granted.

Hanna & Morton and Gang & Kopp, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

L. L. Schaumer, of Los Angeles, and Charles Dreyfus and Fred G. Goldsworthy, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel respondents to grant petitioner a license to conduct business as a motion picture employment agency in the city of Beverly Hills.

The material facts are:

January 26, 1942, petitioner filed with respondents an application for an agency license to conduct business as a motion picture employment agency in the city of Beverly Hills pursuant to the provisions of the Labor Code of California, division II, part 6, chapter 1, St.1937, p. 230 et seq. The city of Beverly Hills has a population in excess of 25,000 and not exceeding 100,000 people.

In the form of application furnished petitioner by respondents was the query, "Places where agency will operate," which question petitioner answered as follows: "Your applicant maintains a suite of offices which are utilized by applicant in the pursuit of said occupation and the rendition of said services at 9484 Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, California, and the applicant's business will be conducted and transacted at said offices. The applicant on an average of several times a week will call on behalf of its clients at RKO motion picture studios, Paramount motion picture studios, and other motion picture studios in the City of Los Angeles and at motion picture studios located elsewhere in the County of Los Angeles at such localities as Culver City and upon employers of motion picture artists wherever such employers may be found and interviewed, in places of business other than the premises of applicant, in hotels, restaurants or private homes in any locality in the State of California for the purpose of securing and negotiating employment for clients represented by applicant, and occasionally at such motion picture studios or elsewhere on locations where motion pictures are being produced, for the purpose of counseling or advising with said clients in connection with the rendition of artistic services by them at such places under existing contracts of employment."

In addition to filing with respondents the aforesaid application petitioner delivered to them a check in the sum of $50 in payment of the annual license fee. January 28, 1942, respondents denied petitioner's request for a license on the ground that petitioner, under the foregoing statement as to where it would conduct its business, intended to conduct its business in the city of Los Angeles, which had a population of over 100,000 people, and, therefore, the annual license fee would be $100 pursuant to the provisions of section 1588 of the Labor Code, as amended by St.1939, p. 2111, which reads thus:

"Fees for licenses and renewals. Every employment agency shall pay to the Labor Commissioner annually at the time a license is issued or renewed a license fee of:

"(a) One hundred dollars in cities having a population of over one hundred thousand.

"(b) Fifty dollars in cities having a population of over twenty-five thousand and not exceeding one hundred thousand.

"(c) Ten dollars in all other places.

"All figures as to population shall be based on the latest United States Government census."

This is the sole question necessary for us to determine:

If petitioner conducted its business as set forth under the above statement of facts, would its place of business be in the city of Los Angeles?

This question must be answered in the negative. Section 1593 of the Labor Code reads in part thus: "No license shall protect any other than the person to whom it is issued nor any place other than that designated in the license. * * *"

[1] The word "places" used in section 1593 of the Labor Code, supra, means a place or places actually occupied either continually or at regular periods by a person or corporation or his or its clerks for the purpose of conducting a business. If business is transacted at a place occasionally but not at stated periods, it is not properly termed a place of business. (R. V. Smith Supply Co. v. Black, 43 N.M. 177, 88 P.2d 269, 270; Stephenson v. Primrose, 8 Port., Ala., 155, 33 Am.Dec. 281, 287; Arram v. Walters, 1936, 2 All England Law Reports Annotated, 959; Kirkwood v. Gadd, [1910] App.Cas. 422, 431.)

In Arram v. Walters, supra, an action was brought by an agent to recover a commission payable for the securing of employment by an employment agency. It was alleged by way of defense that the contract was unenforceable, since it had been executed at an address other than an address of the employment agency, contrary to the provisions of an act of the London County Council, which act made provision for the granting of employment agency licenses to persons "to carry on an employment agency of the description and in the name and at the address specified in the application." Plaintiff was the assignee of the employment agency which had a regular place of business, for which it was licensed. The facts disclosed that the employment agency had been instrumental in obtaining employment for defendant, a musician, at a theatre. This employment was discussed by the agent and the owner of the theatre at a conference in a restaurant and at various other places, and the contract of employment actually signed at an address other than an address described in the agency license. The court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff, holding that the acts in connection with the contract which occurred at places other than the registered place of business of the agency were merely incidental to the transaction.

In Kirkwood v. Gadd, supra, the court held that the Money-Lenders' Act of 1900, which required that a money-lender "shall carry on the money-lending business * * * at his registered address or addresses," did not mean that every stage and every incident of every part of the money-lending business must be transacted at the registered office. Lord Atkinson in the decision of this case at page 431 of [1910] App.Cas. says:

"In one sense every step, every item, in a long or complicated financial or commercial transaction may be said to be 'business,' but I think it is obvious that in the phrase 'carries on his business' employed in this section, as in the phrase 'carrying on business' employed in the 4th section of the Companies Act of 1862, the words 'carries on' must be held to imply a repetition of acts, the sum of which constitutes the 'business': see Brett L. J., Smith v. Anderson.[1]

---

[1] (1880) 15 Ch.D. 247, at pages 277, 278.

"The money-lender's trade is in itself a lawful trade. And it is, I think, no more essential in this than in any trade or business that every act necessary to complete a contract of the class which it is the purpose and object of the trader to enter into and carry out should be performed on the premises of the latter, in order that his trade may be correctly described as being 'carried on' in those premises.

"If one takes by way of example the case of a house decorator, or of an ordinary retail dealer, who delivers at the house of his customers the goods he sells, it could scarcely be seriously contended that the former carried on his business at the houses belonging to his customers, which he decorates, or the latter at the houses of his customers, where he delivers his goods. I fail to see on what principle the words when applied to a money-lender should be used in a sense and meaning so much narrower than that which they bear when applied, in the ordinary use of language, to other traders, unless, indeed, it is to be assumed that it was the paramount object of this statute to prohibit all communication between a money-lender and his customer on business matters by post or telegraph, and oblige the borrower to frequent the registered house or office of the lender and carry out there every detail of each transaction—an assumption for which there is, in my opinion, no warrant to be found in its provisions."

[2] Applying the foregoing rule to the facts in the instant case, it appears that petitioner maintains an office, which is its fixed place of business, in the city of Beverly Hills, but that from the very nature of the business which it conducts and as an incident thereto it is necessary for its agents to visit various moving picture studios, hotels, and restaurants which are located in other cities in the State of California. The transactions which occur at such places are merely incidental to the conduct of petitioner's business. They constitute but isolated acts in connection with the business which petitioner is conducting. Studios, restaurants, and private homes cannot in any proper sense be considered places where petitioner is conducting its business. Many acts connected with the conduct of the business of operating a motion picture employment agency transpire at studios, commissaries, or restaurants adjacent to the various moving picture studios, and conversations with prospective employers often occur over luncheon or dinner tables, which practice corresponds in many respects to luncheons and dinners attended by lawyers, advertising agents, and businessmen generally, and it cannot successfully be contended that the place where such conversations occur constitute the participants' place of business. It is immaterial whether such conversations occur between a motion picture employment agent and a prospective employer, a lawyer and his client, or a businessman and a prospective customer.

Therefore, since from the facts in the instant case it appears that petitioner's only place of business was in Beverly Hills, it was entitled to receive the license which it sought.

For the foregoing reasons, let a peremptory writ issue as prayed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 445

LINDSEY v. DE VAUX et al.

Civ. 2659.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 12, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 9, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)

Before appellate tribunal is justified in reversing judgment on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must appear from record that, accepting full force of evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to prevailing party, which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering judgment.

2. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)

On appeal, evidence must be construed most strongly against losing party and every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of prevailing party.

3. Appeal and error ⇐930(1), 989

On appeal, prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true and evidence which is contradictory must be disregarded.

4. Theaters and shows ⇐6

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool, evidence sufficiently established that owners of pool were negligent in violating rule of state health department requiring qualified life guard, having no other duty, to be at pool, and that such negligence was proximate cause of death, to support verdict allowing recovery.

5. Theaters and shows ⇐6

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool, evidence sufficiently established that owners of pool were negligent in violating rule of state health department requiring qualified life guard, having no other duty, to be at pool, and that such negligence was proximate cause of death, to require denial of owners' motion for directed verdict.

6. Theaters and shows ⇐2

A "qualified life guard", within rule of state health department requiring such life guard to be on duty at public swimming pool, is one who has at least ordinary powers of observation, who is vigilant and attentive to duty, and who realizes that, particularly in swimming pool in which young children are charged admission to swim, he should be watchful for any sign of distress or danger and quick to render assistance.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Qualified Life Guard".

7. Theaters and shows ⇐2

Parents sending children to public swimming pool to swim have right to assume that there will be a qualified life guard on life guard duty at the pool in accordance with rule of state health department.

8. Appeal and error ⇐996

Upon the trial of a case, the jury is to find not only the facts, but also the inferences from them if any may properly be drawn, and when an inference is supported by the evidence and is not opposed to human experience and reason it cannot be disturbed. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1957, 1958.

9. Husband and wife ⇐232(3)

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool allegedly owned and operated by defendants, who were husband and wife, evidence sufficiently established wife's joint interest and participation in operation of pool to support verdict allowing recovery from wife.

10. Appeal and error ⇐1056(1)

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool, exclusion of notice posted at pool in compliance with requirement of state board of health, and of signs posted at pool to the effect that anyone using diving apparatus or pool did so at his own risk, was not prejudicial to owners of pool, in absence of any evidence that minor had violated any rule.

11. Theaters and shows ⇐6

The mere presence of signs at swimming pool stating that bather used pool at his own risk would not affect duty of owners of pool to have qualified life guard at pool in compliance with rule of state health department, and would not bar recovery for drowning caused by violation of rule.

12. Theaters and shows ⇐6

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool, allegedly caused by breach of rule of state health department requiring presence of qualified life guard at pool, instruction that it was duty of life guard to use reasonable care and diligence in watching public swimming pool and persons using it so that life guard might in emergency render reasonable assistance to one likely to drown was not erroneous.

13. Trial ⇐296(3)

In action for drowning of minor in swimming pool, allegedly caused by breach of rule of state health department requiring presence of qualified life guard at pool, error, if any, in instruction that it was duty of life guard to use reasonable care and diligence in watching public swimming pool and persons using it so that life guard might in emergency render reasonable assistance to one likely to drown, did not require reversal of judgment allowing recovery, in view of other instructions.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Dan F. Conway, Judge.

Action by W. C. Lindsey against D. W. De Vaux and wife for the drowning of plaintiff's son in defendants' swimming pool. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, Matthew Conley and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Louis J. Coelho and G. L. Aynesworth, both of Fresno, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment based on a verdict in favor of respondent and from the order denying appellants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Respondent sued as the father of a minor son, Joe Lindsey, who was drowned in a swimming pool. The complaint, in substance, alleged that appellants were conducting a public swimming pool where admission was charged; that the State Department of Health rules provided that "One or more qualified lifeguards, having no other duty to perform at the time, shall be on lifeguard duty at each pool for which an admission or special use fee is charged, whenever the pool is open for public use. Lifeguards shall be in good physical condition and possess demonstrated proficiency in lifesaving"; that the appellants had employed a lifeguard but he was required to perform other duties; that on June 14, 1940, respondent's son, Joe Lindsey, was 11 years old and was inexperienced in swimming; that on said day he was admitted to appellants' swimming pool; that "the defendants failed and neglected to supervise, watch, and guard the swimmers in said swimming pool in that the defendants failed and neglected to have a lifeguard on lifeguard duty; and that by reason of defendants' requiring the said lifeguard to perform other duties at the times herein mentioned, and as a direct and proximate result thereof, said Joe Lindsey was negligently permitted to and did drown in said swimming pool."

Appellants' answer denied the allegations charging the negligence on their part and set up a defense of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased boy and also on the part of the respondent as father of the boy, and also set up a defense that the boy was drowned as the proximate result of an unavoidable accident without negligence on the part of anyone.

[1-3] The principal contention of appellants is that "there is no substantial evidence showing negligence or any causal connection between such alleged negligence and the death of the minor." It is a rule too well established to require the citation of authorities that, before an appellate tribunal is justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that, accepting the full force of the evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering a judgment. The evidence must be construed most strongly against the losing party. Every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party. The prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true, and evidence which is contradictory must be disregarded.

The pool in question was 100 feet long east and west, and 35 feet in width north and south. As shown by the photographs introduced in evidence, there are no obstacles or obstructions in it. It is enclosed by buildings on the north and south sides, on the east by a high board wall and on the west by a wire fence. A low diving board is on the north half of the east end and a high diving board is on the south half of the east end. The entrance and the refreshment building are at the west end. It is apparent from an examination of the photographs that anyone standing at any point within the enclosure can see the entire pool. Bill Young, the lifeguard, was 16 years of age on the day of the drowning and wore swimming trunks, sandals, and dark glasses, and had zinc oxide on his nose, making it white, and had a string around his neck attached to a whistle. Joe Lindsey, the boy who was drowned, was 11 years of age and according to the testimony of his father and the witness Richard Actis, also aged 11, was not a good swimmer.

Mike Mitchell, also aged 11, testified he was also at the pool when a girl called his attention to Joe Lindsey and told him to go in. The following are excerpts from his testimony:

"A. I saw him, he was floating in the water with his head up toward the water and his feet pointing down toward the bottom.

"Q. And what part of the pool was he in at that time? A. The diving—up towards the diving board end, and on the ladies' dressing room side. * * *

"Q. Just tell us what you did. A. I went in after him.

"Q. And what did you do and what did he do? A. Well, I was trying to get ahold of him and he pushed me down and I thought he was fooling, so I just let it go.

"Q. Now, did you make further effort to get him? A. Yes. After a while another girl told me to go in again, so I went in, and he didn't try to get me, so I just got out again.

"Q. Did you see him any more after that? A. Yes. When they were pumping the water out of him. * * *

"Q. Did you know Joe Lindsey before that day? A. Yes, I knew him at school fairly well. * * *

"Q. And you saw Joe there, of course, at the De Vaux pool? A. I saw him before—before I attempted to get him. I saw him swimming.

"Q. Saw him before. And you saw him down in the water there? A. Yes.

"Q. But this time that you told Mr. Aynesworth about, when you jumped in and then he pushed you down,—you didn't think there was anything the matter with him then, did you? A. No, I didn't * * *.

"Q. And then I think you said, Mike, you don't know how long it was before you went back to him the second time, is that right? A. No, I don't remember. The girl told me to get in again, so I went in * * *.

"Q. Well, you mean some little girl about your age, or do you remember who the girl was? A. No, I never saw her before, but she told me to go in. So I went in again and went along the edge of the pool, and he didn't even try to get me that time * * *.

"Q. And Mike, going back to the first time when you thought Joe was playing with you there in the water and you didn't think there was anything wrong, you didn't yell out or anything like that, did you? A. No, I just went in the water and struggled to get free and then swam to the shore * * *.

"Q. Just a question, Mike. Can you describe how he—how he looked at the time the girl told you to go there? A. Well, he was just like if you could stand up in water, he was standing up, and his hair was just floating around, and I didn't see his face or anything.

"Q. And that is why you went, is because the girl told you to go? A. The girl told me to go, so I went in after him.

"Q. And the second time, I believe, you told Mr. Conley here that you held to the rim, and tried to reach him that way? A. Yes."

Margaret Smittcamp, a student at Fresno State College, testified:

"Q. Now, just tell us about how—when you first saw him. A. Well, Bill Mitchell and I were just going to dive in and swim across, and I saw that—this boy on the bottom of the pool, so I told Bill about it. And we thought at first the boy was just swimming real deep. And finally the boy didn't move, so we looked around and couldn't find a life guard so Bill dove in and brought the boy out.

"Q. And did you help pull the boy out? A. I did, yes.

"Q. And what end of the pool was that? A. On the east end.

"Q. That is, down where the diving boards are? A. Yes.

"Q. And what—did a life guard come later? A. Yes he did.

"Q. How long was it before he came, do you know? A. Oh, it was about three or four minutes later * * *.

"Q. In the meantime did you and Bill try to resuscitate him? A. Bill did, but I did not * * *.

"Q. After the life guard came did he also work to try to resuscitate the boy? A. Yes, he did."

William D. Mitchell, a college student, testified:

"Q. What first called your attention to the presence of the boy in the pool? A. Margaret did.

"Q. And where was the boy when you first saw him? A. He was right in between the two diving boards at the deep end of the pool.

"Q. That is, at the east end of the pool? A. Yes.

"Q. And in what position was he at that time? A. As Margaret said, his hands were outspread. He looked like he was swimming.

"Q. And did you look for a life guard at that time? A. Yes, I did, after we thought something was the matter.

"Q. Yes. And did you see one? A. No, I did not * * *.

"Q. But when you did think there was something wrong, then you dived in? A. No. First I went to look for the life guard.

"Q. And after you got him on the surface what did you do? A. Well, I laid him on his face and stretched his arms out and then gave him artificial respiration as best I could * * *.

"Q. And then when the life guard came did he help try to resuscitate him? A. Yes. I was through. I got up from the boy, and just as I got up why the life guard came."

Oren Seaman, also a college student, a witness called by defendants, testified:

"Q. Did you see Bill Mitchell dive in for the boy? A. No. I saw him first when he was trying to push him up on the bank.

"Q. I see. And what did you then see? What happened then? A. Well, I know Margaret and Bill, both, and Margaret was helping Bill get the boy out of the pool. And I let out a holler, then, for Bill, and I don't know whether Bill heard it or not. And then I ran down to Mr. De Vaux and told him there was a boy being pulled out of the pool, and better call the fire department. * * *

"Q. Now, you say you called for Bill Young. Did you call for him by name, or for the life guard? A. I called, 'Bill.'

"Q. You called Bill. Now, did you see him when you called for him? A. No, I did not. I didn't even wait to look. I ran down to get Mr. De Vaux.

"Q. And which side of the pool did you run on, the north side or the south side? A. The north side. * * *

"Q. Then you went over to Mr. De Vaux and came back, did you? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. And when you came back he was there? A. Yes, that is right. I wasn't gone more than two minutes."

Bill Young, the life guard, testified:

"Q. And how was your attention called to that situation up at the other end? A. Somebody shouted, and I—as I looked up I could see them down at the other end, just as they were pulling the boy out, or just afterwards.

"Q. And what did you do then? A. I ran down there.

"Q. Down there where the boy was? A. Where the boy was, yes. * * *

"Q. Was Bill Mitchell there, the young man who testified? A. I didn't recognize him.

"Q. I see. What did you do when you got down there? A. Well, I started giving him artificial respiration. * * *

"Q. Mr. Young, when you got down to where the boy was, and began to work with artificial respiration, did you notice as to the apparent temperature of his body, as to whether it was warm or cold? A. It just felt like anybody's, who had been in swimming, cool from the water, but the flesh was warm.

"Q. Was there anybody doing resuscitation work when you came down there? A. Not to my knowledge. I didn't see anybody."

The record shows that after Bill Young, the life guard, attempted vainly to resuscitate the boy the pulmotor squad of the fire department arrived and also tried, without effect, and there is no dispute as to the fact that the boy died from drowning.

We have quoted portions of the record most favorable to respondent. There is, of course, other testimony contradicting much of the testimony quoted but, as hereinbefore stated, we are not here concerned with the matter of weighing conflicts in testimony. The question we have to decide is whether, taking all of the evidence into consideration, together with every inference and presumption favorable to respondent which may be deduced therefrom, and disregarding all evidence in conflict therewith, we must conclude that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury.

[4, 5] We have studied the record carefully. While it must be stated that the evidence on the part of plaintiff is not overwhelming, yet we do not believe it may fairly be said that it is lacking in sufficient probative force to support the verdict. We believe this is one of that class of cases where a trial court would not be justified in granting a motion for a directed verdict, but in which he might have been justified in granting a motion for a new trial. In this case, no motion for a new trial was made, and, unfortunately for appellants, we do not have the same power to weigh the evidence as the trial judge, who is virtually a thirteenth juror, would have upon a motion for a new trial.

[6, 7] The law requires that one or more qualified life guards, having no other duty to perform at the time, shall be on life guard duty at each pool where admission is charged. It must be assumed that this requirement means what it says and that the State Board of Health used the word "qualified" advisedly. While no exact standard has been specified it may reasonably be assumed that a qualified life guard is one who has at least ordinary powers of observation, who is vigilant and attentive to duty, and who realizes that, particularly in a swimming pool in which young children are charged admission to swim, he should be watchful for any sign of distress or danger and quick to render assistance. Parents sending children to a public swimming pool to swim have a right to assume that there will be a qualified life guard on life guard duty at the pool.

[8] In California, inferences in themselves constitute a recognized class of indirect evidence which a court or jury may not disregard. Sections 1957, 1958, Code Civ.Proc. Furthermore, "Upon the trial of a case, the jury is to find not only the facts but also the inferences from them, if any may properly be drawn. * * * When an inference is supported by the evidence, and is not opposed to human experience and reason, it cannot be disturbed by an appellate court." 10 Cal.Jur. 738.

We believe that the jury in the instant case had a right to infer from the evidence that a life guard 16 years of age who did not observe what two 11-year-old girls and 11-year-old Mike Mitchell observed, namely, that little 11-year-old Joe Lindsey was "floating in the water with his head up toward the water and his feet pointing toward the bottom," and, "that he was standing up and his hair was just floating around"; who did not observe the struggle of Joe Lindsey with Mike Mitchell the first time Mike swam to him; who did not observe Mike go in the second time to go after him; who, although the entire pool was 100 feet long, did not appear at the place where Joe Lindsey was lying until four minutes after he had been pulled out of the water by Bill Mitchell; was not a qualified life guard, was not present at the pool when Joe Lindsey was struggling and in distress, and was not on life guard duty at the pool when Joe Lindsey was drowned. We believe, further, that the jury had a right to infer that a life guard on life guard duty at the pool, being, as he should be, in a position where he could observe to a reasonable extent, swimmers, and particularly children, within the pool, would have observed the unusual position of little Joe Lindsey, which should have been indicated to a qualified life guard, if not to 11-year-old Mike Mitchell, that Joe Lindsey was not in any normal swimming position but was in distress and difficulty. The jury further had a right to infer from the evidence that Bill Young was not present, or on life guard duty or he would have observed these things, and that if he had been present and had observed them, he would have rescued the boy and the drowning would not have occurred. The pool was 100 feet long and 35 feet wide. There is evidence that there were other bathers but there is no evidence to show that the pool itself was crowded with swimmers; in fact, the inference would be to the contrary as all of these young children were up toward the diving board and if there were many adults swimming it is hardly likely that the young children would be at that end of the pool; and there is nothing in the record to prevent the jury from properly inferring that a life guard, being present on life guard duty, could have observed Joe Lindsey's unusual position in the water indicating his danger and distress.

Appellants assert that even assuming that the life guard was not on duty when Joe Lindsey was drowned, respondent has failed to show any causal connection between this alleged negligence and the accident complained of. In our opinion, this contention is fully answered by the following language in the case of Rovegno v. San Jose K. of C. Hall Association, 108 Cal.App. 591, at page 595, 291 P. 848, at page 849, in which case a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court:

> "The most serious question for determination is the question of proximate cause—does the record disclose any evidence of negligence on the part of respondents proximately causing the death of appellant's son? As above stated, the only negligence alleged is the failure of respondents to provide a life guard or other person or persons skilled in life saving. Even had such a guard been present, respondents urge, there is no showing that the boy's life would have been saved. Just what would have happened had a life-guard been present is, of course, not capable of direct proof. It is largely a matter of speculation or of inference. Even so, it has been held that the question is one for the jury and not for the court."

We conclude, therefore, that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment, and that the trial court properly denied appellants' motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Appellants contend that "the uncontradicted testimony shows that while Mr. and Mrs. De Vaux owned the land on which this pool was situated, Mr. De Vaux alone maintained and conducted the pool" and that, therefore, the judgment against Mrs. De Vaux is not justified.

Appellant De Vaux, called by respondent under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, testified: "Q. That property is owned by you and your wife? A. That is it.

"Q. You, of course, operate a swimming pool upon the property there? A. Oh, yes."

On redirect examination De Vaux testified: "I operate the pool." On re-cross examination he testified: "Q. You do as head of the family, is that it? A. I am the daddy of the family, yes.

"Q. But it is operated on property owned by you and Mrs. De Vaux? A. That is right.

"Q. And standing in your respective names? A. That is right." The evidence showed that appellants both resided upon the premises and were both active in the operation of the pool.

[9] This evidence was ample to justify the jury in inferring that Mrs. De Vaux was jointly interested and participated in the operation of the pool.

Appellants sought to introduce in evidence a notice posted at the pool in compliance with the requirement of the State Board of Health and also sought to introduce in evidence certain signs posted at the pool which were to the effect that anyone using the diving apparatus or pool did so at his own risk. The trial court sustained respondent's objections to the introduction of this evidence.

[10, 11] Assuming, without deciding, that such offered evidence should have been admitted, we are unable to see how its exclusion could have been prejudicial to appellants. There was no evidence that decedent had violated any rule, and the mere presence of signs stating that the bather used the pool at his own risk would not affect the duty of appellants to have a qualified life guard on life-guard duty at the pool.

Appellants' final contention is that the trial court erred in giving the following instruction:

"You are instructed that it is the duty of a life guard to use reasonable care and diligence in watching a public swimming pool and the persons using the same, so that he may, in case of an emergency, render reasonable assistance to one likely to drown."

[12, 13] We have already referred to the requirement of the State Department of Health that one or more qualified life guards should be on life-guard duty at each pool. We do not believe that said instruction goes beyond a fair interpretation of the meaning of said rule of the State Department of Health, or that it does more than to state what is meant by the requirement that a qualified life guard shall be on life-guard duty. If a life guard is not required to do what is set forth in the instruction objected to, it may well be asked why a life guard should be required. We see no error in this instruction. Furthermore, the trial court gave numerous instructions offered by appellants upon the issues of negligence and contributory negligence, and instructed the jury at appellants' request that "if you shall find from the evidence that at the time Joe Lindsey was drowned there was a life guard, having no other duty to perform, on life guard duty at said pool, it is your duty to bring in a verdict in favor of defendants." So, even if it were held that said instruction now objected to were erroneous, it could not be considered a sufficient error to require a reversal of the judgment.

For the reasons hereinbefore set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

STRICKLIN v. ROSEMEYER et al.*

Civ. 11807.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
March 16, 1942.

1. Negligence 🔑6

The violation of statute or ordinance constitutes negligence as a matter of law.

2. Street railroads 🔑99(1)

Where motorist had partly opened left door of automobile and had put one or both feet on running board and was leaning out for purpose of alighting when he was struck by trolley bus, the motorist was not violating city traffic code providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to be in any "roadway" other than a safety zone or crosswalk.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Roadway".

3. Appeal and error 🔑216(1)

In action by motorist for injuries sustained when struck by trolley bus as he was about to alight from left front door of automobile into street, where during deliberation jury returned to courtroom seeking instruction regarding whether it was against the law to alight from left side of automobile but court refused to answer the question and gave general instruction on contributory negligence, in the absence of any request for the giving of an instruction at the time when the question was asked, the motorist "waived" right to complain of refusal to instruct the jury upon that subject at that time.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

4. Street railroads 🔑117(24)

It is not "negligence per se", in the absence of a statutory prohibition, to alight from the left side of an automobile into street.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Negligence Per Se".

5. Street railroads 🔑99(1)

Section of city traffic code making it unlawful for any person to be in any roadway other than a safety zone or crosswalk, but providing that the section should not be construed to prevent the necessary use of a roadway by a pedestrian, does not prohibit a motorist from alighting from left door of automobile and walking around the automobile to sidewalk.

6. Street railroads 🔑117(24)

Where motorist, intending to alight from left door of automobile and to walk around automobile to sidewalk, was struck by trolley bus in attempting to alight from left door, motorist was not rendered guilty of "negligence per se" by section of city traffic code making it unlawful for any person to be in any roadway other than a safety zone or crosswalk but providing that the section should not be construed to prevent necessary use of roadway by a pedestrian.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1067
Street railroads 🔑118(11)

In action by motorist for injuries sustained when he was struck by trolley bus as he was about to alight from left door of automobile into street with intention of passing around automobile to sidewalk, where section of city traffic code making it unlawful for any person to be in any roadway other than a safety zone or crosswalk was introduced in evidence, refusing motorist's requested instruction to effect that one has a right to alight into street from left door of automobile provided he exercises ordinary care in doing so was error which was prejudicial.

8. Street railroads 🔑117(24)

Whether motorist who knew that trolley bus was approaching, but who opened left door of automobile just far enough to get his feet on running board and then leaned head and shoulders far enough out to look back for approaching traffic, was guilty of negligence was a question for jury in motorist's action for injuries sustained when struck by trolley bus.

9. Street railroads 🔑118(8)

In action by motorist for injuries sustained when struck by trolley bus, instruction that a trolley coach cannot go upon street except upon that part where trolleys attached to coach can remain in contact with overhead wires supplying electric energy and that it has better right to that space, to which others must yield when necessary, gave a right to defendants and placed a burden on motorist not justified by evidence which showed that on the side of street on which trolley bus had a legal right to operate it was as mobile laterally as any ordinary vehicle.

---

* Subsequent opinion 126 P.2d 665.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Personal injury action by Charles D. Stricklin against James C. Rosemeyer and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Maurice C. Ryan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cyril Appel and Ivores R. Dains, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff received personal injuries as a result of being struck by a trolley bus operated by defendants. From a judgment for defendants entered pursuant to the verdict of a jury plaintiff prosecutes this appeal. The testimony was in sharp conflict as to the manner in which the collision resulting in plaintiff's injuries occurred. Plaintiff had parked his automobile in front of his home on the southerly side of Eighteenth Street in San Francisco between Douglass and Eureka Streets. While he was about to alight from the left door of his automobile into the street the trolley bus which was proceeding easterly on Eighteenth Street struck him and his automobile.

The testimony most favorable to plaintiff was that the operator of the trolley bus was looking down making change for a passenger with the front doors of the trolley bus open and extending beyond the side of the bus and that the open doors first struck the rear of plaintiff's parked automobile and then grazed along its side striking plaintiff. Plaintiff had looked in his rear view mirror and seen no vehicle approaching, had looked out the left window of his automobile and likewise seen no vehicle. He then partly opened the left door, put one or both feet on the running board, leaned his head and shoulders out of the car to look for approaching traffic from the rear, saw the doors of the trolley bus almost instantly strike the rear of his automobile and a moment later was struck himself. It is undisputed that plaintiff had earlier, while making a U-turn at Douglass Street, seen the trolley bus and knew that it was proceeding generally in his direction on Eighteenth Street.

According to the evidence most favorable to defendants the trolley bus was passing plaintiff's parked car with a clearance of at least eighteen inches when plaintiff suddenly threw open the left door of his automobile, which when fully opened extended 22½ inches beyond the side of his automobile, and the front corner post of the trolley bus almost instantly struck the extended door.

The evidence was substantial to support either set of facts, and if plaintiff and his witnesses were believed by the jury a verdict in his favor would have found ample support in the evidence.

Defendants introduced into evidence a portion of section 20 of article III of the Traffic Code of the City and County of San Francisco reading as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person to be in any roadway other than a safety zone or crosswalk; provided that this provision shall not be construed to prevent the necessary use of a roadway by a pedestrian."

[1] The court correctly instructed the jury that: "It is the law that a violation of a statute or ordinance constitutes negligence as a matter of law."

[2] It is to be observed that plaintiff was not in the roadway at the time when he was struck and it cannot be successfully contended that he was at that time violating any provision of the section of the traffic code which we have quoted. The matter might be considered unimportant but for an incident which occurred after the jurors had retired to deliberate. They returned to the court room seeking further instructions at which time the record shows the following colloquy:

"Juror John M. Nelson: I would like to ask one question: Is it against the law to walk out of the left side of the automobile?

"The Court: Well, I have given you all the instructions on that point that I feel apply to this case. I have given you instructions defining negligence and contributory negligence and I don't want to add anything further to what has been said on that."

Thereupon at the request of another juror the general instructions on contributory negligence were read to the jury and the jury retired. The case was not only close on the evidence but apparently close in the minds of the jurors since the verdict finally returned was shown upon the polling of the jury to have been reached by a vote of 9 to 3.

[3] Appellant cites and relies upon Brooks v. City of Monterey, 106 Cal.App. 649, 290 P. 540, to support his contention that it was error for the court to refuse to answer the question of the juror Nelson. The case is distinguishable in that counsel for plaintiff in the case before us at the time the court refused to answer the question remained silent, made no objection and at that time proposed no form of instruction to be given in answer to the juror's query. In the Brooks case the opinion shows that counsel for the plaintiff requested the court to give an instruction framed by himself and, the court having refused to give any answer to the jury's inquiry because it was after noon on Saturday and he erroneously concluded that he had no right to give additional instructions on a non-judicial day, moved for a continuance to the following Monday. We have been cited to no case where it was held reversible error to refuse a request from a jury for further instructions in which counsel was afforded the opportunity to propose such an instruction and failed to do so. For example in Futoransky v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 169 App.Div. 719, 155 N.Y.S. 734, cited by appellant, counsel in that case at the time of the inquiry requested a proper instruction on the subject of the juror's question which the court refused to give, and the same thing occurred in Stevenson v. New York Contracting Co.-Pennsylvania Terminal, 137 App.Div. 742, 122 N.Y.S. 726, cited in the Futoransky case. In the absence of any request for the giving of an instruction at the time when the question was asked particularly when coupled with the failure to make any objection to the conduct of the court, we are inclined to the view that appellant must be held to have waived his right to complain of the court's refusal to instruct the jury upon that subject at that time.

This conclusion, however, does not dispose of the entire question. Appellant among his instructions originally proposed included the following which the court refused to give: "The plaintiff Charles Stricklin, is not to be charged with negligence merely because he alighted by the northerly door of his automobile. I instruct you that the standard of care required of the plaintiff in this action is ordinary care as will later be defined. It is the care an ordinary person of ordinary prudence would use under all the circumstances of the situation, and if you find that the plaintiff did use ordinary care in alighting from his automobile, I instruct you that the plaintiff had a right to alight therefrom by the northerly door."

[4] Setting aside for a moment the possible effect of the section of the San Francisco Traffic Code above quoted, the proposed instruction was a correct statement of the law. It is not negligence per se in the absence of a statutory prohibition to alight from the left side of an automobile into the street. Lewis v. Memmler, 140 Cal.App. 364, 35 P.2d 406. It follows that, unless the section of the Traffic Code prohibits it, appellant was entitled to have the jury instructed that one has a right to alight into the street from the left door of an automobile providing he exercised ordinary care in doing so.

[5] Turning to the section of the Traffic Code in question it is apparent that it is not a model of legislative craftsmanship. It takes with one hand and gives back to an uncertain degree with the other. The first clause is an absolute prohibition to be in a roadway except in a safety zone or cross-walk. The proviso makes a further exception in the case of "the necessary use of a roadway by a pedestrian." The record in this case fails to show whether the ordinance in other parts gives any definition of the "necessary use of a roadway." In Quinn v. Rosenfeld, 15 Cal.2d 486, 102 P.2d 317, our Supreme Court had under consideration the legal effect of the identical section. It was held in that case that the section did not prohibit a pedestrian crossing the roadway outside of a cross-walk. Further than that the Supreme Court was not called upon to construe the section in that case. In our case the plaintiff admittedly was not intending to cross the roadway but to walk around his car to the sidewalk. But in alighting from his car and until he started to walk around it he would be in no different position than if he had intended to cross the street at right angles to the curb. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in Quinn v. Rosenfeld, supra, plaintiff if otherwise exercising due care would be entitled to alight from his car by the left door and walk across the street at right angles to the curb. He therefore was not prohibited by the Traffic Code from alighting by the left door into the street. Let us suppose that A alights from the left rear door of a parked automobile intending to cross the street at the same moment that B alights from the left front door of the same automobile intending to walk around the car to the sidewalk. If they are both struck by C's automobile negligently swerving into them before either has taken a step could it be said that A is not and B is guilty of negligence per se?

[6, 7] We pass the serious question of the validity of this section of the Traffic Code suggested, but not decided, in Quinn v. Rosenfeld, supra, as not necessary to the decision of this case. We are satisfied that in attempting to alight from the left door of his automobile plaintiff was not rendered guilty of negligence per se by the provision of the Traffic Code here in question. The section of the Traffic Code having been introduced plaintiff was entitled to a proper instruction as to its legal effect and, in view of the closeness of the case, the doubt in the minds of the jurors shown by the juror Nelson's question, and the closeness of the vote of the jurors in arriving at their verdict, it was prejudicial error to refuse to give the instruction proposed by appellant.

[8] Respondents argue that in any event appellant's conduct in attempting to alight from his car knowing that the trolley bus was approaching was negligence as a matter of law. We cannot hold that opening the door of his automobile just far enough to get his feet on the running board and then leaning his head and shoulders far enough out to look back for approaching traffic (and this was appellant's testimony) is negligence as a matter of law. It would present, at most, a question of fact as to whether in so acting appellant was using ordinary care and prudence. Murphy v. St. Claire Brewing Co., 41 Cal.App.2d 535, 539, 107 P.2d 273.

[9] The court gave the following instruction: "A trolley coach cannot go upon the street or highway except upon that part or portion of the street or highway where the trolleys attached to the coach can remain in contact with the overhead wires supplying the electric energy necessary to operate the coach, and hence it has the better right to that space or part of the highway where it must necessarily be operated, to which others must yield when necessary."

The operator of the trolley bus testified that it could be driven beyond the center of the street. It stopped within three feet of the curb to take on passengers at Douglass Street. It is thus clear that on the side of the street on which it had a legal right to operate it was as mobile laterally as any ordinary vehicle. The instruction is based upon a rule of law applicable to street railway cars which can only operate upon fixed tracks and gives a better right to the space covered by the tracks for that reason. 23 Cal.Jur. p. 866. It can have no application to a vehicle which can be driven at any point from the curb to the middle of the street. The instruction gave a right to defendants and put a burden upon plaintiff which was not justified by the circumstances.

For the reasons given herein the judgment appealed from is reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 425

DA ARAUJE v. RODRIQUES.

Civ. 11763.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 12, 1942.

1. Execution 🔑73
Judgment 🔑910(1)

Since the adoption of the Practice Act, period of limitation for suit on judgment is five years, during which period execution issues as a matter of right, with discretionary power in courts to issue execution after lapse of period of limitations. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

2. Execution 🔑70

The purpose of 1933 amendment expressly requiring "due notice to judgment debtor" before court's exercise of discretionary power to issue execution on judgment barred by five-year statute of limitations was to change the previously well-established rule that an order for execution to issue after five years could be made without notice to judgment debtor and to require such notice to be given thereafter in all cases as a "condition precedent" to the making of every such order. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition Precedent".

3. Execution ⇨7
Judgment ⇨910(1)

A judgment at end of five years is unenforceable for all purposes except that execution may be issued upon judgment by leave of court obtained in the manner provided by statute, and such an execution is not supported by a judgment otherwise valid and enforceable, but gets its vitality solely by reason of order of court for issuance of execution. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

4. Execution ⇨73

Under statute giving court discretionary power, after due notice to judgment debtor, to issue execution on judgment barred by five-year statute of limitations, no mere lapse of time, however long, is a bar to an order for issuance of execution. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

5. Execution ⇨73

The District Court of Appeal would assume that Legislature enacted 1933 amendment requiring due notice to judgment debtor before court could exercise discretionary power to issue execution on judgment barred by five-year statute of limitations, with knowledge that there was no express limit to time within which such execution could be ordered to issue, and that no barred judgment, however old, became so stale that as a matter of law it would not support such an order. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

6. Execution ⇨70

The Legislature, in enacting 1933 amendment requiring due notice to judgment debtor before court should exercise discretionary power to issue execution on judgment barred by five-year statute of limitations, intended to make the giving of notice jurisdictional to making of order for issuance of execution on barred judgment in the sense that any such order made without notice would be void, and did not merely intend to provide a further procedural step, the failure to take which would render order for execution vulnerable to direct attack on appeal but still leave order immune to collateral attack. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

7. Justices of the peace ⇨135(2)

In issuing writs of execution, justice of peace acts in purely ministerial capacity, and his act is no different than that of clerk of court of record in issuing such writ.

8. Officers ⇨103

A purely ministerial act is void unless officer performing the act conforms strictly to provisions of statute.

9. Justices of the peace ⇨59

Nothing is presumed in favor of jurisdiction of justice's court.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1091(1)

In absence of proof, District Court of Appeal would assume that justice court's purely ministerial act of issuing writ of execution on judgment barred by five-year statute of limitations was not preceded by or based upon a judicial order granting leave for issuance of writ as required by statute. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 681, 685.

11. Justices of the peace ⇨135(2, 4)

The act of justice of peace in issuing execution on judgment which was barred by five-year statute of limitations was void, and subject to "collateral attack", where due notice of issuance of writ was not given judgment debtor as required by statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 685.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Collateral Attack".

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; William F. James, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Antonia Da Arauje against Frank Rodriques. From a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Randall O'Neill, George A. Martinelli, and Morettini & O'Neill, all of San Jose, for appellant.

H. A. Gabriel, of San Jose, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment for plaintiff in an action to quiet title. On January 10, 1933, defendant in this action recovered judgment by default against the plaintiff in this action in the Justice's Court of Santa Clara Township for $260.13 and costs. A motion was thereafter made to set this default judgment aside. On March 3, 1938, the justice denied this motion and a writ of execution was issued on the same day. Pursuant to this writ the sheriff sold the property here in suit and the defendant herein became the purchaser at the execution sale. It was stipulated that no motion was made, nor any affidavit filed in support of the issuance of said execution as required by section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is appellant's position that the act of the justice of the peace in issuing execution over five years after the date of entry of the judgment without the notice, motion and affidavit required by section 685 was not a void act but only voidable and hence not subject to collateral attack. Appellant cites Freeman on Executions, vol. I, 3d Ed., pages 104–107, section 29; 10 R.C.L., pages 1226, 1227, section 14; 21 Am.Jur., page 35, section 45; 23 C.J., page 379, section 143; and Eddy v. Coldwell, 23 Or. 163, 31 P. 475, 37 Am.St.Rep. 672. The rule announced in all of these citations is fully stated in Freeman on Executions, vol. I, page 104 et seq.: "The consequences of issuing an execution after a year and a day are the same as the consequences of a premature issue. The writ is voidable, but not void. The defendant may take proceedings to have it set aside. If he chooses to interpose no objection to the irregularity, others cannot do so for him. Even he cannot attack it collaterally; and a levy and sale made under it are sufficient to transfer his title. The decisions made under the English statute requiring the original execution to issue within a year and a day seem to be equally applicable to cases where executions have issued at too late a day under American statutes. * * * The reasoning on which all these decisions, whether made under English or American statutes, rests, is this: the judgment, notwithstanding the lapse of the year and a day, or other time designated, is, unless actually satisfied, still in force. From the lapse of time, the presumption may be indulged that a satisfaction has taken place, or that some reason exists for the nonissuance of execution. To give the defendant an opportunity of showing cause against the execution, the plaintiff is required to bring him before the court by scire facias or by motion, and thus give him an occasion to show whether the judgment has been satisfied. But as the power to issue execution still exists, its issuance without the scire facias or motion is merely the erroneous exercise of a conceded power, and must, like all other errors, be corrected by some appropriate proceeding * * *".

To test the applicability of this rule to our own statutory situation it is desirable to sketch briefly the legal background against which it was evolved and compare it with our own statutory development.

"A judgment not satisfied or barred by lapse of time, but temporarily inoperative so far as the right to issue execution is concerned, is usually called a dormant judgment. At common law a judgment lost its force as a lien on the judgment debtors realty, and no execution could be issued thereon when it had lain dormant for a year and a day. Upon failure so to sue out execution, plaintiff was driven to his action of debt upon the judgment, or to a scire facias to revive the judgment and obtain fiat for execution under the Statute of Westminster II (13 Edw. I) St. 1c 45. By statute, in the various jurisdictions of this country, there is now a fixed limitation of the period during which the life of a judgment continues, generally considerably greater than the common law 'year and a day.' But these statutes also universally provide that a judgment which has become dormant and lost its lien may be revived and restored to its original force by scire facias, action on the judgment, or special statutory proceeding." 34 C.J. p. 655.

It is to be noted of this statement that the "year and a day" within which execution must be issued in the English practice was not coterminous with the period fixed by the statute of limitations for a suit upon the judgment but shorter than that period and execution could only be authorized to issue by resort to scire facias where the judgment itself was not barred by the statute of limitations.

The following quotation from Browne & Manzanares Co. v. Chavez, 9 N.M. 316, 54 P. 234, aptly summarizes the historical background and points the distinction between a dormant judgment, which could be revived by resort to scire facias for the purpose of obtaining the issuance of execution, and a barred judgment, which under no circumstances could support the issuance of a valid writ.

"At common law the life of a judgment was 20 years, but, if an execution was not issued thereon within a year and a day, the judgment became dormant, and an alias execution could not issue thereon, unless revived by scire facias. The judgment, therefore, although it had been dormant, was not dead, as its life was 20 years. * * * The writ of scire facias was adopted at common law as the proper means of restoring vitality to a dormant judgment, before it was satisfied or barred by limitation. * * * It is clear that at common law the proceeding by scire facias was not a new or distinct action, but simply a writ or process in the original suit, for the sole purpose of securing the right to issue execution upon a dormant judgment, prior to the expiration of its legal life, and it was not intended nor used for the purpose of reviving a judgment whose life had expired and become barred by a statute of limitation."

It will be found upon examination that in most, if not all, of the states of this country which have followed the rule that the issuance of execution upon a dormant judgment without resort to scire facias, or the substituted statutory proceeding by motion, is merely voidable and not void, the same legal situation exists, i. e., the period within which execution issues as a matter of right is shorter than the period of the statute of limitations for suit upon the judgment and it is only, to adopt the phraseology of the Supreme Court of New Mexico above quoted, while the judgment is dormant but not dead that execution may be authorized by such proceedings.

[1] From the time of the adoption of the Practice Act, with the qualifications hereinafter noted, the situation in this state has been the exact converse. The period of limitation for suit upon a judgment has been fixed at five years during which period execution issued as a matter of right, and engrafted upon that has been a discretionary power in the courts to issue execution after the lapse of the period of limitation. Thus instead of providing for the discretionary issuance of the writ upon a dormant judgment after the lapse of some lesser period than that of the statute of limitations, our legislature saw fit to provide for the discretionary issuance of the writ upon a judgment otherwise dead by expiration of the limitation period. In the Practice Act the five-year limitation for suits upon judgments was found in section 209 and the provision for issuance of execution after five years in section 214. St.1851, pp. 83, 85. See Mason v. Cronise, 20 Cal. 211, 218. Section 214 was repealed in 1861. Stats. 1861, p. 116. It was reenacted in 1866 (Stats.1866, p. 704), but made applicable only to cases "other than for the recovery of money"; was so adopted into section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure and remained in that form until 1895, when the words "other than for the recovery of money" were deleted and the last sentence of the section added. 11 Cal.Jur. pp. 47-49.

The unusual and somewhat anomalous legal situation created by allowing execution to issue on a judgment otherwise barred by the statute of limitations was the subject of comment in Mason v. Cronise, supra, and Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 494, 91 P. 330, but in each case the court held that despite the apparent inconsistency the legislative intent was clear.

[2] After the amendment of the section in 1895, so as to include within the cases in which execution could be issued after the lapse of five years judgments for the recovery of money, our Supreme Court in Doehla v. Phillips, supra, following Bryan v. Stidger, 17 Cal. 270, and Harrier v. Bassford, 145 Cal. 529, 78 P. 1038, held that the section as it then read authorized the court to make an order for the issuance of execution upon ex parte application without notice to the judgment debtor. This continued to be the law until the amendment of section 685 in 1933 when the section was cast in its present form expressly requiring "due notice to the judgment debtor." The obvious and only purpose of this amendment was to change the previously well-established rule that an order for execution to issue after five years could be made without notice to the judgment debtor, and to require such notice to be given thereafter in all cases as a condition precedent to the making of every such order.

The question that presents itself is whether the legislature by this amendment to section 685 intended to make the giving of the notice jurisdictional to the making of the order for issuance of execution after the lapse of five years in the sense that any such order made without notice would be void, or whether it merely intended to provide a further procedural step the failure to take which would render the order for execution vulnerable to direct attack upon appeal but still leave it immune to collateral attack.

[3-6] In our decision of this question we are entitled to consider the legislative history of section 685 and to contrast it with the corresponding history of the revival of dormant judgments in England and the other jurisdictions of this country. Under the English law and in most of the jurisdictions of this country, as we have pointed out, under no circumstances could execution issue upon a judgment barred by the statute of limitations. The issuance of execution without leave of court after the lapse of a year and a day or other substituted period was therefore supported by a judgment valid and enforceable for all purposes. Under our system the judgment at the end of five years is dead and unenforceable for all purposes except that execution may be issued upon it by leave of court obtained in the manner provided in section 685. Such an execution is not supported by a judgment otherwise valid and enforceable but gets its vitality solely by reason of the order of court for its issuance. The distinction is real and important. It has been consistently held under section 685 that no mere lapse of time, however long, is a bar to an order for the issuance of execution. As examples see Hatch v. Calkins, —— Cal.App.2d ——, 122 P.2d 126, where execution issued after the lapse of 30 years; Palace Hotel Co. v. Crist, 6 Cal.App.2d 690, 45 P.2d 415, after 20 years; and Welk v. Conner, 102 Cal.App. 286, 282 P. 963, after 13 years. When the legislature amended section 685 in 1933 so as to require "due notice to the judgment debtor" in all cases as a condition to the issuance of execution on judgments barred by the statute of limitations we are entitled to believe that it did so with knowledge of the fact that there was no express limit to the time within which such execution could be ordered to issue, and that no barred judgment, however old, became so stale that as a matter of law it would not support such an order. It is reasonable to conclude that in requiring the giving of notice to the judgment debtor in all such cases the legislature intended to enact a jurisdictional requirement. In effect it said: "Hereafter you shall not have execution on a barred judgment unless you first give due notice of your motion for that purpose." The question is purely one of legislative intent. To hold that the requirement of notice is procedural but not jurisdictional would be to emasculate by judicial construction an amendment whose sole purpose is clear, that no judgment barred by limitation should be enforced against a judgment debtor without first giving him an opportunity to be heard.

[7] There is a further factor in this case which equally leads to the conclusion that the issuance of the writ of execution in this case was a void act. It is settled that in issuing writs of execution a justice of the peace acts in a purely ministerial capacity. 6 Cal.Jur. Ten Year Supp., p. 618; Dunn v. Justice's Court, 136 Cal.App. 269, 28 P.2d 690; Santini v. Justice's Court, 218 Cal. 671, 24 P.2d 761; Hamilton v. Tutt, 65 Cal. 57, 2 P. 878; Town of Hayward v. Pimental, 107 Cal. 386, 40 P. 545. His act in that respect is no different than that of the clerk of a court of record in issuing the writ.

[8-11] The record on appeal shows no order of the justice of the peace granting leave for the issuance of execution, which would be a judicial act, but only the issuance of the writ, a purely ministerial act. The only docket entry shown reads simply: "Execution issued." Conceding that, if the justice had purported to make an order for the issuance of execution without the notice to the judgment debtor required by section 685, such action would have been merely an erroneous judicial act but not void (Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 265 P. 246), it is the law that a purely ministerial act is void unless the officer performing it conforms strictly to the provisions of the statute. Baird v. Smith, 216 Cal. 408, 14 P.2d 749. Since nothing is presumed in favor of the jurisdiction of a justice's court (Antilla v. Justice's Court, 209 Cal. 621, 624, 290 P. 43), we must assume in the absence of proof that the purely ministerial act of issuing the writ of execution was not preceded by or based upon a judicial order granting leave for its issuance. The case in this respect is no different than if a county clerk purported to issue a writ of execution after five years in violation of the terms of section 681, Code of Civil Procedure, and without leave of court as required by section 685.

For the reasons given the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d Supp. 859

PEOPLE v. PHILBIN.

Cr. A 1862.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

March 9, 1942.

Rehearing Denied March 16, 1942.

1. Gaming ⇨68

Draw poker and low ball poker, played for money, constituted "gambling" but were not unlawful. Pen.Code, § 318.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gambling".

2. Criminal law ⇨45

The statute prohibiting prevailing upon a person to visit a room, building, or other place kept for purpose of gambling is unambiguous and requires no interpretation, and hence could not be judicially amended so as to be restricted to gambling prohibited by law. Pen.Code, § 318.

3. Statutes ⇨225

The statutes making specified games illegal, and prohibiting owner or lessor of house from permitting such games to be played, and the statute prohibiting prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place, are not in "pari materia" except remotely, and are not to be read together. Pen.Code, §§ 318, 330, 331.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pari Materia".

4. Statutes ⇨225

The statute prohibiting prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place is not to be read together with subsequently enacted and irrelevant statutes dealing with particular gambling games. Pen.Code, §§ 315, 318, 337, 337a.

5. Criminal law ⇨45

The policy back of statute prohibiting prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place is indirect partial protection of the public against an evil. Pen.Code, § 318.

6. Constitutional law ⇨208(1)

The Legislature may recognize degrees of harm and confine its restrictions to classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clear, and, if evil is especially experienced in a particular branch of business, prohibition need not be couched in all-embracing terms.

7. Criminal law ⇨45

In prosecution for prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place, that defendant was operating gambling club under license from city did not better his position.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨592(4)

The city of Gardena could not legalize prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place, which the general law forbids. Pen. Code, § 318.

9. Criminal law ⇨45

In prosecution for prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place, complaint was not insufficient because not alleging location of the building that was kept for gambling. Pen.Code, § 318.

10. Criminal law ⇨45

The gist of the offense of prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place is the giving of the invitation.

11. Criminal law ⇨1186(4)

Where prosecution for prevailing upon a person to visit gambling place was submitted on stipulated evidence, defendant suffered no possible prejudice from failure of complaint to allege location of the building that was kept for gambling, and there would be no basis for reversal. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

◆

Appeal from Police Court of City of Glendale, Los Angeles County; F. H. Lowe, Judge.

Clarence Philbin was convicted of prevailing upon another to visit a room and building kept for gambling, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Dailey S. Stafford, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John F. Dockweiler, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Acting Presiding Judge.

It was charged against the defendant, in the Police Court of the City of Glendale, that he did "unlawfully, through invitation and device, prevail upon N. F. Walton to visit a room and building kept for the purpose of gambling, and in which gambling was conducted and carried on." We are of the opinion that the judgment of conviction, from which the defendant appeals, should be affirmed, although the evidence reveals that the gambling for which the building was kept was not itself unlawful.

Section 318, Penal Code, is the statute upon which the charge was based. Incidentally, all sections referred to hereafter are Penal Code sections. Section 318 reads as follows: "Whoever, through invitation or device, prevails upon any person to visit any room, building, or other places kept for the purpose of gambling or prostitution, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be confined in the county jail not exceeding six months, or fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment."

[1] The trial was had upon a written stipulation of evidence. In the city of Gardena a social club was being operated. (Its dues were a dollar a year, payable at the end of the year "only if the member is entirely satisfactory.") The Club was housed in a building leased for its use and was kept for the purpose of enabling its members to play draw poker and low ball poker for money. The stipulation describes how these games are played; we need note only that the games undoubtedly constituted gambling, but a variety of gambling not made unlawful either by the statutes of the state (Ex parte Meyer, 1895, 5 Cal.Unrep. 64, 40 P. 953; Monterey Club v. Superior Court, 1941, 48 Cal.App.2d 131, 119 P.2d 349) or by any local ordinance.

The defendant, the stipulation further sets forth, mailed a letter addressed to N. P. Walton and received by him in Glendale, in which the defendant, signing as secretary for the Club, set forth its location and its advantages, and solicited his membership. "That by reason of said letter he (N. P. Walton) decided to, and did, visit the Gardena Club;" "that he would not have visited said Club had he not received the letter." Upon his visit to the Club he found some sixty-six players engaged in playing either draw or low ball poker for money.

[2] From the evidence, then, and without dispute, it appears that the defendant prevailed upon N. P. Walton to visit a building kept for the purpose of gambling. Clearly, the defendant has violated the provisions of section 318 as written; his only escape is to have us add to the section after the word "gambling" the further words, not now there, "where such gambling is prohibited by law." The provisions of the section are clear and unambiguous; they require no interpretation; if any amendment is to be made it should be by the legislature for "the court is without the power to do" it. In re Goddard, 1937, 24 Cal.App.2d 132, 141, 74 P.2d 818, 824.

In support of his contention that "gambling" as written in section 318 should be limited to gambling which has been made unlawful, appellant states: "According to a well approved rule of construction sections 315, 318, 330, 331, 337, and 337a, insofar as they relate to the same subject, should be construed together." An application of the principle of statutory construction referred to proves to be of no assistance to appellant. Section 315, in so far as of interest, reads: "Every person who keeps a house of ill-fame in this state, resorted to for the purposes of prostitution * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor * * *." In a measure, sections 315 and 318 do deal with the same subject matter, that is, houses kept for prostitution. In one section, the keeping of the house is made a misdemeanor, in the other, prevailing upon a person to visit the house is the act outlawed. The only significance of this to the problem we are considering is that since by no state law (of which we are aware) is it made a public offense to act as a prostitute, section 315 prohibits the keeping of a house for a purpose itself not unlawful, and section 318 makes it a crime to prevail upon one to visit a house where that which goes on has not been made a crime.

[3] No contrary interpretation of the provisions of section 318 is warranted by virtue of sections 330 and 331. The first section declares certain gambling games (some seven were originally listed) to be illegal. No attempt is made to define "gambling" and by no stretch of interpretation can it be said that the section endeavors to list all gambling games. Section 331 prohibits an owner or lessor of a house from permitting any of the games mentioned in section 330 to be played in his house. Neither section refers to a house kept either for the purpose of gambling generally or even for the more limited purpose of carrying on the games listed in section 330. It would seem, then, that sections 330, 331 and 318 are not in pari materia except remotely, and that by reading them together no additional light is thrown on section 318.

[4] Section 337 cannot be said to relate even remotely to the same subject as does section 318. By this section any public official is made guilty of a felony who endeavors to save a violator of section 330 from his just deserts, or who votes for or issues a license or permit purporting to authorize the playing of a game banned by section 330. Section 337a deals with various phases of pool-selling and book-making, and adds that an owner of a house may not even once permit its use for any purpose prohibited by the section. We find no guide to the meaning of section 318 in this section. Furthermore, it should be noted that both these sections were added to the Penal Code after the adoption of section 318 (Stats. 1880, p. 40). What the legislature meant by the clear terms it used in section 318 is not to be found, we are of the opinion, in these irrelevant sections, adopted subsequently.

In support of his statement that these several sections should be read together, appellant cites In re Chase, 1931, 119 Cal. App. 432, 6 P.2d 577, 578. In this case it was contended that the complaint, charging a violation of section 318 and under which the defendant had been convicted, failed to state a public offense because the place kept for the purpose of gambling was outside of the state. The court concluded that the complaint sufficiently, although with uncertainty, stated that the place referred to was within the state, and remanded the petitioner to custody. It follows that what the court had to say about a state of affairs not before it, that is, a complaint referring to a gambling place outside the state, is obiter dictum. Moreover, the question discussed (but not decided) was another question than that now under review. The court did, it is true, refer to a group of sections which "in so far as they relate to the same subject, should be construed together." But doubtless the court did not mean its reference to sections "315–318" to be inclusive, for section 317, since repealed plainly had nothing to do with the question under discussion. But we note that section 317, which was in the code when section 318 was added, in providing that "Every person who * * * publishes any notice or advertisement of any medicine or means * * * for the prevention of conception * * * is guilty of a felony," furnishes another illustration of the legislative practice of making it a public offense to invite the doing of something itself nowhere declared to be unlawful.

The result is not necessarily illogical; it certainly is not so absurd that it warrants judicial legislation. The legislature may well have recognized both the evil of gambling and the instinct to gamble which seems inherent in mankind. The public policy against that form of gambling known as a lottery is so well settled that it is expressed in the state constitution. Art. IV, sec. 26. In some of its other forms, gambling was prohibited by the legislature by its enactment of section 330, Penal Code, in 1872, based on an earlier statute, Stats.1857, p. 267. Section 330 was amended in 1891 to add to the list of those outlawed other games theretofore lawful. From time to time other forms of gambling may be declared unlawful, and again the ban be withdrawn.

[5, 6] Gambling not prohibited by the constitution, nor at any moment declared by the legislature to be illegal, may, nevertheless, be subject to indirect attack by the legislature. For reasons commending themselves to the legislature, the playing of stud-horse poker is expressly made a misdemeanor, section 330, while draw poker is not prohibited. Draw poker for money is nevertheless gambling, and while it may now lawfully be engaged in, equally lawfully the legislature could attack such evil as it sees in it by providing that no one should be prevailed upon to play it. The policy back of section 318, that of an indirect, partial, protection of the public against an evil, is one that the legislature may make. In our opinion, section 318 clearly expresses such a policy. "It [the legislature] is free to recognize degrees of harm, and it may confine its restrictions to those classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clearest. As has been said, it may 'proceed cautiously, step by step,' and 'if an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business' it is not necessary that the prohibition 'should be couched in all-embracing terms.'" Miller v. Wilson, 1915, 236 U.S. 373, 384, 35 S.Ct. 342, 344, 59 L.Ed. 628, 632, L.R.A.1915F, 829.

[7, 8] Appellant's further contention that he was operating his club under a license from the City of Gardena, even if true, does not better his position. The city, one of the sixth class, could not, if it tried to do so, legalize that which the general law forbids. People v. Settles, 1938, 29 Cal.App.2d, Supp., 781, 78 P.2d 274. Moreover, the most that could be said for the effect of the license would be to authorize the keeping of the Club for the purpose of gambling; it does not purport to relieve one from the restrictions of section 318.

[9-11] Appellant made a motion in arrest of judgment and now argues that the complaint was insufficient because it did not allege the location of the building that was kept for gambling. The denial of the motion was not error. "The gist of the offense * * * is the giving of the invitation." People v. Chase, 1931, 117 Cal.App.,Supp., 775, 780, 1 P.2d 60, 62. See, also, People v. De Martini, 1914, 25 Cal.App. 9, 142 P. 898; People v. Pierce, 1939, 14 Cal.2d 639, 642, 96 P.2d 784. Moreover, if the complaint were subject to criticism in this particular, it would be no basis for a reversal in a case submitted, as this was, on stipulated evidence revealing that no possible prejudice was suffered by the defendant. Const. Art. VI, sec. 4½.

The judgment of conviction is affirmed.

FOX, J., and VICKERS, Judge pro tem., concur.

20 Cal.2d 42

PEOPLE v. BRIGGS.

Cr. 4387.

Supreme Court of California.

March 23, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⚿1037(1)

Ordinarily, unless timely objection is made, an objection of misconduct will not be considered by an appellate court.

2. Criminal law ⚿1037(1)

Where evidence left no doubt as to accused's guilt of first degree murder, alleged misconduct of district attorney in stating to jury in argument that accused's testimony that deceased had assisted his estranged wife in procuring an abortion was uncorroborated and that prosecution could not call accused's wife as a witness instead of saying that wife could not be compelled to testify against her husband, to which remarks no timely objection was made, did not constitute prejudicial error. Pen.Code, § 1322.

3. Criminal law ⚿1166½(12)

Where defense counsel in argument to jury stated that district attorney could have called accused's wife as a witness subject to accused's right to prevent her from testifying against him and that he did not think the defense would have exercised such privilege, trial court's statement that wife may not testify against her husband without his consent, and that it has been held misconduct for district attorney by calling wife as witness to place accused in a situation where he had to either accept wife's testimony or make objections, did not prejudice accused's rights. Pen.Code, § 1322.

4. Criminal law ⚿361(1)

In prosecution for murder, court properly refused to permit accused on redirect examination to explain those inconsistent statements allegedly made to police officers which accused directly or equivocally denied having made, where he was permitted to explain other statements.

5. Homicide ⚿253(1)

Evidence warranted conviction for murder in the first degree.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Maurice Louis Briggs was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, an appeal is automatically taken under Penal Code, § 1239.

Judgment and order affirmed.

James O. Warner, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson and Frank Richards, Deputy Attys., Gen., for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

Maurice Briggs has been convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death. Upon his appeal from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he admits that he shot and killed Nat Rosenberg, but he complains of rulings of the judge upon evidence and asserted misconduct of the district attorney during argument to the jury which, he asserts, amount to prejudicial error.

The information included charges of two prior convictions of a felony. After he admitted these convictions and pleaded not guilty, and also not guilty by reason of insanity, a jury found him guilty without including in its verdict any recommendation concerning the punishment to be imposed for the crime. A trial upon the issue of insanity followed and resulted in a verdict by the same jury finding that the appellant was sane at the time the homicide was committed.

The fatal shooting occurred at the place of business of Cotton Products Corporation, where the appellant was previously employed. Rosenberg, who was also known as Nat Ross, was night foreman of the plant. A short time before, Briggs had married a fellow employee. They lived together only two months, when they separated, and she returned to her employment. On the night of the homicide, she was at work in the processing room.

Four witnesses to the crime testified at the trial. The appellant was seen at the entrance to the building three times during the course of the evening and finally, shortly after ten o'clock, he told one of the employees to call Rosenberg as he wished to see him. Rosenberg left his work and walked towards the door. When he was within about ten feet of it, Briggs reached outside, grasped a rifle, and shot him. Rosenberg fell backwards on the floor. Briggs then strode inside the room and, pointing the gun at him, fired another shot from a distance of about two feet. No word had been spoken by either man.

About thirty minutes later, two policemen arrested Briggs as he stood on a street corner two blocks away. One of them testified that in response to his question, "Well, how do you feel about it now?" the appellant replied: "Sorry I cannot do it again." Later that night, Briggs was questioned by other officers. According to the transcript of his statement at that time they asked him when he first planned to kill Rosenberg. "About three weeks ago," said Briggs, "I was figuring on working him over. I don't know whether I was figuring on killing him but I probably would have if I was able to with my hand, and I thought maybe I couldn't do a good enough job that way." "Had you definitely made up your mind that you would kill him?" they then asked. "Yes," answered Briggs.

At his trial, the appellant took the stand and admitted that he shot Rosenberg. It was before noon, he said, when he purchased the rifle, but he arranged to leave the gun at the store until five o'clock. From another store he bought five shells. In the late afternoon, he called for his gun, carried it down to the plant of the Cotton Products Corporation and hid it back of an adjoining apartment building. He then placed himself at a vantage point from which he could observe the entrance to the factory.

He had bought the gun, he testified, because a few evenings before, he had seen his wife leave the factory with Rosenberg in the latter's automobile. And he said that on the morning of the day of the homicide, his wife told him she had submitted to an abortion after Rosenberg had aided her in securing the services of a physician and in financing the operation. Briggs also told the jury that he had planned to commit suicide and wished to see his estranged wife before doing so.

Concerning his conversation with the officers, he denied some of the statements which they said he made to them. He explained that, when they questioned him, he had wanted to die as he had nothing to live for. "I said everything at the time I could that was damaging to me, whether it was so or not."

Although the appellant told the jury that he did not intend to kill Rosenberg at any time, testimony offered by the prosecution shows that he had made threats to do so. Twelve days before the shooting, Briggs, considerably intoxicated, went to the plant and inquired for Rosenberg. A witness testified that the appellant told her at that time he was going to kill Rosenberg; that he hated him "for firing him from his job." She said he carried a pocket knife with which he had cut his hand severely, and that he was profane in his remarks concerning Rosenberg. She said she talked with Briggs for about five minutes, urging him to leave the plant, but that he finally insisted on entering the work rooms and was subsequently arrested.

The appellant bases his charge of prejudicial error upon several grounds. The first of these concerns the district attorney's argument to the jury. During these remarks, the prosecutor commented upon the fact that the appellant's testimony is uncorroborated and he did not call his wife as a witness. Another statement of the district attorney of which he complains is that the People could not call the appellant's wife as a witness. Also, the appellant contends, the trial judge erroneously stated the law relating to the testimony of a wife. Concerning his own testimony, the appellant asserts that the court, upon redirect examination, refused to allow him to state the whole of several conversations with the arresting officers. Finally, he says, the court improperly restricted the argument to the jury made in his behalf and the evidence of premeditation is insufficient to support a verdict of murder in the first degree.

The record shows that in his argument of the case, the district attorney declared that the appellant's testimony concerning the assistance given his wife in procuring an abortion is entirely without corroboration. He also told the jury that, aside from the appellant's testimony, there is no evidence to prove either the pregnancy of Mrs. Briggs or an abortion upon her. In other comment upon the appellant's testimony, the prosecutor said: "He has related to you conversations which he said he had with Mr. Ross and with Mrs. Briggs. There is no corroboration of that testimony. I certainly couldn't call Mr. Ross as a witness to testify that those conversations were not had; because this defendant has by his act prevented that. Neither could I call his wife."

[1, 2] The appellant made no objection to these remarks, nor did he request the trial judge to admonish the jury concerning them. Ordinarily, without timely objection, an objection of misconduct will not be considered by an appellate court. And the most that may be said in reasonable criticism of the prosecutor's statement is that it is incomplete. Obviously, he meant that he could not compel the appellant's wife to testify against her husband. Sec. 1322, Pen.Code. Considering all of the evidence shown in the record, there is no doubt of the appellant's guilt nor any basis for concluding that the remarks complained of contributed materially to the verdict. Certainly it does not amount to prejudicial error.

The ruling of the trial judge comes within the same category. During the argument of appellant's counsel, he told the jury: "* * * The prosecution would like to have you speculate as to the wife; they say they could not call the wife. The District Attorney, with the Judge, know that calling the wife is a question of privilege; the defendant could exercise the privilege if she were called by the prosecution, but I don't think we would have exercised the privilege." At this point, the trial judge said: "There is a rule of law which provides that the wife cannot testify against the husband without his consent. But it also has been held misconduct for the District Attorney to call the wife to the witness stand and force the defendant into a situation where he has to either accept the testimony of the wife or make objections."

[3] Perhaps the case referred to was People v. Terramorse, 30 Cal.App. 267, 157 P. 1134, where the court declared that a defendant's declination to permit his wife to be a witness on behalf of the prosecution must not be used against him. More recently, it has been said that it is unfair for a district attorney to ask a defendant, in the presence of the jury, whether she would object to having her husband called as a witness for the prosecution. Under such circumstances, the court ruled, the spouse should be offered as a witness, subject to the objections of the defendant. People v. Moore, 111 Cal.App. 632, 295 P. 1039. Although the comment of the trial judge was not entirely accurate, it is obvious that he was stating to the jury the limitation upon the right of the district attorney to present the testimony of the wife. Considering all of the circumstances under which the remark was made, it did not prejudice the appellant's rights.

[4] The appellant contends that the trial court erred when it limited his redirect examination. His claim is that he should have been allowed to explain the inconsistent statements said to have been made by him in his conversations with the officers. In ruling upon his testimony, the court did not permit him to explain the statements he directly or equivocally denied having made, but it permitted him to explain the others. These rulings were correct.

The final contention relied upon by the appellant is that the evidence of premeditation is insufficient to support a verdict of first degree murder. In reviewing his testimony, he points out that in order to see his wife before committing suicide it was necessary for him to obtain the permission of Rosenberg, who was the night foreman, and that he did in fact ask one of the employees at the plant to see his wife. He maintains that his acts were those of a man so overcome by his broken marriage and his consequent disappointments that upon seeing the man who, he believed, had caused his difficulties, he shot without premeditation or plan. But the record also includes his statement to the police officers that after making up his mind to shoot Rosenberg, he had to wait ten days to get money to buy the rifle.

[5] The jury heard all of this testimony and also the appellant's statements in positive denial of some of the answers which the officers said he gave in response to their questions. Several witnesses related not only the circumstances of the shooting but also other facts tending to show premeditation. By its verdict the jury impliedly found that the appellant acted with the malice which is an element of the crime of murder in the first degree, and the evidence is amply sufficient to support that verdict and to justify the sentence which has been imposed.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are, and each of them is, affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

20 Cal.2d 52

COLLINS v. BRIDGE INV. CO.

S. F. 16543.

Supreme Court of California.

March 24, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 20, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑15

In action to quiet title, based on two causes of action, where judgment disposed of both causes of action, there could be but one appeal on the record which was required to be from the final judgment and the correctness of all intermediate orders and rulings were reviewable on the appeal from the final judgment. Civ.Code Proc. § 956; § 963, subd. 1.

2. Appeal and error 🔑839(1)

In action to quiet title, plaintiff by objecting only to that portion of final judgment decreeing disposition of demurrer to first cause of action, and by failing to object to that portion of judgment which determined issues raised by the second cause of action and the defendant's answer, conceded the finality of the judgment for the defendant on the second cause of action.

3. Appeal and error 🔑927(2)

In action to quiet title, where plaintiff appealing from judgment disposing of first cause of action failed to include in judgment roll portion of judgment disposing of second cause of action and defendant's answer, it was required to be assumed that the trial court correctly exercised its jurisdiction in refusing to give effect to plaintiff's purported dismissal of the second cause of action on theory that the answer of the defendant sought affirmative relief and was on file at the time the dismissal was sought by the plaintiff. Code Civ.Proc. § 581, subd. 1.

4. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑19(1)

Where defendant seeks affirmative relief in a quiet title action, plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss the action as of right. Code Civ.Proc. § 581, subd. 1.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑19(1)

In view of rule that plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss quiet title action as of right where defendant seeks affirmative relief, where complaint in quiet title action contained two causes of action, and defendant filed answer seeking affirmative relief, distinction could not be made between actions and causes of action so as to entitle plaintiff to dismiss the second cause of action, especially where the first cause of action was merely a restatement of the second cause of action and the same probative facts were relied on by the plaintiff to establish her title pursuant to either. Code Civ.Proc. § 581, subd. 1.

6. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)

In action to quiet title where complaint contained two causes of action, in absence of transcript of evidence, it was required to be assumed that the facts attempted to be stated in the first cause of action and evidence in support thereof upon which plaintiff based her claim of title were before the court on the trial of the issues presented by the second cause of action and that they, together with the evidence produced by defendant, were sufficient to support judgment thereon in favor of defendant, and where the first cause of action was merely a restatement of the second cause of action, and plaintiff appealed only from judgment as to the first cause of action, judgment could not be reversed.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Action to quiet title to real property by Clarice McC. Collins against Bridge Investment Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Alfred J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Elliot W. Seymour, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The plaintiff has appealed from a judgment quieting the defendant's title to certain described real property. The appeal was taken on the judgment roll alone. The amended complaint contained two causes of action. In the first cause of action the plaintiff alleged ownership of the real property, and the execution of a note and a trust deed in favor of the defendant; that he had defaulted in the payments required by the provisions of the trust deed note but that he had obtained a moratorium decree under the Mortgage and Trust Deed Moratorium Act of 1937 (Stats. of 1937, p. 460) forbidding a sale of the property until after July 1, 1939; that on August 31, 1938, the court entered an order terminating the extension under the moratorium act and permitting a sale of the property; that at such sale the property was sold to the defendant, the beneficiary under the trust deed. The plaintiff further alleged that the order terminating the extension was void and that the sale was therefore in violation of the extension. Thus by the first cause of action the plaintiff attempted to base his claim of title on the asserted invalidity of the order terminating the decree granting to the plaintiff an extension under said act.

The second cause of action contained the usual allegations in a quiet title action, and referred to the same described property.

The defendant interposed a demurrer to the first cause of action on both general and special grounds, and a general demurrer to the second cause of action. On November 16, 1939, the court ordered the demurrer to the first cause of action sustained with leave to amend, and the demurrer to the second cause of action overruled with leave to the defendant to answer. The plaintiff declined to amend the first cause of action.

From the transcript presented by the plaintiff it appears that on January 15, 1940, the plaintiff filed a purported "dismissal of action as to the second count of amended complaint" and that on February 7, 1940, a "judgment on demurrer" was entered decreeing that the defendant "have judgment against the plaintiff as to the first cause of action set forth in the first amended complaint." The plaintiff's notice of appeal, dated February 29, 1940, is "from the final judgment rendered and entered in favor of the defendant in said action, and from the whole of said judgment." The foregoing comprises the entire transcript. It is disclosed without any question, however, that the trial court refused to recognize or permit the attempted dismissal of the second cause of action and proceeded to trial on the issues presented by that cause of action and by the denials in the defendant's answer and further allegations of fact whereby it sought affirmatively to have the title to said property quieted in the corporation; also that a final judgment was entered for the defendant on proof tendered in support of its affirmative allegations, quieting the title of the defendant to the real property described in the plaintiff's complaint. It is further indicated that the "judgment on demurrer" was so styled by the plaintiff, and that the paragraph copied into the transcript as the "judgment on demurrer" was in fact one of the paragraphs contained in the final judgment from which the plaintiff noticed an appeal.

As justification for the omissions from the judgment roll the plaintiff asserts that the trial court erroneously refused to give effect to her "dismissal" of the second cause of action and in proceeding to trial thereon, and that inasmuch as she questioned only that ruling and the ruling on the demurrer to the first cause of action, she elected to bring before this court on the appeal only that portion of the judgment roll showing the "dismissal" and the disposition by the court of said demurrer.

[1-6] There can be but one appeal on the record here involved which must be from the final judgment in the action, and the correctness of all intermediate orders and rulings are reviewable on the appeal from the final judgment. Secs. 956, 963(1), Code of Civil Procedure; Estate of Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 33 P. 744; Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank v. City of Los Angeles, 186 Cal. 110, 199 P. 35. By her failure to include in the judgment roll the entire final judgment, that is, by objecting only to that portion of the final judgment decreeing the disposition of the demurrer to the first cause of action and by failing to object to that portion of the judgment which determined the issues raised by the second cause of action and the defendant's answer, the plaintiff must necessarily be deemed to concede the finality of the judgment for the defendant on the second cause of action and the defendant's answer. In the absence of the record of that judgment it must be assumed that the trial court correctly exercised its jurisdiction in refusing to give effect to the plaintiff's purported dismissal; that is, that the answer of the defendant seeking affirmative relief was on file at the time the "dismissal" was sought by the plaintiff. Where the defendant seeks affirmative relief in a quiet title action, the plaintiff is not entitled to dismiss the action as of right, Sec. 581(1), Code of Civil Procedure; Islais & Salinas Water Co. v. Allen, 132 Cal. 432, 64 P. 713. The distinction sought by the plaintiff may not be made between actions and causes of action so as to except the latter from the applicability of that section. This is so especially where, as in the present case, the first cause of action was merely a restatement of the second cause of action and the same probative facts were relied on by the plaintiff to establish her title pursuant to either. The plaintiff concedes that fact, and that "judgment for the defendant on the first count would make necessary a judgment for the defendant on the second count." Obviously a judgment for the defendant on the second count would also necessitate a judgment for the defendant on the first count. The conceded fact is a further sufficient answer to the contentions of the plaintiff. In the absence of a transcript of the evidence taken at the trial it must be assumed that the facts attempted to be stated in the first cause of action and the evidence in support thereof, upon which the plaintiff based her claim of title, were before the court on the trial of the issues presented by the second cause of action and that they, together with the evidence produced by the defendant, were sufficient to support the judgment thereon in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff has therefore failed to disclose any tenable reason for a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 12

KIM v. CHINN et al.

S. F. 16697.

Supreme Court of California.
March 19, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑479(1)

The Supreme Court will in its discretion under proper circumstances stay execution on a money judgment while an appeal from a judgment is pending in the Supreme Court where the sureties on the undertaking to stay execution filed in lower court fail to justify and require the filing of a proper undertaking in the Supreme Court and that result is accomplished by a writ of supersedeas. Code Civ.Proc. § 948.

2. Appeal and error 🔑479(2)

Whether circumstances justify the issuance of writ of supersedeas on appeal from a money judgment lies in the sound discretion of the court.

3. Appeal and error 🔑479(2)

Where it appears that petitioner seeking writ of supersedeas on appeal from a money judgment has in good faith attempted to comply with the law, and the respondent will not suffer injury, liberality should characterize exercise of court's discretion to the end that the status quo may be maintained and the fruits of the appeal preserved.

4. Appeal and error 🔑479(1)

Where defendant's counsel in trial court refused to proceed with appeal, proposed new counsel became disabled and attorney, acting gratuitously and temporarily, mistakenly believed that filing of second undertaking was all that was required upon failure of one of sureties on original undertaking to qualify so that there was a failure of one of the sureties on new undertaking to justify within the statutory time, the Supreme Court would grant defendant's application for writ of supersedeas to stay execution on money judgment appealed from, where sufficient undertaking with qualified sureties had been filed in Supreme Court since the plaintiff would not be prejudiced. Code Civ.Proc. § 948.

In Bank.

Action by Edwin Kim against O. S. Chinn and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. On application of O. S. Chinn for writ of supersedeas.

Writ granted.

Prior opinion, see 117 P.2d 368.

A. B. Bianchi, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Manwell & Manwell, of Marysville, and John L. McCarthy, of Watsonville, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant Chinn, petitioner herein, has applied for a writ of supersedeas to stay the execution of a judgment against him pending an appeal therefrom. The judgment was entered in the Superior Court of Santa Cruz County on April 18, 1941, for the sum of $8,500 and costs. A motion for a new trial was denied on June 12, 1941. Defendant filed a notice of appeal on July 10, 1941.

In all of the above-mentioned proceedings petitioner was represented by his counsel of record, Mr. Stanford G. Smith, who then advised petitioner that he desired to withdraw from the case and refused to take any further proceedings thereafter. He signed a substitution of attorneys between July 21 and July 26, 1941.

On July 26, 1941, petitioner by and through Mr. Hudson, an attorney at law, caused to be filed in the Superior Court in said action, an undertaking in the sum of $17,600 to stay execution on the judgment pending appeal; the sureties were personal. Petitioner was ill at the time but went to San Francisco to obtain an attorney to be substituted in the place of Mr. Smith, and in the latter part of July, 1941, made a tentative arrangement with Mr. Bianchi, an attorney in San Francisco, to "prosecute the case on appeal when, as and if the record on appeal was perfected"; Mr. Bianchi signed the substitution of attorneys on September 15, 1941, and sent it to Mr. Smith. It was filed on September 19, 1941. Petitioner became so ill on August 14, 1941, that he was, and at all times since has been, confined in a sanatorium. On August 15, 1941, Mr. Bianchi was injured, necessitating his absence from his office until September 10, 1941. Plaintiff excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties on the undertaking on August 18, 1941, notice thereof being mailed to Mr. Bianchi's office and to Mr. Smith. Mr. Bianchi, not having signed the substitution of attorneys, and he being ill, his office took steps by which petitioner's wife received the notice. She delivered it to Mr. Hudson for attention, who filed notice that the sureties would justify on August 29, 1941, at which time one of the sureties, Silliman, failed to justify and Mr. Hudson informed petitioner's wife that she would have to secure a new surety. Plaintiff asserts that the court stated at that time, in the hearing of petitioner's wife, that only eight days remained in which to obtain proper sureties. A new undertaking was filed in the trial court on September 2, 1941. Neither petitioner nor his wife were ever advised by anyone or knew until September 10, 1941, that it was necessary under the law to have other sureties in court to justify within the time limit in the event of the failure of the sureties to which exception was taken to qualify. Mr. Hudson acted gratuitously and as an accommodation in the matter of the undertaking, and believed that the filing of the second undertaking was all that was required upon the failure of one of the sureties on the first undertaking to qualify, and did not know of any objection upon plaintiff's part to the sureties on the second undertaking until plaintiff's exception thereto on September 10, 1941, at which time it was too late for the sureties to justify. Sec. 948, Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff threatens to obtain execution of the judgment, and defendant alleges that plaintiff is insolvent.

Plaintiff in his answer to the petition asserts that it was through his indulgence that the defendant was allowed until July 28, 1941, to file an undertaking (it was filed on July 26th); that he was not notified that the undertaking had been filed until he received a copy thereof on August 18, 1941, from Mr. Bianchi; that the second undertaking was signed by the new surety Chan, in place of Silliman, on August 30, 1941, and filed on September 2, 1941; notice thereof being given on September 5, 1941; and that the record on appeal has not yet been prepared.

[1-3] It is conceded that there was a failure of one of the sureties to justify within the time required by section 948 of the Code of Civil Procedure. However, this court will in its discretion under proper circumstances stay the execution on a money judgment while an appeal therefrom is pending in this court where the sureties on the undertaking to stay execution filed in the lower court fail to justify, and require the filing of a proper undertaking in this court; that result is accomplished by a writ of supersedeas. Tompkins v. Montgomery, 116 Cal. 120, 47 P. 1006; Williams v. Borgwardt, 115 Cal. 617, 47 P. 594; Rosenfeld v. Miller, 216 Cal. 560, 15 P.2d 161; Messenkop v. Duffield, 211 Cal. 222, 294 P. 715. Whether the circumstances justify the issuance of the writ lies in the sound discretion of the court, and where it appears that petitioner has in good faith attempted to comply with the law and the respondent will not suffer injury, liberality should characterize the exercise of that discretion to the end that the status quo may be maintained and the fruits of the appeal preserved. See Dairy Holding Co. v. Pacific Coast D. Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 252, 64 P.2d 1111; Poncino v. Sierra Nevada, etc., Co., 100 Cal.App., 85, 279 P. 1035; Nonpareil Mfg. Co. v. McCartney, 143 Cal. 1, 76 P. 653; Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493;

Segarini v. Bargagliotti, 193 Cal. 538, 226 P. 2; Rosenfeld v. Miller, supra; Messenkop v. Duffield, supra; Foster v. Fernandes, 200 Cal. 274, 252 P. 726; Ellinwood v. McCoy, 133 Cal.App. 597, 24 P.2d 549.

[4] From the above-stated circumstances we are convinced that the writ should properly issue in this case. It appears that defendant acted in good faith in endeavoring to file an undertaking with satisfactory sureties. The difficulties in which he found himself were due to his illness, the refusal of his counsel in the trial court to proceed with the appeal, the confusion resulting from an effort to obtain new counsel, the disability of Mr. Bianchi, the proposed new counsel, and the mistake on Mr. Hudson's part with respect to the proper procedure to follow when one of the sureties failed to justify, he acting gratuitously and temporarily. It does not appear that the plaintiff will be in any way injured or prejudiced by the stay of execution pending the appeal since a sufficient undertaking with qualified sureties has been filed in this court.

Defendant relies upon such cases as Williams v. Borgwardt, supra; Reliance Acceptance Corp. v. Lundblade, 96 Cal.App. 371, 274 P. 360, and Willis v. Paul, 116 Cal. App. 733, 3 P.2d 339, but suffice it to say that each case must be determined on its particular facts, and we are satisfied that the facts here are as persuasive if not more persuasive for the issuance of the writ than the cases cited by us, supra.

Therefore, it is ordered that the writ of supersedeas issue as prayed for, and execution on said judgment be stayed. Defendant has heretofore filed in this court pursuant to the order to show cause made by this court on November 25, 1941, an undertaking approved by, and the sureties on which justified before the Superior Court of Santa Cruz County in the sum of $17,600, conditioned on the payment of the judgment and costs in the event of an affirmance thereof on appeal or a dismissal of the appeal, and said undertaking shall stand as the undertaking on appeal as required by law and as a compliance with the condition to the issuance of said writ.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 815

CONSOLIDATED MILK PRODUCERS FOR SAN FRANCISCO v. PARKER, Director of Agriculture.

S. F. 16589.

Supreme Court of California.

March 12, 1942.

1. United States ⚷3

When the state of California ceded exclusive jurisdiction over the Presidio, a military reservation, to the United States by statute reserving only right to execute civil and criminal processes therein, such area became a federal territory removed from state's jurisdiction. St.1897, p. 51.

2. United States ⚷3

The State Director of Agriculture has no jurisdiction to establish minimum prices of milk sold on territory, such as military reservation, over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction. Agricultural Code, §§ 735–738.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by the Consolidated Milk Producers for San Francisco, a corporation, for a writ of mandamus ordering William B. Parker, as Director of Agriculture, to hold a hearing on petitioner's complaint against certain distributors of fluid milk, bring an action to enjoin their violations of a milk marketing and stabilization plan, revoke or suspend their licenses for such violations, lodge a criminal complaint against them, bring an action to recover a stated sum for each violation, or take such other action against them as may be required by law.

Alternative writ discharged, and petition for peremptory writ denied.

Bartley C. Crum and Philip S. Ehrlich, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Frank J. Hennessy, U. S. Atty., and William E. Licking, Asst. U. S. Atty., both of San Francisco, as amici curiae, on behalf of respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Three distributors of fluid milk licensed to do business in the San Francisco marketing area have contracted to sell fluid milk, at prices below those set by the Director of Agriculture, to military agencies of the United States in the Presidio. The Consolidated Milk Producers, an association of milk producers for the San Francisco area, requested the Director of Agriculture to take action to prevent these sales. They also filed a verified complaint with the director alleging that the sales violated the stabilization and marketing plan for San Francisco and requested that a hearing be held to determine whether the licenses of the offending distributors should be revoked. The director refused to take action on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to fix the minimum price at which fluid milk might be sold within the Presidio. The Producers then petitioned this court for a writ of mandamus ordering the Director of Agriculture either to hold a hearing upon the complaint against the distributors, or to bring an action to enjoin their violations of the marketing and stabilization plan, or to revoke or suspend their licenses for such violations, or to lodge a criminal complaint against them in accordance with the provisions of section 737.7 of the Agricultural Code, or to bring an action in accordance with the terms of the code to recover $500 for each violation, or to take such other action as may be required by law. The United States Attorney has filed a brief as amicus curiae on behalf of the United States in opposition to the petition for mandamus.

The parties agree that petitioner has sought the appropriate remedy in mandamus (Bodinson Mfg. Co. v. California Employment Commission, 17 Cal.2d 321, 109 P.2d 935), and that the milk control act is valid in its general application to producers and distributors in California. Nebbia v. New York, 291 U.S. 502, 54 S.Ct. 505, 78 L.Ed. 940, 89 A.L.R. 1469; Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 13 Cal.2d 620, 637, 91 P.2d 577; Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 281, 101 P.2d 665.

[1] California ceded exclusive jurisdiction over the Presidio to the United States by the Act of March 2, 1897 (Cal.Stats. 1897, page 51) reserving only the right to execute civil and criminal processes therein. See United States v. Bateman, 9 Cir., 34 F. 86, 13 Sawy. 212; United States v. Watkins, D.C., 22 F.2d 437. The area thus became a federal territory removed from the jurisdiction of the state. Standard Oil Co. of California v. California, 291 U.S. 242, 54 S.Ct. 381, 78 L.Ed. 775; see 24 Cal.L.Rev. 573; Rottschaefer, Constitutional Law, secs. 71-73.

Paragraph XII of the petition alleges that the invitation for bids was issued within the Presidio by the United States Quartermaster Supply Officer; Paragraph XIII alleges that the bids were filed in the ceded territory; and Paragraphs XV and XIX allege that the bids were accepted by the Quartermaster Supply Officer at Fort Mason. There is no allegation that the agreements were made outside the territory within an area over which the State has jurisdiction, or that the sales in question were made or are to be made outside of the territory before the delivery of the milk therein. Cf. Milk Control Board v. Eisenberg Farm Products, 306 U.S. 346, 59 S.Ct. 528, 83 L.Ed. 752. In fact, the offer to sell was made and accepted in the Presidio, and the contract, in the words of the petitioner, "became a contract on ceded territory." Closing Memorandum of Petitioner, page 29. The alleged violations relate solely to the sale of milk in the Presidio at less than the minimum prices established for the San Francisco marketing area and not to the performance of any acts in violation of law outside the Presidio. Under the law in effect at the time of the alleged violations there was no provision prohibiting the unfair trade practices now described in section 736.3(a) (6) of the Agricultural Code. The power of the State to regulate activities within its jurisdiction that may affect activities within the Presidio (Cf. Pacific Coast Dairy Inc. v. Dept. of Agriculture, Cal.Sup., 123 P.2d 442, this day decided) is therefore not involved in this case.

[2] The sole question involved in this proceeding is whether the Director of Agriculture has jurisdiction to establish minimum prices for milk sold on territory over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction. The case of Standard Oil Co. of California v. California, supra [291 U.S. 242, 54 S.Ct. 382, 78 L.Ed. 775], makes it clear that he lacks such jurisdiction. The court there declared: "In three recent cases—Arlington Hotel Co. v. Fant, 278 U.S. 439, 49 Sup.Ct. 227, 73 L.Ed. 447, United States v. Unzeuta, 281 U.S. 138, 50 S.Ct. 284, 74 L.Ed. 761, and Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U.S. 647, 50 S.Ct. 455, 74 L.Ed. 1091—we have pointed out the consequences of cession by a state to the United States of jurisdiction over lands held by the latter for military purposes. Considering these opinions, it seems plain that by the act of 1897 California surrendered every possible claim of right to exercise legislative authority within the Presidio. * * * Accordingly, her Legislature could not lay a tax upon transactions begun and concluded therein. * * * A state cannot legislate effectively concerning matters beyond her jurisdiction and within territory subject only to control by the United States." See also, Collins v. Yosemite Park & Curry Co., 304 U.S. 518, 58 S.Ct. 1009, 82 L.Ed. 1502.

The alternative writ of mandamus is discharged and the petition for a peremptory writ is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

---

19 Cal.2d 818

PACIFIC COAST DAIRY, Inc., v. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE et al.

S. F. 16694.

Supreme Court of California

March 12, 1942.

1. Food ⇨1

The provisions of Agricultural Code that any stabilization and marketing plan shall prohibit milk distributors from paying lesser price to any producer for fluid milk or cream, distributed to any person, including government agency, on property within geographical limits of marketing area, for less than minimum prices established by Director of Agriculture for such area, and purchase or receipt of such milk or cream from producers within such area for less than such prices, regardless of whether it is subsequently sold or distributed within or without such area or state's jurisdiction, are valid. Agricultural Code, § 736.3(a) (7, 8).

2. Constitutional law ⇨298(1)
Food ⇨1

The state has power to prohibit milk distributors from purchasing or delivering in any marketing area any fluid milk or cream to be sold at any place within boundaries of such area, whether part thereof or not, at less than minimum prices effective therein, as against contention that state's control over activities within its jurisdiction does not authorize it to impose penalties for transactions on territory outside its jurisdiction, such as army reservation, because such penalties violate "due process clause" of Fourteenth Amendment. Agricultural Code, § 736.3(a) (6); U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

3. States ⇨4

A state may validly regulate activities, persons, and property within its jurisdiction, though extraterritorial repercussions ensue, whenever such regulation is vital to welfare of its inhabitants, as propriety of regulation is determined by its focus on internal problems, not by range of its influence.

4. States ⇨4

A state may exercise its power over things within its jurisdiction, with knowledge that it will thereby influence things beyond its jurisdiction and that such influence may be far-reaching, so long as external consequences remain incidental to solution of internal problems.

5. Commerce ⇨16

Shipments of milk from California to United States military reservation therein are within definition of "interstate commerce" in Federal Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act as commerce between any state, territory, or possession and any place outside thereof. Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act 1937, § 10(j), 7 U.S.C.A. § 610 (j).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Interstate Commerce".

6. Commerce ⇨3

The constitutional power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, reinforced by its authority over territories, forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings, enables it to regulate commerce between states and such federal areas as military reservations. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 17.

7. Commerce ⇨8(10)

The State Milk Control Act, being focussed on a state problem, does not run counter to commerce clause of federal constitution, despite its repercussions on Interstate commerce, as it does not conflict with provisions or objectives of congressional legislation. Agricultural Code, §§ 735–738; Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act 1937, § 1 et seq., 7 U.S.C.A. § 601 et seq.

8. States ⟹4

Where conflict between state and federal legislation is apparent, state legislation must yield.

9. Health ⟹20

Public health is a vital concern of state, and its maintenance at proper levels should not wait on federal regulation.

10. States ⟹4

The State Milk Control Act, as applied to milk sold on United States military reservation, is not invalid as unduly burdening operation of essential federal agency or inconsistent with federal statutes requiring purchase of army supplies through competitive bidding, as it does not discriminate against United States army, nor substantially hinder its efficient operation, and regulates, not the army, but milk distributors as independent contractors with federal government. Agricultural Code, §§ 735–738; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1200, 1201; 41 U.S.C.A. § 5.

11. States ⟹4

Independent contractors with federal government, such as milk distributors contracting with such government for sale of milk on military reservations, are subject to state's control, and any consequent burden on federal government is speculative and remote. Agricultural Code, §§ 735–738.

In Bank.

Proceeding by the Pacific Coast Dairy, Incorporated, for a writ of mandamus ordering the State Department of Agriculture and William B. Parker, Director of Agriculture, to dismiss proceedings for revocation of petitioner's license as a milk distributor.

Alternative writ discharged, and petition for peremptory writ denied.

Vincent W. Hallinan and Carey Van Fleet, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank J. Hennessy, U. S. Atty., and William E. Licking, Asst. U. S. Atty., both of San Francisco, amici curiae, on behalf of petitioner.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and W. T. Sweigert and W. R. Augustine, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

In 1935 the California legislature passed an act regulating the marketing and distribution of fluid milk and fluid cream. Cal.Agricultural Code, div. 4, ch. 10, secs. 735–738, St.1935, p. 922, as amended. The act declares that it is the policy of the state to promote the intelligent production and orderly marketing of such essential commodities as milk; that an adequate supply of wholesome milk is vital to the public health; that the production, transportation, processing, storage, distribution, and sale of milk and cream therefore constitute an industry affected with a public interest; and that unfair and destructive trade practices in the production, marketing, and distribution of milk and cream have menaced the public health by undermining sanitary regulations, which cannot of themselves guard against serious deterioration in the supply of milk. Agric.Code, sec. 735. It sets forth as one of its objectives the elimination of "speculation, waste, improper marketing, unfair and destructive trade practices, and improper accounting for milk purchased from producers. * * *"

The act as amended (Cal.Stats.1937, Chs. 3, 413, 710; Stats.1941, ch. 1214) empowers the Director of Agriculture to set up defined marketing areas within the State, to prescribe minimum prices for fluid milk and fluid cream to be paid by distributors to producers in accordance with stabilization and marketing plans for such areas (secs. 735.4(b) (4) (5) and 736.3(b) (c)), to prescribe minimum wholesale and retail prices of fluid milk and fluid cream within each area (Agric.Code, secs. 736.11, 736.12), to license milk distributors within each area, to revoke or suspend licenses for violation of any stabilization and marketing plan, and to bring actions to enjoin such violations. Agric.Code, sec. 737.7.

The petitioner seeks a writ of mandamus ordering the Director of Agriculture to dismiss proceedings undertaken pursuant to section 737.11 of the Agricultural Code with the object of revoking petitioner's license. In these proceedings it is alleged that petitioner violated section 736.3(a) (6) of the code and of the Stabilization and Marketing Plan for the Santa Clara Marketing Area by purchasing, processing, bottling, transporting, and delivering in the Santa Clara Marketing Area fluid milk that it sold to the Federal Government for less than the minimum wholesale prices prescribed for that area. The sale occurred on Moffett Field, territory within the geographic boundaries of the Santa Clara Marketing Area, but subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.

Since the demand for fluid milk fluctuates from day to day and cannot be anticipated exactly, the producers must supply enough milk to meet all reasonable needs; then any surplus, or "stand by," is converted into milk products and sold by the distributors at lower prices, with corresponding lower receipts for the producers. The possibility of a surplus has been a constant threat to the stability of prices paid to the producers, given the reluctance of distributors to pay the full price for milk that becomes in part converted into milk products. A stabilization plan counteracts this downward pull by establishing minimum prices for fluid milk. At the end of a given period, the distributor settles his accounts with the producer by paying him a "blended price" representing the price for fluid milk bought less the difference between that price and the price for the milk converted into milk products. Even then the producer does not know what the blended price will be until the expiration of the period for settling accounts. The minimum price of fluid milk, however, represents a fixed element in the blended price that affords him at least some protection against speculation at his expense in the distribution of milk. If the distributor were under no compulsion to pay a minimum price he would seek to shift to the producer the risk of speculation in a fluctuating market by paying him the lowest possible price, not only for fluid milk sold to consumers but for milk converted into milk products, and there would soon be adverse effects on standards of production.

[1] The same adverse effects would result if the minimum price established by a stabilization plan were not uniformly enforced. The act itself anticipates that possibility by specifying that there may be no departures from the minimum price even when the milk is sold to the federal government on territory within the exclusive jurisdiction of that government. Section 736.3(a) provides that any stabilization and marketing plan shall prohibit distributors and retail stores from engaging in such unfair practices as:

"(7) The payment of a lesser price by a distributor to any producer for fluid milk or fluid cream which is distributed to any person, including agencies of the Federal, State or local government, located upon property within the geographical limits of any marketing area for less than the minimum prices established by the director to be paid by distributors to producers for fluid milk or fluid cream for said marketing area.

"(8) The purchasing or receiving of any fluid milk or fluid cream by distributors from producers within a marketing area wherein a stabilization and marketing plan is in effect for less than the minimum prices established in such plan, regardless of whether such milk or cream is subsequently sold or distributed within or without such marketing area, or within or without the jurisdiction of the State of California."

The validity of such provisions is clear. Milk Control Board v. Eisenberg Farm Products, 306 U.S. 346, 59 S.Ct. 528, 83 L.Ed. 752; Alabama v. King & Boozer, 62 S.Ct. 43, 86 L.Ed. 3; James v. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U.S. 134, 58 S.Ct. 208, 82 L.Ed. 155, 114 A.L.R. 318.

In its original form in 1935 the milk control act prescribed minimum prices to the producers only. To prescribe such prices without also prescribing minimum resale prices is ineffectual, however, since the distributors cannot pay the producers the prescribed prices unless they have some guarantee of corresponding returns. Minimum resale prices, moreover, must govern all transactions, particularly those of the producer who is his own distributor and who is otherwise apt to sell to consumers at prices below those at which regular distributors are required to operate. In the light of these considerations, Article 2A was added in 1937 to provide for minimum wholesale and retail prices. Section 736.11 provides that in all marketing areas where a stabilization and marketing plan is in effect the Director of Agriculture shall prescribe minimum wholesale prices at which milk shall be sold by distributors to retail stores, and minimum retail prices at which fluid milk shall be sold by distributors and retail stores to consumers. Section 736.12 provides that in determining minimum prices for any marketing area the director shall make an investigation relative to that area of such factors as the quantities of fluid milk distributed and normally required by consumers, the price to distributors and their handling costs, and the available capacity for processing and distributing. Section 736.13 prohibits sale by distributors at less than the prescribed prices.

[2] The most real danger to the prescribed minimum lies in sales by distributors at lower prices on areas within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government, where transactions cannot be regulated by the State. Prescribed minimum prices fail of their purpose if they lie in the shadow of cut prices. The route of the milk from the producer to the consumer is a continuous one even when it crosses the imaginary line that demarcates federal jurisdiction, and the evil effects of substandard prices in the federal area course backward to play their part in undermining the intelligent production and orderly marketing that the State has declared essential to the public health. The State has therefore undertaken to regulate the milk industry within the bounds of its jurisdiction in such a manner as to obviate the elusive evils that it could not directly attack. Section 736.3(a) (6) of the Agricultural Code provides that any stabilization and marketing plan shall prohibit distributors and retail stores from engaging in such unfair practices as, "(6) The purchasing, processing, bottling, transporting, delivering or otherwise handling in any marketing area of any fluid milk or fluid cream which is to be or is sold or otherwise disposed of by such distributor at any place in the geographical area within the outer, outside and external boundaries or limits of such marketing area, whether such place is a part of the marketing area or not, at less than the minimum wholesale and minimum retail prices effective in such marketing area."

The Stabilization and Marketing Plan for the Santa Clara Marketing Area contains the provisions outlined by this section. These regulations are directed at the milk before it can enter the stronghold of an area within the State's boundaries but outside its jurisdiction on terms that would menace the entire milk supply. The alleged violation in the present case is the purchasing, processing, bottling, transporting, delivering, and other handling of milk within the Santa Clara Marketing Area for prospective sale at a point outside the jurisdiction of the State at prices less than the minimum prescribed for that marketing area. Petitioner contends that the State's control over activities within its jurisdiction affords it no authority to impose penalties because of transactions on Moffett Field. This contention proceeds from the theory that such penalties violate the due process clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, denying to a State the power to restrict or control activities, persons, and property beyond its jurisdiction. Standard Oil Co. of California v. California, 291 U.S. 242, 54 S.Ct. 381, 78 L.Ed. 775; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578, 17 S.Ct. 427, 41 L.Ed. 832; St. Louis Cotton Compress Co. v. Arkansas, 260 U.S. 346, 43 S.Ct. 125, 67 L.Ed. 297; Compania General de Tabacos de Filipinas v. Collector of Internal Revenue, 275 U.S. 87, 48 S.Ct. 100, 72 L.Ed. 177; Home Ins. Co. v. Dick, 281 U.S. 397, 50 S.Ct. 338, 74 L.Ed. 926, 74 A.L.R. 701. This contention, however, confuses the State's control over activities, persons, and property within its jurisdiction and the repercussions of that control in areas outside thereof. The question is not whether the State can prescribe the minimum prices at which milk may be sold on the territory within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. (Cf. Consolidated Milk Producers v. Parker, Cal.Sup., 123 P.2d 440, this day decided), but whether it has power to regulate acts within its jurisdiction even though they are followed in direct line of succession by a transaction outside its jurisdiction.

[3] It is established that a State may validly regulate activities, persons, and property within its jurisdiction, even though extra-territorial repercussions ensue, whenever such regulation is vital to the welfare of its inhabitants. The propriety of the regulation is determined by its focus upon an internal problem and not by the range of its influence. Thus, in Mirkovitch v. Milnor, D.C., 34 F.Supp. 409, the court held that the State could exercise its police power over boats within State waters in a manner that was bound to affect their activities beyond State borders. Threatened with the depletion of its fish supply by the practices of certain fishermen, California provided in the Fish and Game Code, St.1933, p. 395, that no person shall use a boat in this State or its waters that delivers to any point outside the State fish caught from the boat in the waters of the Pacific Ocean within the State or on the high seas or elsewhere without authorization of the Fish and Game Commission. The court pointed out that the code provision related solely to the operation within State waters of fishing vessels delivering their catch outside the State, and emphasized that the provision was designed not to regulate fishing operations beyond the State's jurisdiction but to protect the State's fisheries from depletion. The realization that the plaintiff might be unable to carry on fishing operations beyond the State's jurisdiction without entering and operating his boat within State waters did not deter the court from declaring that the statute was a valid exercise of the State's police power over acts within its jurisdiction.

In Osborn v. Ozlin, 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 761, 84 L.Ed. 1074, the United States Supreme Court upheld a Virginia statute requiring that insurance policies for persons or property in Virginia written by companies authorized to do business in Virginia be countersigned by a local agent receiving a certain percentage of the commission, even though insurer and insured are both outside of Virginia when the contract of insurance is negotiated. The close relation between the insurance contracts and the insured persons or property, together with the State's interest in protecting such persons and property, justified the regulation despite its extra-territorial effect. The court stated: "But the question is not whether what Virginia has done will restrict appellants' freedom of action outside Virginia by subjecting the exercise of such freedom to financial burdens. The mere fact that state action may have repercussions beyond state lines is of no judicial significance so long as the action is not within that domain which the Constitution forbids. * * * Virginia has not sought to prohibit the making of contracts beyond her borders. She merely claims that her interest in the risks which these contracts are designed to prevent warrants the kind of control she has here imposed. This legislation is not to be judged by abstracting an isolated contract written in New York from the organic whole of the insurance business, the effect of that business on Virginia, and Virginia's regulation of it." Pages 62, 63 of 310 U.S., page 761 of 60 S.Ct. 84 L.Ed. 1074. See, also, Holmes v. Springfield Fire & Marine Insur. Co., 311 U.S. 606, 61 S.Ct. 19, 85 L.Ed. 384; Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Holmes, D.C., 32 F.Supp. 964; National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Wanberg, 260 U.S. 71, 43 S.Ct. 32, 67 L.Ed. 136, and Palmetto Fire Ins. Co. v. Conn., 272 U.S. 295, 47 S.Ct. 88, 71 L.Ed. 243; Brandeis' dissent in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 246 U.S. 357, 377, 38 S.Ct. 337, 62 L.Ed. 772, Ann.Cas.1918E, 593; cf. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Tafoya, 270 U.S. 426, 46 S.Ct. 331, 70 L.Ed. 664.

Again in the application of State workmen's compensation laws, it is established that where the injury occurs in one state and the contract of employment is entered into in another, the statute of the state with the greater interest in the welfare of the injured workman controls. Alaska Packers Assn. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. of California, 294 U.S. 532, 55 S.Ct. 518, 79 L.Ed. 1044; Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm. of California, 10 Cal.2d 567, 75 P.2d 1058. In the Alaska Packers case the California Workmen's Compensation Act was held applicable to an injury sustained in Alaska by a workman who resided in California and entered into the contract of employment here. The court noted California's interest in the welfare of the injured workman, stating: "Obviously, the power of a state to effect legal consequences is not limited to occurrences within the state if it has control over the status which gives rise to those consequences." Page 541 of 294 U.S., page 521 of 55 S.Ct., 79 L.Ed. 1044. See, also, Wisconsin Tax Comm. v. J. C. Penney Co., 311 U.S. 435, 61 S.Ct. 246, 85 L.Ed. 267, 130 A.L.R. 1229; Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Grosjean, 301 U.S. 412, 57 S.Ct. 772, 81 L.Ed. 1193, 112 A.L.R. 293; Nelson v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 312 U.S. 359, 61 Sup.Ct. 586, 85 L.Ed. 888, 132 A.L.R. 475.

[4] The foregoing cases establish that a State may exercise its power over things within its jurisdiction in the knowledge that it will thereby influence things beyond its jurisdiction, and that its influence may be far reaching, so long as the external consequences remain incidental to the solution of internal problems. Their application to the present case is clear. In accomplishing the objectives of the State Milk Control Act the State is concerned, not with the destination and sale of the milk but with the effect of the price of the milk upon the conditions of production. A price below the fixed minimum for milk produced in the State endangers those established standards for the milk industry that safeguard the public health, and leads successively to a breakdown of the law, price cutting, diminishing returns to the producers, inferior standards of milk production and finally injurious effects on the public health. The State has regulated the purchasing, processing, bottling, transporting and handling of fluid milk within its jurisdiction with the object, not of controlling transactions beyond its jurisdiction, but of stabilizing within its jurisdiction the production of a commodity vital to the public health.

[5] The State Milk Control Act, however clear its validity under the due process clause, must be scrutinized further in the light of the commerce clause and the Federal Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, 50 U.S.Stats. 246, 7 U.S.C.A. § 601 et seq., held constitutional in United States v. Rock Royal Co-op., 307 U.S. 533, 59 S.Ct. 993, 83 L.Ed. 1446. The federal act authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into marketing agreements fixing minimum prices to be paid producers for milk that is "in the current of interstate or foreign commerce" or that "directly burdens, obstructs, or affects, interstate or foreign commerce." (Sec. 8c (1), (2), (5), (7), (8), and (18), 7 U.S.C.A. § 608c.) It defines interstate or foreign commerce as "commerce between any State, Territory, or possssion, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia. For the purpose of this chapter * * * a marketing transaction in respect to an agricultural commodity or the product thereof shall be considered in interstate or foreign commerce if such commodity or product is part of that current of interstate or foreign commerce usual in the handling of the commodity or product whereby they, or either of them, are sent from one State to end their transit, after purchase, in another, including all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State or for the processing within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products so processed. * * * As used herein, the word 'State' includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possessions of the United States, and foreign nations." Sec. 10(j), 7 U.S.C.A. § 610(j). The extensiveness of this definition leaves no doubt that Congress intended to cover the broadest possible field that might come within its powers to regulate interstate commerce and to govern territories.

The shipments of milk from California to such areas as Moffett Field, where the transit ends, fall within this definition of interstate commerce, for Moffett Field can be classified as either a territory or possession of the United States outside the jurisdiction of California, even though within the State's boundaries.

[6] The contention is nevertheless advanced that transactions between such federal areas as Moffett Field and the rest of the State do not come within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, because such areas do not fall within the categories of States, foreign nations, or Indian tribes set forth in the commerce clause. The judicial interpretation of the commerce clause, however, has greatly amplified the meaning of interstate commerce. Thus, commerce between States and territories has long been recognized as interstate commerce. Hanley v. Kansas City So. Ry. Co., 187 U.S. 617, 23 S.Ct. 214, 47 L.Ed. 333; Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co. v. Hawaii, 9 Cir., 96 Fed.2d 412, aff'd 305 U.S. 306, 59 S.Ct. 202, 83 L.Ed. 189. Commerce between States and the District of Columbia is similarly recognized as interstate commerce. Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U.S. 141, 9 S.Ct. 256, 32 L.Ed. 637; Galloway v. Bell, 56 App.D.C. 172, 11 Fed.2d 558. Such areas as Moffett Field are in the same category as the District of Columbia, for the same power of Congress extends over them both. U.S.Const., Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 17; Surplus Trading Co. v. Cook, 281 U.S. 647, 50 S.Ct. 455, 74 L.Ed. 1091; Fort Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. Lowe, 114 U.S. 525, 5 S.Ct. 995, 29 L.Ed. 264. In the light of the foregoing cases it is clear that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, reinforced by its authority over territories and "forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings" [281 U.S. 647, 50 S.Ct. 456, 74 L.Ed. 1091] enables it to regulate commerce between States and such areas as Moffett Field. Compare People v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Cal. 123, 22 P.2d 2; Grayburg Oil Co. v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 286 S.W. 489; Grayburg Oil Co. v. State, Tex. Com.App., 3 S.W.2d 427, and McKesson & Robbins v. Collins, 18 Cal.App.2d 648, 64 P.2d 469, which did not involve any federal statute regulating such commerce.

[7] The milk industry in California is dominantly a local one. Only a small percentage of the milk produced goes beyond the jurisdiction of the State, but whatever the destination of the milk, the State is vitally concerned with the stabilization of the industry, and particularly with standards of production, in the State as a whole. The federal territory within the State is so fragmented that there may be several federal islands within a single marketing area. If they are citadels of immunity from State jurisdiction, they are also exceptional segments in areas that are otherwise subject to that jurisdiction. They stand out like colored pins on the map of California, and range from military reservations to soldiers' homes, from court houses to penitentiaries, from post offices to Indian reservations, from national parks to regional dams. See cases cited in 38 Columbia L.Rev. 128, at 130. The commerce between them and the rest of the State is of the greatest interest to the State regardless of the circumstance that it may be regulated by the federal government. Focussed as it is upon a State problem, the State act, despite its repercussions upon interstate commerce, does not run counter to the commerce clause so long as it does not conflict with the provisions or objectives of Congressional legislation. Milk Control Board v. Eisenberg Farm Products, 306 U.S. 346, 59 S.Ct. 528, 83 L.Ed. 752; Duckworth v. Arkansas, 62 S.Ct. 311, 86 L.Ed. 294; California v. Thompson, 313 U.S. 109, 61 S.Ct. 930, 85 L.Ed. 1219; South Carolina State Highway Dept. v. Barnwell Bros., 303 U.S. 177, 58 S.Ct. 510, 82 L.Ed. 734. See 27 Cal.L.Rev. 615.

[8] The objectives of the federal act in fixing the minimum price payable by the distributor to the producer are the same as those of the California act, namely, to insure to the producer a reasonable return on his products (secs. 1 and 2), and to the consumer a "sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk." Sec. 8(c) (18). There is no federal marketing agreement or order with respect to the milk industry, however, now in effect in this State. Where a conflict is apparent the State legislation must yield. United States v. Wrightwood Dairy Co., 62 S.Ct. 523, 86 L.Ed. 726; Cloverleaf Butter Co. v. Patterson, 62 S.Ct. 491, 86 L.Ed. 754. There is a question, however, whether any conflict exists when a federal administrative officer is empowered to prescribe regulations in a field already regulated by a State but does not actually do so. The United States Supreme Court has held in some cases that a conflict of authority is inherent in such a situation by interpreting the failure of the federal officer to make any regulation as in effect a ruling that neither federal nor State regulation is necessary. Oregon-Washington R. & N. Co. v. Washington, 270 U.S. 87, 46 S.Ct. 279, 70 L.Ed. 482; Napier v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 272 U.S. 605, 47 S.Ct. 207, 71 L.Ed. 432. There is a growing tendency on the part of the court, however, to emphasize the evils arising from the absence of any regulation, and to hold therefore that the existence of an unexercised superior federal authority does not rule out State regulation vital to the public welfare. This realistic view germinated in cases upholding State regulation of certain public utility practices that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not regulate although it had authority to do so. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. v. Nebraska State Ry. Commission, 297 U.S. 471, 56 S.Ct. 536, 80 L.Ed. 810; Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Larabee Flour Mills Co., 211 U.S. 612, 29 S.Ct. 214, 53 L.Ed. 352. The court has balanced, not the State regulation against the unexercised federal authority, but the importance of the State's objectives against the effects of its regulation on interstate commerce. It has rejected the theory that the failure of a federal administrative agency to exercise its authority necessarily amounts to a declaration against all regulation. Indeed, in H. P. Welsh Co. v. New Hampshire, 306 U.S. 79, 59 S.Ct. 438, 83 L.Ed. 500, it demonstrated its concern with keeping the State regulation alive in the absence of immediate conflict with federal regulation. It upheld in that case the application of a state act regulating the hours of drivers of motor carriers to a driver transporting an interstate shipment, even though the Interstate Commerce Commission had overlapping authority and had issued regulations that would conflict with the state act when they became effective two years later. The court took the view that the safety of the people should not wait upon federal administrative action. See, also, Kelly v. Washington, 302 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 87, 82 L.Ed. 3; South Carolina State Highway Dept. v. Barnwell Bros., supra; Eichholz v. Public Serv. Commission, 306 U.S. 268, 59 S.Ct. 532, 83 L.Ed. 641; Maurer v. Hamilton, 309 U.S. 598, 60 S.Ct. 726, 84 L.Ed. 969, 135 A.L.R. 1347; Mintz v. Baldwin, 289 U.S. 346, 53 S.Ct. 611, 77 L.Ed. 1245.

[9] Public health, like public safety, is a vital concern of the State, and its maintenance at proper levels should likewise not wait upon federal regulation. Toward that maintenance the California Milk Control Act contributes largely, but it might well be disrupted if those engaged in interstate commerce escaped the State regulation while they were untouched by corresponding federal regulation. The absence of federal regulation may well be a recognition not only of the propriety but of the effectiveness of State regulation in the stabilization of a dominantly local industry, rather than a ruling that there should be no regulation.

[10, 11] There remains the question whether the Milk Control Act can validly affect milk sold to instrumentalities of the United States. In a brief filed as amicus curiae on behalf of the United States, the United States Attorney contends that the application of the State act to such milk would unduly burden the operation of an essential federal agency, and that it is inconsistent with the federal statutes requiring that army supplies be secured through competitive bidding. 41 U.S.C.A. § 5; 10 U.S.C.A. §§ 1200, 1201. Federal agencies, however, cannot entirely escape the effects of State legislation. The California Milk Control Act does not discriminate against the United States army nor substantially hinder its efficient operation. The army is not precluded from obtaining milk, nor required to pay more for such milk than other consumers in the same area. The act regulates not the army but the distributors who are independent contractors with the federal government. It is settled that such contractors are subject to State control, and that any consequent burden on the federal government is speculative and remote. Milk Control Board v. Gosselin's Dairy, Inc., 301 Mass. 174, 16 N.E.2d 641; Paterson Milk & Cream Co., Inc., v. Milk Control Board, 118 N.J.L. 383, 192 A. 838; Alabama v. King & Boozer, 314 U.S. 1, 62 S.Ct. 43, 86 L.Ed. 3; James v. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U.S. 134, 58 S.Ct. 208, 82 L.Ed. 155, 114 A.L.R. 318; Atkinson v. State Tax Comm. of Oregon, 303 U.S. 20, 58 S.Ct. 419, 82 L.Ed. 621; State Tax Comm. v. Van Cott, 306 U.S. 511, 59 S.Ct. 605, 83 L.Ed. 950; Helvering v. Gerhardt, 304 U.S. 405, 58 S.Ct. 969, 82 L.Ed. 1427; Trinityfarm Const. Co. v. Grosjean, 291 U.S. 466, 54 S.Ct. 469, 78 L.Ed. 918; see 27 Cal.L.Rev. 327. The very federal statutes requiring competitive bidding except cases "where it is impracticable to secure competition" (10 U.S.C. § 1201, 10 U.S.C.A. § 1201), and Regulation 5-240(g) of the United States Army provides that it is impracticable to secure such competition: "(3) When the price is fixed by Federal, State, municipal, or other competent authority." Penn Dairies, Inc. v. Milk Control Commission, March 25, 1941, Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania; Commonwealth v. Rohrer, Pa., 37 D. & C. 410.

The alternative writ of mandamus is discharged and the petition for a peremptory writ is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 1

MALONEY v. MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INS. CO.

S. F. 16657.

Supreme Court of California.

March 19, 1942.

1. Guardian and ward 🔑182(3)

The discharge or removal of guardian within statute requiring action against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge or removal of guardian, can be accomplished only by court order. Probate Code, § 1487.

2. Judgment 🔑496

In action on guardian's bonds, wherein 1935 decree of probate court restoring ward to competency was subject of collateral inquiry, the usual presumptions relative to regularity of probate court proceedings in guardianship matter would be indulged in support of such decree, and whatever was upon the record would be presumed to be rightfully there, and it would be conclusively presumed if necessary to support the decree that an earlier decree restoring ward to competency was vacated and that the circumstances justified such action.

3. Judgment ⚷560

A determination as to whether or not a prior adjudication is "res judicata", or is valid or void, is conclusive on such issue in subsequent litigation.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Res Judicata".

4. Guardian and ward ⚷180

An order, which has become final, fixing default of guardian, is binding on surety.

5. Judgment ⚷203

Generally, in case of successive and conflicting judgments in different proceedings between the same parties upon the same issues, the last judgment is conclusive.

6. Insane persons ⚷45

A 1932 decree restoring ward to competency, terminating guardianship, setting aside order appointing guardian, revoking letters of guardianship and directing guardian to surrender estate to ward and file an account, did not start running of statute requiring action against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge or removal of guardian, where in 1935, the probate court considered the question of whether the 1932 decree was void for lack of prescribed statutory notice and entered order which restored ward to competency and which was within probate court's jurisdiction to make only if decree was void, and a 1937 order entered in accounting phase of the guardianship proceeding found that ward was restored to competency by 1935 order. Probate Code, §§ 1200, 1206, 1207, 1471.

7. Insane persons ⚷45

Under rule that discharge or removal of guardian within statute requiring action against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge or removal of guardian can be accomplished by court order, 1935 order restoring ward to competency did not affect a "discharge or removal of guardian" within such statute, where guardian was dead at time of entry of order. Probate Code, §§ 1471, 1555.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Discharge or Removal of Guardian".

8. Guardian and ward ⚷182(3)

The statute requiring action against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge or removal of guardian, is not applicable where there is no effective court order of discharge or removal before death of guardian, or ward attains majority, in view of rule that discharge or removal of guardian within statute can be accomplished only by court order. Probate Code, § 1471.

9. Insane persons ⚷45

The direction in 1935 order restoring ward to competency, that guardianship should terminate upon accounting and discharge of guardian, did not cause order to provide for "discharge or removal of guardian" within statute requiring action against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from court order discharging or removing guardian. Probate Code, § 1471.

10. Guardian and ward ⚷182(3)
Limitation of actions ⚷24(2)

Where guardian was not removed or discharged by court order prior to guardian's death, action on guardian's bonds was not governed by statute requiring actions against surety on guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from discharge or removal of guardian, but was governed by general four-year statute of limitations, which began to run from date of decree finding the guardian in default and establishing cause of action against surety. Probate Code, § 1487; Code Civ.Proc. § 337, subd. 1.

11. Guardian and ward ⚷182(3)

In action on guardian's bonds, defense of "laches" was not available to surety in absence of showing that surety was in the least disadvantaged by reason of any delay in the settlement of the guardian's account.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches".

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Alfred J. Fritz, Judge.

Action by Bernard F. Maloney against the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, to recover upon two bonds given by the plaintiff's former guardian. Judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 114 P.2d 417.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of San Francisco, for appellant.

William P. Caubu, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

Plaintiff Bernard F. Maloney, previously an incompetent person, brought this action against defendant Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance Company to recover the sum of $4,500, the full extent of its liability upon two surety bonds filed by plaintiff's former guardian, whose default in accounting had been determined by the probate court to be in excess of that amount. In the contest in the trial court defendant prevailed upon the ground that the action was barred by the three-year statute of limitations fixed by the provisions of section 1487 of the Probate Code, which reads as follows: "No action may be maintained against the sureties on a bond given by a guardian unless commenced within three years from the discharge or removal of the guardian; but if at the time of such discharge the person entitled to bring the action is under any legal disability to sue, the action may be commenced at any time within three years after the disability is removed." [Emphasis added.]

The pertinent facts and dates as recited in the trial court's findings may be stated briefly as follows: In 1929 in an appropriate guardianship proceeding instituted in the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco plaintiff was adjudged incompetent and committed to the Agnew State Hospital, and his wife, Nellie M. Maloney, was appointed guardian of his person and estate. Some six months following his discharge as a patient from the state hospital and "on October 20th, 1932, after notice given in accordance with the order of this Court, an order was made by this Court providing that said Bernard F. Maloney be restored to competency, that the guardianship cease, that the order appointing guardian be set aside, that Letters of Guardianship be revoked, and that the guardian file an account of her administration." On July 27, 1935, the guardian died without filing an accounting. Subsequently, and on December 27, 1935, a second order was made and entered "restoring Bernard F. Maloney to competency, adjudging him sane and capable of managing his person and estate, and directing an accounting by the guardian." On June 22, 1937, by an order sustaining the plaintiff's objections to the supplemental account filed by the executor of the guardian's estate, the former guardian was adjudged in default in the payment of the sum of $8,477.33. The present action was commenced on August 23, 1939. Upon these facts the court further found "That more than three (3) years have elapsed since the date of restoration to competency of said Bernard F. Maloney and the date of the filing of this action," and it concluded therefrom that the defense predicated upon the special limitation prescribed for actions upon guardians' bonds by section 1487 of the Probate Code should be sustained. Judgment was entered accordingly for defendant, and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The sole question presented for determination in this case is whether the action is barred by the lapse of time. The trial court did not indicate which of the two above-mentioned orders restoring plaintiff to competency—that of October 20, 1932, or that of December 27, 1935, almost seven and four years, respectively, prior to the filing of the present suit—it considered effective to set in motion the special statute of limitations prescribed by said section 1487. On the trial the defense relied primarily upon the date of the first order, while on this appeal respondent urges in support of the judgment the controlling effect of the date of the second order. It is appellant's position that neither of these decrees militates against his right to recover upon the surety bonds involved in this litigation, but that the order of June 22, 1937, which fixed the amount of shortage in the guardian's account, started the running of the applicable general four-year statute of limitations governing claims based upon written instruments, and therefore the commencement of this action on August 23, 1939, was within the time permitted.

[1] It is definitely settled in this state that the "discharge or removal of the guardian," as the expression is used in section 1487 of the Probate Code, can be accomplished only by court order. Cook v. Ceas, 143 Cal. 221, 228–230, 77 P. 65; Keck v. Keck, 16 Cal.App.2d 521, 524, 61 P.2d 79. In the light of this established principle must be considered the force and effect of the above-mentioned orders made in the guardianship proceeding preliminary to the institution of the present action. First in chronological sequence is the decree of October 20, 1932, restoring the ward to capacity, terminating the guardianship, setting aside the order appointing the guardian, revoking the letters of guardianship, and directing that the guardian surrender to the former ward all of the estate and file an account within twenty days. Conceding that in the absence of other circumstances the explicit language in which this order is couched would constitute a "discharge or removal of the guardian," so as to start running the three-year statute of limitations therein provided, appellant urges that this decree must be declared null and void because there was no personal service of the citation upon the guardian five days before trial on the issue of capacity, as required by sections 1206, 1207 and 1471 of the Probate Code. In this connection appellant refers to the judgment roll in the guardianship proceeding, which shows that notice was given only in compliance with section 1200 of the Probate Code—by posting and mailing a copy to the guardian. However, it is not necessary here to pass upon appellant's contention that the insufficiency of the notice rendered the order in question void, for the record demonstrates to a certainty that the decree of 1932 is not binding in this case.

[2] Second of these pertinent orders in point of time is the 1935 decree of restoration, which, after reference to the 1932 order, recites that "a question has been raised by a title company as to the sufficiency of the notice upon which said Order (of 1932) restoring to capacity was made," and which then proceeds to restore Bernard F. Maloney to capacity as of December 27, 1935. This decree, which has long since become final, incontrovertibly establishes that in 1935 the probate court considered the question of whether the 1932 decree was void because of lack of the prescribed statutory notice and thereupon resolved to enter an order which it had jurisdiction to make only if the former order was void. The record does not disclose any jurisdictional defect with respect to this later adjudication, negativing the validity of the 1932 decree, and accordingly upon this collateral inquiry the usual presumptions relative to the regularity of the probate court proceedings in the guardianship matter must be indulged in support of the 1935 decree of restoration. 15 Cal.Jur. 64, sec. 149. In such situation whatever is upon the record is presumed to be rightfully there. Thus, it is conclusively presumed, if necessary, to support the later of two judgments shown by the roll, that the earlier was vacated and that the circumstances justified such action. Colton Land & Water Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 278, 33 P. 878.

[3] The general rule upon this subject is stated in 2 Freeman on Judgments, 5th Ed., page 1498, sec. 709, as follows: "A determination as to whether or not a prior adjudication is res judicata, or is valid or void, is conclusive on this issue in subsequent litigation." Recent application of this settled principle in this state appears in Geibel v. State Bar, 14 Cal.2d 144, 148, 93 P.2d 97, 99, wherein it is said: "A determination as to the validity of a former adjudication is res judicata in a subsequent proceeding attacking it."

[4-6] Corroborative of this conclusion with respect to the operative effect of the 1935 decree of restoration is the third of the above-mentioned orders, that of June 22, 1937, sustaining the ward's objections to the guardian's supplemental account. That order, which also has long since become final, fixed the default of the guardian and is binding on the surety. Smith v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 130 Cal.App. 45, 19 P.2d 1018. Bearing significantly upon the point at issue is that order's review of the prior incompetency phase of the guardianship proceeding, wherein it recites that letters of guardianship were issued to the named guardian in October, 1929, and that "Said incompetent was restored to competency by said Court on December 27th, 1935." Here again the probate court in an independent ruling has adjudicated the date of restoration to capacity. Thus, the 1932 decree purporting to have restored the ward to competency and to have discharged the guardian is disputed by two subsequent orders. The 1935 order purports to restore him to competency as of that date, and the 1937 order entered in the accounting phase of the guardianship proceeding finds that he was restored in 1935. In treating these conflicting orders entered in distinct and separate branches of the guardianship matter as equivalent in import to inconsistent judgments rendered in different actions between the same parties in respect to the same subject matter, the following well-settled rule, by analogy, is applicable to the present case: "Generally, in case of successive and conflicting judgments in different proceedings between the same parties upon the same issues the last one is conclusive." 15 Cal.Jur. 57, sec. 143; see, also, 15 Cal.Jur. 104, sec. 171, and cases there cited. Accordingly, the 1932 decree of restoration must be disregarded in the instant action.

The next point for consideration is whether the decree of December 27, 1935, effected a "discharge or removal of the guardian" within the meaning of section 1487 of the Probate Code. That order, after adjudging that "Bernard F. Maloney * * * be and he is hereby restored to capacity" and that he "is sane and capable of managing and taking care of himself and his property," directed that "the guardianship * * * cease and terminate upon the proper and legal accounting and discharge of the guardian and the administration of the estate of the guardian." However, it is significant to note that the court on this last-mentioned date made no order for the removal or discharge of the guardian, since it would have been a futile act to so decree in view of her death some six months earlier, which event terminated the previously existing fiduciary relationship. In such circumstances the rules established by the leading authorities upon this subject in this state, Cook v. Ceas, supra, and Keck v. Keck, supra, preclude the adoption of the date of this decree for the commencement of the statutory period of limitations specified in section 1487. An examination of these decisions will demonstrate the basis of determination of the point here in issue.

In Cook v. Ceas, supra, an action upon a guardian's bond instituted more than three years after the ward had attained her majority, the court stated at pages 230, 231 of 143 Cal., at page 68 of 77 P.:

"* * * we conclude that an action against the sureties of a guardian is not, by the terms of section 1805 [of the Code of Civil Procedure; now section 1487 of the Probate Code] barred until three years after a final order of court removing or discharging the guardian. By the terms of the statute, therefore, this action was not barred, for it does not appear, and it is not claimed, that the guardian of plaintiff ever was discharged or removed by any order of court. The respondent [the surety] contends, however, that the coming of age of the plaintiff operated a discharge of the guardian, and set the statute in motion * * *.

"It is certainly true that when a ward arrives at the age of majority the authority of the guardian comes to an end. * * * But although his authority is at an end when his ward comes of age, it cannot be said that in any ordinary or usual or statutory sense of the terms he has been removed or discharged, so that the statute does not in terms apply to such a case, and, in order to bring the respondent within its protection, its terms must be enlarged by construction. In other jurisdictions this seems to have been done. In the state of Montana it was held, construing a statute identical in terms with our own, that the death of the ward operated a discharge of the guardian, and set the statute in motion. Berkin v. Marsh [18 Mont. 152], 44 P. 528, 56 Am.St.Rep. 565. In Massachusetts no action can be maintained against the sureties on a guardian's bond unless it be commenced within four years 'from the time when the guardian shall be discharged.' Chief Justice Shaw, in construing this statute, said: 'The court are of opinion that by the term "discharged" in this statute is intended any mode by which the guardianship is effectually determined and brought to a close either by the removal, resignation, or death of the guardian, the marriage of a female, the arrival of a minor ward at the age of twenty-one, or otherwise.' Loring v. Alline, 9 Cush. 68. This construction of the statute, in substance identical with our own, has been followed in other cases in Massachusetts, and reaffirmed as late as McKim v. Mann, 141 Mass. 507, 6 N.E. 740. A similar construction has been placed upon similar statutes in Michigan and Wisconsin, and perhaps other states. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Texas has in several cases refused to extend the operation of a similar statute beyond its literal terms, adhering firmly to the doctrine stated in Marlow v. Lacy, 68 Tex. 154, 2 S.W. 52, to the effect that the statute does not begin to run in favor of the sureties until the guardian has been removed or discharged by order of court in one of the cases provided for in their Code of Procedure. The weight of authority, it must be conceded, is on the side of respondent, but we are disinclined to follow the construction adopted in Massachusetts, Michigan, Wisconsin, etc., for a reason not adverted to in some of the decisions, and not allowed sufficient weight, as we think, in those cases where it has been adverted to.

"A statute of limitations ought not to be enlarged in its operation by judicial construction when it is so framed as to work injustice either by itself or in conjunction with other provisions of law. In this state we have one rule which prohibits an action on the bond of a guardian's surety until there is a final order settling the guardian's account, and another rule barring the action in three years after the removal or discharge of the guardian. So far as its express terms require, the rule must no doubt be enforced, even where without the fault of the ward a final settlement of the account has not been obtained within three years after the removal or discharge; but neither justice nor sound policy requires that a law capable of working so inequitably should be enlarged by construction so as to embrace a class of cases not comprehended in its terms. And this conclusion does not leave the sureties on guardian's bonds without an ample measure of protection against stale claims. They have all the advantage of the general statute of limitations and of the doctrine of Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 P. 804, 59 Am.St.Rep. 153, which will hold wards to the rule of reasonable diligence in procuring settlement of their guardian's accounts. * * *"

It is apparent from this somewhat lengthy quotation that the court, after a full consideration of the arguments pro and con relative to the majority rule on the subject, expressly refused to follow the weight of authority and cited as supported by the better reasoning the line of decision requiring that the "discharge or removal of the guardian" be by court order.

In Keck v. Keck, supra, the legal principles of Cook v. Ceas, supra, were expressly reaffirmed, but upon the particular facts presented, the court held the action against the surety barred by the special three-year statute of limitations prescribed by the code section. As stated in the Keck opinion, at page 523 of 16 Cal.App.2d, 61 P.2d 79, the plaintiff in 1924 was declared incompetent and his wife was appointed his guardian. In 1926 the plaintiff in an appropriate proceeding was restored to mental competency, and in the decree rendered therein it was "ordered, adjudged and decreed that the guardianship of the person and estate of Arthur W. Keck, as an incompetent is hereby terminated." In January, 1927, an order was made in the guardianship proceeding again purporting to terminate the guardianship, and it was then specifically decreed that the order appointing the guardian "be, and said order is hereby revoked." This order further provided that an accounting be had and that the court's jurisdiction over the guardian be retained until the accounts were settled. In March, 1930, there was a final settlement, showing a shortage, and the suit against the surety was instituted in December, 1930. With reference to the effect of the two early adjudications and as basis for the rejection of the plaintiff's contention that the statute of limitations did not commence to run until March, 1930, when the guardian's accounts were settled and the liability fixed, the court stated at pages 523, 524 of 16 Cal.2d, at page 80 of 61 P.2d: "Thus it affirmatively appears that the action was commenced more than four years after the rendition of the decree of April 19, 1926, terminating the guardianship proceedings, and more than three years after the entry of the decree of January 18, 1927, in the guardianship proceedings revoking the powers of the guardian. Manifestly these decrees, and especially the latter, operated as a removal of the guardian, and set in motion the statute of limitations prescribed in said section 1805 [of the Code of Civil Procedure; now section 1487 of the Probate Code]. The trial court properly held, therefore, that the action against the sureties was barred by the provisions of said Code section." [Emphasis added.]

Thereupon the Keck opinion cited as controlling authority the case of Cook v. Ceas for the construction there placed on said section 1805 regarding the necessity of a court order to effect the "discharge or removal of the guardian" within the meaning of the code provision. Then following its reference to the particular findings contained in the decree of January 18, 1927, relative to the plaintiff's restoration to capacity, as furnishing ample demonstration of the probate court's determination as of that date that it was no longer proper that plaintiff should be under guardianship, the court significantly concluded its treatment of this point with the following statement, at page 525 of 16 Cal.2d at page 80 of 61 P.2d: "Clearly, therefore, in view of those findings it cannot be successfully maintained, as plaintiff argues, that the court's decree based thereon, revoking the guardianship, did not operate as a removal of the guardian within the meaning of section 1805 of the Code of Civil Procedure." [Emphasis added.]

[7-9] Thus, both Cook v. Ceas, supra, and Keck v. Keck, supra, establish as the rule in this state that before section 1487 of the Probate Code can come into operation there must be a court order discharging or removing the guardian. In the Keck case the two decrees of restoration to capacity satisfied the requirement of the code provision as settled by judicial construction, in that the 1926 order expressly terminated the guardianship and the 1927 order expressly revoked the powers of the guardian. Measured by these considerations, the Keck case is distinguishable from the present situation. Here the decree of October 20, 1932, contained an order discharging the guardian, but for the reasons above mentioned that decree is without force in this case. The only remaining order bearing on this point is that of December 27, 1935, whose sole purpose was to establish the competency of Bernard F. Maloney as of that date. It did not discharge or remove the guardian, nor can it be said that this adjudication automatically had such effect, for the powers of the guardian had long since terminated by operation of law by reason of her death. Prob.Code, sec. 1555. Since under the rule of Cook v. Ceas, supra, section 1487 has no application to the termination of the guardian's powers other than by court order, it reasonably follows that this section can have no application where there is no effective court order of discharge or removal before the guardian dies or the ward attains majority. The contingency which would bring that section into operation here has not occurred and never can occur.

Nor in this connection did the incorporation in the decree of December 27, 1935, of the single reference to the guardianship, to wit, that it shall cease and terminate upon the guardian's rendering a proper and legal accounting, add anything of value thereto. Such language was characterized in Keck v. Keck, supra, 16 Cal.2d at page 525, 61 P.2d 79, as meaningless, because without such provision the probate court would retain jurisdiction over the guardian for the purpose of settling the accounts. Probate Code, sec. 1555. But holding such a provision to be without legal effect is not the same as holding that it can be distorted into an order discharging the guardian. In the Keck case the decree discharged the guardian and then retained jurisdiction over her "until the final settlement of her accounts." In such circumstances the court correctly held that the order discharging the guardian was not limited by the clause retaining jurisdiction over her. But that situation must be differentiated from the instant case, wherein the comparable decree of restoration to capacity as of December 27, 1935, contained no clause discharging or removing the guardian, or terminating the guardianship. As above noted, if the language in question were deleted from the order here under consideration, there would be no reference therein to the guardianship at all. It is plain, therefore, that such clause is not sufficient to bring this case within the operation of section 1487 of the Probate Code. This conclusion is in conformity with the salutary principle to which the court adhered in Cook v. Ceas, supra, to the effect that the harsh provisions of this special statute of limitations, capable of producing inequitable results by permitting an action against the surety to be barred before the cause of action accrues upon the final settlement of the guardian's account showing the balance due the ward, should not be given wider application than the express terms of the enactment require.

[10, 11] It is manifest, therefore, from the above observations that the third and last of the orders to be considered here, that of June 22, 1937, finding the guardian in default and establishing the cause of action against the surety, is the operative decree in so far as the period of limitations is concerned. Under such circumstances, as was suggested in both Cook v. Ceas, supra, and Keck v. Keck, supra, the general four-year statute governing the time within which to bring an action upon an instrument in writing would apply. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 337, subd. 1. Accordingly, the present action was commenced well within the statutory period. Moreover, in this connection it is pertinent to note that there is no showing in the record that the surety has been in the least disadvantaged by reason of any delay in the settlement of the guardian's account, so that the defense of laches is of no avail in this case.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

19 Cal.2d 870

CONNELL v. BOWES et al.

S. F. 16664.

Supreme Court of California.

March 19, 1942.

1. Jury ⚿13(14)

Where complaint, either originally or as the result of amendment, states two complete rights of action, one legal and one equitable, a jury trial may be obtained upon the issues raised by the legal cause.

2. Appeal and error ⚿110

Where complaint stated a cause of action of an equitable nature and defendant by cross-complaint asked for damages defendant was entitled to have legal issues raised by cross-complaint submitted to a jury, and hence appeal from order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain judgment entered in favor of plaintiff was not subject to dismissal under statute permitting an appeal from such order only where a jury trial is a matter of right. Code Civ.Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

3. Trial ⚿3

Where a cause presents both legal and equitable issues, the proper trial procedure is to first submit the equitable issues to court for determination and then if any legal issues remain, a jury may be called.

◆

In Bank.

Action by James P. Connell against E. L. Bowes and others for specific performance of an option to sell capital stock of a corporation, for an accounting and for an injunction, wherein defendants filed a cross-complaint for damages, bringing in further parties as cross-defendants. From an order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, plaintiff and cross-defendants appeal and defendants move to dismiss the appeal.

Motion denied.

See, also, 122 P.2d 71.

James R. Agee and Harold C. Holmes, Jr., both of Oakland, for appellant.

Bradford Melvin, Charles A. Christin, T. J. Keegan, and Walter Christie, all of San Francisco, and J. Paul St. Sure, of Oakland, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

In this action plaintiff filed an amended complaint asking for specific performance of an option to sell capital stock of a corporation, for an accounting, and for an injunction. Defendants filed an answer and a cross-complaint for damages, bringing in further parties as cross-defendants. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff, but the lower court subsequently granted a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment. Plaintiff and cross-defendants appealed from the order granting a new trial, and defendants made this motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the order was nonappealable under section 963, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, which permits an appeal from an order granting a new trial only where a jury trial is a matter of right.

An inspection of the record discloses that the amended complaint purports to state a cause of action of an equitable nature, in which jury trial is not a matter of right. The cross-complaint, on the other hand, asked for damages, and although equitable relief in the form of cancellation of the option might also be allowed thereunder, the pleading purports to state a cause of action of a legal nature in which, if pursued independently, a jury trial would be a matter of right. Whether any cause of action is stated by the pleadings need not be determined upon this motion, and the sole question, therefore, is whether the interposition by defendant in an equity action of a cross-complaint of a legal nature will entitle either party to a jury trial of the legal issues raised by the cross-complaint, thus authorizing an appeal from the order granting a new trial.

[1, 2] Defendants, in contending that the cause is essentially equitable in nature, that it is not changed in character by the filing of the cross-complaint, and that, therefore, there is no right to a jury trial, rely principally upon the case of Bettencourt v. Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 216 Cal. 174, 13 P.2d 659, which states that where the gist of the action is equitable, the plaintiffs' prayer for damages is merely incidental to the relief sought and there is no right to a jury trial. It is now established in this state, however, that if a complaint states two complete rights of action, one legal and one equitable, a jury trial may be obtained upon the issues raised by the legal cause. See Pacific Western Oil Co. v. Bern Oil Co., 13 Cal.2d 60, 66–69, 87 P.2d 1045, which expressly overrules the Bettencourt case, in so far as the same is in conflict with views expressed therein. Also, in Farnsworth v. Hunter, 11 Cal.2d 27, 31, 32, 77 P.2d 840, this court said that upon amendment of an equitable action so as to include a cause for damages the right to a jury trial on the latter issue could then have been asserted. The earlier California decisions upon the point are conflicting. Both lines of authority are cited in Union Oil Co. v. Reconstruction Oil Co., 20 Cal. App.2d 170, at page 190, 66 P.2d 1215, which followed Bettencourt v. Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, supra, and which was also disapproved in the Pacific Union Oil Company case.

Even more pertinent to the present question, however, is the opinion of this court in Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 62 P.2d 358, 117 A.L.R. 1. This was an action to quiet title to real property under Code of Civil Procedure, section 738, and it was determined that, under the circumstances, the complaint presented issues which were purely equitable. A cross-complaint was filed stating a cause of action in ejectment and presenting purely legal issues. In summarizing the rules of law involved, this Court said at page 681 of 7 Cal.2d, at page 362 of 62 P.2d: "If plaintiff is in possession, and the defendant by answer or cross-complaint seeks to eject the plaintiff and recover possession, the action involves both equitable and legal issues. The issues arising out of plaintiff's cause of action are equitable, and those resulting from defendant's answer and cross-complaint are legal. In such an action the plaintiff is entitled to have the equitable issues tried by the court without a jury, and the defendant is entitled to have the legal issues submitted to a jury." The logic of the opinion in that case is persuasive, notwithstanding the fact that the court upheld a denial of a jury trial on the ground that the lower court properly first passed upon the equitable issues, and determined that plaintiff was the owner of the property involved, thus leaving nothing for a jury to try.

[3] Most of the courts in other jurisdictions have taken a contrary view and have held that the filing of a legal counterclaim or cross-complaint in an equity action does not entitle either party to demand a jury trial, but the decisions to some extent depend upon local statutory and constitutional provisions and are not necessarily applicable here. Also, many of these cases were decided upon the theory that once equity has assumed jurisdiction, it may retain it for all purposes. The practical problem presented by this rule is solved by the trial procedure outlined by Justice Henshaw in Angus v. Craven, 132 Cal. 691, 699, 64 P. 1091, approved by the Thomson case, whereby the equitable issues are tried first and then, if any legal issues remain, a jury may be called. See also note 25 Cal. L.Rev. 565, 572; James, Trial by Jury and the New Federal Rules of Procedure (1936), 45 Yale L. Jour., 1022, 1033–1034. Moreover, it does not seem desirable to force a party to give up his right to a jury trial as an alternative to utilizing the advantages of modern code procedure designed to permit settlement of various issues in a single action. See (1937) 85 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 738; James, Trial by Jury and the New Federal Rules of Procedure (1936), 45 Yale L. Jour. 1022, 1036.

The motion is denied.

SHENK, CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

19 Cal.2d 831

LAISNE v. STATE BOARD OF OPTOMETRY et al.

L. A. 17578.

Supreme Court of California.

March 16, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 15, 1942.

1. Courts 🔑125

State-wide judicial power can be exercised by no other body than the Supreme Court, the District Courts of Appeal, and the Superior Courts except as the result of constitutional amendment. Const.Cal. art. 6, § 1.

2. Constitutional law 🔑50

Where one department or agency of the government exercises the complete power that has been expressly limited to another, such action violates the implied mandate of the constitution dividing the powers of state government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. Const.Cal. art. 3, § 1.

3. Constitutional law ⚷101

The right of a licensed optometrist to practice optometry was a "vested property right" in the constitutional sense.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Vested Property Right".

4. Constitutional law ⚷275(1)

Notice and the right to appear and answer charges made against optometrist in a proceeding before the State Board of Optometry for the revocation of his license accorded to optometrist all the rights of procedural "due process of law." St.1937, p. 1294, §§ 3090, 3091.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

5. Constitutional law ⚷79

A vested property right cannot be finally destroyed by a nonjudicial body if the action of that body is questioned in a court of law in a mandate proceeding. Const.Cal. art. 6, § 1.

6. Constitutional law ⚷80(2)
Physicians and surgeons ⚷11(3)

Where one whose license to practice optometry has been revoked by the State Board of Optometry for violation of statute fails to question the order of revocation in a court of law, the failure is an admission of violation and the ruling of board will stand, but if the order is questioned in a court of law, the party must be given a trial de novo on the issues involved under the constitutional provisions relating to the separation of powers and enumerating courts which may exercise state-wide judicial power. St. 1937, p. 1294, §§ 3090, 3091; Const.Cal. art. 3, § 1; art. 6, § 1.

7. Constitutional law ⚷318

Conferring binding fact finding power on purely administrative boards and the failure of courts in reviewing boards' actions to exercise an independent judgment on the facts as well as on the law, would violate the "due process of law" provisions of the state and federal constitutions.

8. Constitutional law ⚷318

Where a body other than one of the courts enumerated in the constitution makes findings of fact, determines on those findings that the provisions of a statute have been violated, and issues an order or renders a judgment which has the effect of depriving a person of a valuable property right, such action is the full exercise of "judicial power" and it denies the aggrieved party the "due process of law" guaranteed to him by the state and federal constitutions unless the action may be questioned in a court of law. Const.Cal. art. 3, § 1; art. 6, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judicial Power".

9. Physicians and surgeons ⚷11(3)

The legislature by not providing for a court hearing after determination by the State Board of Optometry revoking a license did not intend that the board's action should be final, or that a court should be confined to a consideration of the evidence introduced at the hearing before the board in view of legislature's proposal to the voters of a constitutional amendment purporting to give the legislature the right to confer power on administrative officers, boards, or commissions to make decisions. St.1937, p. 1294, §§ 3090, 3091; Const.Cal. art. 3, § 1; art. 6, § 1; and art. 4, § 1b; see St.1941, p. 3549.

10. Mandamus ⚷173

In mandamus proceeding to set aside an order of the State Board of Optometry revoking petitioner's license to practice optometry on ground that evidence before board showed that petitioner had violated certain provisions of the Business and Professions Code, the Superior Court erroneously denied petitioner the right to introduce any new and material evidence, and compelled him to submit his case solely on the record and proceedings before the board. St.1937, p. 1294, §§ 3090, 3091; Const.Cal. art. 3, § 1; art. 6, § 1.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from the Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Proceeding by E. W. Laisne against the California State Board of Optometry and others for a writ of mandate to set aside an order of the board revoking petitioner's certificate of registration to practice optometry in the State of California. From a judgment denying the relief sought and discharging the alternative writ and the temporary restraining order previously issued against the board, petitioner appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 101 P.2d 787, petition for rehearing denied, 102 P.2d 538.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

H. A. Savage and Lawrence W. Young, both of Fresno, for appellant.

A. B. Bianchi, of San Francisco, amicus curiae, on behalf of appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Brown, Thomas I. Coakley, J. Albert Hutchinson, and Chas. W. Johnson, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondents.

Morse Craig, H. E. Lindersmith, and Morris Lavine, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae, on behalf of respondents.

CURTIS, Justice.

A proceeding for a writ of mandate was instituted in the Superior Court of Fresno County to set aside an order of the California State Board of Optometry revoking appellant's certificate of registration to practice optometry in the state of California. After a hearing the superior court rendered its judgment denying the relief sought and discharging the alternative writ of mandate and the temporary restraining order previously issued against the board. It is from this judgment that an appeal is brought to this court.

The board of optometry made an order revoking appellant's license after a hearing as provided by sections 3090, 3091 of the Business and Professions Code, St.1937, p. 1294. The complaint before the board alleged violation by appellant of sections 3098 and 3125 of the same code and the board determined on the evidence introduced that appellant had violated the provisions of said sections.

After the filing of the petition for writ of mandate in the superior court, the respondent board made a motion to strike certain portions thereof and the motion was granted in part. Included in the portions stricken was that part of the prayer which read "* * * and that this court have a hearing and trial de novo." The only evidence considered by the superior court was the record of the proceedings had before the board, and on this evidence the court concluded that the appellant had violated sections 3098 and 3125.

On the authority of the cases of Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, and McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205, appellant insists that he had the right to require the trial court in the mandamus proceeding to conduct what would be in substance and effect a trial de novo, in the course of which the parties would not be limited to the record made before the board. We have assumed from the record and for the purpose of this decision that the trial court denied appellant the right to introduce any new and material evidence and compelled him to submit his case solely upon the record and proceedings before the board of optometry. The validity of the judgment appealed from therefore hinges upon the action of the trial court denying the appellant the right to introduce such evidence. If the order of the trial court in this respect was proper, then the judgment should be affirmed. On the other hand, if the trial court was in error in denying appellant such right, the judgment should be reversed.

The specific ruling in the Drummey case was that on a proceeding in mandate in a superior court questioning the validity of an order by an administrative board revoking or suspending a license to practice a profession, the court had the power to exercise an independent judgment on all of the material facts relative to the issue of whether the petitioner had violated the particular sections of the act governing that particular profession. In the exercise of such independent judgment it was held that the court must consider all material evidence and was not confined to the record of the proceedings before the board. If the court were so confined, it would not be exercising an independent judgment on all the facts material to the issue. It was further held that such independent judgment on the facts by a court was necessary because the entire judicial power of the state is vested in certain enumerated courts by Article III, section 1, and article VI, section 1, of the Constitution of this state, and also because the person whose license had been revoked or suspended by the action of the board would otherwise be deprived of a property right without due process of law as guaranteed by both the federal and state Constitutions.

[1] The necessity for the exercise of an independent judgment on the facts and the receipt of any material evidence regardless of the record of the proceedings before the board is apparent from the following facts. The powers of the government of the state are divided into three separate departments—the legislative, executive and judicial. Article III, section 1, of the state Constitution. State-wide judicial power may be exercised by only three enumerated courts, viz., the supreme court, the district courts of appeal, and the superior courts. Article VI, section 1 of the state Constitution. No other body can exercise state-wide judicial power except as the result of constitutional amendment. Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 P. 24; Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 P. 491, Ann.Cas.1917E, 390. If, therefore, some agency with state-wide jurisdiction, other than one of the enumerated courts, without sanction by constitutional amendment, exercises or attempts to exercise judicial power, such action is in direct violation of the articles of the state Constitution cited above.

[2-4] It is true that there can be no complete separation of powers of government in an ever changing social order. It is equally true that each department for its own existence must in some degree exercise some of the functions of the others. That there can be no rigid line over which one department cannot traverse has been recognized since the first test of the doctrine of separation of powers. There still remains, however, this unalterable fact: When one department or an agency thereof exercises the complete power that has been by the Constitution expressly limited to another, then such action violates the implied mandate of the Constitution. If, in the instant case, the superior court in the mandate proceedings were limited to the evidence presented before the board, or if the findings of fact by the board were conclusive on the court, then the board would be exercising the complete judicial power reserved to the enumerated courts. The appellant's right to practice optometry was a vested property right. Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L.R.A.,N.S., 896, 113 Am.St.Rep. 315, 7 Ann.Cas. 750; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965. In the proceeding against him by the board all the rights of "procedural" due process were accorded him, viz., notice, right to appear and answer the charges made against him. Witnesses were subpoenaed and evidence was taken. A reporter was present and a record made of the whole proceedings. At the conclusion of the hearing an order was made revoking appellant's license to practice. This then would be an exercise of the complete judicial power that was contemplated by the framers of the Constitution, and appellant would be deprived of his constitutional right unless he had a right to go into a court of law and question the validity of that order by the introduction of any material evidence to prove that he did not commit the acts alleged.

This problem is not a new one and on numerous occasions the courts of this state have been called upon to prevent the complete extinction of the doctrine of separation of powers. In the early case of Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, at page 403, 19 Am.Rep. 656, in declaring a statute unconstitutional which attempted to validate a judgment of a court void for want of jurisdiction, the court stated: "The Legislature of California cannot exercise any judicial function, and no person in this State can be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." And again at page 406 of 50 Cal., 19 Am.Rep. 656: "If we assume the act to have validated the Forster sale * * * then the lands which up to the date of the act * * * belonged to the heirs of Nathaniel M. Pryor, from that date became the property of other persons, and this transfer was accomplished by the legislative act alone. And even if we could indulge the fiction that the parties to be deprived of their estates had notice of the intended act, and a hearing and opportunity to produce witnesses, or to show cause why the act should not be passed, this would have been a species of trial, and the exercise of judicial power by the Legislature." [Emphasis added.] And again at page 408 of 50 Cal., 19 Am.Rep. 656: "* * * A judgment must be the result 'of due inquiry, sufficient to satisfy the discretion and convince the judgment of the officer of the law, in whom the authority and jurisdiction to decide the questions involved have been duly vested.' (Denny v. Mattoon, 2 Allen, Mass. [361], 380 [79 Am.Dec. 784].)" [Emphasis added.] Chief Justice Beatty in a concurring opinion in Glide v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 21 at page 30, 81 P. 225, at page 229, makes the following pertinent observation: "Vested rights of property and contract rights are placed by the Constitution under the protection of the courts, where alone the questions of law and fact upon which they depend can be finally decided." In Chinn v. Superior Court, 156 Cal. 478, 105 P. 580, a statute provided for the formation of an irrigation district, with the right of appeal to the superior court. The superior court refused to act on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional as in violation of article VI, section 1. Mandate was brought to force the superior court to act. The writ was denied and the act held unconstitutional, the court stating at page 480 of 156 Cal., at page 581 of 105 P.: "It is a well-recognized principle that where the judicial power of courts, either original or appellate, is fixed by constitutional provisions, the Legislature cannot either limit or extend that jurisdiction." Again, in the case of Griffin v. City of Los Angeles, 134 Cal.App. 763, at page 771, 26 P.2d 655, at page 659, it is stated: "The jurisdiction of superior courts is conferred by the Constitution, and cannot be taken away by any act of the Legislature. City of Tulare v. Hevren, 126 Cal. 226, 58 P. 530."

The language found in that group of cases involving questions which arose after the passage of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1913, St.1913, p. 279, conclusively determines the issue under discussion here. In annulling an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission because the injury did not arise "in the course of" the employment, the court in the case of Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 P. 24, 26, had occasion to refer to the constitutional provision giving the legislature the power to create the Industrial Accident Commission and also to article VI, section 1. On page 322 of 171 Cal., on page 26 of 153 P. is found the following statement: "The constitutional provision is that the Legislature may 'create and enforce a liability on the part of all employers to compensate their employés for any injury incurred by the said employés in the course of their employment.' It proceeds to declare that the legislature may establish an Industrial Accident Board and empower it to settle disputes concerning the liability which the Legislature may create under the authority so given. Article 20, § 21. This action by such board would be an exercise of judicial power. For that purpose it is, in legal effect, a court. Section 1 of article 6 vests the judicial power of the state 'in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, district courts of appeal, superior courts,' and such inferior local courts as the Legislature may establish. Under this provision the Legislature would be without authority to give judicial power to any general state board or tribunal. Except for local purposes, the section disposes of the whole judicial power of the state, and vests all of it in the courts expressly named therein, leaving none at the disposal of the Legislature. Authority to the Legislature to create another state tribunal and vest it with judicial power over this new class of cases must be sought for elsewhere in the Constitution. It is found only in the aforesaid section 21 of article 20. It follows that this section measures and limits the legislative power in that respect. * * *" [Emphasis added.]

The case of Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 P. 491, 493, Ann.Cas.1917E, 390, is also of particular interest because of statements of the reasons why the action of the Industrial Accident Commission is an exercise of judicial power as stated in the Pacific Coast case, supra. The court points out that the commission has power to administer oaths, issue subpoenas, take testimony and punish for contempt. Notice is served on the adverse party and he is given opportunity to answer. After hearing by the commission, it makes and files its findings of facts and its award. The findings are "conclusive and final." The court states at pages 412, 413 of 172 Cal., at page 493 of 156 P., Ann.Cas.1917E, 390:

"The commission, in exercising these powers, is performing precisely the same functions that are performed by any court in passing upon questions brought before it. * * * The industrial accident commission is given the power to make binding orders or judgments. * * *

"In the absence of a special enabling provision of the Constitution, judicial power could not be vested in the industrial accident commission. Section 1 of article 6 of the Constitution provides that [quoting the provision]. It is clear that the industrial accident commission is not one of the courts thus designated. It is equally clear that the grant contained in the section of the Constitution just cited, unless modified by other constitutional provisions, is exclusive." [Emphasis added.]

The court concludes, however, that section 21 of article XX sufficiently modifies section 1 of article VI to permit the Industrial Accident Commission to act as a court.

The language quoted from the above cited cases may be directly applied to the instant situation. The only factual distinction is that in the Industrial Accident Commission hearings the rights of two individuals were involved, whereas in the board hearing in the instant case the state or an agency thereof is acting against one individual. However, in both situations there exists the issue of the deprivation of a property right and the vested interest remains the same whether one private individual is aligned against another or one against the state. Because the state institutes the action it does not follow that the person against whom the action is brought may be finally deprived of a personal or property right by a body other than a court.

The cases involving the powers of the Water Commission are equally applicable to the instant situation. These cases are referred to in the Drummey case, supra, and also in the case of Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 6 Cal.2d 557, 59 P.2d 119, which held that certiorari would not lie to review the rulings of administrative boards. The concurring opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, is particularly relied on and is of sufficient materiality to be directly quoted here. At page 542 of 187 Cal., at page 878 of 202 P. the Chief Justice states:

"If the Water Commission is acting judicially, it is doing so because it is determining the rights and titles of individuals to private real property, and in that capacity it would be acting as a court as fully as a court of general jurisdiction would be acting when it adjudicates the title to real property. [Citing cases.]

"The effect of section 1, art. 6, aforesaid, is to vest in the courts therein mentioned the entire judicial power of the state. It is not within the power of the Legislature to vest in any other body any general judicial power to establish and declare the right and title to private property. The Water Commission is not one of the superior courts of the state and could not be made such court or be given the powers thereof, and it is not an inferior court with jurisdiction limited to incorporated cities, or towns, townships, counties, or cities and counties. On the contrary, its jurisdiction is state-wide. Consequently it is not a court which comes within the purview of said section 1 and it is not within the power of the Legislature to give that commission such judicial power. Western [Metal Supply] Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 413, 156 P. 491, Ann. Cas.1917E, 390; Pacific [Coast Casualty] Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 322, 153 P. 24."

This concurring opinion in the Tulare Water Co. case was expressly approved in Mojave River Irrigation District v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 717, 262 P. 724. In that case a petition for prohibition was brought to prevent the superior court from reviewing an order of the Department of Public Works (Water Division) as provided by section 1b of the Water Commission Act. The writ was granted on the ground that the review provided could neither be on certiorari or appeal. It was further determined that the action in the superior court could not be regarded as an original proceeding because the evidence that could be introduced was limited as was the judgment that could be rendered.

Both of the preceding cases were subsequently approved in the case of Yuba River Power Co. v. Nevada Irr. Dist., 207 Cal. 521, 279 P. 128. In that case the plaintiff had applications for appropriation pending and brought suit to quiet title to determine adverse claims to the water so sought as between itself and an upper claimant. In reversing a judgment based upon an order sustaining a demurrer by the trial court, this court stated at page 525 of 207 Cal., at page 129 of 279 P.: "The court in said cause (Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, supra) further clearly intimated that neither the question of priority between claimants nor the existence or nonexistence of unappropriated waters in a stream were questions to be finally determined by the water commission. The effect of this holding was sought to be obviated by the enactment of a new section, known as 1b (St.1923, p. 162), providing for a hearing by the superior court upon applications for permits to appropriate water. This court, in Mojave River Irrigation District v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 717, 262 P. 724, declared said enactment invalid and sustained the pronounce-ments of the court in Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, supra, to the effect that no judicial power had been or could be lawfully conferred upon the state water commission or its successor. This doctrine is also set forth in Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076."

[5] The above group of cases cannot be distinguished from the situation in the instant case. Just as a vested property right was there involved so here a vested property right is in existence. Such right cannot be finally destroyed by a non-judicial body if the action of that body is questioned in a court of law in a mandate proceeding.

The cases interpreting the State Bar Act, St.1927, p. 38, strengthen our conviction that if finality were given to the action of an administrative agency, such would be an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power. In the case of In re Shattuck, 208 Cal. 6, 279 P. 998, the constitutionality of the State Bar Act as it read in 1927 was attacked as giving judicial power to the Board of Bar Governors. The act nominally gave the Board of Bar Governors power to disbar or suspend. Section 26 of the State Bar Act provided that "Any person so disbarred or suspended may, within sixty days after the filing of said certified copy of said decision, petition said supreme court to review said decision." The court in commenting on this section stated at pages 8, 9 of 208 Cal., at page 998 of 279 P.: "The term 'review,' as used in this and in certain other portions of the act, we do not understand to bear the limited significance attributed to the 'writ of review or certiorari,' as the same is defined and the functions thereof stated in section 1067 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. To give it such limited meaning would result, not only in narrowing the powers of this court to the single issue of jurisdiction in the board to make such order, but would also be to consider said board as being invested with judicial functions, which, under the inhibition of section 1 of article 3 of the state Constitution, the legislative department of the state government has no power to repose in such a board. The review of the evidence, findings, and conclusions of the Board of Bar Governors which this term contemplates consists, and should consist, in a re-examination by this court of the entire record of the proceedings before said board as these are required to be kept and in due course transmitted to this court under the provisions of section 26 of the State Bar Act." That the findings of the Board of Bar Governors, although based on conflicting evidence, are not binding on this court; that the court can and sometimes has refused to sustain the findings of the board; and that the court can and does pass upon the weight of the evidence by a review of the whole record is now well established, and it has been so stated in numerous cases. In re Stafford, 208 Cal. 738, 284 P. 670; Fish v. State Bar, 214 Cal. 215, 4 P.2d 937; Clark v. State Bar, 214 Cal. 281, 4 P.2d 944; Bentson v. State Bar, 216 Cal. 58, 13 P.2d 512. It should be noted here that in disciplinary proceedings this court has confined itself to the record of the proceedings before the Board of Bar Governors. This may be said to be due to the fact that the board is an administrative arm of this court, Fish v. State Bar, supra, and has no effect on our conclusion that in situations such as the instant one a court may consider any new material evidence.

Such cases as Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965; Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042; Cuffield v. Board of Dental Examiners, 12 Cal.App.2d 446, 55 P.2d 522; Fuller v. Board of Medical Examiners, 14 Cal.App.2d 734, 59 P.2d 171, and many earlier cases decided by the various district courts of appeal do not affect the views previously expressed. Those cases were considered on review by certiorari and were decided before the case of Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, become final. [The Fuller case was decided one day after the decision of the Standard Oil Co. case, but no petition for a hearing was made in that case to this court.] The Standard Oil Co. case decided that certiorari was not and constitutionally could not be the proper method of review. That case quotes at length from the case of Van Camp S. F. Co. v. Fish & Game Commission, 75 Cal.App. 764, at page 767, 243 P. 702, at page 704, wherein it was stated: "Except for local purposes the section [State Const., art. VI, sec. 1] disposes of the whole judicial power of the state and vests all of it in the courts expressly named therein, leaving none at the disposal of the Legislature." The Standard Oil Co. case was followed by the case of Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, 8 Cal.2d 444, at page 445, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1, in which it was expressly held that "in the absence of a constitutional grant of judicial power a state board cannot exercise judicial functions and the Legislature is powerless to confer such power upon it." That case practically overrules the long list of cases relied upon by respondents, such as Suckow v. Alderson, supra, and kindred cases. The Drummey case, supra, holding that a court must exercise its independent judgment on the facts, logically followed the Whitten case.

In the case of Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 101 P.2d 665, the constitutionality of the Milk Stabilization Act, St.1935, p. 922, as amended, as a whole was under attack, as it had been in the earlier case of Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 13 Cal. 2d 620, 91 P.2d 577. The court held that, with the exception of the section giving the Director of Agriculture the power to fix damages under certain conditions, the act was a constitutional exercise of the police power of the state. Because of section 737.11 of the act, which gives the director the power to revoke or suspend a milk license "after due hearing upon a verified complaint signed and filed with the director by any interested person," it is argued that this case is thoroughly consistent with the respondents' contention as hereinbefore set out. Neither the facts nor the law of the Ray case warrant this conclusion.

In the present case the board of optometry had made an order revoking the license of appellant. Appellant then instituted an action in the superior court contesting the validity of that order. The question on appeal before this court is the type or extent of "review" that should have been granted appellant in the superior court in determining the question of whether he had committed certain acts in violation of the provisions of the Optometry Act which would justify the revocation of his license. No order of revocation of any person's license had been made by the Director of Agriculture in either the Ray case or the Jersey Maid case. Section 735.6 of the Milk Act provides that any order of the director "may be reviewed by any court of competent jurisdiction." It would be only after an order of revocation of a license by the director and the contesting of that order by the aggrieved party in a superior court that the question of the scope of the "review" would become the same as that involved in the present case. On the authority of the Drummey case the only type of review that would afford appellant his full constitutional rights would be a complete trial de novo as outlined in the decision in that case. 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848. It was there said at page 85 of 13 Cal.2d, at page 854 of 87 P.2d: "The findings of the board come before the court with a strong presumption of their correctness, and the burden rests on the complaining party to convince the court that the board's decision is contrary to the weight of the evidence." Undoubtedly, the court in this reference to the "evidence" contemplated not only the record of the proceedings before the board, but such additional evidence as either party desired to introduce before the trial court. It should be noted that the Ray case, supra, cites and quotes from Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.App.2d 518, 88 P. 2d 253, in commenting on the type of "review" provided by section 735.6 of the Milk Act. The court in that case stated at page 524 of 31 Cal.App.2d, at page 256 of 88 P. 2d: "It is quite clear it was intended by the right of review that an interested party should have a right to put in issue before a superior court a question arising as a result of the promulgation of any order the commission might make." After this quotation the Ray opinion cites the Standard Oil Co., Whitten, Drummey and McDonough cases, supra, which, of course, all stand for the propositions that an administrative board cannot exercise full judicial powers; that an administrative board cannot make conclusive findings of fact and thereon base an order which would deprive a person of a property right; and that such a person has the right to a trial de novo in a superior court. In view of the above, it seems idle to argue that the Ray case stands for just the contrary propositions.

Reference is made to the cases of Gaylord v. City of Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348; Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, 200 Cal. 276, 252 P. 1038; and East Bay Municipal Utility District v. Department of Public Works, 1 Cal.2d 476, 35 P.2d 1027, cited in the Ray opinion. The Gaylord case involved the constitutionality of a local ordinance and the powers of the administrator thereunder. This fact alone is sufficient to render impotent any language in the case which might tend to support the respondents' position. However, this further observation should be made in regard to the Gaylord case. It is disclosed by the opinion that the findings of the city electrician were questioned in the superior court, and the court determined that the building installations were safe and were not dangerous to life or property. This finding was contrary to the findings made by the city electrician. In other words, the aggrieved party was given a trial de novo in the superior court when he contested the ruling of the administrative agent.

The East Bay Municipal Utility District case is relevant only for its quotation from the Gaylord case; therefore, no comment need be made on it.

The Globe Cotton Oil Mills case is clearly distinguishable from the situation in the present case. There the Fish and Game Commission had refused to act on an application for a permit authorizing the petitioner to use a certain quantity of fish in its reduction plant, on the ground that it would be exercising judicial functions to do so. This court ordered a writ of mandate to issue and held that such actions would not transgress upon the exclusive functions of the judicial department. Here we have a "refusal to issue" not a "revocation," and thus, as was determined in the McDonough case, supra, no property right was involved. But more than that, the petitioner was not contesting the findings of the commission and the order based thereon, but was merely requesting that the commission act in the first instance.

[6] In regard to the numerous cases containing language to the effect that administrative agencies may make findings of fact and the reasons of expediency given therefor, it must again be pointed out that it is not the fact-finding power alone that is involved in the present situation. It is the facts found plus the order based thereon depriving a person of a property right which is the full exercise of the judicial power. If one whose license has been revoked fails to question the order in a court of law, then, of course, the ruling of the administrative board will stand because such failure is an admission of violation. However, if the order is questioned in a court of law, then under the Constitution of this state the petitioner must be given a trial de novo on the issues involved.

[7] Up to this point the discussion has been devoted primarily to the necessity of a trial de novo because of the provisions of article III, section 1, and article VI, section 1, of the Constitution of this state. A further reason and one of equal strength is that if binding fact-finding power is conferred upon purely administrative boards, and if the courts in reviewing the administrative boards' actions do not exercise an independent judgment on the facts as well as on the law, the due process provisions of both the federal and state Constitutions will have been violated. In support of this proposition the Drummey case, supra, cites the cases of Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U.S. 287, 40 S.Ct. 527, 64 L.Ed. 908; Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 52 S.Ct. 285, 76 L.Ed. 598; and St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 56 S.Ct. 720, 80 L.Ed. 1033. The actual holdings of those cases and the strength of such holdings in view of numerous other and conflicting opinions by the Supreme Court of the United States (see Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L.Ed. 372; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 17 S.Ct. 966, 42 L.Ed. 270; Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Union Pacific R. Co., 222 U.S. 541, 547, 32 S.Ct. 108, 56 L.Ed. 308; United States ex rel. Tisi v. Tod, 264 U.S. 131, 133, 44 S.Ct. 260, 68 L.Ed. 590; Del Vecchio v. Bowers, 296 U.S. 280, 56 S.Ct. 190, 80 L. Ed. 229; Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd. v. United States, 300 U.S. 297, 304, 57 S.Ct. 478, 81 L. Ed. 659) have been the subject of much discussion by leading authorities in the field of administrative law.

The Crowell v. Benson case, supra, has been considerably weakened by the case of South Chicago Coal & Dock Co. v. Bassett, 309 U.S. 251, 60 S.Ct. 544, 84 L.Ed. 732. In the Benson case the court, per Hughes, C. J., held that there were two "jurisdictional" questions of fact: (1) whether the injury occurred upon navigable waters and (2) whether the relationship of master and servant existed, that could not be conclusively determined by the administrative agent. Yet in the South Chicago case, also written by the Chief Justice, the question of fact of whether a man was a member of the crew of a certain vessel was held to be a question to be finally determined by the administrative agent. It is difficult to recognize any distinction between this latter question of fact and the so-called "jurisdictional" facts mentioned above. Obviously, if the man was a member of the crew of the vessel, the administrative agent would not have jurisdiction to make an award under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, 44 Stat. 1424, 33 U.S.C.A. § 901 et seq.

[8] The opinion in the Drummey case supra, recognized that there was some confusion in the federal cases, and it must be admitted that the cited cases appear to be exceptions to the general rule which gives federal administrative agencies the power to make conclusive findings of fact. However, this does not detract from the strength of the language of these cases when applied to the question of the powers of state-wide administrative agencies as controlled by the provisions of the Constitution of this state. Article III, section 1, of the federal Constitution vests the judicial power of the United States in one Supreme Court and "in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Under the federal Constitution then, with the exception of the Supreme Court, there are no enumerated courts. Therefore, the question of whether a certain inferior body created by Congress is exercising judicial power becomes relatively unimportant for the reason that if it is acting in a judicial capacity, it may be classified as one of the "inferior courts" which Congress is given the power to create. On the other hand, as previously pointed out, under the Constitution of this state, there are certain enumerated courts which may alone exercise state-wide judicial power to the exclusion of all other bodies. Therefore, if a body other than one of the enumerated courts makes findings of fact, on those findings determines that the provisions of a certain statute have been violated, and issues an order or renders a judgment which has the effect of depriving a person of a valuable property right, such action denies the aggrieved party the due process of law guaranteed to him by the state and federal Constitutions, unless such action by such body may be questioned in a court of law. It should always be kept in mind that the evil of administrative action which must be guarded against is not the fact-finding power, but the conclusiveness of the fact-finding power coupled with the order based on the findings made which would deprive a person of a property right. Such is the full exercise of judicial power, and such power in this state can be exercised only by one of the enumerated courts. The language of the federal cases cited in the Drummey case, supra, is therefore peculiarly applicable to the powers of restriction on the powers of state-wide administrative boards under the state Constitution. On page 85 of 13 Cal.2d, 87 P.2d on page 854 of the Drummey case is found a quotation from the case of St. Joseph Stock Yards Co. v. United States, supra. The quotation is concluded with the following sentence: "Under our system there is no warrant for the view that the judicial power of a competent court can be circumscribed by any legislative arrangement designed to give effect to administrative action going beyond the limits of constitutional authority." Regardless of the strength or weakness of that sentence in relation to federal administrative agencies, it may be directly applied to administrative agencies of this state. The state Constitution limits the exercise of judicial power to the enumerated courts. The federal cases previously cited, which hold that federal administrative boards may make conclusive findings of fact, are therefore not controlling on this court when the power of a state administrative board is in question.

The distinction between the powers of state-wide administrative boards and federal administrative boards is also existent between boards with state-wide authority in this state and local bodies created by legislature. By article VI, section 1, of the state Constitution, the judicial power of the state is vested in the enumerated courts, municipal courts as may be established, and "such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county." This latter provision is similar to the provision in the federal Constitution. Therefore, it has been held that the rulings of local boards acting in a judicial capacity may be reviewed on certiorari. See Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780; Miller & Lux v. Board of Supervisors, 189 Cal. 254, 208 P. 304; Ludolph v. Board of Police Com'rs, 30 Cal.App.2d 211, 86 P.2d 118; Nider v. City Commission, 36 Cal.App.2d 14, 97 P.2d 293. That the rulings of local bodies might be reviewed on certiorari was recognized in both the Standard Oil Co. and Drummey cases. Cases in other states holding that state-wide administrative agencies might exercise judicial power and that their rulings might be reviewed on certiorari may be distinguished on the same ground. The Supreme Court of Arizona in the re cent case of Batty v. Arizona State Dental Board, 57 Ariz. 239, 112 P.2d 870, so held and criticized the Standard Oil Co. case. However, the court failed to consider the difference between the provisions of article VI, section 1, of the California Constitution and article VI, section 1, of the Arizona Constitution. The latter provides: "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in a Supreme Court, superior courts, justices of the peace, and such courts inferior to the superior courts as may be provided by law." This provision is quite similar to that of the federal Constitution [art. 1, sec. 1] but is clearly distinguishable from article VI, section 1, of the Constitution of this state, which confers upon the legislature the power to establish inferior courts only with local jurisdiction.

[9] Respondent boards urges that by not providing for a court hearing after determination by the board, the legislature intended that the board's action should be final or at least that a court should be confined to a consideration of the evidence introduced at the hearing before the board. As evidence of the legislative intent in such matters, we have only to refer to the act of the last legislature in proposing to the voters of the state a constitutional amendment [Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 8, see St.1941 p. 3549] which purports to give to the legislature the right "to confer power on administrative officers, boards or commissions to make decisions." If this proposed amendment is adopted by the people, it will authorize the legislature to confer upon such administrative bodies the right to exercise judicial power, the same power the respondent board claims the legislature now possesses. Obviously, the legislature in proposing said constitutional amendment was of the opinion that it now has no such power.

[10] Other questions were raised in the briefs and on oral argument, but they are of minor importance and their determination would in no way affect our decision in this case. In consideration of our decision that the trial court erroneously denied appellant the right to introduce material and competent evidence at the trial of this action in the superior court, it is our opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

SHENK, HOUSER, and CARTER, JJ., concur.

GIBSON, Chief Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

The majority opinion in this case is the culmination of a series of decisions in which this court, since 1936, has overturned long established rules in the field of administrative law. The constitutional principles announced by the majority will vitally impair the effectiveness of many administrative agencies upon which we rely for the expert conduct of the complex affairs of state government. It follows from this decision that a state-wide administrative agency is without power to make a binding determination of fact affecting rights of property and that any act of the legislature conferring such authority is unconstitutional. It is held here that, although such an agency is vested with statutory authority to revoke professional licenses, there is a constitutional requirement that after hearing and determination by the administrative board the entire matter must be tried anew in a court of law. The conclusion that the petitioner in this case is entitled to a trial de novo means, in the language of the author of the majority opinion as expressed in another case, "a new hearing, or a hearing the second time. * * * Such a hearing contemplates an entire trial of the controversial matter in the same manner in which the same was originally heard. It is in no sense a review of the hearing previously held, but is a complete trial of the controversy, the same as if no previous hearing had ever been held." Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 205, 70 P.2d 171, 173.

Prior to 1936 it was established by a great many cases that where a state-wide board was given the power to revoke professional licenses for cause and where the supervision of the courts extended only to an inquiry as to whether the board had regularly pursued its authority, there was no violation of the provisions of the Constitution. Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965; Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042; State Board, etc., v. Superior Court, 201 Cal. 108, 255 P. 749; Bold v. Board of Medical Examiners, 133 Cal.App. 23, 23 P.2d 826; Gustason v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners, 10 Cal. App.2d 436, 51 P.2d 1106. In this regard it seems very significant that although many professional licenses have been revoked in this state by administrative boards under statutory authorization, our attention has not been called to a single instance in which a trial de novo has been had before a court.

The constitutional doctrines which find their ultimate expression in the present case originated in two erroneous decisions of this court, one in the procedural field in 1936 and the other in the field of constitutional law in 1939. Both decisions have been subjected to severe criticism by experts in this field of the law. In the first of these cases, Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 6 Cal.2d 557, 59 P. 2d 119, decided in 1936, it was held that the writ of certiorari would no longer lie to review the quasi-judicial acts of state-wide administrative agencies in California. See criticism in Rode, "Administrative Adjudication in California and Its Review by the Writ of Certiorari," (1937) 25 Cal.L. Rev. 694; Turrentine, "Restore Certiorari to Review State-Wide Administrative Bodies in California," (1941) 29 Cal.L.Rev. 275; Gellhorn, "Administrative Law—Cases and Comments," (1940) p. 819, n. The second case, Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, 13 Cal.2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, decided in 1939, held that the writ of mandate could be used to review the orders of professional licensing boards and thus fill the procedural gap caused by the refusal to permit the use of certiorari for this purpose. The reinstatement on mandamus of professional licenses suspended by the State Board of Funeral Directors was sustained, and it was held that the trial court was required under the state and federal Constitutions to exercise its independent judgment upon the facts as well as upon the law. This constitutional doctrine, obviously contrary to the former decisions in this state, was explained in McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 752, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205, as having resulted from certain recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court which appeared to make such a conclusion "mandatory". See criticism in McGovney, "Administrative Decisions and Court Review Thereof, in California," (1941) 29 Cal.L. Rev. 110.

This case is not the first in which an opportunity has been presented to correct the error in the Standard Oil and Drummey cases. So long as the issue remained primarily one of procedure, however, there was no irreparable damage which required that the judicial error involved in those decisions be rectified. While it was possible, by use of the writ of mandate, to review the acts of state-wide administrative bodies and accord the findings of such bodies a substantial degree of finality, it appeared that the substantive evils resulting from the procedural error might be eliminated in time. Cf. Bodinson Mfg. Co. v. California Emp. Comm., 17 Cal.2d 321, 109 P.2d 935; Webster v. Board of Dental Examiners, 17 Cal.2d 534, 110 P.2d 992; Olive Proration, etc., Committee v. Agricultural, etc., Comm., 17 Cal.2d 204, 109 P.2d 918. The majority opinion in the present case, however, enunciates a doctrine of constitutional law which can be corrected only by a reversal of the decision or by constitutional amendment. The present holding goes far beyond the rule laid down in Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, supra, although that fact is not immediately discernible from the face of the opinion. The Drummey case did not require a trial de novo by the court, but spoke of an independent judgment on the facts. This independent judgment, which was presumably to be exercised with reference to the evidence produced before the board, was tempered with the cautionary instruction that the board's findings were to be given a "strong presumption of their correctness." Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, supra, 13 Cal.2d page 85, 87 P.2d page 854; cf. McGovney, supra, p. 129, et seq. Under the trial de novo rule of the present case, however, no finality whatever is to be attributed to the findings of state-wide administrative agencies. This requirement of a trial de novo, based upon the rigid foundations of our Constitution, can no longer be said to affect matter of procedure only. We find it necessary, therefore, to trace the successive steps which the court has followed in reaching its present position.

1. The Procedural Problem.

In Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, it was held that the writ of certiorari could no longer be used in this state as a means of reviewing the acts of state-wide administrative bodies, notwithstanding express statutory authorization therefor. Without discussing the nature of the particular act involved (in that case the assessment of an additional tax), the court decided that the action of the board could not have been judicial in nature because article VI, section 1 of the Constitution vests all judicial power in certain specified courts. Furthermore, it was said, the writ of certiorari may be used to review judicial power only and, that being so, it could not be used to review the act of the Board of Equalization in assessing an additional tax. This decision was soon followed by others which held that the judicial power was not involved in the revocation of a professional license by a state-wide agency. (Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, 8 Cal.2d 444, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1; Hartman v. Board of Chiropractic Examiners, 20 Cal.App.2d 76, 66 P.2d 705; Jacobs v. Board of Dental Examiners, 24 Cal.App.2d 359, 75 P.2d 96) nor in the suspension by the Commissioner of Corporations of a permit authorizing the sale of stock. Schwab-Wilson M. Corp. v. Daugherty, 15 Cal.App.2d 701, 59 P.2d 1057. Since these duties were said not to involve an exercise of judicial power, it was held that neither the writ of certiorari nor the writ of prohibition was available to review such acts. None of these cases suggest that the statutes vesting this kind of power in state-wide boards are unconstitutional. Rather, they characterize the power exercised as "administrative" in nature, and hold that the inapplicability of certiorari and prohibition to review administrative orders is caused by the limited nature of these writs.

From the procedural point of view alone, this conclusion is contrary to the weight of authority both in California and elsewhere. There are many cases where the writ of certiorari has been used to review orders of state-wide administrative agencies whose power, while quasi-judicial in nature, was not the basic judicial power vested by the Constitution in courts of law. These cases include assessments of taxes made by the State Board of Equalization as well as orders revoking professional licenses. San Francisco & N. P. R. R. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 12; Suckow v. Alderson, supra; Brecheen v. Riley, supra; see, Rode, op. cit. supra, p. 695, et seq.; Turrentine, op. cit. supra, p. 280, et seq.; McGovney, op. cit. supra, pp. 114, 146, et seq. Furthermore, it has long been recognized that, of all the extraordinary common law writs, certiorari is the one best adapted to review the acts of boards, tribunals and officers which exercise quasi-judicial power, although concededly such bodies cannot constitutionally exercise the basic judicial power of courts of law. 14 C.J.S., Certiorari, § 17, p. 142; 10 Am.Jur. 534; Jarman v. Board of Review, 345 Ill. 248, 178 N.E. 91, 77 A.L.R. 1357; McGovney, op. cit. supra, p. 147. Until the Standard Oil case in 1936, this was the established doctrine in California as well as in the rest of the nation. The effect of that decision and the ones which followed it was to limit certiorari and prohibition to a review of the orders of courts of law. This conclusion as to the nature of certiorari is not supported by the holdings of the cases cited. The two cases relied upon most heavily in the Standard Oil case are Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, and Department of Pub. Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076. In each of these cases the court held that a statutory proceeding before a state-wide administrative agency in which no formal hearing was authorized in which no notice to opposing parties was provided, and in which the procedure did not contemplate the adjudication of any rights, was merely for the guidance of the agency in issuing a preliminary permit. Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., supra, 187 Cal. page 537, 202 P. 874; Department of Pub. Works v. Superior Court, supra, 197 Cal. page 221, 239 P. 1076. Since the proceeding had no judicial aspect, either quasi-judicial or otherwise, it was obviously not a case in which certiorari would lie. The decision in the Standard Oil case, however, draws a far different conclusion from certain language of Chief Justice Shaw, concurring in the Tulare Water Co. case. In addition to the fact that this language was not the basis for the decision in that case, it did not mean that certiorari could only be used to review an exercise of constitutional judicial power as the Standard Oil case interpreted it to mean. Turrentine, op.cit. supra, p. 283. Chief Justice Shaw himself said shortly before the Tulare case, "It must be conceded that the power given to the board to revoke or suspend the license of a person duly admitted to practice medicine * * * is judicial in its nature. * * * That a board or tribunal so authorized exercises at least quasi judicial power in so doing is well established by our decisions. The judicial function is to decide on the property or rights of the citizen * * *. The determination that plaintiff was guilty and that his right to practice should be suspended comes clearly within the scope of these definitions. Nevertheless it is now well established in this state that tribunals *such as the board of medical examiners * * * are not courts in the strict sense; they are not exercising 'the judicial power of the State' as that phrase is used in the Constitution * * * and that statutes creating such boards and conferring upon them such powers are constitutional. * * * It is also settled that, where a board has exercised quasi judicial power of the nature of that here in question, its decisions are subject to revision by way of certiorari."* Suckow v. Alderson, supra, 182 Cal. pages 249, 250, 187 P. page 966.

On the procedural point, therefore, the conclusion reached in the Standard Oil case that certiorari will lie only to review the exercise of true judicial power by courts of law is erroneous. The cases therein cited hold that if it appears that the particular act sought to be reviewed does not involve any judicial or quasi-judicial functions whatsoever, certiorari will not lie. This recognized principle is far from the rule of the Standard Oil case that only the exercise of constitutional judicial power can be reviewed upon certiorari and that the quasi-judicial acts of state-wide administrative boards can not be reviewed by this traditional procedure.

2. The Constitutional Problem.

It was immediately recognized that if the holding in the Standard Oil case could be confined solely to matters of procedure, no irreparable damage had been done since the customary kind of judicial review might be provided in some other way. Cf. Rode, op. cit. supra, pp. 702–703. A substitute procedure was, in fact, created by this court when it sanctioned the use of the writ of mandate in cases formerly reviewed by the writ of certiorari. Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, supra. So long as it was possible, by use of the writ of mandate, to evolve a proper relationship between the courts and administrative agencies, it did not seem essential to insist upon a return to the historically correct procedure from which the court had strayed. Cf. Bodinson Mfg. Co. v. California Emp. Comm., supra.

(a) The constitutional theories resulting from the Standard Oil decision.

The procedural error of the Standard Oil case, however, soon led to the announcement of erroneous principles of constitutional law. Citing the Standard Oil case, which dealt with the nature of certiorari and not with the constitutionality of a delegation of quasi-judicial power, it was said for the first time in Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, supra, 8 Cal.2d page 446, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1, that it would be unconstitutional to confer quasi-judicial power upon state-wide administrative agencies. Consequently, the powers which such boards exercised could no longer be called quasi-judicial. See, criticism of this reasoning in McGovney, op. cit. supra, p. 114; see, also, opinion of Supreme Court on denial of hearing, Cullinan v. Superior Court, 24 Cal.App.2d 468, 475, 75 P.2d 518, 77 P.2d 471. It should be noted, at this point, that the Standard Oil case itself approved language which refers to these functions as quasi-judicial in nature. Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, 6 Cal.2d page 563, 59 P.2d 119. Instead of declaring the statutes vesting quasi-judicial functions in state-wide administrative boards to be unconstitutional, however, the court undertook to bring these statutes within the new constitutional doctrines by altering the nature of the duties delegated to such boards by the legislature. Thus, despite a clear indication that the legislature intended a certain degree of finality to attach to the quasi-judicial acts of administrative agencies, this court, under asserted constitutional compulsion, as will be seen later, has successively reduced that finality so as to make the duties of such boards ministerial, rather than quasi-judicial, in nature. The statement in the Whitten and Cullinan cases to the effect that a professional board does not and can not act quasi-judicially in revoking a license is both contrary to authority and unsupported by the only case relied upon, the Standard Oil case. That case does not invalidate the delegation of such power or classify it, except to say that these boards do not exercise the constitutional judicial power asserted therein to be required for the issuance of a writ of certiorari.

(b) Reliance upon the requirements of the federal Constitution.

In the next step, which was taken in the Drummey case, it was held that upon a writ of mandate the reviewing court was constitutionally required to exercise an independent judgment on the facts. In part, this conclusion rested upon the language in the Whitten case concerning quasi-judicial functions, but the main ground for the decision was the asserted requirement of the due process clause of the federal Constitution. See, Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, supra, 13 Cal.2d page 85, 87 P.2d 848; McDonough v. Goodcell, supra, 13 Cal.2d page 752, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205. The former doctrine will be examined in detail in connection with the majority opinion in the present case, but the discussion at this point will serve to demonstrate the mistaken reliance upon certain federal cases in the Drummey and McDonough cases. The formula laid down in the Drummey case was "independent judgment on the facts." This theory, which had no prior existence in California, was taken literally from the language of the United States Supreme Court in St. Joseph Stockyards Co. v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 52, 56 S.Ct. 720, 80 L.Ed. 1033. Two other federal cases were also cited Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U.S. 287, 40 S.Ct. 527, 64 L.Ed. 908; and Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 52 S.Ct. 285, 76 L.Ed. 598. The conclusion drawn from these cases was that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution required the state courts to re-examine the evidence upon which administrative boards had acted in suspending a professional license.

In reaching this conclusion the decision in the Drummey case ignored the general rule followed in the federal system which makes administrative findings of fact conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. Finality on fact of value in an eminent domain proceeding: Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 593, 17 S.Ct. 966, 42 L.Ed. 270; see, Crane v. Hahlo, 258 U.S. 142, 148, 42 S.Ct. 214, 66 L.Ed. 514. Finality as to value for assessment of duty on imported goods: Hilton v. Merritt, 110 U.S. 97, 107, 3 S.Ct. 548, 28 L.Ed. 83; Bartlett v. Kane, 16 How. 263, 14 L.Ed. 931. Finality for tax purposes: Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L.Ed. 372; Helvering v. Rankin, 295 U.S. 123, 131, 55 S.Ct. 732, 79 L.Ed. 1343; Phillips v. Commissioner of Internal Rev., 283 U.S. 589, 600, 51 S.Ct. 608, 75 L.Ed. 1289. Finality on matters of fact in an alien deportation proceeding: United States ex rel. Tisi v. Tod, 264 U.S. 131, 133, 44 S.Ct. 260, 68 L.Ed. 590. Finality in assessment of penalty for violation of immigration law by a shipping company: Lloyd Sabaudo Soc. v. Elting, 287 U.S. 329, 335, 53 S.Ct. 167, 77 L.Ed. 341. Conclusive determination of facts in the field of governmental regulation: Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 222 U.S. 541, 547, 32 S.Ct. 108, 56 L.Ed. 308; Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, 280 U.S. 420, 444, 50 S.Ct. 220, 74 L.Ed. 524; Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd. v. United States, 300 U.S. 297, 304, 57 S.Ct. 478, 81 L.Ed. 659; Del Vecchio v. Bowers, 296 U.S. 280, 286, 56 S.Ct. 190, 80 L.Ed. 229; Voehl v. Indemnity Insurance Co., 288 U.S. 162, 166, 53 S.Ct. 380, 77 L.Ed. 676, 87 A.L.R. 245; Consolidated Edison Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U.S. 197, 229, 59 S.Ct. 206, 83 L.Ed. 126; Federal Trade Comm. v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 73, 54 S.Ct. 315, 78 L.Ed. 655; Federal Radio Comm. v. Nelson Bros., etc., Co., 289 U.S. 266, 277, 53 S.Ct. 627, 77 L.Ed. 1166, 89 A.L.R. 406. The due process clause of the federal Constitution imposes no barrier to this general rule of administrative finality as to findings of fact. See Black, "'Jurisdictional Fact' Theory and Administrative Finality" (1937) 22 Cornell L.Q. 349, 369; Tollefson, "Administrative Finality" (1931) 29 Mich.L.Rev. 839, 840; Landis, Administrative Law and the Courts (1938) 47 Yale L.J. 519; (1925) 23 Mich.L.Rev. 233; (1938) 24 Va.L.Rev. 653, 655; (1941) 8 Geo.Wash.L.Rev. 409, 508.

The conclusion is inevitable that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment imposes no restriction on the action of the states which the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment does not impose upon the federal government. There are, in fact, decisions of the United States Supreme Court (not mentioned in the Drummey decision) which hold that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit the vesting of power in a state administrative agency to make findings of fact which are final if based upon substantial evidence. Helfrick v. Dahlstrom Metallic Door Co., 256 N.Y. 199, 176 N.E. 141, affirmed per curiam, Dahlstrom Metallic Door Co. v. Industrial Board, 284 U.S. 594, 52 S.Ct. 202, 76 L.Ed. 511; see, also, Hardware Dealers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Glidden Co., 284 U.S. 151, 157, 158, 52 S.Ct. 69, 76 L.Ed. 214; Long Island Water-Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U.S. 685, 17 S.Ct. 718, 41 L.Ed. 1165; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U.S. 298, 313, 34 S.Ct. 48, 58 L.Ed. 229; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U.S. 505, 507-509, 23 S.Ct. 390, 47 L.Ed. 563; State ex rel. Williams v. Whitman, 116 Fla. 196, 199, 150 So. 136, 156 So. 705, 95 A.L.R. 1416; Stettler v. O'Hara, 69 Or. 519, 139 P. 743, L.R.A.1917C, 944 Ann.Cas. 1916A, 217, affirmed 243 U.S. 629, 37 S. Ct. 475, 61 L.Ed. 937; People ex rel. Lieberman v. Vandecarr, 175 N.Y. 440, 445, 67 N.E. 913, 108 Am.St.Rep. 781, affirmed, 199 U.S. 552, 562, 26 S.Ct. 144, 50 L.Ed. 305; Nega v. Chicago Rys. Co., 317 Ill. 482, 148 N.E. 250, 39 A.L.R. 1057; People ex rel. Consolidated Water Co. v. Maltbie, 275 N.Y. 357, 9 N.E.2d 961; General Acc. F. & L. Assur. Corp. v. Industrial Comm., 223 Wis. 635, 271 N.W. 385; see 21 R.C.L. 365; 12 Am.Jur. 329; 16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 629, p. 1287. It has been held that the due process clause does not guarantee judicial process in all cases (Dohany v. Rogers, 281 U.S. 362, 50 S.Ct. 299, 74 L.Ed. 904, 68 A.L.R. 434; Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co., 18 How. 272, 15 L.Ed. 372), and that it does not guarantee any particular procedure. Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 537, 4 S.Ct. 111, 292, 28 L.Ed. 232. It was even held in Reetz v. Michigan, supra, 188 U.S. page 507, 23 S.Ct. 390, 391, 47 L.Ed. 563, that the due process provision was not violated by a state statute vesting the final decision of questions of law in a state board of medical examiners. The court said, "* * * we know of no provision in the Federal Constitution which forbids a state from granting to a tribunal, whether called a court or a board of registration, the final determination of a legal question. * * * Due process is not necessarily judicial process. * * *"

Finally, the conclusion in the Drummey decision concerning the due process requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment resulted, not only from failure to consider the other federal decisions in the field, but from a misapplication of the three decisions which were cited. The requirement in those cases of a judicial re-examination of administrative findings of fact was an exception to the general doctrine of administrative finality expressed above, and it was limited to two specific situations where the particular factual determination involved the constitutional jurisdiction of the particular agency. Thus, in establishing rates for public utilities it was held that an administrative finding that the rate was nonconfiscatory should be subjected to the same scrutiny that a legislative declaration to that effect would be accorded in order that the court might assure itself that the constitutional guarantee of just compensation had been met. Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, supra; St. Joseph Stockyards Co. v. United States, supra. A recent case indicates clearly that this exception to the rule of administrative finality is limited to this phase of the rate-making power. Railroad Comm. of Texas v. Rowan & Nichols Oil Co., 310 U.S. 573, 581, 60 S.Ct. 1021, 84 L.Ed. 1368. The other exceptional situation involved an issue of fact upon which the jurisdiction of the agency depended within the provisions of the federal Constitution. Thus, it was held in Crowell v. Benson, supra, that the existence of the master and servant relation and the question of whether the injury occurred upon navigable waters were facts which, if erroneously determined, might permit the agency to operate outside the scope of its constitutional power. The rule of administrative finality on findings of fact could not be applied, therefore, because the court was required to satisfy itself that constitutional limitations had not been exceeded. Crowell v. Benson, supra, 285 U.S. pages 56–58, 52 S.Ct. 285, 76 L.Ed. 598. The limited nature of this exception, also, is indicated by the cases involving the same statute which hold that ordinarily administrative findings of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. South Chicago Coal & Dock Co. v. Bassett, 309 U.S. 251, 258, 60 S.Ct. 544, 84 L.Ed. 732; 24 Va.L.Rev. 653; 25 Cornell L.Q. 274. Upon examination of the many federal cases defining the requirements of the due process clause so far as administrative findings of fact are concerned, it can no longer be disputed that the Drummey decision reached a wholly erroneous conclusion through its reliance upon three federal cases which deal with dissimilar situations and which are conceded to be sporadic exceptions to the general rule of administrative finality. See, McGovney, op. cit. supra, p. 134 et seq.; Dickinson, "Crowell v. Benson; Judicial Review of Administrative Determinations of 'Constitutional Fact'", 80 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 1055; Black, "'Jurisdictional Fact' Theory and Administrative Finality," 22 Cornell L.Q. 349.

(c) Reliance upon the requirements of the California Constitution.

Although the majority opinion in the present case adopts and extends the conclusions announced in the Drummey and McDonough decisions, it concedes in effect that the theory underlying those decisions was in error. The so-called "mandatory" requirement of the federal cases (see McDonough v. Goodcell, supra) has been re-stated and the federal cases are now said to be persuasive only. The support for the majority opinion in this case, therefore, is sought in the provisions of the California Constitution.

The reasoning in support of this position is based upon a misapplication of the doctrine of separation of powers. The position advanced, simply stated, is this: (1) The basic judicial power of the state can be vested only in certain named courts of law; and (2) the power to make binding determinations of fact and to issue orders based thereon affecting private rights of property, which has traditionally been said to be quasi-judicial in nature, constitutes an exercise of power so basically judicial that it can be performed only by a court of law. The first proposition has been accepted doctrine throughout the United States for generations; the second announces a new rule as to the lesser, quasi-judicial power which is not supported by our cases or decisions elsewhere. It results from the failure to recognize the hitherto well-established class of inferior adjudicating functions which have been called "quasi-judicial" in nature. It has long been established that the separation of powers doctrine cannot be interpreted as a rigid and absolute separation of governmental functions. It is, rather, a general doctrine designed to prevent the vesting of the basic power of any branch of the government in the hands of another branch. Hart, Introduction to Administrative Law (1940) pp. 146-150; Cushman, The Independent Regulatory Commissions (1941) pp. 420–448; Green, Separation of Governmental Powers (1920) 29 Yale L.J. 369; (1935) 2 Univ. of Chi.L.Rev. 385; (1934) 58 Am.Bar Assn.Rep. 407, 410–414; (1936) 51 Pol.Sci.Q. 383. The California decisions have not followed any different rule. See, Parker v. Riley, 18 Cal.2d 83, 113 P.2d 873, 134 A.L.R. 1405; Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 290, 101 P.2d 665; Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 5 Cal.2d 550, 568, 55 P.2d 495; Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, 200 Cal. 276, 252 P. 1038; Brecheen v. Riley, supra; Housing Authority of L. A. County v. Dockweiler, 14 Cal.2d 437, 94 P.2d 794; (1931) 19 Cal.L.Rev. 448; 5 Cal.Jur. 658, 677, 683.

Although the basic power of any one of the three co-ordinate branches of the government can be exercised by the individual branches only, there are incidental governmental activities which may appropriately be exercised by any or all of the agencies of the government. Certain of these functions may be a normal incident of legislative action or an ordinary accompaniment of true judicial action, but unless the basic constitutional power of the particular branch of the government is involved, such quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial power may be exercised by other agencies of government. Thus, it has been recognized that the ascertainment of facts based upon evidence taken in the course of a hearing, while an ordinary incident of a judicial proceeding, may also have an appropriate place in action by the legislative or executive branch of the government. See Brown, Administrative Commissions and the Judicial Power (1935) 19 Minn.L.Rev. 261, 275. As the United States Supreme Court has said in a leading case: "Even where it is essential to maintain strictly the distinction between the judicial and other branches of the government, it must still be recognized that the ascertainment of facts, or the reaching of conclusions upon evidence taken in the course of a hearing of parties interested, may be entirely proper in the exercise of executive or legislative, as distinguished from judicial, powers. The legislature, had it seen fit, might have conducted similar inquiries through committees of its members, or specially constituted bodies * * * and it might have used methods like those of judicial tribunals in the endeavor to elicit the facts." Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U.S. 298, 307, 34 S.Ct. 48, 52, 58 L.Ed. 229; see, also, In re Battelle, 207 Cal. 227, 277 P. 725, 65 A.L.R. 1497. It has been held in this state, in conformity with the prevailing doctrine, that the power to make findings of fact upon the basis of which legislation is to become effective may be vested in administrative agencies (Olive Proration Program Committee v. Agricultural Prorate Comm., 17 Cal.2d 204, 208, 109 P.2d 918; Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, supra, 200 Cal. at page 277, 252 P. 1038) and in members of the executive branch of the government. Brock v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 291, 71 P.2d 209, 114 A.L.R. 127; Ray v. Parker, supra, 15 Cal.2d pages 290–292, 101 P.2d 665.

It therefore becomes apparent that there is both a subsidiary legislative function which may properly be devolved upon other agencies of government without violating the provisions of the Constitution (Parker v. Riley, supra) and an inferior adjudicating function which, though judicial in nature, may be performed by other agencies of government without amounting to an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power. The contention has frequently been made that a statute vesting power in a state-wide administrative agency to make orders based upon determinations of fact is unconstitutional as vesting judicial power in the agency. These contentions have been repeatedly rejected. Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 290, 101 P.2d 665; Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P. 965; Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, 200 Cal. 276, 252 P. 1038; Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 P. 879, 1 Ann.Cas. 13; Dominguez Land Corp. v. Daugherty, 196 Cal. 468, 483, 238 P. 703. It has been held that the power to make determinations of fact upon the basis of which a license to engage in business may be revoked or suspended may be vested in an administrative agency without violating the Constitution. Ray v. Parker, supra, 15 Cal.2d pages 290–292, 101 P.2d 665. The right to engage in a lawful business or profession is a valuable right, but it is subject to the proper exercise of the police power; and the power to make determinations of fact upon which a license revocation is based does not constitute an exercise of the judicial power of the state. Brecheen v. Riley, supra, 187 Cal. page 125, 200 P. 1042. Such power partakes of the judicial function, but it does not constitute "the judicial power" within the meaning of the constitutional provision. Suckow v. Alderson, supra, 182 Cal. page 250, 187 P. 965, 966; Ex parte Whitley, supra, 144 Cal. page 179, 77 P.2d 879, 1 Ann.Cas. 13. Even though a statute provides that the determinations of fact of a state-wide administrative agency are to be conclusive (Stats.1925, pp. 595, 599) there is no unconstitutional delegation of judicial power to the agency. Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, supra, 200 Cal. page 277, 252 P. 1038.

In the face of this trend of authority, it is difficult to see how the majority could escape the conclusion that the functions of the Board of Optometry in the present case, while partaking of the adjudicating function, were properly classifiable as quasi-judicial in nature and properly delegable to administrative agencies. The explanation is found in the two decisions previously referred to. In Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, supra, the court might have merely repeated the procedural error of the Standard Oil case by holding that, while quasi-judicial functions were exercised, constitutional judicial power was not involved, and thus no basis was presented for the use of certiorari or prohibition. The court in that case, however, added the wholly unnecessary comment that the functions of such professional licensing boards could no longer be called quasi-judicial and doubt was cast upon the previous cases which had so classified these functions. In Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, supra, 13 Cal.2d page 81, 87 P.2d 848, this statement was rephrased and it was said that the Constitution forbade the vesting of either judicial or quasi-judicial powers in administrative boards. The majority opinion in the present case does not mention quasi-judicial functions, and the inference seems to be that any function which partakes of the adjudicating power must be classified as the constitutional judicial power and may be exercised by courts of law alone. The conclusion that it would be an unconstitutional delegation of basic judicial power to authorize an administrative board to revoke professional licenses upon determinations of fact which are conclusive if founded upon substantial evidence finds no support in the decisions of this state prior to 1936 and it is contrary to the decisions of other jurisdictions. See: State Board of Medical Examiners v. Spears, 79 Colo. 588, 247 P. 563, 54 A.L.R. 1498, error dismissed, 275 U.S. 508, 48 S.Ct. 158, 72 L.Ed. 398, 719; State ex rel. Williams v. Whitman, 116 Fla. 196, 199, 150 So. 136, 156 So. 705, 95 A.L.R. 1416; Klafter v. State Board of Examiners, 259 Ill. 15, 102 N.E. 193, 46 L.R.A., N.S., 532, Ann.Cas.1914B, 1221; Nega v. Chicago Rys. Co., 317 Ill. 482, 148 N.E. 250, 39 A.L.R. 1057; Hunter v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co., 175 Iowa 245, 308–319, 154 N.W. 1037, 157 N.W. 145, L.R.A. 1917D, 15, Ann.Cas.1917E, 803; Iowa Eclectic Med. College Ass'n v. Schrader, 87 Iowa 659, 55 N.W. 24, 20 L.R.A. 355; State v. State Board of Med. Examiners, 34 Minn. 387, 26 N.W. 123; State ex rel. Hurwitz v. North, 304 Mo. 607, 264 S.W. 678, affirmed, 271 U.S. 40, 46 S.Ct. 384, 70 L.Ed. 818; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Shannon, 100 Tex. 379, 389, 100 S.W. 138, 10 L.R.A., N.S., 681.

The majority of the court now seeks additional support for its position in the specific wording of the California Constitution, article VI, section 1, which provides that the judicial power of the state shall be vested "in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a supreme court, district courts of appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established * * * and such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county." Cases from all other states and from the federal system are distinguished by the majority upon the theory that only in California is the power of the legislative branch in creating inferior courts limited to local inferior courts. Therefore, it is argued state-wide administrative boards in other jurisdictions may be considered inferior courts which can constitutionally exercise true judicial power. There are two answers to this. The first is that such administrative agencies are not in fact considered inferior courts by the jurisdictions in which they exist, and it has repeatedly been held that such bodies cannot exercise constitutional judicial power. Cf. Batty v. Arizona State Dental Board, Ariz., 112 P.2d 870, 873; Cushman, "The Constitutional Status of the Independent Regulatory Commissions," 24 Cornell L.Q. 13, 37. The second answer is that reliance upon this constitutional provision begs the question at issue here since it assumes that a grant of basic judicial power has been made to the state-wide licensing agencies in this state. The provisions of article VI, section 1, add nothing to the separation of powers provision of article III, section 1, for if quasi-judicial power, rather than constitutional judicial power, is actually involved, no violation of either constitutional provision is present.

Finally, then, let us examine the cases which the majority cites in support of the conclusion (which is contrary to the cases in this state prior to 1936 and to decisions throughout the country) that the power to make an order of revocation based upon a binding determination of fact is an exercise of constitutional judicial power, rather than an exercise of quasi-judicial power. We may exclude those cases, derived from the Standard Oil case, which we have already shown to be erroneous. The first group of cases relied upon by the majority merely states the fundamental principle that the constitutional judicial power can be exercised only by courts of law, or by special bodies invested with such power by the Constitution. Cf. Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am.Rep. 656; and other cases cited in the majority opinion. The second group of cases involves the Industrial Accident Commission. Insofar as these cases repeat the general separation of powers doctrine they add nothing to the cases first cited, and the principle stated is the traditional one. The decisions in Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 171 Cal. 319, 153 P. 24, and Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 P. 491, Ann.Cas.1917E, 390, contain particular language, however, upon which the majority relies. In these cases it was said that, where a statute creates a special liability upon the part of employers and grants power to an agency of government to determine when liability exists and to render a judgment in favor of the employee against the employer, the power exercised constitutes basic judicial power within the meaning of the Constitution. Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, supra, 172 Cal. page 410, 156 P. 491, Ann.Cas.1917E, 390. The Industrial Accident Commission cases, however, cannot be used to support the theory that constitutional judicial power is involved in making determinations of fact upon which professional licenses are revoked, for in those cases the court clearly distinguished the licensing situation as one in which strictly judicial power was not involved. See Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, supra, 172 Cal. page 412, 156 P. 491, Ann. Cas.1917E, 390. Those cases, in other words, clearly recognize the distinction between the constitutional judicial power and the quasi-judicial power. The duties of the professional licensing agencies were conceded to be quasi-judicial in nature. Such quasi-judicial determinations were, of course, reviewable on certiorari and the board's determinations of fact were final if supported by evidence. Fuller v. Board of Medical Examiners, 14 Cal.App. 2d 734, 742, 59 P.2d 171; Suckow v. Alderson, supra.

The third group of cases relied upon by the majority is the so-called Water Commission group. We have already indicated the use which was made of these cases as a means of supporting the Standard Oil and Drummey decisions. The cases held that where an agency had a mere supervisorial authority in the granting of preliminary water permits and where none of the ordinary incidents of quasi-judicial power were found, there was neither quasi-judicial nor judicial power conferred upon the agency. Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., supra, 187 Cal. page 537, 202 P. 874. These decisions do not support the conclusion of the majority that basic judicial power is involved in the present situation. The dictum in the concurring opinion means only that, as an aid to interpreting the legislative intent in delegating the duty of issuing permits, the court could consider the probability that an unconstitutional delegation of judicial power might have been involved if the statute were interpreted to authorize the commission to adjudicate title to real property. See, Turrentine, op. cit. supra, p. 282. At that very time, however, the same court recognized that the revocation of professional licenses involved only quasi-judicial power reviewable by certiorari. Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 200 P. 1042.

The final group of cases relied upon by the majority involves the State Bar Act. It should be noted first that they furnish no direct authority upon the constitutional point for which they are cited since the cases have consistently held that the legislature did not intend the determinations by the Board of Governors to be final even though based upon substantial evidence. In re Shattuck, 208 Cal. 6, 12, 279 P. 998. It has also been said that the Board of Governors is an administrative arm of the court (Fish v. State Bar, 214 Cal. 215, 225, 4 P.2d 937; Furman v. State Bar, 12 Cal.2d 212, 214, 83 P.2d 12) and that its findings are merely those of a special intermediary agency. In re Petersen, 208 Cal. 42, 46, 280 P. 124. Insofar as the nature of constitutional judicial power is involved in these State Bar decisions as a basis for the interpretation given the statute, there is authority which contradicts the suggestion that the disbarring of an attorney requires a judicial examination of the evidence. See Turrentine, "May the Bar Set Its Own House in Order," 34 Mich.L.Rev. 200, 214, et seq. But even conceding the validity of that assumption, it is clear that the discipline of attorneys is a matter of particular judicial concern over which the courts have asserted inherent power. See In re Lacey, 11 Cal.2d 699, 701, 81 P.2d 935. If there is basic judicial power involved in the disciplining of an attorney, therefore, the explanation comes from the peculiar relation which the attorney bears to the judicial system. This is particularly obvious in view of the fact that when this theory was announced in the Shattuck case and thereafter, the court was apparently satisfied that the revocation or suspension of other professional licenses involved only quasi-judicial power the exercise of which was reviewable on certiorari. See Painless Parker v. Board of Dental Examiners, 216 Cal. 285, 14 P.2d 67. It follows that the State Bar cases do not support the conclusion of the majority that constitutional judicial power would be involved if an administrative agency were empowered to make binding determinations of fact upon the basis of which orders revoking or suspending professional licenses were issued.

3. The Practical Problem.

The interpretation placed upon our state Constitution by the majority opinion is unsound, as was the interpretation placed upon the federal Constitution in the Drummey and McDonough decisions. Once the absence of any constitutional requirement on this point is understood there remains no possible justification for the result in the present case. Any rule which requires that a complete judicial retrial be held in each case where administrative action results in the deprivation of a property right is unworkable. It must be kept in mind that the majority opinion announces principles of constitutional law that of necessity apply to all determinations of fact affecting property and are not limited to the revocation of professional licenses. Courts will be required to try questions of fact in countless situations heretofore settled by administrative agencies. In many such cases those facts may be determined by jurors, certainly no better qualified than trained administrators to weigh evidence in cases that frequently involve technical subjects. We must also consider that the administrative agency will be stripped of the prestige and authority necessary to enable it to perform its functions efficiently if the courts will neither rely upon the record made before it nor accord its findings any finality whatsoever. What useful purpose can an agency serve by conducting hearings in such cases?

We cannot treat the judicial review of administrative action as a static procedure requiring an identical judicial investigation in each instance. The degree of finality accorded the findings of administrative agencies created to carry out the legislative purposes is primarily a question of policy for the legislature and issues of such fundamental importance to the administration of government must be determined by reference to the intention of the law-making body. The legislature is precluded by our Constitution from imposing non-judicial duties upon our courts, thus it cannot provide for a direct appeal from an administrative agency to a court. Mojave River Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 202 Cal. 717, 724, 262 P. 724; Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 70 P.2d 171; cf. Federal Radio Comm. v. General Electric Co., 281 U.S. 464, 469, 50 S.Ct. 389, 74 L.Ed. 969; Federal Radio Comm. v. Nelson Bros., 289 U.S. 266, 276, 53 S.Ct. 627, 77 L.Ed. 1166, 89 A.L.R. 406. In many instances, however, the legislature has sought to indicate the degree of finality to be given to administrative findings of fact. Where it was proper to do so, the legislature has occasionally specified a review of the administrative action by an original court proceeding in which the facts determined by the administrative agency are accorded no finality at all but are determined de novo in the superior court. See Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Deering's Gen.Laws (1937), Act 3796, sec. 46; Deering's Gen.Laws (1937), Act 986, sec. 13.12; Labor Code, sec. 1647, Stats. 1937, page 240; also, Collier & Wallis v. Astor, supra. In certain instances the legislature has merely indicated that the findings of fact of a particular administrative agency or officer are to be accorded a high degree of finality. See, Labor Code, sec. 1598, Stats.1937, p. 234; Public Resources Code, sec. 3355, Stats.1939, p. 1132; Deering's Gen.Laws (1937), Act 3421, sec. 9. In other statutes the legislature has provided generally that action taken under the authority thereof may be reviewed in court, without making any provision as to the nature and extent of the review. Agricultural Code, sec. 735.6, Stats.1935, p. 924; Vehicle Code, sec. 317, Stats.1935, p. 141. In most of the regulatory statutes incorporated in the Business and Professions Code, including the statute here involved, the legislature has indicated its intention that the administrative decision be accorded as much finality as possible by vesting in such agencies the power to revoke or suspend licenses without any provision at all for the judicial review of such action. Dental Practice Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, secs. 1670–1680; Medical Practice Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, secs. 2360–2408; Optometry Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, secs. 3090–3106; Pharmacy Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, secs. 4210–4214.

Where there is neither a constitutional nor statutory requirement that a court make the determination of fact or reweigh the evidence upon which the administrative agency acted, the duty of the judicial branch is adequately fulfilled by a review upon certiorari which extends to the questions of law involved. A review upon the issues of law would, of course, include such questions as whether the agency has regularly pursued the authority vested in it, whether it has acted arbitrarily and whether there is substantial evidence to support its determinations of fact. Our decisions have recognized that administrative rulings on questions of law cannot be accorded finality. Such questions may be determined conclusively only by a court exercising constitutional judicial power. Bodinson Mfg. Co. v. California Emp. Comm., 17 Cal.2d 321, 109 P.2d 935. Upon issues of fact, however, where there is no constitutional requirement that the facts be judicially determined and no statutory indication that the review was meant to extend to a re-examination of questions of fact, the court should uphold the administrative determination unless it is found that there is no substantial evidence to support the finding. This rule, which is accepted in other jurisdictions, can be re-established here only by overruling the recent decisions which we have shown to be in error. Where any court has declared a rule that, upon re-examination, seems clearly erroneous, it has both a power and a duty to reject it and to state the correct rule, to avoid further confusion. See, Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, 600; Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 646, 668; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 39, 21 Am. Rep. 677; 7 Cal.Jur. 632. As this court has said, "If, after fully considering a former decision, a Judge is convinced that it is wrong, it becomes simply a question of public policy, whether * * * it will produce more of evil than of good to restore the law to its integrity. * * * 'Such cases ought to be examined without fear, and revised without reluctance, rather than to have the character of our law impaired * * * by the perpetuity of error'." Houghton v. Austin, supra, 47 Cal. page 667, quoting Chancellor Kent, in overruling the conclusion previously reached in Savings & Loan Society v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415.

This concept of judicial duty is particularly apt in the present situation. Not only is the majority of this court engaged in perpetuating self-induced error, but the error constantly reacts upon other situations to create logically unsound distinctions. For example, where the functions of a local administrative agency are involved it would be proper under the majority position to classify its activities as judicial and reviewable on certiorari, while exactly the same function performed by a state-wide agency could not even be classified as quasi-judicial in nature. See Elliott, "Certiorari and the Local Board," 29 Cal.L.Rev. 586. If upon analysis, the duties of each agency are quasi-judicial, the court should recognize that fact. Similarly, the majority position has led to an unsound distinction between suspending a professional license and refusing to grant a license where the result in each instance is to eject a person from a business in which he has engaged for a number of years. Cf. Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, supra; McDonough v. Goodcell, supra; McGovney, op. cit. supra, p. 134; 21 R.C.L. 362. The position taken in the majority opinion can lead only to further unfortunate complications in this field of the law.

For the reasons set forth herein, it seems clear to me that the following decisions of this court should be overruled insofar as they are contrary to the views expressed herein: Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 6 Cal.2d 557, 59 P.2d 119; Whitten v. California State Board of Optometry, 8 Cal.2d 444, 65 P.2d 1296, 115 A.L.R. 1; Drummey v. State Board of Funeral Directors & Embalmers, 13 Cal. 2d 75, 87 P.2d 848, and McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205. The proceeding in mandamus in the present case should be treated as a proceeding in certiorari (Board of Trustees v. State Board of Equalization, 1 Cal.2d 784, 37 P.2d 84, 96 A.L.R. 775), and the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

EDMONDS, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

---

20 Cal.2d 56

PEOPLE v. ZEMAVASKY.

Cr. 4378.

Supreme Court of California.

March 24, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑1163(1)

An appellate court must consider the state of the evidence in determining whether errors are prejudicial, and in a close case any error of a substantial nature may require reversal, and any doubt as to its prejudicial character should be resolved in favor of accused.

2. Witnesses 🔑337(4), 344(2)

In prosecution for rape of accused's stepdaughter, wherein prosecutrix' mother testified for accused, evidence that accused was probably not married to prior alleged wife, that the children of such alleged marriage were probably illegitimate, and that accused had been frequently charged with nonsupport of such children, was inadmissible, as attempt to impeach accused, and perhaps prosecutrix' mother, by evidence of particular wrongful acts. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

3. Criminal law 🔑1036(9)

In prosecution for rape of accused's stepdaughter, wherein prosecutrix' mother testified for accused, admission of evidence that accused was probably not married to prior alleged wife, that the children of such alleged marriage were probably illegitimate, and that accused had been frequently charged with nonsupport of such children, required reversal of conviction, where case was close on the facts, notwithstanding absence of objection on cross-examination of accused as to such matters, where accused had objected to cross-examination of prosecutrix' mother on such matters. Code Civ. Proc. § 2051.

4. Criminal law 🔑1170½(1)

Where the prosecution's rebuttal character witness admitted, on cross-examination, that she was prejudiced against accused, permitting redirect examination as to grounds of prejudice, which brought out witness' belief that accused was not married to alleged wife, that children of such alleged marriage were illegitimate, and that accused abandoned such children and failed to support them, was erroneous and required reversal of conviction, especially where case was close on the facts. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

5. Witnesses ⚷287(3)

In prosecution for criminal offense, witness' unqualified admission of ill will against accused on cross-examination does not open the door to proof on redirect examination of the reasons for such ill will, especially where such reasons involve other alleged offenses outside the issue. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Nick Zemavasky was convicted of rape, and he appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 115 P.2d 45.

James F. Brennan, Saul Perlis, and Alexander Raiboff, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., Dennis Hession, William F. Cleary, and David K. Lener, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., and John R. Golden, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The appellant was convicted of statutory rape allegedly perpetrated upon his seventeen-year-old stepdaughter. Upon this appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial he contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; that the trial court committed prejudicial error in certain rulings on the admissibility of evidence and in the giving and refusing of instructions; and that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. The reply brief filed by the Attorney General, when the cause was pending before the District Court of Appeal, merely served to accentuate the appellant's contentions. It submitted the case without argument, declaring that "it appears that the evidence against appellant was not overly credible." However, the District Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment of conviction, one justice dissenting. Thereafter, upon petition, a hearing was granted in this court. Heartened apparently by the majority decision of the appellate court, the Attorney General has since filed in this court a brief in which he now vigorously challenges appellant's contentions and in which it is argued that the record contains adequate substantial and trustworthy evidence to support the conviction. We have examined the record. While we may not declare the story of the prosecutrix to be wholly improbable, the presence of inconsistencies and contradictions therein, coupled with the unusual delay in reporting the asserted attack upon her, serves to detract materially from its persuasiveness. These matters, when considered with appellant's denial at all times that he had perpetrated the attack charged against him, much of his testimony being corroborated by his wife, the mother of the prosecutrix, require a conclusion that the errors to be hereinafter referred to must be held to have been prejudicial to appellant.

Appellant is a contracting painter. In 1932 he married the mother of the prosecutrix in San Francisco, and thereafter lived with his wife and stepdaughter. The girl had known appellant since she was seven years old. She testified that he had been having sexual relations with her since she was twelve years old. The criminal act of which he was convicted, however, was committed, so the prosecutrix testified, on May 29, 1939. At that time Mrs. Zemavasky was visiting relatives in Poland and, according to her testimony, she had gone there because of the illness of her father. She left San Francisco on May 6, 1939, and, before leaving, at the suggestion of appellant, she had arranged for her daughter, who was attending high school, to live with a friend. In response to inquiry, the mother of the prosecutrix testified that appellant suggested that the prosecutrix live elsewhere during the mother's absence in Europe "because he knows she has been already like this and he don't want to keep her home." On cross-examination by the prosecution, the friend with whom the prosecutrix was left during her mother's absence, and who was paid $40 a month for the maintenance of the prosecutrix, testified that she told the mother, "If you go to Europe maybe something happen. I am afraid about daughter, I know she has that boy." Against her mother's wishes the girl had been keeping company with a young man and on May 23, two and one-half weeks after the mother's departure, they ran away to Redwood City and were married. Following the marriage they went to Long Beach and there visited the boy's aunt. She refused to believe they were married and caused them to be taken into custody by the juvenile court authorities. That same night the police telephoned to the boy's grandmother, Mrs. Pagel, and upon being informed by her that the couple had been married the police stated they would be released. At Mrs. Pagel's request, however, the police consented to hold them until arrangements could be made to return them to San Francisco. Immediately upon receiving the telephone message Mrs. Pagel communicated with appellant and, at her request, he called at her home. Mrs. Pagel and appellant agreed to send the necessary money to bring the couple back to San Francisco. They did so, and the couple arrived in San Francisco by bus about five o'clock on the morning of May 29th. They went to Mrs. Pagel's home, where they met, among others, Mrs. Pagel and appellant, and the question was discussed as to whether the couple wanted to continue living together. There was discussion of an annulment. Appellant took the girl home with him, so that he could talk with her alone. Upon reaching their home, the prosecutrix went to her bedroom to collect some clothing to take with her. She testified that in about five minutes appellant entered the room, and, under threats of violence and that he would turn her over to the juvenile authorities, compelled her to have sexual intercourse with him. Later that morning he drove the girl back to Mrs. Pagel's home and, upon leaving her there, stated to Mrs. Pagel that the girl wanted to live with her husband. Mrs. Pagel noticed that the girl had been crying, which condition could have resulted from a discussion directed at an annulment of the marriage. At any rate, no charge was then made against appellant, although there were several persons present to whom the girl could have complained.

Appellant denied having had sexual relations with the girl at any time and denied having gone to her room at all on the morning of May 29th. He testified that after they entered the home she went to her room; that he prepared breakfast, which they ate; and that soon afterwards he drove her back to Mrs. Pagel's home. The girl admitted having breakfast with appellant after the alleged assault. Appellant produced a corroborating witness, a friend of some twenty-five years' standing, who testified that he was spending the weekend with appellant, and that he had accompanied appellant to Mrs. Pagel's home the night she received the telephone message from the police. The witness testified that he was sitting in the living room of appellant's home, reading a paper, when appellant and the girl arrived on the morning of May 29th; that from where he sat in the living room he could see whether anybody went in or out of the girl's bedroom; that he saw the girl go into the bedroom, but that she did not see him; and that appellant did not at any time enter her room that morning. The prosecution challenged the credibility of this witness. In this regard Mrs. Pagel and her daughter testified that the witness was not the man who came to their home with appellant on the night in question. Moreover, the prosecutrix testified that no one besides appellant and herself was present in the house that morning and that if any one had been sitting in the living room she could and would have seen him. In considering the accuracy of her report of this incident, certain discrepancies in other portions of her testimony may be considered. There is a conflict, for instance, between the testimony given by the girl at the trial as to when she told her husband about appellant having assaulted her and the testimony given by her in that respect at the preliminary examination. Appellant was not formally charged with the commission of the offense until March, 1940, some ten months after its asserted occurrence. Delays in filing charges of this kind are looked upon as a weakness in the prosecution's case and may be considered in weighing any errors upon the trial.

After the asserted commission of the offense, and prior to any charge against appellant, the prosecutrix accepted gifts from her mother and appellant on her eighteenth birthday in September, 1939, and on the following Christmas they exchanged gifts. In the ten-month period between the asserted offense and the arrest of appellant, the prosecutrix occasionally visited her mother and saw and talked with appellant. Admittedly during this period she never mentioned the matter to her mother or to any one else except her husband. At the trial she testified that she told her husband about July 4, 1939, but, in spite of this, the parties exchanged Christmas gifts that year.

[1] There was evidence offered by the defense tending to indicate that the prosecutrix had been carrying on intimate relations with the boy prior to their marriage. The landlady where the boy roomed testified that the prosecutrix spent much time in the boy's room and that unusual noises emanated therefrom. Upon inquiry, they told her they were married. At the time, this was not so. Upon the trial, both denied any such improper relations but admitted falsifying as to their then marital status. However, the mother of the prosecutrix testified that after the matter had come to her attention she remonstrated with the prosecutrix and threatened to place her in the detention home, whereupon the girl admitted that she had been living with the boy for six months and promised to cease such relations if not placed in the detention home. Appellant and his wife, the mother of the prosecutrix, also testified that prior to the filing of the charge against appellant the girl and her husband had tried to obtain money from them. This the young couple denied. The evidence is clear, however, that the boy was earning little, if any, money at the time. Although there is some conflict in that respect, there is evidence indicating that early in 1940 the relationship between the prosecutrix and her mother was becoming strained. Upon the mother's return from Poland she was considerably disturbed to learn of the marriage of the prosecutrix during her absence, her disappointment being reflected in her actions toward the couple. There is evidence also tending to indicate that the prosecutrix and her husband felt that the former was entitled to a fund which had been promised her by her mother and appellant for her education. As stated in People v. Gump, 17 Cal.App.2d 221, 61 P.2d 970, 971, "grave suspicion is cast upon the story when it is shown that it was only told after the trouble had arisen" between the parties. Such suspicion and any contradictions or weaknesses in the story of the prosecutrix require that close examination be made of any errors committed upon the trial. An appellate court is not only permitted to, but must, consider the state of the evidence in determining whether errors are prejudicial. In a close case, such as this, any error of a substantial nature may require a reversal and any doubt as to its prejudicial character should be resolved in favor of the appellant.

[2] In the light of the entire circumstances disclosed by the record, we now direct ourselves to what we consider to have been prejudicial errors committed upon the trial. Evidence was produced by the prosecution, over objection, tending to show that appellant was probably not married to a prior wife; that the three children of that marriage were probably illegitimate; and that appellant had been frequently charged with non-support of those children. This evidence could have no purpose other than to blacken the reputation and character of appellant without in any manner tending to prove any of the elements of the crime of which appellant stands convicted. This, in our opinion, constituted an attempt to impeach appellant, and perhaps his wife, the mother of the prosecutrix, who appeared as a defense witness, by evidence of particular wrongful acts, in violation of section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[3] It is no sufficient answer to urge that this or similar evidence was presented without objection when appellant was under cross-examination by the prosecution. We are cognizant of the rule that error in the admission of evidence is harmless if the fact involved is proved by other evidence which is admitted without objection. The rule, however, is not applicable where, as here, the prosecution, over appellant's objection, at an earlier stage of the trial was permitted to cross-examine appellant's wife as to appellant's children by another woman. In view of the earlier rebuff, it was not thereafter incumbent upon appellant to object repeatedly to such evidence when later sought to be elicited by the prosecution. Objection, under the circumstances, would have been useless and would have served only to emphasize the matter to the jurors.

[4, 5] The error and resulting prejudice were magnified many fold, in our opinion, when the prosecution later produced a Municipal Judge of San Francisco as a rebuttal character witness. We agree with what Presiding Justice Peters said in his dissenting opinion with respect to this episode when the cause was before the appellate court. He stated [115 P.2d 45, 54]: "After testifying that defendant's reputation for 'truth, honesty and integrity, morality and upright living' was 'bad', she was cross-examined by defendant's counsel. He properly brought out the fact that she was prejudiced. She admitted that she knew nothing about the facts of the case then on trial; that she was 'very much prejudiced against Mr. Zemavasky', and admitted telling counsel for defendant that she 'hoped this man would go to San Quentin'. Then on redirect examination, over defendant's objections, she was permitted to answer the question, 'On what, Judge, do you base that hope?' She replied, 'Well, I met Mr. Zemavasky in the court charged with omitting to provide for three minor illegitimate children. I knew his former wife, and that he had gone through a service that was not a marriage and then left her with these three children. I made every effort to collect money from him for those three children and to no avail; I made arrangements with him to come to my office at the City Hall; he never kept it, and those three children had to be taken care of by the City and County of San Francisco'. She was the last witness. The question and answer were not only improper because they tended to bring out evidence of other wrongful acts, but also because it is an unquestioned rule of evidence that when any witness admits bias and prejudice on cross-examination, on redirect the reasons for such prejudice cannot be gone into, at least where such reasons involve other alleged offenses outside the issue. The rule, supported by many cases, is stated as follows in 70 Cor.Jur., p. 1007, § 1217: '* * * nor does the witness' unqualified admission of ill will open the door to proof of the reasons therefor, especially where such reasons involve other alleged offenses outside the issue * * *.' The reason for the rule is obvious. When the defendant is able to prove that a prosecution witness is prejudiced, if that witness could then explain the reason for the prejudice by stating what he knows about other wrongful acts, it would bring into the case all kinds of extraneous and unrelated offenses not relevant to the issue, and would permit the prosecuting attorney to do indirectly what he cannot do directly. Exactly the same problem involved in the instant case was presented in Sneed v. State, 40 Ariz. 441, 14 P.2d 248. At page 249 of 14 P.2d the court stated: 'The reason why the witness was hostile towards appellant was not a proper subject for either direct or redirect examination by the prosecution. The elicitation by the appellant of the witness' ill feeling towards him did not open the door to proof by the prosecution that such ill feeling was the result of criminal acts of appellant against the witness. Otherwise it would be most dangerous to cross-examine a witness as to his bias and prejudice towards the accused, for, if such reason may be given, all kinds of extraneous and unrelated offenses might be detailed to the jury, so that the trial would be not of the particular offense charged but of many offenses not charged. The court should have sustained the appellant's objection on the ground of the incompetency of the testimony to prove any issue of the case.'"

The factual situation here presented is distinguishable from that involved in any of the cases cited by the Attorney General as pointing to the propriety of the ruling admitting the challenged evidence. Here, the defense on cross-examination did not elicit from the witness evidence merely tending to show a possible bias or prejudice against appellant. Instead, on cross-examination, the witness frankly admitted that she was "very much prejudiced" against appellant. In the light of such positive declaration of prejudice by the witness, no amount of discussion or explanation by her on redirect examination as to the reasons or causes underlying such frame of mind could have any tendency to counteract her testimony on cross-examination or tend to indicate an absence of prejudice against appellant. On the contrary, it served only to bring before the jury extraneous matters prejudicially harmful to appellant.

The principle is stated in 3 Wigmore on Evidence, 511, § 952(2), as follows: "When to a witness is imputed hostility to the opponent, the true process of explanation consists in showing that the facts offered do not really indicate the conclusion suggested, i. e., the hostility. Thus, when the counter-evidence does not attempt to do this, but admits the hostility and desires to show that it was justifiable by the opponent's conduct, the offer is improper in two ways, first, because it does not at all explain away, but concedes that hostility exists, and, secondly, because it tends to prejudice unfairly the cause of the opponent by showing him to be an unjust man. For these reasons such evidence may be excluded: * * *"

Under all of the circumstances, we are satisfied that appellant has not received a fair and impartial trial. We cannot say that appellant would have been convicted without the admission of the erroneous and prejudicial evidence above mentioned.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are, and each is, therefore reversed.

ROTHSCHILD et al. v. WOLF et al.

Sac. 5375.

Supreme Court of California.

March 23, 1942.

As Corrected April 24, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators ⚿315(6)

Decree of distribution which adopted agreement between heirs and beneficiaries relating to a stairway easement was final and excluded any implied covenants with respect to the easement. Civ.Code, § 1656.

2. Easements ⚿26(1)

That it might be economically advantageous for owner of building burdened with a stairway easement in favor of adjoining property to destroy the building and thus terminate the easement was immaterial with respect to owner's right to terminate the easement and would not justify the voluntary destruction of the easement.

3. Easements ⚿26(4)

A grant of the right to use a hall or stairway of a building gives no interest in the soil which will survive the destruction of the building.

4. Easements ⚿1, 26(4)

An "easement" is an interest in real estate and survives the destruction of a part of the servient tenement when there is anything remaining upon which the easement may operate.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Easement".

5. Easements ⚿26(1, 4)
Licenses ⚿44(3)

A grant of right to use stairway in building was not a "license" revocable at the will of the servient owner, but was an "easement" which servient owner could not voluntarily destroy and which would continue until destruction of the building without the fault of the servient owner.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "License".

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

On rehearing.

Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Prior opinions, 104 P.2d 685, 115 P.2d 801.

Nutter & Rutherford, Rutherford, Jacobs, Cavalero & Dietrich, Newton Rutherford, D. R. Jacobs, Philip Cavalero, and Stephen Dietrich, all of Stockton, and Weinmann, Quayle & Berry and Donald K. Quayle, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Gaylord & Gaylord and Robert B. Gaylord, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

After further consideration of this case we find ourselves in accord with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, rendered when the case was before that court. We therefore adopt said opinion, prepared by Justice pro tem. Steel, as the opinion of this court. It reads as follows:

"Defendants Franklin Wolf and Yosemite Theatre Company appeal from a declaratory judgment in favor of plaintiffs, decreeing that plaintiffs, as servient owners, may terminate a stairway easement by voluntarily removing or destroying the servient tenement.

"The appellant, Franklin Wolf, and the respondents, Rothschild, are owners of adjoining premises fronting on Main street in the city of Stockton, the appellant Wolf owning lot 7 and the respondents the easterly 32.29 feet of lot 5 in block 14, east of Center street in said city.

"In 1905, Andrew Wolf, now deceased, father of appellant, Franklin Wolf, owned the premises here involved, together with other adjoining lots in said block and during that year erected a two-story brick structure known as the Wolf building upon said premises. In that portion of the structure now owned by respondents a stairway was built extending from the Main street sidewalk to the hallway on the second floor thereof, the hallway running parallel with Main street for the entire length of the structure. Various rooms and offices were maintained for occupancy by tenants on this second floor and the only entrance thereto from Main street was by the aforesaid stairway.

"In 1911 Andrew Wolf died, leaving a will wherein he devised lot 5 to his daughter Delia Wolf Meiggs and lot 7 to certain of his grandchildren. The remainder of his estate was left to various legatees and devisees. In his will deceased expressed the wish that his devisees preserve the stairways and that they be kept and used for the benefit of said buildings on Main street. The other stairway referred to extends from the California street side of the property and connects with the hallway above referred to.

"During the probate proceedings dissatisfaction with the provisions of the will arose among the heirs and beneficiaries which resulted in their entering into a written agreement which provided, among other matters not material here, that lot 5, being the property now owned by respondents, should be distributed to said Delia Wolf Meiggs, predecessor in title to respondents, and lot 7 to Franklin Wolf, the appellant herein.

"By the terms of the agreement it was stipulated and agreed:

"'That the stairway on Main Street now used for the purpose of ingress and egress to and from the properties mentioned in this Agreement, and fronting on Main Street of Stockton, California shall be kept and maintained as a stairway for the use of all the property hereinbefore mentioned, fronting on Main Street of said City of Stockton, so long as the lot on which said stairway is now built, is occupied by the building now on said lot of which said stairway forms a part.'

"In due course the estate was closed and distributed in accordance with the terms of this agreement, the decree adopting the language of the agreement in so far as its provisions relate to the stairway here in issue. The sole issue, therefore, is a determination of the rights of the parties hereto under this agreement as incorporated in the decree of distribution. Trial was had before the court sitting without a jury.

[1] "Considerable evidence was introduced as to whether or not the structure built upon the two lots in question comprised one building or two separate buildings. This evidence was directed principally to the nature of the construction of the building, the partition wall, fire wall, and the general physical conditions and facts relating thereto, it being one of the contentions of appellants that the structure is but one building originally built and owned by one person and that an easement by implication arose when the property was devised into two or more ownerships upon the death of Andrew Wolf. The trial court found that the improvements did not constitute a single building, but that the portion thereof on lot 7 and the portion thereof on lot 5 constituted separate and distinct buildings. This finding appears to be supported by the record.

"We do not, however, consider this question of vital importance for the heirs and beneficiaries subsequently partitioned the property among themselves upon a basis entirely different from the provisions of the will, and expressly agreed as to the right and use of the stairway and the duration of such right. The decree of distribution makes no attempt to construe the will in this regard, but does adopt the terms and provisions of the agreement and therefore the easement implications, if any, arising by virtue of the will, cannot now be resorted to for the reason that the decree is final and excludes any implied covenants upon this subject. Civ.Code, sec. 1656. The trial court found in substance and effect that a stairway easement existed, and in this we concur. However, the court further found upon evidence introduced over the objection of appellants, and submitted upon the question of depreciation because of obsolescence, that such depreciation and obsolescence had not so far progressed as to be the equivalent of the destruction of the building, but had so far progressed as to make it economically advantageous to plaintiffs, as owners of the premises, to destroy the present improvements thereon and, in lieu thereof, to erect a new building.

[2] "The fact that it may be economically advantageous for the owner of a building, burdened with a stairway easement in favor of an adjoining property, to voluntarily destroy it and thus terminate such easement is, in our opinion, immaterial and not in accord with the weight of authority applicable to such servitudes.

"In this respect, however, we do not wish to be understood as intimating that depreciation or obsolescence of a building may not in the course of time so far progress as to impair property rights in the further maintenance thereof even though not to the extent of being the equivalent of destruction of such building. In the instant case no claim is made that the property is being operated at a loss, but to the contrary the evidence discloses a fair net return to respondents on their investment.

[3] "While there are very few cases relating to destruction of servient tenements involving stairway easements, the doctrine appears to be generally established that a grant of the right to use a hall or stairway of a building gives no interest in the soil which will survive the destruction of the building. Cohen v. Adolph Kutner Co., 177 Cal. 592, 171 P. 424, L.R.A.1918D, 410; Muzio v. Erickson, 41 Cal.App. 413, 182 P. 974, [975].

[4] "In the case last cited, the principal question before the court was whether stairway rights survived the destruction of the building by fire and therein it was held that the right to use the stairway terminated with the destruction of the building without the fault of the owner thereof. In this connection the court states:

"'It is the established doctrine that where a mere right to use a part of a building is granted, no proprietary interest in the land is conveyed. Upon this principle it has been held that a grant of the right to use the stairway of a building gives no interest in the soil which will survive the destruction of the building, and the right ceases whenever the building is destroyed without the fault of the owner of the servient tenement, and the owner of the right to use the stairway will not acquire any right in any new building which may be erected in the place of the one destroyed. An easement, in the true sense of the word, is an interest in real estate, and survives the destruction of a part of the servient tenement when there is anything remaining upon which the easement may operate. But a right in the nature of "an easement in a building," as it is sometimes called, is extinguished by the destruction of the building, or the part thereof upon which the easement is imposed, so that there is nothing upon which it can operate. Cohen v. [Adolph] Kutner Co., 177 Cal. 592, 171 P. 424, L.R.A.1918D, 410; Brechet v. Johnson Hardware Co., 139 Minn. 436, L.R.A.1918D, 691, 166 N.W. 1070; Shirley v. Crabb, 138 Ind. 200, 37 N.E. 130, 46 Am.St.Rep. 376; 14 Cyc. 1194.' (Italics added.)

"Respondents contend that the rule laid down in the two California cases above cited is dictum in so far as it applies to the instant case, in that the destruction of the buildings was involuntary in both cases. Irrespective of the construction placed upon such language with reference to destruction of the buildings without fault of the owner, the court was, in both cases, engaged in a consideration of the law applicable to the destruction of stairway easements, and in our opinion fully stated the rule in that regard. The authorities in other jurisdictions appear to be in harmony with this principle; thus in Brechet v. Johnson Hardware Co., 139 Minn. 436 [166 N.W. 1070, 1071], L.R.A.1918D, at page 693, cited in Muzio v. Erickson, supra, it is stated:

"'Where an easement has been granted for a particular purpose in connection with a particular building, it is extinguished by a destruction of that building. A grant of the right to use the hall or stairway in a certain building gives no interest in the soil which will survive a destruction of the building, and the right ceases whenever the building is destroyed without the fault of the owner of the servient estate, and the owner of the easement will not acquire any right in a new building which may be erected in the place of the one destroyed.' (Italics added.)

"Respondents cite the case of Union National Bank [of Lowell] v. Nesmith, 238 Mass. 247, 130 N.E. 251, wherein the majority of the court held that such an easement is also lost when the building is destroyed by the intentional act of the owner of the servient estate. Such apparently is the rule in Massachusetts, although we find no other authority supporting such contrary doctrine in any of the other jurisdictions.

[5] "It is further argued by respondents that the servitude in the instant case is in the nature of a license to use the stairway as distinguished from an easement which is an interest in land, and therefore revocable at the will of the servient owner. The covenant in the agreement creating the servitude is reasonably definite and certain. The authorities uniformly hold that such a grant of the use of a stairway constitutes an easement and does not necessarily attach to the underlying soil. In both the Cohen case, supra, and the Muzio case, supra, the court held that such use does not survive destruction of the building, although the covenant creating the right provided in one case that the right shall be 'forever' and in the other case 'perpetual'."

Since the rendition of said opinion by the District Court of Appeal, Franklin Wolf, one of the original appellants, has died, and by an order of this court, the American Trust Company, as the executor of his last will and testament has been substituted in his place and stead as one of the appellants herein.

We therefore conclude that the decree herein should be and it is modified to provide that respondents may not destroy the easement for the use of the stairway without the consent of the appellants and that without such consent the easement shall continue until the building on lot 5 is destroyed or the easement becomes inoperative without the fault of the respondents.

As so modified the judgment is affirmed, appellants to recover their costs.

GIBSON, Chief Justice (dissenting).

Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment establishing the extent of the burden imposed upon their property under the terms of a written instrument which subjects that property to a stairway easement in favor of defendants. The only uncertainty relates to the duration of the easement which is created by the following language: "* * * the stairway on Main Street then and now used for the purposes of ingress and egress to and from the properties hereinbefore mentioned, and fronting on Main Street of Stockton, California, should be kept and maintained as a stairway for the use of all properties hereinbefore mentioned * * * so long as the Lot on which said stairway is now built, is occupied by the building on said Lot, of which building said stairway forms a part." The property involved consists of two adjoining buildings, each two stories in height, built in 1905. The principal means of access to the second floor of the building on defendants' property, however, has been provided under the terms of the stairway easement by the stairway in plaintiffs' building. Plaintiffs allege that the building upon their property is obsolete and that they desire to destroy their building, together with the stairway, and to erect a modern building thereon. The trial court rendered a declaratory judgment decreeing that plaintiffs' title should be quieted against the defendants "as to the use of said or any stairway upon said premises above described as belonging to said plaintiffs in the event of the removal or destruction of the building now located thereon, whether by voluntary act of plaintiffs or otherwise * * *."

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. The right to use a stairway on the property of another constitutes a grant in the nature of an easement. The easement, however, is in the building rather than in the land upon which the building is located. Thus, it is held that the destruction of the building in which the stairway is located also extinguishes the easement since there is no longer a servient tenement in existence upon which the right can operate. Cohen v. Adolph Kutner Co., 177 Cal. 592, 171 P. 424, L.R.A.1918D, 410; Muzio v. Erickson, 41 Cal.App. 413, 182 P. 974; Civil Code, § 811 (2); Brechet v. Johnson Hardware Co., 139 Minn. 436, 166 N.W. 1070, L.R.A.1918D, 691; Shirley v. Crabb, 138 Ind. 200, 37 N.E. 130, 46 Am.St.Rep. 376; Rudderham v. Emery Bros., 46 R.I. 171, 125 A. 291, 34 A.L.R. 602; 9 Cal.Jur. 959; 19 C.J. 955, [28 C.J.S., Easements, § 55]; 17 Am.Jur. 1024; 2 Thompson, Real Property (1939), p. 362; 34 A.L.R. 606; (1918) 6 Cal.L.Rev. 299. Citing many of the cases listed above, the majority opinion in this case concedes that the destruction of plaintiffs' building by natural forces would terminate defendants' stairway easement by destroying the servient tenement. It is held, however, that this rule is operative only where the servient tenement is destroyed without the fault of the servient owner. The limitation thus placed upon the rule appears to me to be illogical. An easement of this kind requires both a dominant and a servient tenement and a complete destruction of the servient tenement destroys the easement because one of the requisite elements of such a property interest is lacking. Cf. Bonney v. Greenwood, 96 Me. 335, 341, 52 A. 786; Day v. Walden, 46 Mich. 575, 586, 10 N.W. 26; Jones, Easements, p. 673, § 838. This is true even though the interest granted has been described as one which was to endure "forever." Cohen v. Adolph Kutner Co., supra. The conclusion seems inescapable, therefore, that the grantee of a stairway easement who possesses merely a right measured by the existence of the particular structure has no property interest which survives the total destruction of the servient tenement, even though that destruction be accomplished by an act of the owner. Civil Code, § 811 (2).

Most of the cases in which the courts have held that destruction of the building constituting the servient tenement extinguishes the stairway easement have involved destruction by natural causes over which the servient owner had no control. See 34 A.L.R. 606. But the question of a voluntary destruction of the servient tenement in a similar situation was presented to the court in Union National Bank of Lowell v. Nesmith, 238 Mass. 247, 130 N. E. 251. In that case two adjoining buildings were erected in 1852 with a common entrance, stairways and landings. A successor in title to one of the buildings proposed to tear it down and erect a new one without making provision for the common entrance and stairways. The court held, in 1921, that this could be done, saying (page 249 of 238 Mass., page 252 of 130 N.E.): "Where there is an easement of way through a building as distinguished from such right upon and over land without reference to a structure thereon, the incorporeal hereditament is measured and limited by the existence of the structure in which it only can exist and be exercised; and the person owning the easement by the evident intent of the parties has no easement in the servient estate apart from the building. If the structure ceases to exist, the right ends as there is nothing upon which it can be exercised. * * * In the opinion of a majority of the court, the easement is also lost when the building is destroyed by the intentional act of the owner of the servient estate. The person entitled to such right has no interest in the land as such.* * *" Very few cases have discussed the problem of voluntary destruction, and the question has not previously been passed upon in this state. Defendants rely upon certain language in Muzio v. Erickson, supra, as indicating that the rule is limited to destruction of the servient building without the fault of the owner, but the court in that case was dealing with an accidental destruction by fire and did not have in mind the specific problem here considered. Since such an easement cannot exist without a servient tenement, I cannot agree with the conclusion that it would not be terminated by the voluntary destruction of the servient tenement.

Although it is true that the destruction of the servient tenement would terminate the stairway easement regardless of how the destruction was brought about, a declaration to that effect would not answer the main issue presented by plaintiffs in this action. Plaintiffs seek a declaration that they "may remove their building, including said stairway." Plaintiffs desire to know, in other words, whether they may remove their building, thus terminating the stairway easement, without incurring liability to the owners of the dominant tenement. The answer to this question depends upon the intention of the parties as expressed in the written instrument providing for the easement. Assuming, under the principles set forth above, that the stairway easement would be terminated by any destruction of the servient structure, the easement owner might nevertheless be entitled to the aid of a court in preventing such destruction or in recovering damages where the destruction is in violation of the clear intention of the parties. In the present case the instrument provides that "the stairway on Main Street * * * should be kept and maintained as a stairway for the use of all the properties * * * so long as the Lot on which said stairway is now built is occupied by the building on said Lot, of which building said stairway forms a part." This language in no way limits the power of the owner of the servient structure in dealing with his own property, nor does it suggest that he must maintain the building in its present form for any particular period of time. In the absence of a clear indication of the intent of the parties, it is impossible to imply, as suggested by defendants, that the parties intended the plaintiffs' building to be maintained in its present form, despite changing circumstances, pending its destruction by natural causes. The imposition of affirmative duties upon an owner of land should result only from a clear expression of the intent of the parties, and should not be implied in the absence of such an expression. See Coulter v. Sausalito Bay Water Co., 122 Cal.App. 480, 494, 10 P.2d 780; Civil Code, § 806. The agreement itself does not indicate that any such obligation is imposed upon the owner of the servient building, and there are strong objections of policy to the creation of such an affirmative burden by implication. An implied obligation to maintain the building until its destruction by natural causes or by order of the public authorities might easily result in a situation where the building could neither be disposed of nor replaced for a considerable period of time, contrary to the settled policy against undue restrictions upon the free use and alienation of property. See Friesen v. City of Glendale, 209 Cal. 524, 529, 288 P. 1080; 7 Cal.Jur. 733; 3 Tiffany, Real Property (1939), p. 474.

Defendants, as disclosed in their cross-complaint, interpret the instrument creating the present easement in direct opposition to these fundamental principles. They seek a decree requiring that plaintiffs' building be kept and maintained to provide a stairway for defendants' building "so long as that portion of said Wolf Building * * * exists and until the same be destroyed without the fault of plaintiffs." The majority opinion in effect adopts this position by decreeing that "without the consent of the appellants [defendants] * * * the easement shall continue until the building on lot 5 is destroyed or the easement becomes inoperative without the fault of the respondents [plaintiffs]." In support of this interpretation of the instrument defendants urge that the servient owner should not be permitted to destroy another's vested property right by his own voluntary act. It is true that during the life of an easement the servient owner may not interfere with the easement which he has granted. See 9 Cal. Jur. 953. It is established, nevertheless, in the law of real property that, if the parties so intend, they may create an interest in real property which is determinable upon the happening of a stated event even though that event is dependent in some measure upon the volition of the one granting the interest. Restatement, Property, § 44, comment h; Id., § 45, comments g, h, i; see La Laguna Ranch Co. v. Dodge, 18 Cal. 2d 132, 114 P.2d 351, 135 A.L.R. 546. Language providing that a property interest shall endure "so long as" a specified condition exists, as in the present case, is ordinarily interpreted to create such a determinable interest. See Restatement, Property, § 44, Illus. 5-8.

In view of the principles stated herein and the considerations of public policy involved, I do not believe that the easement in the present case should be interpreted to compel the maintenance of plaintiffs' building in its present condition until it is destroyed by natural forces or by an act of the public authorities. The conclusion of the trial court in this case seems more reasonable. As the court said in Union National Bank of Lowell v. Nesmith, supra, 238 Mass. page 249, 130 N.E. page 252: "The parties did not intend to and did not create a right of any greater permanency in the use of the petitioner's building than was assured by the character of the structure and the likelihood that the owner would not for a considerable time change the manner of the use of his premises. This is the reasonable construction of their rights." See Cotting v. City of Boston, 201 Mass. 97, 87 N.E. 205; 3 Tiffany, Real Property, 3d Ed.1939, p. 354. This construction of the easement would not result in a mere illusory interest. See Conard, "Easement Novelties," 30 Cal. L.Rev. 125, 139. In this case, for example, the arrangement made in 1911 has actually been carried out for over thirty years. Only by the complete destruction of the servient tenement could the voluntary act of the servient owner terminate the easement and, considering that both buildings were new at the time the servitude was created, such a drastic step was highly improbable for a considerable period.

For these reasons the judgment of the trial court which permitted plaintiffs to remove their building, thus terminating the easement, seems to me to declare the rights of the parties correctly. The judgment should be affirmed.

EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 28

MARTIN et al. v. RILEY, State Controller.

S. F. 16718.

Supreme Court of California.

March 23, 1942.

1. Statutes ⚷251

The words "office" and "officer" within constitutional provision that no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure so as to become immediately effective, refers to a governmental office and officer, but it does not necessarily follow that military offices and officers are governmental offices and officers within meaning of Constitution. Const. art. 4, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Office" and "Officer".

2. Statutes ⚷251

Under constitutional provision that no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure so as to become immediately effective, and related statutes, failure to distinguish between civil and military officers creates such ambiguity as to require a construction in favor of immediate effectiveness of California Guard Act of 1942 on theory that members of the state guard are not "officers" within meaning of Constitution. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 4, § 1.

3. Militia ⟸2

The militia is governed by laws relative to military affairs and not by laws regulating civil matters unless an unmistakable intention to the contrary clearly appears, since military service is based on a duty owed to the sovereign, may be compulsory and cannot be terminated at will.

4. Statutes ⟸219, 220

That urgency measures were enacted in 1917 relating to the national guard, in 1940 establishing a state guard, and in 1941 also relating to the state guard, without any question as to propriety of immediate effectiveness of the acts, while not controlling is persuasive that executive and legislative branches of state government did not consider that military offices and officers should be classed with civil offices and officers as contemplated by constitutional provision that no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure, so as to become immediately effective. St.1917, pp. 279, 302; St.1941, pp. 392, 2291; Const. art. 4, § 1.

5. Statutes ⟸251

Under the California Guard Act of 1942 none of the restrictions, limitations and additions prescribed in performance of duties of Governor, adjutant general and controller, constitute a "change of duties" within constitutional provision that no measure changing the duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure, so as to become immediately effective. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 146, 148, 160, 163, 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555, 555.1, as amended by St. 1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 4, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Change of Duty".

6. Statutes ⟸251

An addition or subtraction in relation to the volume of duties required to be performed by an officer, which does not substantially affect primary duties of his office, is not such a "change of duties" as would prevent immediate effectiveness of legislation properly declared to be urgent within constitutional provision that no measure changing the duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure. Const. art. 4, § 1.

7. Statutes ⟸251

The California Guard Act of 1942 did not change the duties of any officer within meaning of Constitution providing that no measure changing the duties of any officer shall be construed to be an urgency measure so as to become immediately effective, and hence the act became immediately effective upon its passage as an urgency measure. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 4, § 1.

8. Statutes ⟸5

The duty of Legislature in special session to confine itself to the subject matter of the Governor's call is "mandatory" and Legislature cannot legislate on any subject not specified in Governor's proclamation. Const. art. 5, § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory".

9. Statutes ⟸5

Under constitutional prohibition against enactment by Legislature in extraordinary session of legislation on subjects other than those specified in proclamation, when Governor has submitted a subject to Legislature, designation of that subject opens for legislative consideration matters relating to, germane to and having a natural connection with the subject matter and any matter of restriction or limitation becomes advisory or recommendatory only and not binding on the Legislature. Const. art. 5, § 9.

10. Constitutional law ⟸48

The same presumptions in favor of the constitutionality of an act passed at regular session apply to acts passed at a special session. Const. art. 5, § 9.

11. Constitutional law ⟸48

The California Guard Act of 1942 passed by the extraordinary session of Legislature pursuant to Governor's proclamation will be held to be constitutional if by any reasonable construction of language of the proclamation it can be said that subject of legislation is embraced therein, in view of presumptions in favor of constitutionality of the act.

Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 5, § 9.

12. Statutes ⚷5

Under Governor's proclamation convening Legislature in extraordinary session to consider and act upon "legislation augmenting the appropriation" for the operation, maintenance and organization of the state guard, quoted phrase should not be narrowly construed in determining whether the California Guard Act of 1942 was on a subject contemplated by the proclamation within Constitution, and Legislature was not thereby necessarily restricted to enacting provisions for a direct increase of previous appropriation but could augment available appropriation by direct increase and by limitations upon expenditure of funds. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St. 1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 5, § 9.

13. Constitutional law ⚷70(3)

In determining validity of the California Guard Act of 1942 as to whether it came within subject contemplated by Governor's proclamation convening Legislature in extraordinary session, the wisdom or desirability of manner of augmenting the appropriations for the state guard was not a question for the judicial department. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 5, § 9.

14. Statutes ⚷5

The California Guard Act of 1942 was on a "subject" contemplated by Governor's proclamation convening Legislature in extraordinary session for purpose of augmenting the appropriation for the operation, maintenance and organization of the state guard and to amend sections of the Military and Veterans Code with respect to pay privileges, allowances and rights for the state guard, and hence the act does not violate constitutional prohibition against enactment by Legislature in extraordinary session of legislation on subjects other than those specified in proclamation. Military and Veterans Code, §§ 321, 340, 395, and §§ 555–556.1, 555.1, 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 5, § 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Subject".

15. Militia ⚷2

The section of the California Guard Act of 1942 authorizing Governor to call into service all or any part of active members of state guard and all or a portion of reserve forces when he has by proclamation declared a state of insurrection to exist is not unconstitutional as encroaching upon constitutional power of Governor to call forth the militia to execute the laws of the state, suppress insurrections and repel invasions, since the act does not deprive the Governor of any of his powers as commander-in-chief of the militia which includes the state guard. Military and Veterans Code, § 122, and § 555.2, as amended by St.1941–1942, First Ex.Sess., c. 19; Const. art. 8, § 1.

* * *

In Bank.

Proceeding in mandamus by Arthur R. Martin and others to compel Harry B. Riley, as state controller, to issue warrants in payment of services performed by petitioners as members of the state guard.

Writ denied and judgment made final.

Robert Clifton, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and James H. Oakley and Chas. W. Johnson, Deputies Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent, as State Controller, to issue warrants in payment of services performed by petitioners as members of the State Guard. An alternative writ was issued. There are no disputed questions of fact. The purpose of the proceeding is to test the constitutionality of an act passed by the Fifty-fourth (First Extraordinary) Session of the Legislature (Stats. 1941-42, First Ex. Sess., ch. 19), entitled: "An act to amend Sections 555 and 556.1 of the Military and Veterans Code and to add Sections 555.2, 555.5, 555.6, 556.3 and 556.4 thereto, relating to the State Guard, providing for the pay privileges, allowances and rights of the State Guard, for the organization and administration of the State Guard to permit the efficient operation thereof consistent with such privileges, allowances and rights, permitting school districts to make school buses available for use by the State Guard, making an appropriation for the operation, maintenance and organization of the State Guard and providing for the expenditure thereof, declaring the urgency of this act, and providing that it shall take effect immediately," and hereafter referred to as chapter 19.

On December 16, 1941, the Governor issued a proclamation convening the Legislature in extraordinary session. One of the subjects for legislative action stated in the proclamation was as follows: "1. To consider and act upon legislation augmenting the appropriation for the operation, maintenance and organization of the State Guard during the ninety-third and ninety-fourth fiscal years and amending sections 321, 340, 395 and 555 of the Military and Veterans Code, with respect to the pay privileges, allowances, and rights for the State Guard."

Chapter 19 was enacted in purported conformity to the foregoing subject of the call. A brief résumé of its provisions will be noted. Section 1 provides for an amendment to section 555 of the Military and Veterans Code. By this amendment commissioned officers of the State Guard while in active service are allowed a salary equivalent to the base pay only of officers of the same rank in the United States Army and actual and necessary traveling expenses on the same basis as provided for state officers. Enlisted men in active service are allowed pay at the rate of $2 per day with certain increases for enlisted men above the rank of private. Officers and enlisted men in the nautical and marine force in active service are granted the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of comparable rank in the infantry.

Section 2 adds section 555.2 to the code. It provides that the State Guard shall be a part of the active militia and shall consist of the adjutant general and his staff, an infantry of thirteen regiments and a nautical and marine force not in excess of 700 enlisted men. It also provides for organization by the adjutant general of the infantry to consist of not more than 2,160 enlisted men in each regiment of which 720 shall constitute active and the remainder reserve forces. It also specifies the officers of each regiment and the organization and officering of battalions, companies and platoons, with power in the adjutant general to add platoons to the reserve force if it appears to be in the best interests of the state to enlarge the reserve force of any regiment or company beyond the maximum strength specified. The adjutant general is also given the power to organize the nautical and marine force, designating certain numerical limitations and officering. These provisions also reduce the number and the pay of officers theretofore authorized.

In the event of civil insurrection or of actual invasion by a foreign enemy the Governor is empowered to call into action all or part of the active force and all or part of the reserve force as he may deed necessary. During such time as the United States is engaged in war, in addition to the Governor's powers to call the active and reserve forces of the militia and as a limitation upon his power to call the State Guard into active service under section 554 of the code, the Governor is empowered to call into full time service the active membership of the State Guard not in excess of 7,000 enlisted men and the officers provided therefor. In addition, not to exceed three officers and twelve enlisted men in each regiment may be called into active service on a full time basis for the administration of the regiment.

Further provisions of section 555.2 have to do with voluntary service, qualifications and tests, removals, workmen's compensation benefits, and related matters. Section 3 adds section 555.5 to the Military and Veterans Code, permitting use of school busses by the State Guard. Section 4 amends section 556.1 of the code by authorizing the governor to organize and maintain a State Guard within the limitations of chapter 19. Section 5 adds to the code section 556.3 relating to shoulder ornaments on uniforms. Section 6 adds section 556.4 to the code requiring cessation of pay upon enactment of federal law providing for federal organization and control of State Guards. Section 7 adds section 555.6 providing for unemployment insurance benefits.

By section 8 an appropriation, in addition to other moneys available by law, of the sum of $7,934,365 is made for the equipment, support and maintenance of the State Guard during the designated fiscal years. This section expressly provides that no part of the appropriation shall be available or be expended for payment to any commissioned officer of a salary or allowance in excess of amounts set forth by amended section 555. The controller is directed to audit all proper claims and draw his warrant therefor, which the treasurer is directed to pay. Section 9 contains the short title of the act, viz., "California Guard Act of 1942." Section 10 declares the existence of an emergency and directs the immediate effect of the act. The facts constituting the necessity for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety are stated to be: "The declaration of war by the United States and the fact that the State of California is an area designated as a combat zone necessitate an immediate redefining of the rights and privileges of the State Guard and adequate provision in connection therewith for providing an effective State Guard to meet the demands of State and National defense. It is also necessary that adequate funds be made available to the State Guard in order that it may perform its functions properly in this critical period."

By section 11 the Legislature expressed its intent that the entire act should take effect immediately, but that any portion which might not have immediate effect should be deemed severable from the remainder of the act and be effective at the time provided by law, and if any such portion should be deemed to prevent the act from being an urgency measure, it should be deemed to be inoperative and the remaining portions should take effect immediately.

Section 12 provides that the invalidity of any provision shall not affect the remaining valid provisions.

The bill was passed by a two-thirds vote of all members of each House and was approved by the Governor on January 31, 1942. The Legislature adjourned on January 22, 1942.

On February 9, 1942, the Superior Court in Los Angeles County issued a temporary restraining order on the application of one Heinrich enjoining his discharge from active service in the State Guard and, pending a hearing on the order to show cause, restraining the Governor, the Adjutant General, the Controller and the Treasurer, from taking any step in the reorganization under the State Guard Act of 1942, except the appropriative provisions of section 8 thereof, prior to the expiration of ninety days from the adjournment of the Legislature on January 22, 1942. That action is still pending and undecided.

The petitioners are a first lieutenant, a second lieutenant, and a private in the State Guard. On a day in the first week of February they were ordered to active duty in a company which was already fully staffed in accordance with the provisions of chapter 19. A pay roll certifying a claim for their services was drawn against the appropriation provided by section 8 of chapter 19. The claims for such salaries were rejected by the respondent Controller on the grounds, (1) that he had been restrained by the order of the superior court above mentioned; and (2) that the claim was not in conformity with the California Guard Act of 1942.

Because of the urgency brought about by the existing state of war and the importance of the element of time in effecting a final conclusion in the matter we have deemed it appropriate to consider the merits of the application.

The petitioners contend that the controller unlawfully rejected the claim for the reason that none of the provisions of chapter 19 were properly urgency measures except the appropriative provisions of section 8, and that only the latter provisions became effective immediately and prior to the expiration of the ninety-day period provided by section 1 of article IV sometimes called the referendary provision of the Constitution of this state; also that none of the provisions of said act, except the appropriative provisions of said section 8 and the numbered sections following, were within the subject designated in the Governor's proclamation.

Section 1 of article IV of the Constitution reserves to the people the power of the referendum and provides that no act of the Legislature shall go into effect until ninety days following final adjournment, excepting acts calling elections, acts providing for tax levies or appropriations for the usual current expenses of the state, and urgency measures necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each House, which excepted acts have immediate effect. A proviso is included that "no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer, * * * shall be construed to be an urgency measure."

The petitioners contend that by chapter 19 the Governor, adjutant general, controller, and the officers and enlisted men of the State Guard are officers whose salaries, terms of office and duties have been changed, and that offices have been abolished within the meaning of this constitutional section by provisions effecting a reduction in the number of officers. The petitioners assert that the purpose of the reserved power of the referendum is to retain for popular vote the control of the system of government including the right to prevent a reorganization of the government.

[1] It must be taken for granted that the words "office" and "officer" as used in the constitutional section, refer to a governmental "office" and "officer." But it does not necessarily follow that military offices and officers are governmental offices and officers within the meaning of the constitutional section.

[2] The facts which created the emergency declared in chapter 19 may be said to be the following: On December 7, 1941, Pearl Harbor, and immediately thereafter the islands of Midway, Wake and Guam, were attacked by the armed forces of Japan. On December 8, 1941, war was declared between the United States and Japan. On December 11, 1941, a state of war was declared to exist between the United States and Germany and Italy. The situation of the State of California in relation to war activities was readily and immediately apparent. Vital areas and projects in the state needed to be guarded and protected. Lines of communication and transportation were required to be kept open. The preservation of the public peace, as against threatened subversive activities within the state, was of likewise paramount importance. In an effort to meet the emergency the State Guard was called to active duty. Available funds were insufficient to finance its activities, and existing laws probably appropriate for peace time, were deemed inadequate. These conditions unquestionably prompted the Governor's proclamation of December 16, 1941, and the call for the extraordinary session of the Legislature. They also confronted the Legislature when it convened in response to the call. It must be assumed that it enacted chapter 19 as an emergency measure in an attempt to meet those acute conditions. To hold that it was intended by the people of the state in adopting the referendary provisions of the Constitution to prevent the Legislature from putting into immediate effect a reorganization or other change in statutory provisions relating to the militia of the state under conditions so vital to the public welfare would be to ignore the first fundamental of government, the preservation of the state. To so hold would be to declare that the people of the state intended that laws designed to safeguard their lives, their liberty and their property against immediately threatened aggression should be subject to the delays attendant upon a submission of those laws to popular vote at an election thereafter to be held. Such a result should not be permitted except under the mandate of plain and unambiguous language of the fundamental law. The failure of the referendary provisions of the constitution and related statutes of the state to draw the fundamental distinction between civil and military officers—the first to govern, and the other to defend—must be deemed to create such an uncertainty and ambiguity as to justify and impel a construction in favor of the immediate effectiveness of the statute in question. And this is so even though other provisions of the Constitution and statutory law enacted in times of peace refer to both civil and military officers as "officers of government" (Constitution, sec. 6, art. V.) or "executive officers" (Political Code, sec. 341). As indicated in Spreckels v. Graham, 194 Cal. 516, 530, 228 P. 1040, the real question is not whether members of the State Guard are public officers, but whether it was intended that they should be included as such within the meaning and operation of the provisions of the Constitution. In concluding that they were not, it becomes unnecessary to discuss further cases such as Spreckels v. Graham, supra; Logan v. Shields, 190 Cal. 661, 214 P. 45; Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120; and Curtin v. State of California, 61 Cal.App. 377, 214 P. 1030, defining an office or officer as one performing or relating to the performance of governmental functions, or distinguishing between an employee and a public officer. This court recently considered the application of article IV, section 20, of the California Constitution and said: "Not only have state and national legislative bodies been alert to meet the need for special protective measures, but state and federal courts have kept pace and have evinced a firm intention to take a liberal view of these emergency enactments in order that their protective purposes may be fulfilled without undue imposition of constitutional limitations or hindrance through narrow judicial construction." McCoy v. Board of Supervisors, 18 Cal.2d 193, 196, 114 P.2d 569, 571.

[3, 4] The Supreme Court of Texas (Texas Nat. Guard Armory Board v. Mc-Craw, 132 Tex. 613, 126 S.W.2d 627) differentiated between civil and military officers in applying certain sections of the constitution of that state. Likewise in Goldstein v. State, 281 N.Y. 396, 24 N.E.2d 97, 129 A.L.R. 905, a distinction was made between civil and military offices in the application of certain statutory provisions. The militia is governed by laws relative to military affairs and not by laws regulating civil matters unless an unmistakable intention to the contrary clearly appears. Military service is based on a duty owed to the sovereign, may be compulsory (Selective Draft Law Cases (Arver v. United States), 245 U.S. 366, 38 S.Ct. 159, 62 L.Ed. 349, L.R.A.1918C, 361, Ann.Cas.1918B, 856), and cannot be terminated at will. Urgency measures were enacted in 1917 relating to the National Guard (Stats.1917, p. 302, Stats.1917, p. 279), in 1940 establishing a State Guard (Stats.1941, p. 392), and in 1941 also relating to the State Guard (Stats.1941, p. 2291) apparently without any question as to the propriety of the immediate effectiveness of the acts. While this observation is not controlling, it is persuasive that the executive and legislative branches of out state government have not considered that military offices and officers should be classed with civil offices and officers as contemplated by the referendary provisions of the Constitution.

It may be assumed that the Governor, the adjutant general, and the controller are officers and hold offices within the meaning of the constitutional provision. But it does not follow that the legislative enactment here involved includes any matter which would justify the conclusion that the provisions relating to such officers could not be given immediate effect. Certainly their offices are not created or abolished by the act. Their salaries and terms of office are not changed. Nor are their duties changed within the meaning of the Constitution. The Governor still retains his duties as the chief executive officer of the state and as the commander-in-chief of the militia. The law provides that as commander-in-chief he may call the militia into service (sec. 146, Military and Veterans Code), make rules and regulation in conformity with said code (sec. 148), and organize and maintain a State Guard within the limitations prescribed (sec. 555.1). Changes in the limitations respecting the organization of the State Guard do not affect the duties of his office. He still retains those duties.

The adjutant general is the chief of staff of the Governor and subordinate only to him. Military and Veterans Code, sec. 160. He is required to perform the duties prescribed in the code and such additional duties, consistent with the regulations and customs of the United States Army and Navy, as may be prescribed by the Governor, and to issue all orders in the name of the Governor (sec. 163). He likewise retains those duties.

The controller is required to audit all claims against the state and to draw warrants against the treasurer for payment of moneys. He still retains those duties.

[5-7] Certain restrictions, limitations, and additions in the performance of the duties of each of the above offices may have been prescribed by the amendatory act. But none of such restrictions, limitations, or additions is a "change" of duties within the meaning of the constitutional provision. Davis v. Los Angeles County, 12 Cal.2d 412, 84 P.2d 1034. An addition or subtraction in relation to the volume of the duties required to be performed by an officer, which does not substantially affect the primary duties of his office, is not such a change of duties as would prevent immediate effectiveness of legislation properly declared to be urgent. The changes here enacted are for the most part merely additions to similar duties already imposed by law upon the particular officers. It may be said that if the duty thus prescribed is one which falls within the primary duties a particular officer is required to perform, generally it would not be a change of his duties specifically to require him to perform it. There is nothing here presented which would justify a conclusion that chapter 19 changed the duties of any officer within the meaning of the Constitution.

We now turn to a consideration of the petitioners' contention that the provisions of chapter 19 with the exception of the appropriation of the sum of $7,934,365 for the equipment, support and maintenance of the State Guard, are in contravention of section 9 of article V of the Constitution. That section empowers the Governor on extraordinary occasions to convene the Legislature by proclamation stating the purpose of the call, and provides that when so convened the Legislature "shall have no power to legislate on any subjects other than those specified in the proclamation, but may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto." As noted, one of the purposes of the call was "to consider and act upon legislation augmenting the appropriation for the operation, maintenance and organization of the State Guard * * * and amending sections 321, 340, 395, and 555 of the Military and Veterans Code, with respect to the pay, privileges, allowances, and rights for the State Guard." The Governor also addressed a message to the special session recommending that an allowance be made to support actual dependents of enlisted men in active service, that enlisted men receive a 10 per cent increase in base pay for each step in rank above private or apprentice seamen, that provision be made for workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance benefits. The remainder of the provisions amending sections of the Military and Veterans Code with minor exceptions, dealt with the reorganization of the State Guard. In section 555.2 it was declared that reorganization should be administered as therein provided in order that the rights and privileges of the State Guard "may be exercised as completely as possible consistent with the need of the State for an adequate mobile force available for general duty and a sufficient reserve force in the State Guard to meet any emergency that may arise, to the end that the State Guard may effectively perform its functions in protecting the people of this state."

It is contended by the petitioners that the Legislature had no power to reorganize the State Guard because such reorganization was not within the subjects of the proclamation; that all the Legislature could do at said session was to increase the appropriation for the operation, maintenance and organization of the State Guard and amend the Military and Veterans Code in the respects noted in the call and in the Governor's message to the special session.

[8, 9] These contentions cannot be sustained. The duty of the Legislature in special session to confine itself to the subject matter of the call is of course mandatory. It has no power to legislate on any subject not specified in the proclamation. People v. Curry, 130 Cal. 82, 62 P. 516; Swing v. Riley, 13 Cal.2d 513, 518, 90 P.2d 313. But when the Governor has submitted a subject to the Legislature, the designation of that subject opens for legislative consideration matters relating to, germane to and having a natural connection with the subject proper. Blackford v. Judith Basin County, 109 Mont. 578, 98 P.2d 872, 877, 126 A.L.R. 639, and cases cited. Any matter of restriction or limitation becomes advisory or recommendatory only and not binding on the Legislature. People v. District Court, 23 Colo. 150, 46 P. 681; Long v. State, 58 Tex.Cr.R. 209, 127 S.W. 208, 21 Ann.Cas. 405. In Baldwin v. State, 21 Tex.App. 591, 3 S.W. 109, 110, it was held that the call "to reduce the taxes, both ad valorem and occupation, so far as it may be found consistent with the support of an efficient state government," embraced the entire subject of taxation, and a bill authorizing the levy of taxes on occupations not theretofore taxed was upheld. The court said: "To so legislate as to reduce the taxes, and at the same time provide for the support of an efficient state government, in our opinion, includes the power to levy taxes upon property and occupations not taxed before. It might be wholly impracticable to accomplish a reduction of taxes, and at the same time maintain the state government, without the exercise of such power. * * * Legislative power, except when the constitution has imposed limits upon it, is practically absolute; and, when limitations upon it are imposed, they are to be strictly construed, and are not to be given effect as against the general power of the legislature, unless such limitations clearly inhibit the act in question."

[10] The same presumptions in favor of the constitutionality of an act passed at a regular session apply to acts passed at a special session. Long v. State, 58 Tex.Cr.R. 209, 127 S.W. 208, 210, 21 Ann. Cas. 405. In the last cited case it was said that when the Legislature acting under a special call, undertakes "to consider subjects and pass laws in response thereto, and such laws receive the approval of the executive, courts are and should of right be reluctant to hold that such action is not embraced in such call, and will not so declare unless the subject manifestly and clearly is not embraced therein."

[11] Inasmuch as the presumptions are in favor of the constitutionality of the act, it will be held to be constitutional if by any reasonable construction of the language of the proclamation it can be said that the subject of legislation is embraced therein. Blackford v. Judith Basin County, supra; State v. Shores, 31 W.Va. 491,

7 S.E. 413, 13 Am.St.Rep. 875; State v. Woollen, 128 Tenn. 456, 161 S.W. 1006, Ann.Cas.1915C, 465.

[12-14] There were two general purposes relating to the State Guard which were stated in the call, one to consider and act upon legislation augmenting the appropriation for the operation, maintenance, and organization of the State Guard; the other to amend sections 321, 340, 395, and 555 of the Military and Veterans Code with respect to the pay, privileges, allowances and rights for the State Guard. The phrase "legislation augmenting the appropriation" should not be considered in a narrow sense. The Legislature was not thereby necessarily restricted to enacting provisions for a direct increase of the previous appropriation. It could, as it did, augment the available appropriation both by direct increase and by limitations upon the expenditure of the funds. The wisdom or desirability of the manner of augmenting the appropriations is of course not a question for the judicial department. It is concerned only with the question of interpretation. In the second purpose stated in the call, the Legislature was given power to amend certain sections of the Veterans and Military Code. It enacted amendments. Those amendments were pertinent to the subject matter of the sections involved. It may even be said that they were pertinent to the "pay, privileges, allowances and rights for the State Guard," as stated in the call. But if it be arguable that they were not so restricted, we are again brought to a realization that the call had submitted to the Legislature the subject matter of those sections and when so submitted the Legislature could not be circumscribed in the enactment of any appropriate legislation within that field. We conclude that the Legislature did not violate section 9 of article V of the Constitution.

[15] The petitioners also contend that section 2 of chapter 19 encroaches upon the constitutional power of the Governor to call forth the militia to execute the laws of the state, to suppress insurrections and repel invasions. (Sec. 1, art. VIII, Const.) The amendatory act authorizes the Governor to organize and maintain a State Guard within the limitations prescribed and requires certain duties to be performed by the adjutant general. Those provisions do not purport to deprive the Governor of any of his powers as commander-in-chief of the militia. The Governor acts through the adjutant general and the adjutant general acts only in the name of the Governor. The provisions of section 555.2(d) authorize the Governor to call into service all or any part of the active members of the State Guard and in addition all or a portion of the reserve forces when he has by proclamation declared a state of insurrection to exist. Those provisions are not to be deemed a curtailment of his powers. The State Guard is only a part of the militia which consists of all able-bodied males resident in this state as designated by section 122 of the Veterans and Military Code. The petitioners do not question that the section referred to defines the Governor's constitutional powers in calling the State Guard into service when a state of insurrection is proclaimed to exist. That section contains a statement of a portion only of the constitutional powers vested in the Governor as commander-in-chief of the militia. It is not intended to be nor may it be deemed to be exclusive.

Other points do not require special discussion. The foregoing observations and conclusions sufficiently answer all the petitioners' contentions.

The petition for the peremptory writ is denied, and it is further ordered that the judgment herein is hereby made final.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, EDMONDS, HOUSER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the conclusion reached in the majority opinion but I do not agree with that portion of said opinion which holds that when the Governor has submitted a subject to the Legislature at an extraordinary session, the designation of that subject opens for legislative consideration all matters relating to, germane to and having a natural connection with the subject matter, and that any matter of restriction or limitation embraced within the proclamation becomes advisory or recommendatory only and not binding on the Legislature. In my opinion this declaration is altogether too broad. I do not believe it would be reasonable to say that if the proclamation submitted to the Legislature designated such subjects as shortening or lengthening the fishing season, increasing or decreasing the number of game wardens or increasing or decreasing their compensation, it would give the Legislature power to enact legislation reorganizing the Department of Natural Resources or even the Division of Fish and Game of that department.

In my opinion, section 2 of chapter 19 which adds section 555.2 to the Military and Veterans Code contains provisions which can reasonably be said to cover subjects not embraced within the purview of the Governor's proclamation calling the special session, and had the Governor vetoed the measure, and the Legislature had passed it over his veto, I would be disposed to hold that the Legislature had violated the constitutional mandate contained in section 9 of article V of the Constitution. But since the Governor could have included such subjects in his proclamation, and he having approved the legislation by signing the bill embracing such subjects, I am forced to conclude that he considered his proclamation sufficiently broad to cover the subjects embraced in the bill, and in view of the urgency of the measure, I am disposed to hold that it constitutes a valid exercise of executive and legislative power.

TANNER et al. v. TITLE INSURANCE & TRUST CO. et al.*

L. A. 17671.

Supreme Court of California.

March 24, 1942.

Rehearing Granted April 20, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals 🔑79(1)

The distinguishing feature of "community oil lease" under which several landowners lease their respective lots as one tract with exclusive right to lessee to drill for and produce oil upon any part of it, is that each owner shares proportionately in royalties irrespective of the lots upon which oil is discovered, and such lease usually provides for withdrawal from the lease of land which is either nonproductive or cannot be economically used by lessee, and for apportionment of benefits among all owners, notwithstanding such withdrawal by lessee of a part of the land.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Community Oil Lease".

2. Mortgages 🔑533, 535(1)

Where parties to deed of trust agreed that community oil lease previously executed by mortgagors was subordinate to deed of trust, and that sale of mortgaged property in accordance with provisions of deed of trust would convey property free of lease, mortgagee purchasing property at trustee's sale acquired title free of lease, including benefits of lease as well as burdens thereof, and could not assert a claim to royalties accruing under lease.

3. Mines and minerals 🔑77

Where community oil lease provided that owner of each tract should share proportionately in royalties irrespective of tract on which oil was produced, and gave lessee right to surrender any portion of land and specifically provided that surrender should not affect distribution of royalties, bilateral surrender agreement between lessee and all the lessors, terminating lease with respect to land surrendered by lessee, and stating that lessee and lessors mutually released each other from all obligations under lease with respect to surrendered land, did not bar owners of surrendered land from future participation in royalties accruing under lease, since word "terminate" was used only in the sense of dissolving lessee's relationship under the lease.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Terminate".

4. Contracts 🔑170(1)

In the determination of meaning of contract claimed to be indefinite, interpretation placed on contract by the parties themselves as evidenced by their conduct subsequent to its execution may be considered.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑79(1)

Where parties to community oil lease, providing for lessee's surrender of any portion of land, did not for five years object to sharing of royalties by owners of surrendered lands, any ambiguity in surrender agreement must be resolved against construction that such agreement terminated right of owners of surrendered lands to share in royalties.

---

* Subsequent opinion 129 P.2d 383.

6. Contracts ⚷143, 147(2)

In absence of fraud or mistake, intention of parties as expressed in agreement is controlling, and courts are not empowered under guise of construction or explanation to depart from plain meaning of writing and insert a term or limitation not found therein.

7. Contracts ⚷168

Courts have frequently considered implied covenants as being within a contract, but such covenants are justified only when they are not inconsistent with some express term of contract and, in absence of such implied terms, the contract could not be effectively performed.

8. Contracts ⚷303(4)

Every contract contains an implied covenant on the part of each party not to prevent or hinder performance by the other party.

9. Mines and minerals ⚷79(1)

The law will not allow one to claim royalties under community oil lease and at the same time diminish amount of oil which might otherwise be recovered for common benefit of all the lessors.

10. Mines and minerals ⚷79(1)

Owners of land surrendered by lessee were not deprived of their right under community oil lease to share in royalties accruing under lease after surrender, by producing oil from surrendered land and appropriating all the royalties to themselves, where lease did not prohibit production of oil from surrendered land or provide that owners of land retained under lease should be entitled to participate in royalties therefrom, and no evidence was offered to show that well on surrendered land was draining oil from the source of supply under the community lease.

11. Evidence ⚷10(1)

In absence of evidence that well on land surrendered to community oil lessee was draining oil from source of supply under community lease, Supreme Court would not take judicial notice of any such alleged fact.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clement D. Nye, Judge.

Action to quiet title as to share in royalties provided for by community oil lease and to entire proceeds of oil which was discovered on land after date of lessee's surrender, by George Tanner, and others, against the Title Insurance and Trust Company, and others. From the judgment, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

William H. Cree, Cree & Brooks, and Frank C. Charvat, all of Long Beach, for appellants Olds.

Richardson & Jordan, of Whittier, for appellant Whittier Building & Loan Ass'n.

Burke, Hickson, Burke & Marshall, Harry C. Williams, and Daniel G. Marshall, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

EDMONDS, Justice.

A rather unusual situation in the relations of adjoining landowners has occasioned the present controversy. Each of the parties, or his predecessor in interest, was, at one time, a lessor, with others, under what is termed a community oil lease. The judgment appealed from was rendered in an action brought by the respondents, as the owners of two lots from which oil is being produced, to quiet their respective titles against the claims of the appellants who are the owners of land which has been surrendered by the lessee. The appellants assert the right to share in the royalties provided for by this lease, and, also, to the entire proceeds of the oil which was discovered upon their land after the date of the surrender.

There is no dispute concerning the facts of the case. In 1921, Standard Oil Company leased nine contiguous parcels of land, described as lots, each of which comprises five acres. One Beaty and his wife were then the owners of the westerly one-half of lots 171 and 172 and joined in the lease. Some years later they executed a deed of trust for the benefit of the appellant Whittier Building and Loan Association. Under the terms of an agreement executed by the lessee, the trustors, the trustees and the association, the lease was made subordinate to the deed of trust. In 1934 the beneficiary became the purchaser of the property at a trustee's sale and three years later conveyed it, without reservation. Frank H. Olds and his wife, who are the other appellants, executed the lease as the owners of lot 173. The respondents are, respectively, the owners of lots 174 and 176.

The lessee drilled two wells, one on lot 174, and the other on lot 176. Oil in paying quantities has been produced from each of these wells for some years.

In 1933, the old company, by an instrument in writing executed by it and the lessors, surrendered all land included within the terms of its lease except lots 174 and 176. At the time of the surrender, each of the lessors was then participating in the landowners' royalties accruing under the terms of the lease. This participation continued until the commencement of the present action.

Three years later, the owners of the surrendered lots sued the respondents to quiet their respective titles and in June, 1937, a decree was rendered in their favor. Following the discovery of deeper sand in the Montebello Oil Field in the latter part of 1937, the appellants Olds leased their lot to the Bush Oil Company. Beginning in May, 1939, oil was produced from that lot and was being produced at the time of the trial. Royalties paid to the appellants Olds upon this production up to November 1, 1939, amounted to $13,500. No part of these royalties has been shared with the respondents. About the same time, and following its conveyance of the westerly half of lots 171 and 172, this land was also leased to Bush Oil Company, which, from 1939 and to the time of the trial of this action has produced oil in paying quantities from it.

As their sole ground for a reversal of the judgment, the appellants rely upon a provision of the lease reading as follows: "Said Lessors agree to, and they do hereby, pool their interest in this lease, and agree that during the continuance of this lease each owner of land subject thereto shall share in all benefits accruing to the whole lease in the ratio which the acreage owned by said Lessors bears to the entire acreage leased. This provision as to apportionment of benefits to be operative, notwithstanding the surrender by the Lessee of any land described herein." The respondents contend that the Whittier Building and Loan Association did not acquire any right to share in the royalties by virtue of the subordination agreement executed in connection with the Beaty deed of trust. And conceding, for the purpose of argument, that it did acquire such a right, so they say, the association divested itself of that right by its conveyance of the Beaty land. As against all of the appellants, the respondents urge that the surrender agreement extinguished the rights of the owners of the surrendered lots, including the appellants, to further participation in the community royalties. And as another and alternative ground, they contend that, under a proper construction of the clause relating to the sharing of royalties after a surrender, the owners of the surrendered lots forfeited their right to participation when, subsequent to the time of the release of their lots, they began producing oil from them and failed to share the royalties derived from that production with their colessors under the community lease.

[1] The distinguishing feature of a lease under which several landowners lease their respective lots as one tract, with the sole and exclusive right to the lessee to drill for and produce oil upon any part of it, is that each owner shares proportionately in the royalties irrespective of the lot or lots upon which oil is discovered. The owners of lots upon which no well is drilled share equally the fruits of the common venture with the lessors whose land proves productive. Also, it is often found that certain lots are either non-productive or cannot be economically used by the lessee. Under such circumstances it is usual to provide for the withdrawal of such land from the lease in order that it may be devoted to profitable uses. In the event of such a release, the rights of the owners of the surrendered lots to continued participation in royalties from production upon the land remaining under the lease must be considered. Accordingly, community oil leases commonly provide for the apportionment of benefits among all owners, notwithstanding the surrender by the lessee of any of the lands subject to the lease.

Such a provision was considered in First National Bank of Redondo v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 91 Cal.App. 705, 267 P. 548. That case arose after oil was discovered upon lots retained under the lease following the surrender of the non-producing lots. The owners of the producing lots claimed all of the royalties under the lease, asserting that the notice of surrender terminated the lease given by the lessee. The court rejected this contention and decreed that the owners of the surrendered lands were entitled to participate in future royalties. The appellants contend that the principles stated and applied in that case are controlling in the present controversy.

[2] However, under the terms of the subordination agreement, the appellant

Whittier Building and Loan Association did not acquire the right to participate in royalties under the community lease. This agreement recites the execution of the community lease and the deed of trust, and after stating that the loan secured thereby was made by the appellant association upon the condition that the deed of trust be a lien upon the property paramount to the community lease, provides that the Beaty property "shall be * * * made subject to the above mentioned deed of trust and all of the provisions thereof, and that in the event of the foreclosure of said deed of trust or sale of property therein described in the manner therein specified, that the purchaser of said property shall acquire the same free and clear of said lease."

By the clear and unmistakable terms of this instrument, all of the parties to it agreed that a sale of the Beaty property, in accordance with the provisions of the deed of trust, would convey such property to the purchaser free and clear of the lease. The agreement provides no option whereby the purchaser might elect to take the property subject to the lease. On the contrary, by the very terms of the agreement, any such sale would automatically terminate the lease as to such property. Accordingly, when appellant association purchased the lots in 1934 at the trustees' sale, it acquired title free and clear of the lease and has no claim to royalties accruing thereunder.

The association maintains that the only effect of the agreement was to terminate, in the event of foreclosure, the right of the lessee to explore or drill for oil on the Beaty lots. In other words, it insists that the agreement was intended to free the purchaser of the lots of the obligations of the lease but was not intended to deprive him of any royalties thereunder. The plain language of the agreement, however, contemplates the complete release of the lots from the operation of the lease, including the benefits as well as the burdens. True, the agreement could not affect the rights of the other lessors, who were not parties thereto and who therefore might have insisted upon a retention of the lands under the lease. However, these other lessors did not object, but on the contrary agreed to a surrender of the property in 1933, one year before the appellant association became the owner of the lots. Having bargained for and secured the right to subordinate the lease to its lien on the Beaty lots, the appellant association, as the purchaser at the trustees' sale, may not successfully assert a claim to royalties accruing under the lease, and the trial court properly quieted the respondents' titles against such claim. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to determine the effect of the association's conveyance.

[3] The rights of the appellants Olds, however, are governed by the principles followed in First National Bank of Redondo v. Standard Oil Co. of California, supra, unless it may be said that the surrender agreement of 1933, or the independent oil development by them, terminated their right to the royalties under the community lease. The respondents concede that a mere unilateral surrender by the lessee, as was involved in the Bank of Redondo case, does not terminate the right of the owners of surrendered premises to continue to share in the royalties accruing under the community lease. But the agreement of June 1, 1933, they urge, is not a simple surrender by the lessee, but is a bilateral agreement, executed by the lessee and all of the lessors, for the purpose of terminating the lease as to all of the land except lots 174 and 176, and by its terms foreclosed the appellants Olds, as the owners of surrendered lot 173, from further participation in the community royalties.

This agreement recites that "pursuant to the provisions of said agreement of lease * * * the parties hereto desire to terminate [it] * * * as to all of the lands covered thereby, save and except that portion of said lands hereinafter described, * * *." "In consideration of the premises," the agreement continues, "the parties hereto do hereby mutually agree as follows: The lessee does hereby terminate and surrender all of its right, title and interest in and to said agreement of lease * * * as to all of the lands covered thereby, save and except [Lots 174 and 176] * * *. The lessors hereby accept the foregoing termination and surrender * * * and the parties hereto do hereby mutually release and discharge each other from any and all obligations thereunder with respect to all of the lands covered thereby, save and except that portion of said lands hereinabove specifically described. * * *"

According to respondents, the effect of this agreement was to terminate the entire community lease, including the provision relating to the continued sharing of royalties after a surrender, as to all of the withdrawn lots, including the lot owned by the appellants Olds. Referring to the last provision of the agreement, they contend that when the parties "mutually released and discharged each other from any and all obligations" with respect to the surrendered lands, the appellants thereby released their right to continue to receive a share of the community royalties.

Admittedly this agreement is more than a quitclaim by the lessee since it was executed by all of the parties to the community lease. But its form and terms indicate an intention to affect only the relationship between the lessors, collectively, and the lessee. As to certain lots, the right to explore and drill for oil was terminated, but the rights and obligations of the lessors, among themselves, with respect to the lots remaining under the lease were in no way affected.

In this connection, it should be stated that the surrender agreement was entered into at the request of the lessee. Therefore, it is only reasonable to assume that the agreement was intended to relate only to the rights and duties of the lessee and not to the contractual relationship existing among the lessors themselves. The purpose of the lessee in employing the bilateral form of agreement was to eliminate any question which might well arise as to its rights and duties with reference to the surrendered lots by a unilateral contract. In the agreement executed by the parties the lessors together are designated as "the parties of the first part" and the lessee is referred to as "the party of the second part." The agreement recites that it is made pursuant to the lease, which may only be taken to mean that it was executed in accordance with the provision giving the lessee the right to surrender any portion of the premises. And the lease specifically provides that such surrender shall not affect the existing distribution of royalties.

The respondents attach undue significance to the word "terminate." That word is used several times in the lease itself but only in the sense of dissolving the lessee's relationship thereunder. Bearing in mind that the parties making the mutual release are the lessors together on the one part, and the lessee on the other part, the clause of the agreement whereby "the parties" mutually release and discharge each other from any and all obligations under the lease with respect to the surrendered lands, should be interpreted as meaning that the lessee agrees to a discharge of the lessors' obligation to retain such lots under the lease, and the lessors agree to release the lessee's obligation thereunder.

There is no reasonable basis for construing the provision to mean that the owners of the released lands surrendered their rights as community lessors in the lots retained under the lease. As to those lots, the relationship of the parties continued as before, and the owners of the surrendered lands have the right to participate in all royalties payable under the lease.

[4, 5] However, assuming that there is any ambiguity in the wording of the surrender agreement, such ambiguity must be resolved against the construction contended for by the respondents by reason of their conduct thereunder. From June, 1933, until 1938, when this suit was filed, the owners of the surrendered lands, including the appellants Olds, continued regularly to receive their share of the royalties under the lease, and the respondents at no time voiced any objection to this continued apportionment. In the determination of the meaning of a contract claimed to be indefinite, the interpretation placed upon the contract by the parties themselves, as evidenced by their conduct subsequent to its execution, may be considered. Lemm v. Stillwater Land & Cattle Co., 217 Cal. 474, 19 P.2d 785. The present position of the respondents is in direct conflict with their conduct for over five years after the agreement was made. For these reasons, the surrender agreement does not bar the appellants Olds from future participation in the royalties accruing under the community lease.

[6-11] The respondents also contend that the appellants forfeited their right to share in royalties under the lease by producing oil from their surrendered lot and appropriating all of the royalties therefrom to themselves. The underlying intent and purpose of a community lease, they urge, is that each party shall participate in all of the production from any of the lands in proportion to his holdings, and it would be destructive to this fundamental purpose to permit one lessor to retain all of the royalty from oil produced upon his land and at the same time participate in the royalty payable on account of oil produced from the lands of the other lessors.

The argument would be sound if all of the lands upon which oil is being produced were included in the community lease. But since the surrender agreement was executed, the lots mentioned in it have not been a part of the land leased to the Standard Oil Company. The owners of these lots, therefore, might devote them to any profitable use. The community lease contains no provision prohibiting the production of oil from surrendered lots, nor that, in the event of such production, the owners of lands retained under the lease are entitled to participate therein. On the contrary, it particularly specifies that the owners of the surrendered lots shall be entitled to share in royalties under the community lease notwithstanding the surrender.

To sustain the respondents' contention, such a limitation would have to be added to the clause providing for continued apportionment. But in the absence of fraud or mistake, the intention of the parties as expressed in the agreement is controlling, and courts are not empowered under the guise of construction or explanation to depart from the plain meaning of the writing and insert a term or limitation not found therein. Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 128, 48 P.2d 13; Adams v. Cook, 15 Cal.2d 352, 101 P.2d 484. The parties might have added a clause under which an owner of surrendered land would have no further right to royalties in the event that oil was discovered upon it. Certainly such subsequent discovery of oil may not be deemed an unforeseen event and therefore without the contemplation of the parties to a community oil lease. Such a lease is executed by the respective parties to it because of their hope or expectation that oil may be found under some or all of the land leased. But as the parties to the contract now before the court did not limit the rights of an owner of surrendered land, a court may not do so upon a claim that, as events now show, it operates unfairly.

True, courts have frequently considered implied covenants as being within a contract but such covenants are justified only when they are not inconsistent with some express term of the contract and, in the absence of such implied terms, the contract could not be effectively performed. Williston on Contracts, vol. 5, § 1293; Jones v. Interstate Oil Corp., 115 Cal.App. 302, 1 P.2d 1051. But the facts of the present case do not show any basis for implying a covenant in the lease which would have the effect of dividing the royalty provided for in it differently than the parties have agreed upon by the plain terms of their contract.

The respondents would be in an entirely different position if their suit was based upon pleadings and proof that the appellants Olds, by the production of oil on their land, are draining oil from the pool tapped by the wells on lots 174 and 176, and are thus impeding the full performance of the community lease. Every contract contains an implied covenant on the part of each party not to prevent or hinder performance by the other party. Williston on Contracts, vol. 5, § 1293A. Upon fundamental principles, the law will not allow one to claim royalties under a community lease and at the same time diminish the amount of oil which might otherwise be recovered for the common benefit of all the lessors.

For example, in Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 232, 73 P.2d 1163, the defendant leased plaintiff's oil property and also acquired a lease on adjacent land upon which it drilled wells, thereby draining oil from the plaintiff's land. The lease with the plaintiff contained no offset clause. Nevertheless, the court held that a covenant would be implied obligating the lessee to drill wells to offset those on the adjacent property. In the present case, however, no evidence was offered to show that the well on the land of the Olds is draining oil from the source of supply under the community lease, and contrary to the contention of respondents, this court may not take judicial notice of any such alleged fact.

The judgment as to appellant Whittier Building and Loan Association is affirmed; as to appellants Olds, the judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 48

In re MITCHELL'S ESTATE.

MANSON et al. v. HAMILTON.

S. F. 16393.

Supreme Court of California.

March 24, 1942.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑82

An order directing executors to pay to broker commission on sale of realty owned by decedent's estate was appealable under provision of Probate Code authorizing appeal from order instructing or directing an executor or administrator. Probate Code, §§ 760, 1240.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑97

The fact that letter, listing property of decedent's estate for sale by real estate broker, did not expressly provide for a commission and provide that such commission should be paid out of proceeds of sale, did not preclude recovery of commission by broker who was procuring cause of the sale, on ground that agency contract was not in compliance with the applicable provision of the Probate Code. Probate Code, § 760.

3. Statutes 🔑227

The word "shall" used in statute may be merely directory, and whether it should be construed as "mandatory" or "directory" depends on intention of legislature in enacting the statute.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Directory", "Mandatory", and "Shall".

4. Statutes 🔑183

The cardinal canon of interpretation of a statute requires that the Supreme Court give effect to intention of the lawmakers although it may seem opposed to the letter of the statute.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑97

The statute authorizing executor to enter into contract with broker to secure purchaser for realty owned by decedent's estate, which contract "shall" provide for payment of commission to broker out of proceeds of sale to any purchaser secured by him, is "mandatory" only in so far as it imposes limitation on source of payment of the commission, and the statute does not require contract executed by executors to recite that the commission shall be paid out of proceeds of sale. Probate Code, § 760.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. L. Harris, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of James McL. Mitchell, deceased, wherein Phillip I. Manson and others, executors, opposed payment to O. L. Hamilton of a commission for consummating a sale of realty of the estate in the course of the administration thereof. From an order directing executors to pay the commission, the executors appeal.

Affirmed.

For prior opinion, see, Cal.App., 115 P. 2d 27.

Thos. A. Allan and Manson & Allan, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Stanley Pedder and Kenneth Ferguson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

The executors of the will of James McL. Mitchell, deceased, appeal from an order directing them to pay to the respondent a real estate commission on the sale of real property consummated and confirmed by the court in the course of the administration of the estate of the decedent.

The respondent, a duly licensed real estate agent, was employed under a contract in writing to sell a ranch belonging to the estate. The authorization was contained in a letter written by one of the executors in response to a letter of the respondent requesting authority to list the property. The executor wrote: "We refer you to your letter of December 1, 1938, in which you inquired of the James McL. Mitchell ranch near Morgan Hill. We would be pleased to list this property with you for sale. For your information the inheritance appraisal on this property is $34,000.00 Any sale would be subject to court approval, and all offers should be accompanied by a check for not less than 10 per cent of the offered price. Before taking any client to the property it will be necessary to make an appointment with Mrs. Mitchell, who is now residing on the premises."

The respondent showed the property to Mrs. Doudell and her son. Mrs. Doudell eventually purchased the property from the executors. In confirming the sale the probate court found that the authority of the respondent to show the property was legally sufficient, that the respondent was the procuring cause of the sale, and was entitled to a commission of five per cent of the purchase price of $30,600.

[1] The contention is made by the respondent that the order directing the executors to pay the commission is not an appealable order. The 1935 amendment to section 1240 of the Probate Code provides that an order instructing or directing an executor or administrator is appealable. Howaldt v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 114, 114 P.2d 333; Estate of Keet, 15 Cal.2d 328, 100 P.2d 1045. The order appealed from should be deemed such an order.

The appellants contend that the agency contract was not in compliance with section 760 of the Probate Code, and was therefore void. That section provides: "The executor or administrator may enter into a written contract with any bona fide agent to secure a purchaser for any real or personal property of the estate, which contract shall provide for the payment to such agent out of the proceeds of a sale to any purchaser secured by him of a commission, the amount of which must be fixed and allowed by the court upon confirmation of the sale; and when said sale is confirmed to such purchaser, such contract shall be binding and valid as against the estate for the amount so allowed by the court. By the execution of any such contract no personal liability shall attach to the executor or administrator, and no liability of any kind shall be incurred by the estate unless an actual sale is made and confirmed by the court." (Emphasis added.)

[2] It is true that the contract here does not expressly provide for a commission and that such commission shall be paid out of the proceeds of the sale. However, a proper application of the code section does not require a holding that the contract here involved was void because the substance of the clause which we have italicized in the foregoing quotation was not copied into the contract.

Although the parties did not expressly provide for a commission, it is not seriously questioned that a commission was intended, if a sale was consummated and confirmed by the court. The exchange of letters clearly indicated that a commission was contemplated. A statement therein of the amount of the commission would be nugatory, for the reason that the statute requires the court to fix the commission upon the confirmation of the sale.

Prior to the enactment of section 1559 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now section 760 of the Probate Code), it was held that an executor or administrator could not bind the estate by a contract for a broker's commission on the sale of real property. Hickman-Coleman Co. v. Leggett, 10 Cal.App. 29, 100 P. 1072; Estate of Shaw, 85 Cal.App. 518, 524, 260 P. 351. One of the purposes of the amendment was to authorize executors and administrators to bind the estate by such contracts subject to approval by the court.

[3, 4] Furthermore the words, "shall provide for the payment to such agent out of the proceeds of a sale to any purchaser secured by him of a commission * * *" as used in this section are not necessarily mandatory in the sense urged by the appellants. The word "shall" has been held in some cases to be merely directory. Pappadatos v. Superior Court, 209 Cal. 334, 335, 287 P. 342; Rutledge v. City of Eureka, 195 Cal. 404, 424, 234 P. 82. Whether it should be construed to be mandatory or directory depends on the intention of the legislature in enacting the section. In re Chadbourne's Estate, 15 Cal.App. 363, 114 P. 1012, 1014. In the last cited case it was stated: "We must assume that the Legislature had before it this policy of the law when it enacted the statute in controversy. And, while the language upon its face seems to be mandatory, the cardinal canon of interpretation requires, of course, that we give effect to the intention of the lawmakers, though it may seem opposed to the letter of the statute," citing Chauncey v. Dyke Bros., 8 Cir., 119 Fed. 1, 9, 55 C.C.A. 579.

The appellants rely on the case of Wilson v. Fleming, 106 Cal.App. 542, 289 P. 658, 661, as support for their contention that the contract must recite that the commission be paid out of the proceeds of the sale. In that case the statute was invoked to protect the estate from a claim for commission under a contract which was different from the contract authorized by the statute and where no actual sale was made within the meaning of its provisions. The court said that the contract should provide that the commission be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, but its failure to so provide was not the ground of the decision. The court's statement meant no more than that the statute provided a limitation on the power of the executors and of the courts in authorizing commissions for the sale of real estate under written contracts of agency. In that case it was also recognized that "this section is by law a part of any such contract, and the provisions" of the section "must be read into" the contract, citing Caine v. Polkinghorn, 54 Cal.App. 387, 201 P. 936. The cases relied on by the executors do not support a conclusion that the contract was void because it omitted expressly to include the provisions of the statute.

[5] In this case the words of section 760 are to be considered as mandatory only in so far as they impose a limitation on the source of payment of the commissions, that is, solely from the proceeds of the sale.

We conclude that the statute effects the inclusion of the limitation in the contract and that failure to include it in the writing does not render the contract void.

The order is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CURTIS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

* * *

19 Cal.2d 713

ROSE et al. v. STATE et al.

S. F. 16040.

Supreme Court of California.

March 4, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 2, 1942.

1. Eminent domain 🔑4
States 🔑4

All powers not granted by the Constitution of the United States to the federal government are reserved to the states, and the power of eminent domain is one of such reserved powers.

2. Eminent domain 🔑1

The power of "eminent domain" does not depend for its existence on a specific grant in the constitution of a state, and is inherent in the sovereign state and founded on the law of necessity, but such power may be limited by constitutional provision.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Eminent Domain".

3. Eminent domain 🔑70

The constitutional prohibition against taking or damaging private property for public use without just compensation is a restriction placed on the state and upon all its agencies who derive from it their power of eminent domain. Const. art. 1, § 14.

4. Eminent domain 🔑70

Failure of the legislature to enact a statute allowing suit against the state to recover value of private property taken or damaged for public use does not entitle the state to disregard the constitutional limitation on the state, requiring that just compensation be paid for private property taken or damaged for public use. Const. art. 1, § 14.

5. Constitutional law 🔑32
Eminent domain 🔑266
States 🔑191(1)

The constitutional provision against taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation is self-executing and by such provision, state has indicated its consent to be sued thereunder. Const. art. 1, § 14.

6. States 🔑191(1), 200

The constitutional provision that suits may be brought against the state in such manner and in such courts as shall be directed by law is not "mandatory" but is "permissive", and enables the legislature to specify what suits, other than those already provided for, might be brought against the state, and prescribes manner for so doing and the courts having jurisdiction thereof. Const. art. 20, § 6.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Mandatory" and "Permissive".

7. Constitutional law 🔑32

The constitutional provision that suits may be brought against the state in such manner and in such courts as shall be directed by law, does not require enactment of a statute permitting suit to be brought to secure right granted in constitutional provision against taking or damaging of property for public use without just compensation. Const. art. 1, § 14; art. 20, § 6.

8. Statutes 🔑181(1)

The language of a statute should never be so construed as to nullify the will of the legislature. Code Civ.Proc. § 1859.

9. Constitutional law 🔑15
Statutes 🔑174, 181(1, 2), 231

Statutes must be given a reasonable interpretation, and one which will carry out the intent of the legislators and render them valid and operative rather than defeat them, and sections of the constitution, as well as of the codes, will be harmonized where reasonably possible, in order that they all may stand.

10. Statutes 🔑207

A general provision of a statute is controlled by one that is special, and such special provision is treated as an exception to the general provision, and a specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject, as against a general provision, although the general provision, standing alone, would be broad enough to include subject to which a more particular provision related.

11. Constitutional law 🔑26

A constitutional right may be subject to reasonable rules and regulations for the enforcement or protection thereof.

12. Constitutional law 🔑36

The legislature by statutory enactment may not abrogate or deny a right granted by the constitution, and a right constitutionally granted cannot be taken away by failure of the legislature to act.

13. Eminent domain 🔑70

The constitutional provisions against taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation were not enacted to protect sovereign state, but were enacted to protect individual rights of subjects of the sovereign. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

14. Eminent domain 🔑266
States 🔑191(1)

No distinction can be drawn between suits against agencies of the state, and suits against state itself as affecting right to sue to recover compensation for the taking or damaging of private property for public use without just compensation. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

15. Eminent domain 🔑271

That property owner can, prior to construction of improvement in street fronting his property, either seek to enjoin construction of the improvement or sue for consequential damages does not preclude property owners from suing to recover consequential damages resulting from the construction of a subway in street fronting their property.

16. Highways 🔑86
Municipal corporations 🔑665

The owner of property fronting on a street or highway has as appurtenant thereto certain private easements in the street in front of or adjacent to the lot, distinguished from the public easements therein, which are a part of his property. Const. art. 1, § 14.

17. Eminent domain 🔑105, 106
Municipal corporations 🔑665, 669

Property which an abutting owner has in the street in front of his land is the right of access and of light and air, and for an infringement of such rights he is entitled to compensation. Const. art. 1, § 14.

18. Highways 🔑85

An abutting owner's "easement of access" is an easement in public highway upon which his land fronts, and it is as a matter of law peculiar to the individual owner, and an unreasonable interference with such an easement is an injury necessarily different from the injury suffered by general public.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Easement of Access".

19. Highways 🔑85

An abutting owner's "easement of access" extends to a use of public highway upon which his land fronts for purposes of ingress and egress to his property by such modes of conveyance and travel as are appropriate to the highway and in such manner as is customary or reasonable.

20. Eminent domain 🔑106
Municipal corporations 🔑669

Abutting property owners possessed as a matter of law not only right to use of streets in common with other members of the public, but also a private right, known as "easement of access", which right may not be taken away or destroyed or substantially impaired or interfered with for public purposes without just compensation therefor. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

21. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

Where there is evidence to support a finding that substantial and unreasonable interference with landowner's easement of access has been caused as result of an obstruction in street or highway on which property abuts, an appellate court will not say as a matter of law that such finding is erroneous.

22. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)

In action by abutting property owners for damages allegedly sustained as result of construction in street fronting their property of a subway and blind side lanes on each side of subway, whether abutting owners' "easement of access" to street fronting their property was impaired by the construction, and, if so, amount of damage suffered as result of such interference, were matters for trier of the facts. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

23. Eminent domain 🔑300

Evidence supported finding that abutting property owners' "easement of access" was substantially impaired by construction in street fronting their property of a subway and blind side lanes on each side of subway, so as to entitle owners to recover compensation from the state. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

24. Damages 🔑3
Eminent domain 🔑69

The rule of "damnum absque injuria", which means merely that a person may suffer damages and be without remedy because no legal right established by law and possessed by him has been invaded, or the person causing the damage owes no duty known to the law to refrain from doing the act causing the damage, has no application, where person suffering the damage has a property right, and the duty is imposed by constitution on person causing the damage to refrain from causing it without payment of compensation.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Damnum Absque Injuria".

25. Damages 🔑208(1)
Eminent domain 🔑307(2)

Whether a person suffering damage has a property right, and whether duty is imposed by constitution on person causing the damage to refrain from causing it without payment of compensation, so that rule of "damnum absque injuria" is not applicable, is a "question of fact".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

26. Highways 🔑85
Municipal corporations 🔑669

The rights of property owner to access to abutting street or highway are the same whether property is situated on a street in business district of a large city or in residential district of a small town, although extent of damage for interference therewith might be different.

27. Eminent domain 🔑2(6)

Property owners whose easements of access were substantially impaired by construction in street fronting their property of a subway were not barred from recovery of compensation on ground that the damage occurred as result of an exercise of "police power", and was "damnum absque injuria", where there was no element of regulation or no suggestion of anything in nature of an emergency in the taking. Const. art. 1, §§ 13, 14.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Police Power".

28. Constitutional law 🔑81

Generally, "police power" operates in the field of regulation, except possibly in some cases of emergency such as conflagration or flood when private property may be temporarily used or damaged or even destroyed to prevent loss of life or to protect the remaining property of an entire locality.

29. Eminent domain 🔑2(1)

Although the seeming absolute protection against taking or damaging of private property for public use provided for in state constitution may be qualified by the "police power" in the area in which such power operates, the police power doctrine cannot be invoked in the taking or damaging of private property in the construction of a public improvement where no emergency exists. Const. art. 1, § 14.

30. Appeal and error 🔑1171(2)

In property owners' suit to recover damages to right of access to property resulting from construction of a subway in street fronting their property, Supreme Court would not disturb finding that property owners' frontage was 120 feet, where reference to maps in evidence revealed that frontage was recorded thereon as 118 feet, plus or minus, and any discrepancy was so small as to come within "de minimus rule".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "De Minimus Rule".

31. Evidence ⟹568(4), 571(7)

In property owners' suit to recover damages allegedly resulting from construction of a subway in street fronting property, trial court was not bound by opinion of witnesses on market value of property, but province of such testimony was to aid court in arriving at a conclusion.

32. Eminent domain ⟹307(1)

Information obtained by trial judge who visited premises alleged to have been damaged by erection of subway in street fronting premises could be taken into consideration in determining extent of damages.

33. Eminent domain ⟹300

In property owners' suit to recover damages for impairment of their easement of access resulting from construction of subway in street fronting their property, evidence sustained trial court's findings as to amount of damages, where trial court viewed premises, and total damages awarded was within scope of testimony of valuation witnesses.

34. Evidence ⟹555

In property owners' suit to recover damages allegedly resulting from construction of a subway in street fronting property, the diversion of traffic as result of subway was not a proper element to be considered by witnesses in computing damages.

35. Eminent domain ⟹131

Where private property is taken for a public use, compensation required is to be measured by market value of property taken.

36. Eminent domain ⟹141(1)

Where private property is taken for public use and damage results to the remaining property of landowner, compensation for such damage must be awarded which is measured by diminution in value of that property which remains.

37. Eminent domain ⟹141(1)

If a state is required to make compensation for damage to private property resulting from a public use, where no property is actually taken, measure of damages generally applied is the diminution in value of the property caused by the public use, regardless whether provisions requiring compensation for damage are constitutional or statutory.

38. Damages ⟹18

Generally, where necessity for assessing damage to private property arises apart from any taking of property by public authority, owner has no right to recover for remote or speculative elements of damage.

39. Damages ⟹103, 174(1)

Where recovery of damages depends upon infringement of some right which property owner possesses in connection with his property, although measure of damages is generally the diminution in market value, evidence relied upon to establish such diminution must be based upon depreciation flowing from the actionable injury which is the basis for the right to recover damages.

40. Trial ⟹93

A motion to strike testimony must be directed with precision to the matters sought to be stricken.

41. Trial ⟹96

A motion to strike out inadmissible evidence may be properly denied where it is general and embraces evidence which is admissible as well as that which is inadmissible.

42. Appeal and error ⟹1050(1)

In property owners' suit to recover damages resulting from construction of a subway in street fronting property, error, if any, in permitting witness to consider diversion of traffic as result of the subway in computing damages was not prejudicial, where it appeared that plaintiffs had two witnesses, in addition to witness who considered diversion of traffic in computing damages, and that amount of damages found to have been suffered was considerably less than that appearing in their testimony, and that trial court viewed the property and arrived at its own judgment as to extent of damages suffered.

43. Appeal and error ⟹1032(1)

Appellant has burden of showing wherein it was injured, and injury will not be presumed from error.

GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting; HOUSER, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Mary V. Rose and others against the State of California and others for damages allegedly sustained as the result of street improvements. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Prior opinions, 94 P.2d 1058, and 105 P.2d 302.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellants.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., William H. Neal and Leon T. David, Asst. City Attys., and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, John J. O'Toole, City Atty., Henry Heidelberg, and Albert F. Skelly, Deputy City Atty., all of San Francisco, Hugh B. Bradford, City Atty., of Sacramento, Archer Bowden, City Atty., of San Jose, F. Bert Fernoff, City Atty., of Oakland, Raymond M. Dunne, City Atty., of Stockton, C. M. Ozias, City Atty., of Fresno, J. Allen Davis, of Los Angeles, and George E. Sandford, of San Francisco, amici curiae on behalf of appellants.

John T. Wentz and Booth B. Goodman, both of Oakland, for respondents.

Thos. J. Straub, of San Francisco, and W. K. Dunn, Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Stanley S. Burrill, Charles P. McCarthy, Kenneth K. Wright, and Meserve, Mumper & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action for damages allegedly sustained as the result of the construction of an improvement in the street fronting plaintiffs' property.

This is one of a series of similar actions brought against the defendants by the owners of property fronting upon Jackson Street, in the town of Hayward in Alameda County, to secure compensation for damage allegedly caused by the construction of a subway or underpass in the center of Jackson Street. Although the actions were tried separately, and are before this court on separate appeals, the facts, rights and liabilities involved in each are substantially the same; therefore, the law applicable to each will be fully considered and determined herein.

Plaintiffs are and at all times pertinent to this action were the owners of approximately 3.05 acres of land fronting some 118 feet on Jackson Street in the town of Hayward. The property is devoted to a fruit orchard and is improved by a five room residence, windmill, tankhouse and barn, but has been zoned as "industrial property."

Jackson Street runs from East 14th Street in Hayward to Mt. Eden where it connects with the highway leading to the San Mateo toll bridge. During the month of December, 1935, the defendant, State of California, acting through its Department of Public Works, and under the authority of the Railroad Commission, awarded a contract for the building of a subway to eliminate a crossing at grade of Jackson Street and the tracks of the Western Pacific Railroad Company. Plaintiffs' property lies adjacent to the right of way of said railroad company on the north side thereof, and on the east side of Jackson Street. The entire parcel is opposite the approach to the subway. In front of plaintiffs' property Jackson Street is 66 feet wide. The subway, 24 feet in width, is located in the center of Jackson Street. It descends under the railroad tracks of said company to a depth of approximately 16½ feet, then ascends again to grade beyond said railroad tracks. On each side of the subway are "blind" lanes, 14.5 feet in width, which do not cross the tracks, but serve the owners of property adjacent thereto as means of ingress and egress to and from Jackson Street and their respective parcels of land.

The amended complaint alleges that the construction of the subway resulted in an impairment of plaintiffs' access to Jackson Street with a consequent depreciation in the market value of their property in the sum of $5,000. The case was tried by the court without a jury and from a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants prosecute this appeal.

Defendants maintain that their demurrer to the amended complaint should have been sustained on the ground that the trial court had no jurisdiction of these defendants nor of the subject of this action, and that the amended complaint did not state a cause of action. It is their position that plaintiffs' property has not been damaged, but, that even if it had been damaged, plaintiffs have no remedy because the state cannot be sued without its express consent, and no such consent has been given.

Plaintiffs on the other hand contend that they have suffered a damage peculiar to their individual property in that their means of ingress and egress thereto has been impaired; that they have thus been deprived of their property without just compensation in violation of article I, sections 13 and 14 of the Constitution of California, and the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and that this cause of action may be brought under said article I, section 14 of the Constitution of California.

Two major questions then are presented by this appeal: (1) Is section 14 of article I of the Constitution of California self-executing? and (2) have the plaintiffs herein sustained a compensable damage within the meaning of said constitutional provision?

As to the first question our answer must be in the affirmative.

[1, 2] Under our system of government all powers not granted by the Constitution of the United States to the federal government are reserved to the states, and the power of eminent domain is one of those reserved powers. It does not as a consequence depend for its existence upon a specific grant in the constitution of a state. Instead, it is inherent in the sovereign state and founded upon the law of necessity. This power, however, may be limited by constitutional provision, and it has been held that a constitutional provision for the payment of compensation is a limitation aimed by the Constitution at the power of eminent domain, limiting the exercise of that power by the public in favor of the individual owner of property. Commonwealth v. Plymouth Coal Co., 232 Pa. 141, 81 A. 148, affirmed 232 U.S. 531, 34 S.Ct. 359, 58 L.Ed. 713; 18 Am.Jur. 635.

[3] It is plain from a reading of the following portion thereof that section 14 of article I is such a limitation:

"Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner * * *; provided, that in any proceeding in eminent domain brought by the State, or a county, or a municipal corporation, or metropolitan water district, municipal utility district, municipal water district, drainage, irrigation, levee, reclamation or water conservation district, or similar public corporation, the aforesaid State or municipality or county or public corporation or district aforesaid may take immediate possession and use of any right of way or lands to be used for reservoir purposes, required for a public use whether the fee thereof or an easement therefor be sought upon first commencing eminent domain proceedings according to law in a court of competent jurisdiction and thereupon giving such security in the way of money deposited as the court in which such proceedings are pending may direct, and in such amounts as the court may determine to be reasonably adequate to secure to the owner of the property sought to be taken immediate payment of just compensation for such taking and any damage incident thereto, including damages sustained by reason of an adjudication that there is no necessity for taking the property, as soon as the same can be ascertained according to law. * * *"

[4, 5] Since article I, section 14, therefore, is a restriction placed by the Constitution upon the State itself, and upon all of its agencies who derive from it their power of eminent domain, it cannot be said that the mere failure of the legislature to enact a statute allowing suit to be brought against the state entitles the state to disregard and violate that limitation. The logical inference is that said constitutional provision is intended to be self-enforcing.

In fact this court has already held section 14 of article I to be self-executing. Weber v. County of Santa Clara, 59 Cal. 265; Trahern v. San Joaquin County, 59 Cal. 320. Shortly after this constitutional enactment was adopted there arose a question as to whether section 14 of article I, or an act of the legislature which had previously been in effect, was controlling in the matter of condemning land for road purposes. Of said section 14, article I, this court in the case of Weber v. County of Santa Clara, supra, said: "The constitutional provision is prohibitory in its nature and is self-executing; it is in direct conflict with the Act of March 18th, 1874, and by necessary operation repeals the same. The Constitution contemplates and provides for a proceeding in Court in all cases where private property is sought to be taken for public use, and it prohibits any other proceeding to that end."

In the case of Trahern v. San Joaquin County, 59 Cal. 320, it was claimed that section 14 of article I was not self-executing. The appellant contended therein that the language—"as shall be prescribed by law"—in said section evidently contemplated some act of legislation on the subject, and until that had taken place no damages could be assessed in pursuance of the constitutional provision. The court, however, decided to the contrary, on the authority of the Weber case, cited and quoted supra. This court is not alone in holding such a constitutional provision self-executing. As to those cases in which, like the case at bar, the injury is consequential—damaging rather than a taking, it is said in 18 Am.Jur. at page 1028: "When there is no actual occupancy of the land * * * and the injury is not so severe as to constitute a taking in the constitutional sense, in the states which, by their Constitutions, require compensation when property is damaged, it is settled that the constitutional provision may be invoked in a proceeding other than an eminent domain proceeding. Under such a constitutional guaranty, the right to recover in an action in damages for consequential injury has been sustained in a number of cases. It is held that the constitutional provision is self-executing; that is, that even if a statute has not been enacted providing a remedy for damage from the construction of public works, the landowner is entitled to enforce his constitutional right to compensation in a common-law action." Board of Com'rs of Logan County v. Adler, 69 Colo. 290, 194 P. 621, 20 A.L.R. 512; Hickman v. Kansas City, 120 Mo. 110, 25 S.W. 225, 23 L.R.A. 658, 41 Am.St.Rep. 684; Chester County v. Brower, 117 Pa. 647, 12 A. 577, 2 Am.St.Rep. 713; Swift & Co. v. Newport News, 105 Va. 108, 52 S.E. 821, 3 L.R.A.,N.S., 404; Johnson v. Parkersburg, 16 W.Va. 402, 37 Am.Rep. 779; Washington Water Power Co. v. Waters, C.C., 186 F. 572; Campbell v. Arkansas State Highway Commission, 183 Ark. 780, 38 S.W.2d 753; City of Elgin v. Eaton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am.Rep. 412; McGrew v. Granite Bituminous Pav. Co., 247 Mo. 549, 155 S.W. 411; State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 224 Mo. 393, 123 S.W. 892; Householder v. Kansas City, 83 Mo. 488; Chick Springs Water Co. v. State Highway Dept., 159 S.C. 481, 157 S.E. 842.

The above-cited cases appear to be the leading authorities holding that a constitutional provision such as article I, section 14 of our Constitution is self-executing, but there are many other cases to this effect. Many of these authorities are collected in the case of Chick Springs Water Co. v. State Highway Dept., supra.

In support of their contention that a sovereign state can not be sued without its express consent, defendant cites Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330, 55 S.Ct. 432, 79 L.Ed. 912, 95 A.L.R. 1335, in which it was determined that a holder of a federal government bond providing for payment in gold coin of standard weight and fineness could not sue the United States government after deflation of the dollar for the reason that Congress had not passed a statute authorizing such an action. This case, however, does not involve a constitutional provision such as article I, section 14, and is not in point in the view we have taken of this case—that the State of California by said self-executing provision of its Constitution has indicated its consent to be sued thereunder.

As further authority for their position that the right granted by constitutional article I, section 14, may not be enforced without specific legislation providing the method of enforcing it, defendant has cited Spinney v. Griffith, 98 Cal. 149, 32 P. 974, and Bailey Ornamental Iron Co. v. Goldschmidt, 33 Cal. App. 661, 166 P. 363. In these cases actions were brought under section 15 of article XX of the Constitution, providing for various mechanics liens and stating that "the Legislature shall provide, by law, for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens." The legislature failed to enact such legislation and the courts held that the constitutional provision conferred no right whatever, but that the whole remedy was contingent upon statutory enactment. These cases clearly are different from the one at bar for they are concerned with a constitutional section wherein it is specifically provided that the legislature should provide a method for the enforcement of the right granted. Section 14 of article I contains no such mandate. The court in the Spinney case, supra, correctly held that the statute was not self-executing, that the plaintiff therein did not comply with the terms of the legislative enactment applicable to the enforcement of a lien and was therefore not entitled to defend his lien. This decision was followed in the Bailey case, supra, which also held that the constitutional provision was inoperative except as supplemented by legislative action and that it was not intended to be self-executing.

Defendants' attempt to distinguish decisions of other states holding a constitutional provision similar to article I, section 14 to be self-executing on the ground that the constitutions of said states do not contain a provision similar to article XX, section 6, of our Constitution. The language of said section is as follows: "Suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as shall be directed by law."

It is defendants' contention that the state, a sovereign body, cannot be sued without its express consent; that article XX, section 6 empowers the legislature to determine when and how suits may be brought against the state; that the legislature in Political Code, section 688, the only general statute on the subject, has seen fit to permit suits against the state only where the actions are on express contract or for negligence.

[6] In passing it may be noted that article XX, section 6 does not on its face appear to be mandatory and direct that "all suits against the State must be brought in such manner. * * *" On the contrary the wording of said section, and the fact that it is located in the portion of the constitution devoted to a discussion of "Miscellaneous subjects", tends rather to give the impression that said section was intended to be permissive, that is, to enable the legislature to specify what suits, other than those already provided for, might be brought against the state, and to prescribe the manner for so doing, and the courts having jurisdiction thereof.

Application of the rules of statutory interpretation to the two constitutional provisions under discussion does not disturb our conclusion as to the self-enforcing character of article I, section 14.

[7-9] As is declared in the Code of Civil Procedure, section 1859, "In the construction of a statute the intention of the legislature * * * is to be pursued, if possible." Certainly the language of a statute should never be so construed as to nullify the will of the legislature. If section 6 of article XX is to be construed as requiring the enactment of a statute permitting suit to be brought to secure the right granted in section 14 of article I, the effect would be to permit the legislature, by its refusal or neglect to act, to nullify the intent of the framers of the Constitution. Such a result would be inconsonant with the rule that statutes must be given a reasonable interpretation, one which will carry out the intent of the legislators and render them valid and operative, rather than defeat them. In so doing, sections of the Constitution, as well as of the codes, will be harmonized where reasonably possible, in order that all may stand.

[10] It is well settled, also, that a general provision is controlled by one that is special, the latter being treated as an exception to the former. A specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject, as against a general provision, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provision relates.

Further discussion of the interpretation of article I, section 14 is unnecessary for it cannot but be obvious that it must be regarded as self-enforcing in order to effectuate its evident objects and purposes.

After pointing out that Political Code section 688 permits suits against the state only on express contract or for negligence, defendants cite Pacific G. & E. Co. v. State, 214 Cal. 369, 6 P.2d 78, to the effect that section 688 of the Political Code as it now stands grants permission to sue the state only upon express contract; and further cite United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 112 U.S. 645, 5 S.Ct. 306, 28 L.Ed. 846, 848, and Crescent Wharf, etc. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 207 Cal. 430, 278 P. 1028, to the effect that a suit such as the one brought herein by the plaintiffs is an action on implied contract, which on the authority of Crescent Wharf, etc., Co. v. City of Los Angeles, supra, may not be instituted under Political Code section 688.

Defendants continue, maintaining that the case last cited holds that rights granted by section 14 of article I of the Constitution are not superior to or in any different category from other property rights, and that a suit to recover damages for an infringement upon said rights, as a consequence, does not stand in any different light than any other class of suit, and may not be brought against the State of California without its express consent.

While we are familiar with the decisions mentioned above we are not entirely in accord with the view that an action in the nature of inverse condemnation, such as the one with which we are herein concerned, is strictly a suit on implied contract. We are more inclined to hold that the constitutional provision itself grants a cause of action—statutory in nature. However, since it has been held that under a self-executing constitutional provision, an action will lie at common-law to recover compensation for private property taken or damaged for public use, we do not find it necessary to rule on that question in order to reach a decision in this case.

We do, however, wish to point out that this court in the Crescent Wharf case, supra, merely declared that the respect in which the right to compensation under constitutional article I, Section 14 is not superior to or in a different category from other property rights is that such a right is not exempt from reasonable statutory regulations or enactments. In said case the regulation was a statute of limitations.

[11] We are entirely in accord with that view. That a constitutional right may be subject to reasonable rules and regulations for the enforcement or protection thereof is elementary. A recent decision of this court in the case of Chesney v. Byram, 15 Cal.2d 460, 101 P.2d 1106, which cites the Crescent Wharf case, has held that a right granted by a constitutional provision may be subject to reasonable regulation and control by the state legislature and at the same time such provision may be self-executing.

[12] It will be noted, however, that in neither of said cases did the court in any way imply that by state legislation or a lack thereof a constitutional right might be taken away or denied altogether, for it is likewise elementary that the legislature by statutory enactment may not abrogate or deny a right granted by the Constitution. Potter v. Ames, 43 Cal. 75; Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 116 P. 750; Sievers v. Root, 10 Cal.App. 337, 101 P. 925. And it follows as a logical conclusion that a right constitutionally granted cannot be taken away by the failure of the legislature to act.

[13] As stated in the case of State v. Fletcher, 168 Okl. 538, 34 P.2d 595, the constitutional provisions in question were not enacted to protect in any way the sovereign state, but were specifically enacted to protect and preserve the individual rights of the subjects of the sovereign. Certainly, in the absence of provision in the section itself, the framers of the Constitution did not intend to grant a right which the legislature by its refusal or neglect to enact proper remedial machinery therefor might take away or deny.

[14] Defendant has attempted to distinguish suits against agencies of the state from suits against the state itself, contending that though they admittedly may be maintained against the former, they cannot be brought against the latter without its express consent because of its sovereign nature.

This same argument was advanced in the case of Chick Springs Water Co. v. State Highway Department, supra [159 S. C. 481, 157 S.E. 850], and we believe, ably answered in the opinion therein, as follows:

"No valid distinction can be drawn between cities, counties, and other political subdivisions * * * and the state highway * * *. All are agencies of the state, and all derive their immunity from the same source, the state, and upon the ground that, being agencies of the state, they are in effect the state itself. Counties, cities, and other political subdivisions are held liable where they take property, not upon the ground that they are authorized by statute to be sued, but because of the constitutional provision requiring compensation to be made for such taking. This protection is afforded to the humblest citizen by the Constitutions of the state and the United States, and neither government can itself or by any statute or through any agency take property without paying compensation. 'Immunity from suit' cannot avail in this instance, and, if no statute exists, liability still exists, because as to this provision the Constitutions are self-executing.

"To hold otherwise would be to say that the Constitution itself gives a right which the Legislature may deny by failing or refusing to provide a remedy. Such a construction would indeed make the constitutional provision a hollow mockery instead of a safeguard for the rights of citizens.

"No court has ever applied the doctrine of immunity from suit to cases like the one at bar, nor can they, for to do so would absolutely annul the provision of article 1, § 17, of the Constitution."

[15] It is urged by the defendants that inasmuch as plaintiffs in this state can either enjoin or sue for damages in cases such as this (Wilcox v. Engebretsen, supra; Rockridge Place Co. v. Oakland, 61 Cal.App. 791, 216 P. 64), plaintiffs are not entirely without a remedy.

It must be pointed out, however, that in many cases of consequential damage the remedy of injunction alone would be comparable to no remedy at all—for prior to the construction of the improvement which causes the injury it may not be apparent that damage will result, or if it is obvious that damage will result, it may be impossible to ascertain the extent thereof.

[16] We proceed next to a consideration of the question whether or not plaintiffs have sustained a compensable damage within the meaning of article I, section 14 of the Constitution.

That the owner of property fronting upon a street or highway has as appurtenant thereto certain private easements in the street in front of or adjacent to the lot—distinguished from the public easements therein—which are a part and portion of his property and are the private property of the lot owner as fully as the lot itself, is not open to question.

[17] The nature of this property right is described in Brown v. Board of Supervisors, 124 Cal. 274, at page 280, 57 P. 82, 83, as: "The property which an abutting owner has in the street in front of his land is the right of access and of light and air, and for an infringement of these rights he is entitled to compensation. This right is peculiar and individual to the abutting owner, differing from the right of passing to and fro upon the street, which he enjoys in common with the public, and any infringement thereof gives him a right of action. Dill.Mun.Corp., § 712. In Eachus v. [Los Angeles Cons. El.] Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 P. 750 [42 Am.St.Rep. 149], the right which the abutting owner has to the use of the street fronting upon his lot is defined to be an easement therein for the purposes of ingress and egress, which attaches to the lot, and in which he has a right of property as fully as that which he has in the lot itself, and any act of the municipality by which that easement is destroyed or substantially impaired for the benefit of the public is a damage to the lot itself, within the meaning of the constitutional provision, for which he is entitled to compensation." See, also, McCandless v. City of Los Angeles, 214 Cal. 67, 4 P.2d 139; Eachus v. City of Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 492, 62 P. 829, 80 Am.St. Rep. 147; Geurkink v. City of Petaluma, 112 Cal. 306, 44 P. 570; Wilcox v. Engebretsen, supra; Lane v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 208 Cal. 29, 280 P. 109; McQuillan, Municipal Corporations, 2d Ed., vol. 4, pp. 79, 85; Nichols, Eminent Domain, 2d Ed., p. 503; Lewis, Eminent Domain, 3d Ed., p. 177.

[18-20] The abutting owner's easement of access arises as a matter of law (Lewis, supra, p. 186), and its nature and extent have been set forth in the numerous decisions which have considered the question. Thus, it is established that the easement of access is as a matter of law peculiar to the individual owner, and an unreasonable interference with such an easement is an injury necessarily different from the injury suffered by the general public. Brown v. Board, supra, 124 Cal. page 280, 57 P. 82. It is an easement in the public highway upon which his land fronts. Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., supra, 103 Cal. page 617, 37 P. 750, 42 Am.St.Rep. 149; Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 118, 122, 92 P. 70, 125 Am.St.Rep. 47; Lane v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., supra, 208 Cal. page 33, 280 P. 109; McCandless v. City of Los Angeles, supra. The right extends to a use of the highway for purposes of ingress and egress to his property by such modes of conveyance and travel as are appropriate to the highway and in such manner as is customary or reasonable. See Lewis, Eminent Domain, 3d Ed., p. 190. The application of that rule to the case at bar means that the plaintiffs, as abutting owners on Jackson Street, possess as a matter of law not only the right to the use of the street in common with other members of the public, but also a private right or easement for the purposes of ingress and egress to and from their lot, which right may not be taken away or destroyed or substantially impaired or interfered with for public purposes without just compensation therefor.

Defendants contend that this court should hold as a matter of law that there was no interference with plaintiffs' easement of access or right of ingress and egress in this case, and also that the evidence does not sustain a finding of such interference. The former contention is based upon the theory that plaintiffs' easement merely entitles them to cross from their own property onto the street or highway on which it abuts. It is also claimed by defendants that whatever circuity of travel is caused thereafter is merely an inconvenience suffered after reaching the street or highway. These contentions cannot be sustained as the trial court found in the case at bar that plaintiffs' easement of access or right of ingress and egress was substantially impaired by the construction of the subway, and this finding is amply supported as will be shown by the evidence hereinafter set forth.

[21] It is well settled that where there is evidence to support a finding that substantial and unreasonable interference with the landowner's easement of access or right of ingress and egress has been caused as the result of an obstruction in the street or highway on which his property abuts, an appellate court will not say as a matter of law that such finding is erroneous. O'Connor v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 122 Cal. 681, 55 P. 688; Smith v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 146 Cal. 164, 79 P. 868, 106 Am.St.Rep. 17; Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., 176 Cal. 629, 169 P. 388.

[22] The issues before the trial court in the case at bar were, whether plaintiffs' right of access to Jackson Street was substantially and unreasonably impaired by the construction of the subway, and, if so, the amount of damage suffered as the result of such interference. These matters are for the trier of the facts and only where the evidence does not support a finding of substantial and unreasonable interference should the court decide the issue as a matter of law.

[23] There is sufficient evidence to support the finding of unreasonable interference in the present case. One witness testified that the 14 foot lane for vehicular traffic and the 3.6 foot lane for pedestrians was not capable of supplying the necessary ingress and egress for this type of industrial property, and that because of the non-accessibility the property could not be put to some uses after the construction that it could have been put to before. Other witnesses spoke of the difficulty of gaining access to plaintiffs' property under the present circumstances, and the trial judge himself examined the premises. It was found that the lane provided was too narrow for two vehicles to pass each other if traversing thereon in opposite directions. In the face of this evidence and in view of the fact that the trial judge examined the property, it cannot be said that the finding of interference is unsupported by the evidence.

[24, 25] Defendants urge the doctrine of damnum absque injuria (damage without legal injury) but that doctrine means merely that a person may suffer damages and be without remedy because no legal right or right established by law and possessed by him has been invaded, or the person causing the damage owes no duty known to the law to refrain from doing the act causing the damage. That rule has no application however where the person suffering the damage has a property right, the right of access in this case, and the duty is imposed by the Constitution on the person causing the damage to refrain from causing the same without payment of compensation. The right being fixed by law, the question of whether such right has been injured, and such duty violated, is one of fact.

[26] Defendants attempt to distinguish the McCandless case, asserting that the McCandless property was on a main city thoroughfare, in a commercial zone, whereas plaintiffs' property is on the outskirts of a small town and was used for agricultural and residential purposes. Defendants further compare the public improvements constructed, claiming that a legal distinction exists between the two cases, namely, that in the McCandless case the interference with the right of ingress and egress arose out of the fact that there was difficulty in getting to and from said property into the public street, whereas in the case at bar any inconvenience arises after the public street is reached. These purported distinctions are not convincing. The rights of an abutting owner to access to the street are the same whether his property is situated on a street in the business district of a large city or in the residential district of a small town. The extent of the damage for interference therewith might be different, but the right of access to the street would be the same. It was for interference with the right of access for which damages were awarded both in the McCandless case and the case at bar. The extent of the interference may have been different, but the interference with the right was the basis of the cause of action in both cases.

[27] Defendants contend that even if plaintiffs were damaged, the damaging occurred as the result of the exercise of police power and is damnum absque injuria. This contention is wholly without merit as there is no basis for the application of the police power doctrine to the factual situation in this case.

[28] Generally, it may be said that police power operates in the field of regulation, except possibly in some cases of emergency such as conflagration or flood when private property may be temporarily used or damaged or even destroyed to prevent loss of life or to protect the remaining property of an entire locality. There is obviously no element of regulation involved in the case at bar, and no suggestion of anything in the nature of an emergency. The damage to plaintiffs' property here involved was the result of a public improvement constructed by the state in the exercise of its power of eminent domain.

[29] While it is true that the seeming absolute protection against the taking or damaging of private property for public use provided for in section 14 of article I of our Constitution may be qualified by the police power in the area in which such power operates, it should be obvious that the police power doctrine cannot be invoked in the taking or damaging of private property in the construction of a public improvement where no emergency exists. To hold otherwise would in effect destroy the protection guaranteed by our Constitution against the taking or damaging of private property for a public use without compensation. Gray v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1500, 174 Cal. 622, 163 P. 1024; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393, 43 S.Ct. 158, 67 L.Ed. 322, 28 A.L.R. 1321.

Relying very strongly upon the cases which have held that the closing of a street crossing by the railroad commission is damnum absque injuria as to nonabutting property owners, defendants maintain that plaintiffs certainly cannot complain because they must travel a narrow side lane to reach the main traveled portion of the street when they could not recover if the street were closed entirely.

Briefly, we may observe that recovery has been denied in those cases upon the ground that the injury is one suffered in common with the public, is not special or peculiar to the particular property involved, and the difference in damage is one of degree and not of kind depending upon the property owner's proximity to the closed crossing. Compensation has also been refused on the ground that the landowner's easement of access is not in fact impaired, that convenient and reasonable means of ingress and egress is afforded, although not the quickest and closest route to traveled thoroughfares. We have observed also that a growing number of decisions denying recovery for damages to nonabutting owners of property on closed streets are prompted by the economic factors involved. Since every property owner for a great distance therefrom is somewhat inconvenienced by the closing of a street, the question of where to stop awarding damages is not only difficult to ascertain, but the payment of damages in every case of this character would place a great burden upon the public whenever such closings are ordered.

The cases determining what does and what does not constitute a compensable damage when a street is ordered closed are in considerable confusion, and this decision will not be benefited by a lengthy consideration of the authorities cited by defendants on this proposition. Defendants contend that the case of City of San Mateo v. Railroad Comm., 9 Cal.2d 1, 68 P.2d 713, 718, decides conclusively that the closing of a grade crossing is under the police power and any injury resulting therefrom is damnum absque injuria. The court therein stated that in the absence of facts to the contrary it would assume that none of the plaintiffs' property directly abutted on the area to be closed, and that the private property in question was contiguous to either county or state highways connected by public crossings. The court then held that the nature of abutting owner's right is "an easement in the street fronting upon his lot, for the purposes of ingress and egress," and concluded that no such right had been taken away in the case before it.

In Arcadia Realty Co. v. City of St. Louis, 1930, 326 Mo. 273, 30 S.W.2d 995, 997, the court said: "But if it be assumed that plaintiffs' properties will be stripped of potential uses and their value thereby lessened, and that the streets on which such properties are located will become cul de sacs as plaintiffs claim * * * all as a result of the street vacations in question, still plaintiffs will not by reason thereof suffer injury special or peculiar to them within the meaning of the rule long established in this state. In order for a property owner to sustain an injury special or peculiar to him on account of the vacation of a street, his property or some part of it must abut on the vacated portion, or else the vacation must deprive him of reasonable access to the general system of streets."

We are not here called upon to determine whether a property owner may recover damages in a case where his property is situated on a street created into a cul de sac as the result of the closing of the street on either side of his property without interfering with his right of access to the street on which his property abuts, as this is not such a case.

Our decision to regard the holding in the McCandless case, supra, as controlling with respect to the compensable nature of plaintiffs' damage herein, makes it unnecessary for us to consider this contention. The effect of the McCandless decision was to determine that a damage resulting from a factual situation similar to that with which we are here concerned, is compensable. This result was emphasized in the decision of the District Court of Appeal in the McCandless case, 10 Cal.App.2d 407, 52 P.2d 545, in which a hearing by this court was denied. Said case held that an instruction to the effect that any taking or damaging of the McCandless property was done under the police power and therefore not compensable, was properly refused. The earlier decision in the same case, 47 P.2d 1103, by this court was cited as being authoritative on this point.

In the instant case, the several property owners who claim that their access is impaired by the construction of a subway in the street on which their property fronts, did suffer a damage to their property right, the right of access. That has been decided as a question of fact with ample evidence in support thereof.

The case of Powell v. McKelvey, 56 Idaho 291, 53 P.2d 626, is not in point for the reason that the Idaho Constitution does not grant compensation for a "damaging" as well as a "taking" of private property. Furthermore, the sidelanes in said case were not blind and were as a matter of fact held not to interfere with the lot owner's right of access. Ralph et al. v. Hazen et al., 68 App.D.C. 55, 93 F.2d 68, is not decided under a constitutional provision such as article I, section 14 and, therefore, is likewise not applicable here.

[30] We have examined the findings of the trial court and do not find that they contain inconsistencies or irreconcilable conflicts on any material issues. Defendants contend that the trial court erred in computing the amount of damage to plaintiffs' property on the basis of a 120 foot frontage on Jackson Street when said frontage was in fact only 118 feet as indicated on maps in evidence, which maps were agreed upon by the parties to be accurate. Reference to one of said maps reveals that the said frontage is recorded thereon to be 118 feet "plus or minus." In addition, defendants themselves, in their answer, stated that the frontage of plaintiffs' property measured "not more than 120 feet." Since there is some evidence to support said finding of the trial court, and since if such discrepancy did exist, it is so infinitesimal as to come within the rule of de minimus, we do not feel that the interference of this court is required.

Defendants also complain that the finding of the trial court as to damage,—namely, that the property was damaged to the extent of $35 per front foot, 125 feet deep, and that the remainder had been damaged in the sum of $200—was not supported by the evidence for the reason that all of the valuation testimony was based on the full depth of the property and not upon the basis of a subdivision at a depth of 125 feet.

[31-33] There is little merit in this contention. That the trial judge is not bound by the opinion of the witnesses on market value is well settled. The province of such testimony is only to aid the court in arriving at a conclusion. 10 Cal.Jur. 972. Furthermore, in the instant case the trial judge visited the premises, and the information so obtained "is independent evidence to be taken into consideration by the court in determining the issues of the case." Gibson Properties Co. v. City of Oakland, 12 Cal.2d 291, 297, 83 P.2d 942, 945, (an eminent domain case), and cases cited. In Joint Highway District No. 9 v. Ocean Shore R. R. Company, 128 Cal.App. 743, 18 P.2d 413, 421, the court did not even view the premises, but it was held therein that "The trial court was not obliged to blindly accept the estimate of any witness on market value, and properly made its own determination of the ultimate fact, aided by the testimony of the various witnesses weighed in the light of all of the evidence before the court."

The facts are that plaintiffs' property is admittedly zoned as industrial property and testimony as to its value as such was received; the trial court viewed the premises and reached its own conclusion as to the value of 125 foot front strip of the property and the back portion thereof; and the total amount of the damage awarded was within the scope of the testimony of the valuation witnesses. Joint Highway District No. 9 v. Ocean Shore R. R. Company, supra, 128 Cal.App. page 762, 18 P.2d 413; City of Stockton v. Ellingwood, 96 Cal. App. 708, 718, 275 P. 228. In view of these facts we cannot say that the finding of the trial court was not supported by the evidence.

Defendants contend that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in the admission of evidence, the denial of its motion to strike certain evidence, and that consideration was given by the trial court in fixing the amount of recovery to elements of damage which are not compensable. Specifically, it is complained that some of the valuation witnesses and the court, in arriving at the amount of the damages suffered, considered as an element thereof the diversion of traffic from the street fronting plaintiffs' property; that is, that one of the elements of damage was that the improvement of the street caused a decrease in the flow of traffic thereon in front of plaintiffs' property. In this connection the record reveals the following: Plaintiffs' valuation witness Woodward, after testifying to the amount the property was damaged, testified as follows on cross-examination:

"Q. You state here that this property has been damaged in the amount you have testified to by reason of the decrease of the utility of the property. Now, just explain to me what the decrease of utility comes from? A. The decrease in utility comes from taking the property off a 66 foot thoroughfare with four lines of traffic in it, as well as to sidewalks of 12 feet in width and putting it on a lane 14 feet wide for vehicular traffic, and 3.6 feet wide for pedestrians. That is not a frontage that is capable of supporting an industry, any large industry, and not a width of street that is capable of supplying the necessary ingress and egress from such a property. It is nothing more than an alleyway, then again it takes away from the property the major portion of the public traffic going to and from Mt. Eden and Hayward.

"Q. And taking away the traffic you think would contribute to the damage, do you? A. I certainly do.

"Q. How much do you think that part of it would contribute to your damage? A. I could not say in dollars and cents.

"Q. It would be considerable, wouldn't it? A. It would be, yes.

"Q. You think a 3 foot sidewalk would effect that too? A. I certainly do. It would be impossible for two people to walk abreast on a 3 foot sidewalk and let anybody pass without stepping out in the street, or lane, so to speak.

"Q. That contributes to the damage here? A. Surely.

"Q. The fact that traffic won't go by there contributes as well? A. That contributes, then the fact that these lanes that you have put in there are only one way lanes and two trucks could not pass.

"Q. You have not been able to decide in your own mind, Mr. Woodward, how much the taking away of traffic from in front of the property would damage this property? A. I simply considered all of the elements that entered into my mind and arrived at a lump sum of what I believed the damage to be.

"Mr. Reed. If your Honor please, I would like to strike out Mr. Woodward's testimony on the basis that he has considered elements which are not compensable. The cases are uniform in holding that no property owner has a right to have traffic pass his door and that is not a compensable item of damage, and Mr. Woodward's testimony is based upon that basis.

"The Court. It all goes to the weight of the testimony, I believe. (Argument.)

"The Court. That is in so far as traffic is concerned.

"Mr. Wentz. We will stipulate that may go out.

"The Court. He said that was a part, only one of many things, so the testimony stipulated to go out.

"Mr. Reed. Just a moment, your Honor, I don't want to stipulate that may go out now. I brought it out of the witness on cross-examination.

"The Court. Let the objection stand overruled. Go right ahead." (Emphasis added.)

Woodward fixed the damage to the property at $8,040. Plaintiffs' witness, Andrade, fixed the damage at $6,860. It does not appear from the record that he considered the diversion of traffic as an element of damage. The only part of his testimony approaching that subject was as follows:

"It was a question of accessibility to the property. By accessibility, I did not mean the ability of traffic on the highway to get in front of the property and park there and do business and get away again. I mean being deprived of one of the main highways, and by putting an alleyway, a blind alleyway at that." (Emphasis added.) It is obvious that when he referred to the deprivation "of one of the main highways" he was referring to the impairment of access, rather than the diversion of traffic, the right of access being over and on the highway as it existed before the improvement. Plaintiffs' witness Leidig placed the damages at $6,200; as far as appears from the record he did not take into consideration the diversion of traffic as an element of damage. The trial court viewed the property. The findings of the court with respect to the damages were as follows: "that since said change of grade and said construction of said alley and sidewalk, plaintiffs' easement and right of egress from said property and ingress to said property from Jackson Street have been substantially impaired and damaged in this, that plaintiffs no longer have free access to and from Jackson Street; that it is impossible for plaintiffs to have access to Jackson Street, except by proceeding north upon said narrow alley to the termination thereof and entering Jackson Street through traffic coming in the same direction. That said lane or alley is too narrow through said underpass for two vehicles to use if traversing thereon in opposite directions."

"That these plaintiffs' right of easement in and upon Jackson Street for egress from plaintiffs' property and ingress onto plaintiffs' property has been substantially impaired by the change of grade hereinabove referred to and by construction of said sidewalk and alley way hereinabove referred to. That plaintiffs' property has depreciated in value by reason thereof to the extent of $40.00 per front foot; that said real property described in paragraph IV hereof, since the changing of said grade hereinabove described, and since the construction of said sidewalk and alley hereinabove described, is not in excess of the value of $35.00 per front foot; for 120 feet frontage on Jackson Street and 125 feet deep, and the remainder of plaintiffs' property has been damaged $200.00. That said property is not worth in excess of the value of forty-two hundred and no/100 ($42.00) dollars; that plaintiffs have been damaged, by said change of grade, the construction of the subway in the manner in which it was constructed, and by said construction of said alley and sidewalk, all of which deprive plaintiffs of any reasonable ingress to or egress from their said property, in the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000.00)."

[34-37] The damage suffered by plaintiffs is, as we have seen, the interference with their right of access. The diversion of traffic is not a proper element to be considered in computing those damages inasmuch as a landowner has no property right in the continuation or maintenance of the flow of traffic past his property. Courts throughout the country are in substantial agreement as to the measure of damages in cases such as this, but there is a wide variance in the manner of establishing the amount of damage. Although it is wellnigh impossible to reconcile these conflicting decisions, it is believed that certain principles can be deduced therefrom which will serve to clarify the rules applicable in this state. Where private property is taken for a public use, it is universally agreed that the compensation required is to be measured by the market value of the property taken. 2 Lewis, Eminent Domain, 3d Ed., § 685, p. 1175; 1 Nichols, Eminent Domain, 2d Ed., § 217, p. 658; 3 Joyce, Damages, § 2184, p. 2238. Where private property is taken for a public use and damage results to the remaining property of the landowner, compensation for such damage must be awarded which is measured by the diminution in value of that property which remains. 2 Lewis, supra, § 694, p. 1200; 2 Nichols, supra, § 236, p. 721; 3 Joyce, supra, § 2186, p. 2242, et seq. If the state is required to make compensation for damage to private property resulting from a public use, where no property is actually taken, the measure of damages generally applied is also the diminution in the value of the property caused by the public use. 2 Nichols, supra, § 309, p. 822. This is so under the various provisions requiring compensation for damage whether they are constitutional (2 Lewis, supra, § 751, p. 1337) or statutory in nature. 1 Lewis, supra, § 342, p. 618.

Whenever it becomes necessary to estimate the amount of damage inflicted upon private property for the benefit of the public, whether or not there is a taking of property in conjunction with the damage, there is a danger that the decline in market value may be attributable to causes other than those for which the landowner is entitled to recover. Where there is a taking of private property, however, the damage to the remainder is nearly always attributed to that taking. Thus, courts of other states have frequently said that the amount of damage, that is, the depreciation in value of the remainder, may be established by testimony relating to any factor, even though noncompensable in itself, which would make the property less desirable in the eyes of a prospective purchaser. Barnes v. Commonwealth, 305 Mass. 339, 25 N.E.2d 737, 127 A.L.R. 104; Mississippi State Highway Comm. v. Hillman, 189 Miss. 850, 198 So. 565; Texas-Empire Pipe Line Co. v. Stewart, 331 Mo. 525, 55 S.W.2d 283; Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Burnam, 214 Ky. 736, 284 S.W. 391; Ohio Public Service Co. v. Dehring, 34 Ohio App. 532, 172 N.E. 448; Regina v. Monroe County, 319 Pa. 257, 179 A. 36; Sterner v. Nixon, 116 N.J.L. 418, 185 A. 48; Long v. Shirley, 177 Va. 401, 14 S.E.2d 375; Idaho, etc., Ry. Co. v. Coey, 73 Wash. 291, 131 P. 810; 2 Nichols, Eminent Domain, 2d Ed., § 327, p. 896. Such factors do not constitute separate elements of damage for the purpose of recovery but are admitted solely for the purpose of establishing the depreciation in market value. Mississippi Highway Comm. v. Hillman, supra. As will be seen later, this doctrine is not followed in its entirety by certain courts, including those in this state.

[38] Where the necessity for assessing damage to private property arises apart from any taking of property by public authority, the problem of limiting the landowner's recovery to items for which he is legally entitled to recover damages becomes more acute. It is generally said everywhere that he has no right to recover for remote or speculative elements of damage. 3 Joyce, supra, § 2190, p. 2247; 2 Nichols, supra, § 239, p. 736. The English courts which first considered the problem under statutes awarding compensation for private property which was "injuriously affected" in behalf of the public permitted recovery only where the damage was one which would have been actionable as between private individuals. 2 Nichols, supra, § 308, p. 821; 1 Lewis, supra, p. 662; 3 Sedgwick, Damages, 9th Ed., § 1118, p. 2269. In certain eastern states where the problem of awarding such damages has been met by special statute, as in Massachusetts (see 1 Lewis, supra, § 312, et seq.), a broader rule was followed which denied recovery only when the damage suffered could be classified as general, rather than special, in nature and it was not required that the injury be one which would be actionable as between individuals. 2 Nichols, supra, §§ 309, 310, pp. 822 et seq. In other states an even broader right to recover damages resulting from acts of the public has been created. Although the constitutional provision in its standard form requires that compensation be made for property taken or damaged for public use, the courts of these states have extended the principle discussed above which is used for estimating damage where a part of the property is taken for public use and have applied it to cases where property is merely damaged for a public use. In such states it is said that, whether or not a taking of property is involved, the damage to a landowner's property is to be estimated by considering every element of annoyance or disadvantage resulting from the public construction which would tend to depreciate the value of the property in the eyes of a prospective purchaser. City of Omaha v. Kramer, 25 Neb. 489, 41 N.W. 295, 13 Am. St.Rep. 504; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. O'Neill, 58 Neb. 239, 78 N.W. 521; cf. State Highway Comm. v. Smith, 146 Okl. 243, 293 P. 1002; Root v. Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co., 20 Mont. 354, 51 P. 155; 3 Sedgwick, supra, p. 2289. These courts have reaffirmed this doctrine in recent cases (Luchsinger v. Loup River, etc., Dist., Neb., 299 N.W. 549; State Highway Comm. v. Smith, supra) and have permitted a consideration of such elements as the diversion of traffic from the property of a landowner in estimating the damage caused by a public improvement. City of Omaha v. McGavock, 47 Neb. 313, 66 N.W. 415; Gillespie v. City of South Omaha, 79 Neb. 441, 112 N.W. 582; Root v. Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co., supra.

[39] In states such as California, where the recovery of damages depends upon the infringement of some right which the owner of land possesses in connection with his property, decisions have clearly indicated that, although the measure of damages is generally the diminution in market value, the evidence relied upon to establish such diminution must be based upon the depreciation flowing from the actionable injury which is the basis for the right to recover damages. Thus, in People v. Gianni, 130 Cal.App. 584, 20 P.2d 87, a small portion of land was taken for public highway purposes. It was contended on behalf of the landowner that because a small portion of land had been taken and because he was entitled to recover for that injury, the damages to his remaining land should be based upon the total depreciation in the value of his remaining property even though that depreciation was caused primarily by an admittedly noncompensable element of damage, that is, diversion of traffic. The court said, however, that while diminution in market value was ordinarily the test of damage to real property, the damages must be limited to those which accrue by reason of the legal injury for which compensation was due. In a similar case, it was held that evidence as to the damage caused by a diversion of traffic by reason of highway construction was properly stricken from the record because the diminution in value resulting therefrom was not caused by any injury for which the landowner was entitled to recover damages. City of Stockton v. Marengo, 137 Cal.App. 760, 764, 31 P.2d 467. It will be noted that this result was reached in California where a taking of property was involved.

A similar conclusion must also be reached where damage alone is involved. Many courts have indicated that the diminution of value in such cases cannot be based upon elements of damage for which the landowner is not entitled to recover. Greer v. City of Texarkana, 201 Ark. 1041, 147 S.W. 2d 1004; City of Chicago v. Spoor, 190 Ill. 340, 60 N.E. 540; Camden Interstate Ry. Co. v. Smiley, 84 S.W. 523, 27 Ky.LawRep. 134; Harrison v. Louisiana Highway Comm., 191 La. 839, 186 So. 354. This is particularly true in so far as diversion of traffic is concerned, even in states where the applicable rules do not correspond to those in this state and in situations where a taking of property is also involved. Greer v. City of Texarkana, supra; State ex rel. Sullivan v. Carrow, Ariz., 114 P.2d 896; Ralph v. Hazen, 68 App.D.C. 55, 93 F.2d 68; City of Chicago v. Spoor, supra; State v. Hoblitt, 87 Mont. 403, 288 P. 181; State Highway Comm. v. Chatham, 173 Miss. 427, 161 So. 674; Heil v. Allegheny Co., 330 Pa. 449, 199 A. 341; City of El Paso v. Sandfelder, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W. 2d 950; Nelson v. State Highway Board, 110 Vt. 44, 1 A.2d 689, 118 A.L.R. 915. While a few cases have permitted a consideration of the depreciation caused by diversion of traffic, they are contrary to the weight of authority. See 118 A.L.R. 921 et seq.

The precise question involved here was presented to the court in City of Chicago v. Spoor, supra. In that case the building of a viaduct impaired the adjoining landowners' right of access. In testifying as to damage, the witnesses admitted upon cross-examination that one of the most prominent elements of damage was the altered nature of the traffic after the construction of the viaduct. The trial court refused to strike such testimony and the Supreme Court of Illinois commented (190 Ill. 340, 347, 60 N.E. 540, 541): "It appears * * * that the view of the court was that, while a party could not sue and recover for loss of profits to business on account of a viaduct, yet, if there was an injury to abutting property, there could be a recovery for everything that went to make up the market value of the lots, whether it was a diversion of traffic or whatever it might be. This being a suit where access to the property was affected, the court seems to have held that everything resulting from the improvement which affected unfavorably the utility of the property for business purposes was an element of damage."

And at page 350 of 190 Ill., at page 542 of 60 N.E.: "The evidence of damages resulting from diversion of traffic or changing the method of transportation on the street was not legitimate for any purpose, and opinions of witnesses based on depreciation from those causes should have been excluded."

At page 352 of 190 Ill., at page 543 of 60 N.E., the court pointed out: "It could not be said that, if a party should sue for damages on account of a diversion of traffic, he could not recover, because he had no legal right which had been infringed, but, if he sued for damage by cutting off access to his property, he could include damages from diversion of traffic, as to which he had no legal right."

This rule has been followed in later cases. Illinois P. & L. Corp. v. Talbott, 321 Ill. 538, 549, 152 N.E. 486; Illinois P. Co. v. Wieland, 324 Ill. 411, 415, 155 N.E. 272; 18 Am.Jur. 879; 22 A.L.R. 159, 163. We think that the rule laid down in City of Chicago v. Spoor, supra, is the correct one. Damages resulting from an interference with private rights of property must be estimated with reference to the diminution in value caused by that legal injury. The presence of a single compensable injury, such as the impairment of an easement, should not be made the basis for a recovery of the total depreciation in value of a landowner's property where it appears that much of the depreciation is attributable to legally noncompensable factors. This conclusion results inevitably from a consideration of previous decisions in this state and the principles which are controlling in those cases. People v. Gianni, supra; City of Stockton v. Marengo, supra; Wolff v. City of Los Angeles, 49 Cal.App. 400, 193 P. 862; cf. County Sanitation Dist. No. 2 v. Averill, 8 Cal.App.2d 556, 565, 47 P.2d 786; Coast Counties Gas & Elec. Co. v. Miller & Lux, 118 Cal.App. 140, 144, 5 P.2d 34.

[40, 41] Applying the above rules to the case at bar does not, however, necessitate a reversal of the judgment. In the first place it will be noted that defendants' motion was to strike all of Woodward's testimony. There was no effort to limit it to his estimate of the damages suffered. He testified concerning other matters which were properly presented in evidence. For illustration, he testified that he was familiar with plaintiffs' property, that the value of the improvements on the property was $1,200, that the property is best adapted to industrial use, that its use for agricultural purposes is not the best use to which it is adapted, that the property is improved with a residence, tank and barn, that the highway improvement interferes with the right of access, and that there is property being used for industrial purposes in the vicinity of plaintiffs' property. Defendants cannot predicate error on the denial of a general motion to strike all of Woodward's testimony, when only portions thereof were inadmissible. A motion to strike must be directed with precision to the matter sought to be stricken. Dietlin v. General American Life Ins. Co., 4 Cal.2d 336, 49 P.2d 590. A motion to strike out inadmissible evidence may be properly denied where it is general and embraces evidence which is admissible as well as that which is inadmissible. Powley v. Swensen, 146 Cal. 471, 80 P. 722; Brown v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 104 Cal.App. 679, 286 P. 474.

[42] In any event, it does not appear from the entire record that the error, if any, was prejudicial. It must be remembered that there is no indication from the findings of the trial court that it took into consideration the diversion of traffic as an element of damage. Plaintiffs had two valuation witnesses in addition to Woodward, and the amount of damages found to have been suffered was considerably less than that appearing from their testimony. The court viewed the premises and arrived at its own judgment as to the extent of the damages suffered. In Joint Highway Dist. No. 9 v. Railroad Co., supra, evidence of value was improperly admitted because elements were considered that should not have been, nevertheless the court held that the error was not prejudicial, stating at page 765 of 128 Cal.App., page 422 of 18 P.2d:

[43] "It may therefore be freely conceded that the above-mentioned evidence and other evidence in the record should have been stricken, but it does not necessarily follow that the action of the trial court in admitting such evidence and thereafter failing to strike the same constituted prejudicial error requiring a reversal. In City of Stockton v. Ellingwood, supra, at page 742 of 96 Cal.App., page 243 of 275 P., the court quotes from Conan v. Ely [City of Ely v. Conan], 91 Minn. 127, 97 N.W. 737, as follows: 'Ordinarily, the admission or exclusion of opinion evidence, where it is not of a determinative character, is not regarded as sufficient to justify a reversal.' This is more particularly true where, as in the present case, the cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury and it does not appear that the trial court's determination of market value was in any way influenced by the testimony erroneously admitted. While the objectionable testimony contained figures in excess of the highest estimates found in the competent testimony on market value, the trial court fixed the awards at figures far below the lowest estimates of market value found in any of the testimony, competent or incompetent, offered by respondents. It is quite apparent that the trial court made its own determination of the market value of the land, using the opinions on this subject merely as an aid for that purpose and giving to such opinions only the weight to which they appeared to be entitled. This was entirely proper and we find no prejudicial error in the admission of the incompetent testimony referred to or in the refusal to strike out said testimony." It was held in Reclamation Dist. No. 730 v. Inglin, 31 Cal.App. 495, 160 P. 1098, that a denial of a motion to strike valuation evidence was not prejudicial error although based on improper considerations, inasmuch as the jury's verdict was not in excess of the amount fixed by that evidence. Injury will not be presumed from error. The appellant has the burden of showing wherein it was injured. This it has failed to do. Valid and admissible evidence amply supports the judgment, and we cannot say the result would have been different, if defendants' motion had been granted. The amount of the judgment, $5,000, indicates that the court did not base its decision on Woodward's testimony of damages amounting to $8,040. There is sufficient variance between the two figures to indicate that the judgment was based on the competent testimony of Andrade and Leidig, and the court's view of the premises and the other evidence in the record. The fact that the trial court denied the motion to strike does not necessarily show that its judgment was based on Woodward's erroneous presumption of the compensable elements involved. If it did, practically every case involving the improper admission of evidence would be reversed because of prejudicial error.

Other contentions raised by both parties do not require further discussion for they have been examined and found to be without merit.

For the reasons and upon the authorities contained herein, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

SHENK and CURTIS, JJ., concur.

HOUSER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance, but I do not agree with that portion of the majority opinion which holds that damage suffered as the result of diversion of travel is not compensable.

GIBSON, Chief Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The judgment in this case awards damages based upon non-compensable elements of injury and it should therefore be reversed for a new trial.

The principles of law upon which the court is in agreement may be stated as follows:

1. Article I, section 14, of the California Constitution is self-executing, and a cause of action may be stated under it without the necessity of express legislative sanction therefor.

2. An action may be maintained under article I, section 14, by the owner of property abutting upon a public highway for any substantial impairment of his easement of access to and from the highway caused by a public improvement.

3. Where the evidence shows, as in the present case, that the construction of a public improvement in the highway, although not immediately adjacent to the property line, interferes substantially with the landowner's means of ingress and egress, he is entitled to damages therefor.

4. The damages recoverable in such an action are those which flow from the impairment of the landowner's easement of access, and the evidence concerning the damage should be confined to matters bearing upon such impairment.

5. In this action the trial court committed error in permitting witnesses to base their testimony upon non-compensable items of damage, such as the diversion of public traffic from the highway upon which the property abutted. (The concurring opinion of Justice HOUSER indicates that he disagrees with this conclusion.)

The majority opinion, however, goes on to hold that the trial court's refusal to strike testimony based upon improper elements of damage was not error, or if it was error, was not prejudicial. I do not agree with this conclusion.

In California, and in certain other states, a liberal policy has been adopted in the admission of opinion evidence concerning damage to real property. In part, this policy has been justified on the ground that the basis for the opinion of the witness can be explored upon cross-examination. Razzo v. Varni, 81 Cal. 289, 22 P. 848; 86 A.L.R. 1449, 1450, 1459, 1460; 20 Am.Jur. 1001. As held by the majority opinion, the testimony of witnesses concerning damage to property in cases such as this must be confined to the diminution in value resulting from lawful elements of damage. City of Chicago v. Spoor, 190 Ill. 340, 60 N.E. 540; City of Stockton v. Marengo, 137 Cal.App. 760, 31 P.2d 467. Where cross-examination indicates that the opinion of a witness as to diminution in the value of property is based partially upon non-compensable items of damage which he is unable to segregate from the lawful elements of damage, a motion to strike his testimony should be granted. City of Chicago v. Spoor, supra; Hohmann v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 226, 29 N.E. 671; Illinois L. & P. Corp. v. Talbott, 321 Ill. 538, 152 N.E. 486; City of Kankakee v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 263 Ill. 589, 105 N.E. 731; cf. San Diego Land, etc., Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 63, 25 P. 977, 11 L.R.A. 604; City of Stockton v. Ellingwood, 96 Cal. App. 708, 716, 275 P. 228. Under these cases the opinion of such a witness should be stricken because if he is unable to segregate the proper from the improper elements involved in his estimate of damage, it is impossible for anyone to determine what part of his estimate is based upon proper elements. Since the opposing party is entitled to a proper estimate, the erroneous opinion should be stricken from the record to be replaced, if possible, with an estimate based upon lawful elements of damage. It is, of course, the general rule that a motion to strike should be directed specifically to the objectionable portion of a witness' testimony. But here the testimony was in the form of the witness' opinion which cross-examination disclosed to be based upon improper elements of damage. The witness was unable to state what part of his estimate rested upon the non-compensable items which he acknowledged formed part of the basis for his opinion. Since the foundation of his testimony was in part erroneous and since that part of his opinion which was due to improper elements could not be ascertained, the erroneous estimate of damage was unquestionably the proper subject of a motion to strike. If the erroneous estimate is stricken, nothing of value remains in his testimony. The grounds for the motion were clearly stated and are supported by the rules of law announced in the majority opinion. The trial court erred therefore in denying the motion to strike the testimony of the witness Woodward.

The mere presence of error does not authorize a reversal of the judgment below unless it appears that a miscarriage of justice has resulted. Constitution, art. VI, sec. 4½; Etienne v. Kendall, 202 Cal. 251, 257, 259 P. 752. It has been held in an action tried without a jury that the admission of erroneous opinion testimony as to value does not require a reversal of the judgment where the court fixed its award below the estimates of damage given by the witnesses and where it does not appear that the trial judge was influenced by the opinion evidence erroneously admitted. Joint Highway Dist. No. 9 v. Ocean Shore Railroad Co., 128 Cal.App. 743, 765, 18 P. 2d 413. In the present case, however, the record shows clearly that the trial judge did not realize that it would be improper for him to consider the testimony challenged by defendant's motion to strike. The motion was twice presented by defendant and denied by the trial court with the comment that the use of non-compensable items by the witness in reaching his estimate of the damage went only to the weight to be given his testimony. It is apparent, therefore, that the trial court did not apply the correct principles of law in assessing the damages which plaintiffs were entitled to recover. The majority opinion states there was other proper evidence which furnishes support for the award of damages made by the trial court, and that any error with regard to Woodward's testimony cannot be held prejudicial. It does not appear that the testimony of the plaintiffs' other two witnesses was challenged by a motion to strike upon the ground that they considered improper elements of damage in reaching their estimates. The record indicates, however, that these witnesses also used non-compensable factors as the basis for their opinions.

The witness Andrade in his testimony as to the inaccessibility of the property stated that he meant "being deprived of one of the main highways." He also considered the fact that, in proceeding in a southerly direction after leaving the Rose premises, it is now necessary to go a block to the north in order to turn and go south. A similar situation results when a highway is divided by a center island to prevent traffic accidents, and it certainly cannot be said that an abutting landowner's easement of access has thereby been impaired. At most, it is a matter of inconvenience. The witness also took into consideration as an element of damage the difficulty in gaining access, not to the highway, but to the existing spur track of the intersecting railroad which is located on private property across the highway from the Rose property. Plaintiffs' easement, however, is one of access to the highway itself and the damages must be limited to the impairment thereof. Similarly, the plaintiffs' third witness, Leidig, said that whatever value the property had for industrial purposes, upon which he based his estimate, resulted from the possibility of combining highway and railroad accessibility. The major damage caused by the subway construction, however, appears from his testimony to have resulted from the difficulty in gaining access to the railroad's existing spur track.

Considering the complete intermingling by all witnesses of the damages caused by non-compensable elements with those caused by the impairment of the plaintiffs' easement of access, and the indications that the trial judge had an erroneous view of what evidence was to be considered in awarding the damages, it is apparent that the judgment necessarily rests upon a misapplication of the law and awards substantial damages thereunder. This is reversible error under any theory.

The judgment should therefore be reversed for a new trial upon the issue of damages in accord with the principles which have been stated.

EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

---

19 Cal.2d 876

BETTENCOURT v. STATE.

S. F. 16036.

Supreme Court of California.

March 4, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

On rehearing.

Prior opinions, 94 P.2d 1066, and 105 P.2d 316.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg and Albert F. Skelly, Deputy City Attys., all of San Francisco, and Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., William H. Neal and Leon T. David, Asst. City Attys., and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

E. H. Christian and Eugene K. Sturgis, both of Oakland, for respondent.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Stanley S. Burrill, Charles P. McCarthy, Kenneth K. Wright, and Meserve, Mumper & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae, on behalf of respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

This is one of several appeals from judgments entered in actions for damages arising out of highway construction work. In each instance, the facts are substantially the same, although the extent of the injury varies.

The amount awarded for damage in this particular case was the sum of $3,500. All material legal points here presented are disposed of in a decision this day filed in the case of Rose et. al. v. State of California et al., Cal.Sup., 123 P.2d 505. Upon the grounds and for the reasons there given, the judgment herein is affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concur.

---

19 Cal.2d 877

BRANDON v. STATE.

S. F. 16037.

Supreme Court of California.

March 4, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

On rehearing.

Prior opinions, 94 P.2d 1066, and 105 P.2d 316.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg and Albert F. Skelly, Deputy City Attys., all of San Francisco, and Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., William H. Neal and Leon T. David, Asst. City Attys., and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

E. H. Christian and Eugene K. Sturgis, both of Oakland, for respondent.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Stanley S. Burrill, Charles P. McCarthy, Kenneth K. Wright, and Meserve, Mumper & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

This is one of several cases in which an appeal has been taken by the defendant from a judgment rendered against it for damages allegedly sustained by the plaintiff as the result of the construction of an improvement in the street or highway fronting the plaintiff's property. The facts in each case are substantially the same, although the amount of damage in each instance varies. For the injury to his property, plaintiff herein was awarded the sum of $750. All material legal questions here presented are determined by our decision this day filed in the case of Rose et al. v. State of California et al., 123 P.2d 505. Upon the authority of and for the reasons set forth therein the judgment appealed from herein is affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concur.

19 Cal.2d 874

JONES et al. v. STATE.

S. F. 16038.

Supreme Court of California.

March 4, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

On rehearing.

Prior opinions, 94 P.2d 1066, and 105 P. 2d 317.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg and Albert F. Skelly, Deputy City Attys., all of San Francisco, and Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., William H. Neal and Leon T. David, Asst. City Attys., and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

E. H. Christian and Eugene K. Sturgis, both of Oakland, for respondents.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Stanley S. Burrill, Charles P. McCarthy, Kenneth K. Wright, and Meserve, Mumper & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of respondents.

CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment for plaintiffs in an action for damages sustained as the result of the construction of a subway in the street fronting plaintiffs' property. The facts are substantially the same as those presented in several similar cases this day decided, the amount of the award in the instant case being $6,000. All material legal questions here presented have been determined in our decision filed this day in the case of Rose et al. v. State of California et al., 123 P.2d 505. Upon the authority of and for the reasons set forth therein, the judgment appealed from is hereby affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concur.

19 Cal.2d 875

LAUGHLIN v. STATE.

S. F. 16039.

Supreme Court of California.

March 4, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1942.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

On rehearing.

Prior opinions, 94 P.2d 1067, and 105 P. 2d 317.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and EDMONDS and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

C. C. Carleton, Frank B. Durkee, C. R. Montgomery, and Robert E. Reed, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg and Albert F. Skelly, Deputy City Attys., all of San Francisco, and Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., William H. Neal and Leon T. David, Asst. City Attys., and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of appellant.

Louis J. Trabucco and Eugene K. Sturgis, both of Oakland, for respondent.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Stanley S. Burrill, Charles P. McCarthy, Kenneth K. Wright, and Meserve, Mumper & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae on behalf of respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Defendant herein appeals from a judgment of the Superior Court of Alameda County in favor of plaintiff, awarding $7,500 for the damages allegedly sustained by plaintiff as the result of the construction of a subway in the street fronting her property. This is one of a series of similar cases in which the facts, rights and liabilities, are substantially the same. All material legal questions here presented are disposed of in a decision this day filed in the case of Rose et al. v. State of California et al., Cal.Sup., 123 P.2d 505. Upon the authorities there cited and for the reasons there given, the judgment herein is affirmed.

SHENK, CURTIS, and HOUSER, JJ., concur.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 545

GRACELAND et al. v. PEEBLER et al.

Civ. 13413.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
March 18, 1942.

Corporations ⚿599, 619

Surviving directors of a domestic corporation whose charter was suspended for nonpayment of franchise tax were not entitled to maintain an action in behalf of stockholders and creditors to quiet title to realty on the ground that under the second license tax act enacted in 1917, the corporation's charter was forfeited by its failure to pay its franchise tax involving a dissolution of the corporation so as to vest the directors with the authority sought for, since under the act the corporation's rights and privileges were only suspended by failure to pay the tax and were not forfeited, the words "suspended" or "forfeited" not being used interchangeably. St.1905, p. 493; St.1906, Ex.Sess., p. 22, § 10a; St.1917, p. 371; p. 376, § 9; Civ.Code, §§ 399a, 400.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Suspend" and "Forfeit".

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dudley S. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Graceland, a corporation, and others against Byron Peebler and others to quiet title to real property. From a judgment on the pleadings for the defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

J. M. Danziger and H. A. Andrews, both of Los Angeles, in pro. per. for appellants.

Roland Maxwell, of Pasadena, for respondents.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

The sole question presented for decision is whether the surviving directors of a California corporation, whose charter was suspended in 1926 for nonpayment of its franchise tax, may now maintain an action in behalf of its stockholders and creditors to quiet title to realty. The trial court was of the view that the action could not be maintained and so sustained a motion of the defendants for judgment on the pleadings. In so holding we think the court was correct.

While the appellant directors concede that neither the corporation nor they, in its behalf, may maintain the action, as the statutes applicable bar a corporation which has failed to make timely payment of its franchise tax from exercising any corporate powers, rights or privileges (with exceptions not here material), they contend they may do so as its surviving directors. Their right so to do is rested upon the theory that the second license tax act, enacted in 1917, St.1917, p. 371—the provisions of which are here controlling—was, like the first license tax act of 1905, St.1905, p. 493, a "forfeiture" act and not a "suspension" act. Accordingly, they argue that when the corporation in 1926 failed to pay its franchise tax its charter was forfeited and not merely suspended, and that this involved a dissolution of the corporation. If their premise that the corporation was dissolved is correct it follows, as they contend, that Civil Code section 400 as it then existed—and as it is continued in substance in Civil Code section 399a—is sufficiently expansive to vest them with the authority for which they contend. However, we think that the premise is false and that the cases upon which they rely show it to be false.

As originally enacted in 1905 the first license tax act not only specifically provided that a domestic corporation's charter should be forfeited for nonpayment of its license or franchise tax, but it made no provision for a revivor thereof or for settling the affairs or disposing of the property of the corporation. On the following day the legislature cured this defect in part by amending Civil Code section 400 so as to give the surviving directors the power to settle the affairs of the corporation and to dispose of its property. But no provision was made to enable a revivor of the corporation if it chose to pay the tax liability which had accrued against it. In 1907 the legislature not only provided for such a revivor but amended the statute, St.1906, Ex.Sess., p. 22, section 10a, so as to give express power to the directors to settle the corporation's affairs and dispose of the property for the stockholders but not for the creditors. However, the rights of the latter were similarly provided for by Civil Code section 400. Hanson v. Choynski, 180 Cal. 275, 180 P. 816. This being the effect of the 1905 act, it remains only to determine whether the second license tax act, passed in 1917, changed the situation so as to result merely in the suspension of a corporation's activities under its charter rather than a forfeiture of its rights.

In arguing that no change in this respect was effectuated by the second license tax act appellants point to the fact that section 9 contains the phrase " 'suspended' or 'forfeited' corporation," and so they say the words "suspended" and "forfeited" are used interchangeably. But it is plain from a reading of the statute as a whole that the words were not used interchangeably. The language of the statute is that the corporate rights, privileges and powers of every domestic corporation which fails to pay its tax shall be suspended, and that the rights and privileges of every foreign corporation which fails to pay its tax shall be forfeited. Hence the phrase "forfeited," as used in section 9, refers alone to foreign corporations, and "suspended" to domestic corporations. Nowhere in the act is there any language indicating that the charter of a domestic corporation should be forfeited for nonpayment of its franchise tax. Not only does "suspension" not involve a dissolution of the corporation, but the second license tax act under which the instant corporation was suspended for nonpayment of its franchise tax specifically provides that such a corporation shall not be dissolved by any court until it has paid all taxes and penalties due under the act. Necessarily there could be no voluntary dissolution, as proceedings looking thereto would involve the exercise of corporate rights, privileges and powers. Accordingly, Civil Code section 400, as it existed at the time of the suspension, upon which the directors here rely for their right to maintain the action, is not applicable, as it deals only with corporations which are dissolved.

Cases cited by appellants, such as Rossi v. Caire, 186 Cal. 544, 199 P. 1042; Anthony v. Janssen, 183 Cal. 329, 191 P. 538; Brandon v. Umpqua Lumber, etc., Co., 166 Cal. 322, 136 P. 62, and Hanson v. Choynski, 180 Cal. 275, 180 P. 816, involve the first license tax act of 1905, while Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89 P. 335; Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 P. 121, 10 L.R.A. 627, 18 Am.St.Rep. 192, and Henderson v. Palmer Union Oil Co., 29 Cal. App. 451, 156 P. 65, involve merely the effect of Civil Code section 400 prior to the passage of the second license tax act in 1917. None of them contains a single ruling favoring the contention here made by appellants. On the contrary, such of the cases as touch on the point here involved interpret the 1917 act as we do. Moreover, another case not cited by appellants, Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 393, 205 P. 446, while it does not touch directly on some of the points raised by appellants here, supports our holding. See, also, Smith v. Lewis, 211 Cal. 294, 295 P. 37.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 612

NICOLA et al. v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al.

Civ. 13164.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 20, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 18, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1012(1)

The weight of evidence was for trial court sitting without jury.

2. Negligence 🔑44

The right of a proprietor of a place of business to wax a floor which customers are expected to use is not superior to his duty to use ordinary prudence and caution to avoid injury to those who come to his premises by invitation.

3. Negligence 🔑44

If wax or soap is applied to a floor in a place of business, it must be in such manner as to afford reasonably safe conditions for proprietor's invitees, and if such compounds cannot be used on a particular type of floor material without violation of duty to exercise ordinary care for safety of invitees, by reason of dangerous conditions they create, they should not be used at all.

4. Negligence 🔑44, 136(22)

That a floor is slippery does not necessarily result that it is dangerous to walk upon as respects liability to an invitee for injuries and it is the degree of slipperiness that determines whether condition is reasonably safe, which is a "question of fact".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

5. Negligence 🔑134(5, 7)

Evidence warranted recovery for injuries to invitee who slipped and fell on electric company's office floor which was covered with a composition material on ground that floor was slippery and that company had knowledge thereof.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Trial court's findings of fact based on conflicting evidence are conclusive on the appellate court.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; Ray B. Lyon, Judge.

Action by Orazio Nicola and Teresina Nicola against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and others to recover for injuries when last-named plaintiff fell on the floor of defendants' office. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub, W. H. Spaulding, and John J. Briare, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Nelson & Castro, of San Luis Obispo, for respondents.

SHINN, Justice.

Plaintiff Teresina Nicola slipped and fell on the floor of defendants' ground floor office which she had visted on September 8, 1939, as an invitee seeking information regarding certain electrical appliances in her home for which defendants were furnishing electric power. Her husband joined with her in an action for damages, in which it was alleged and the court found that the floor of the office room was negligently maintained by defendants in a slippery and unsafe condition, of which defendants had notice and knowledge. The court found that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Upon the appeal defendants challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of negligence.

There was substantial evidence given at the trial to support the finding that the floor was slippery and that defendants had knowledge of it. The room in question was a large one with doors opening from the street. The floor of this room, including some 16 or 18 feet of space between the entry door and the quarters behind which defendants' employees worked, was covered with a composition material known as "asrock." This floor had been laid shortly prior to January 1, 1938, on which date defendants moved into the quarters. Upon its completion it was waxed but before occupying the room defendants required the contractor to remove the wax. Two women, witnesses for plaintiffs, testified that they slipped on the floor in January, 1938. One of them testified that she slipped about half way between the door and the counter; that the floor was shiny and appeared to be very slippery; that she visited the office once each month thereafter and that the floor on each occasion appeared to be the same except during the time when defendants had rubber mats on the floor. Another witness testified that she had visited the office regularly from the time it was opened until the end of 1939; that the floor was very slippery and very difficult to stand or walk on; that on each occasion when she visited the office she found the floor in a slippery condition. Defendants had knowledge that two people had fallen on the floor in January, 1938, and their district manager told the agent of the building that at times they would have trouble with the slippery floor inside the entrance door. Thereafter the floor was waxed from time to time, how frequently does not appear, the portions between the counter and the front windows receiving one-half gallon of wax diluted with water, and between waxings it was mopped with warm soap suds and every day it was "mopped up." It does not appear when, with reference to Mrs. Nicola's accident, warm suds and water had been used on the floor. While appellants' janitor testified that he had not used wax on the floor within six weeks before the accident, there was other evidence from which it could have been inferred that the slippery condition of the floor on the day of the accident was due to wax or perhaps soap that had been used on it. It was also in evidence that defendants' janitor had been cautioned a number of times by his superiors not to allow the floor to become slippery. The evidence was that the wax was not polished after being applied. A few days before plaintiff fell on the floor another woman had slipped and fallen. She testified that the floor was slippery and appeared as if it had been highly polished. This witness had fallen between the door and the cashier's window and testified that her feet slipped out from under her, that the floor was very slick. Another witness slipped on the floor on the day plaintiff fell and while plaintiff was still in the office. She likewise testified to the slippery condition of the floor, which she examined after she had slipped. Plaintiff on the day of the accident, on her first visit to the office, had traveled but a few feet inside the door when her right foot slipped and she fell heavily to the floor. She, also, testified that the floor was shiny and slippery. There was no evidence that any of these witnesses slipped or fell because of any foreign substance on the floor such as water, oil or grease or because of anything that was on their shoes or that at the respective times when they slipped or fell the floor was in other than its usual condition, although one witness testified that at the time she fell the floor appeared to have been recently polished.

[1] Opposed to this evidence was the testimony of defendants' employees that the floor was not slippery and the testimony of many witnesses that they visited defendants' office on the day of plaintiff's accident and did not slip or fall or observe any slippery condition of the floor. Much of appellants' argument is devoted to a discussion of the weight of the evidence such as properly would have been and no doubt was addressed to the trial court. It is unavailing in so far as it is addressed to the finding that the floor was slippery, as this finding is supported by the evidence noted. It is not contended that appellants were without knowledge of the condition of the floor at all times.

Appellants' argument goes further to assail the finding that the floor was maintained by defendants in a negligent manner, and they rely upon a rule, which has been followed by some courts in other jurisdictions, that the duty of an owner to exercise ordinary care is not violated by merely oiling or waxing and polishing a floor in the usual way although the floor is rendered slippery thereby. Bonawitt v. Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent's Hospital, 1932, 43 Ohio App. 347, 182 N.E. 661; Smith v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 1936, 121 Conn. 369, 185 A. 81. This is contrary to the settled law as announced by our own courts.

[2-6] In Rothschild v. Fourth and Market St. R. Co., 1934, 139 Cal.App. 625, 628, 34 P.2d 734, it was held that evidence that a floor of a hallway maintained by the owner of a building for use by invitees of tenants of the building had been rendered slippery by the application of wax was sufficient to support a finding of negligence. This decision was in accord with those in Williamson v. Hardy, 1920, 47 Cal.App. 377, 190 P. 646; Lamb v. Purity Stores, Inc., 1932, 119 Cal.App. 690, 7 P.2d 197; Brinkworth v. Sam Seelig Co., 1921, 51 Cal.App. 668, 197 P. 427; and Brown v. Holzwasser, Inc., 1930, 108 Cal.App. 483, 291 P. 661. It has been followed in principle in Winsby v. Kertell, 1935, 10 Cal.App.2d 61, 50 P.2d 1075; De Verdi v. Weiss, 1936, 16 Cal.App.2d 439, 60 P.2d 879; Tuttle v. Crawford, 1936, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128, and Stoddard v. Roberts Public Markets, Inc., 1938, 27 Cal.App.2d 166, 80 P.2d 519. The right of a proprietor of a place of business to wax a floor which the customers are expected to use is not one which upon any reasonable theory can be held to be superior to his duty to use ordinary prudence and caution to avoid injury to those who come to his premises by invitation. If wax or, as in the present case, both wax and soft soap, are applied to the floor, it must be in such manner as to afford reasonably safe conditions for the proprietor's invitees, and if such compounds cannot be used on a particular type of floor material without violation of the duty to exercise ordinary care for the safety of invitees, by reason of the dangerous conditions they create, they should not be used at all. Of course slipperiness is an elastic term. From the fact that a floor is slippery it does not necessarily result that it is dangerous to walk upon. It is the degree of slipperiness that determines whether the condition is reasonably safe. This is a question of fact. The trial judge could well have believed from the evidence that the surface of the floor was sufficiently hard and smooth to become unsafe with the application of wax or soft soap and water as they were used by appellants. In fact, if full credence was given to the testimony of plaintiff and her witnesses, and if it was believed that they had slipped and in some instances had fallen while walking across the floor in a careful manner, the trial judge could scarcely have believed that the floor was maintained in a wholly safe condition. And if the condition was as described by these witnesses it was for the trial judge to determine, as a fact, whether the condition was one which afforded reasonable safety to defendants' patrons or, in other words, whether defendants had exercised ordinary care with respect to the condition of the floor. Perhaps it would have been an entirely justifiable conclusion that the floor, although slippery, was reasonably safe for public use or that defendants used ordinary care with respect to its condition, but those questions of fact have been decided to the contrary upon substantial evidence, and we could not, even if we were so inclined, substitute our judgment for that of the trial judge. (See cases cited above.)

After the argument appellants, without leave of court, presented a supplemental brief which subsequently was allowed to be filed and respondents were given time to reply. In this brief appellants for the first time raised the point that plaintiff and one of her witnesses were erroneously allowed to state their opinions as to the condition of the floor. The circumstances called for an application under rule I section 5, for permission to file the supplemental brief. Nevertheless we have considered the point and find it to be devoid of merit. The trial judge on several occasions sruck out statements of conclusions and exhibited no little interest in confining the testimony to matters of fact.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 494

WEINBERGER v. MANNING.

Civ. 13404.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 17, 1942.

1. Judgment ⇨153(2)

A default judgment may be set aside on satisfactory showing of the judgment debtor that his default was due to mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, where motion for such relief is made within a reasonable time in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding was taken. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Judgment ⇨143(2)

A judgment debtor was not entitled to have default judgment set aside unless it was the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect on the part of the judgment debtor, notwithstanding any showing of merit in support of the motion to set aside judgment. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

3. Judgment ⇨162(2)

The burden of proving that default judgment was due to excusable neglect as a basis for setting aside such judgment was on judgment debtor, who was required to establish such claim by a preponderance of the evidence. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

4. Judgment 🔑143(3)

Courts are generous in relieving litigants of their defaults resulting from inadvertence or excusable neglect, but are not required to act as guardians for persons who are grossly careless as to their own affairs. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

5. Judgment 🔑139

The decision upon a motion to open a default judgment is primarily within the discretion of the trial court, but such discretion may not be exercised arbitrarily but must be an impartial discretion guided and controlled in its operation by fixed legal principles. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

6. Judgment 🔑143(2)

Trial court abused its discretion in setting aside a default judgment and recalling an execution after the lapse of 82 days from service of the summons and complaint, where no excusable neglect on the part of judgment debtor was shown. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Grace L. Weinberger against Kathleen Manning for an eviction and for conversion. From an order setting aside a default judgment in favor of plaintiff and recalling an execution, the plaintiff appeals.

Order reversed.

E. R. Simon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Willedd Andrews of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

The question for determination in this case is whether it is an abuse of discretion on the part of a trial judge to set aside a default judgment and recall an execution after the lapse of 82 days from service of the summons and complaint when no excusable neglect on the part of defendant is shown.

In order fairly to appraise the conduct of defendant we first present a succinct resume of the undisputed occurrences commencing with the filing of the action by plaintiff.

April 22, 1941: Action for damages for eviction and for conversion filed.

May 1: Summons and complaint served. Defendant is advised by attorney Seay, an office associate of Mr. Simon, attorney for plaintiff, that a written answer in form prescribed by court rules must be filed; that it should be prepared by her attorney; that she must pay a filing fee of $2. She then stated to attorney Seay "the whole thing is a joke to me and I don't intend to get a lawyer. * * * I don't intend to do anything about the matter."

May 9: Defendant wired the superior court "received summons #463430 * * * she was not evicted or dispossessed * * * notify me when and where to appear." On the same day she wired plaintiff's counsel that plaintiff had "jumped $517 rent by moving last August 20 * * * was neither evicted or dispossessed * * *"

May 10: The county clerk wrote defendant "complaint filed April 22, 1941, * * * no further proceeding appears of record. * * * If you wish to contest this action, we suggest that you consult an attorney."

May 13: Order for default filed by plaintiff's counsel.

May 31: Defendant exhibited complaint to a lay friend who advised her to consult counsel; he made an appointment with attorney Maddox for her.

June 2: Maddox advised defendant that no sufficient answer was on file; that she should immediately engage counsel to protect her rights; that her telegram to the county clerk was not a sufficient answer; that she was not protected; that nothing would prevent plaintiff from obtaining judgment against her; that her answer must be in writing in form prescribed by court rules and verified; that she should file a proper answer; that she might file the answer herself if she knew how to prepare same. Only her default had then been entered. She thanked him and left.

June 5: Default judgment for plaintiff was signed and filed. This was 23 days after entry of default.

June 6: Judgment entered.

June 17: Plaintiff's judgment against defendant garnished under execution issued out of municipal court, case No. 577778.

June 20: Defendant first consults her attorney, Carey, who advises her of the entry of the judgment. This was 50 days after service of summons on her.

June 28: Plaintiff's judgment levied upon under judgment of the municipal court in action No. 587322.

July 1: Attorney Carey writes Mr. Simon, plaintiff's attorney of his intention to move to vacate the default judgment and requests him to defer proceedings until disposition of the motion.

July 8: Abstract of judgment issued and recorded; execution issued and delivered to the sheriff.

July 9: Execution served on head office of the Security First National Bank.

July 16: Execution served on same bank, 7th and Grand and Hollywood and Cahuenga branches.

July 18: Execution served on Douglas Aircraft.

July 18: Carey requests attorney Simon to stipulate that all property held by garnishees be held in statu quo until disposition of his motion to open the case.

July 18: Sheriff demands payment to him of moneys garnished in the Hollywood Cahuenga branch of the bank, payment refused.

July 18: Order staying execution signed.

July 19: Order served on sheriff.

July 21: 7th and Grand branch of garnisheed bank answers garnishment.

July 22: Notice of motion to set aside default and to recall execution served on plaintiff's counsel together with supporting affidavits.

August 5, 1941: Trial court granted motion and entered order recalling execution, setting aside default and judgment and allowing defendant to answer.

[1] A default judgment may be set aside upon satisfactory showing of the judgment debtor that his default was due to mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. The motion for such relief "must be made within a reasonable time, in no case exceeding six months, after such judgment, order or proceeding was taken." C.C.P. sec. 473.

[2-5] The first question for determination under the cited section is whether or not there was a mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect on the part of defendant. If there was not then she is not entitled to relief, notwithstanding any showing of merits "in support of her motion." Bond v. Karma-Ajax Consol. Min. Co., 15 Cal.App. 469, 472, 115 P. 254. The burden of proof in such a matter is upon defendant and she was required to establish her claim of excusable neglect by a preponderance of the evidence. Bruskey v. Bruskey, 4 Cal.App.2d 472, 41 P.2d 203. While courts are generous in relieving litigants of their defaults resulting from inadvertence or excusable neglect yet they are not required to act as guardians for persons who are grossly careless as to their own affairs. Gillingham v. Lawrence, 11 Cal.App. 231, 233, 104 P. 584. All persons in possession of their normal faculties, capable of engaging in business transactions must conform with, and be guided by, the rules and regulations of legal procedure. Ibid. While the decision upon a motion to open a default is primarily within the discretion of the trial court, at the same time such discretion may not be exercised arbitrarily; it must be an "impartial discretion guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles." Brill v. Fox, 211 Cal. 739, 297 P. 25, 26.

[6] The excuses and explanations given by defendant for her failure to file her answer are not adequate. They do not present a showing of that species of inadvertence or neglect which ordinarily characterizes the behavior of a suppliant for relief from a default judgment. Her indifference to the reply received to her telegraphic communication to the superior court eight days after service of summons is a demonstration of her desire to let time and tide dissolve her troubles. Her indisposition to move was again disclosed by her disregard of the advice of attorney Seay courteously given before the time for pleading had expired. Her reluctance was magnified by her indifference to the advice of her loyal lay friend who thirty days after service admonished her to retain counsel to protect her rights. Her neglect turned into contempt of judicial process by her inaction throughout the month of June after attorney Maddox had forcefully remonstrated with her to place her cause in the hands of legal counsel. Not one act of defendant in relation to her law suit should warrant a court in yielding to her persuasions. Redding, etc., Mining Co. v. National Surety Co., 18 Cal.App. 488, 123 P. 544; Durbrow v. Chesley, 24 Cal.App. 416, 141 P. 631. She hearkened neither to the suggestion of a cautious friend, the admonition of the county clerk nor to the sound advice of responsible attorneys. Not until she was electrified by the service of a writ of garnishment issued out of a different court did she finally move to open the default on the second day of June when she consulted attorney Maddox. This was three days before the court took evidence and rendered judgment. Within that period she could have prepared and presented her answer to the court before the rendition of judgment with a request for relief under section 473. The record shows that she is a woman of considerable wealth and that for some time she had retained counsel for legal advice concerning her properties. In view of the repeated admonitions to employ counsel to file her answer, her behavior is more reprehensible than that of one who is guilty of gross negligence only. See Garroway v. Jennings, 189 Cal. 97, 99, 207 P. 554. The diligence required of a reasonably prudent person would not only have taken defendant to the office of her counsel instructing him to institute proceedings to set aside the default but it would have led her to file her answer within the time prescribed by law, notice of which appeared on the face of the summons served on her. After she had maintained an attitude of contemptuous disregard for legal process, to grant her request to set aside the order of her default would be to encourage trifling with the courts.

Our conclusion is fortified by a review of a number of persuasive authorities. In the case of Fink & Schindler Co. v. Gavros, 72 Cal.App. 688, 692, 237 P. 1083, the negligence of Gavros was far less reprehensible than the conduct of defendant Manning. He was apparently of foreign origin and might readily have believed that the employment of counsel by his codefendant would prevent judgment against himself. However, the order vacating the default of Gavros was reversed.

In the case of W. J. Wallace & Co. v. Growers Security Bank, 13 Cal.App.2d 743, 57 P.2d 998, the negligence of the defendant did not in the slightest degree exceed in culpability that of Mrs. Manning but the refusal to vacate the default was affirmed. The conduct of the officials of the bank in the Wallace case could be characterized by nothing more than inexcusable negligence.

Numerous orders denying relief under section 473, C.C.P., for failure to appear within the time designated by the summons have been affirmed because of a lack of sufficient excuse. Gillingham v. Lawrence, 11 Cal.App. 231, 233, 104 P. 584; Coleman v. Rankin, 37 Cal. 247. We see nothing in respondent's conduct to warrant her relief.

Order reversed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 617

CHRISTIAN et al. v. RICE GROWERS ASS'N OF CALIFORNIA.

Civ. 6742.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 20, 1942.

1. Agriculture 🔑6

Evidence sustained finding that licensed agent of the Rice Growers Association of California, whose duties involved contacting producers and seeing that rice was harvested and warehoused, was not the "general agent" of the Association and was not clothed with "actual authority" to bind the Association to pay for sacks and twine delivered at agent's request to rice growers whose crops were handled by the association. St.1937, p. 715, § 1261.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Actual Authority" and "General Agent".

2. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)

Whether the licensed agent of the Rice Growers Association of California, whose duties involved keeping in contact with rice growers and seeing that crop was harvested and warehoused, had ostensible authority to bind the Association to pay for sacks and twine delivered at the request of such agent to certain rice growers, whose crops the Association handled, was a "question of fact" for the trial court. Civ.Code, § 2317; St. 1937, p. 715, § 1261.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

3. Principal and agent 🔑99

"Ostensible authority" must be established through the acts or declarations of the principal and not through the acts or declarations of the agent. Civ.Code, § 2317.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ostensible Authority".

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ben R. Ragain, Judge.

Action by Henry J. Christian and others against Rice Growers Association of California, a corporation, to recover for sacks and twine delivered by plaintiffs to certain rice growers allegedly at the request of the defendant. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Fontaine Johnson, of Sacramento, for appellants.

George R. Freeman and Elmer Laine, both of Willows, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

This is an action brought by Christian Bros., a copartnership, as plaintiffs and appellants, against the Rice Growers Association of California, a domestic corporation, as defendant and respondent, under the common counts, for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered, to wit, sacks and twine delivered by the plaintiffs and appellants to Herman Kalfsbeek and Ray C. Tolson, at the request of the defendant and respondent Rice Growers Association of California. Findings were made in favor of defendant upon all issues, and it was adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by said action. The appeal is from the judgment.

The chief contention made by appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding to the effect that one L. L. Hyde had no authority to bind respondent in the matter of the payment for bags, sacks and twine furnished by appellants.

The evidence shows that Hyde was a licensed agent for respondent under section 1261 of the Agricultural Code, St. 1937, p. 715, which reads as follows:

"The term 'agent' means any person who, on behalf of any commission merchant, or dealer, or broker receives contracts for or solicits any farm products from a producer thereof or who negotiates the consignment or purchase of any farm product on behalf of any commission merchant, dealer or broker." (Italics ours—respondent's.)

The undisputed facts show that the appellants for some time had supplied bags, sacks and twine to Kalfsbeek and Tolson who were engaged in growing rice, and had become apprehensive about being paid for the merchandise. About October 27, 1937, meeting L. L. Hyde, a representative of the respondent, George Christian, one of the appellants, advised Hyde of the situation. Hyde requested Christian to deliver the sacks to Kalfsbeek and Tolson. At the same time Hyde presented Christian with what Hyde referred to as an "order." Christian never read this document, but following Hyde's advice he took it to Tolson who signed it. Thereupon appellants delivered the merchandise. On February 7, 1938, several months later, appellant wrote to the respondent requesting payment and was informed on February 24, 1938, for the first time, both orally and by letter, that the respondent did not consider itself responsible for the obligation. In the latter part of January or the early part of February, 1938, appellants received a draft from the respondent in the sum of $30, with a notation "in full payment of amount to be applied on account of Kalfsbeek and Tolson, 1937 crop." This draft was never cashed. The respondent had advanced money from time to time to Kalfsbeek and Tolson for the purchase of seed, and was handling their crop. Respondent paid warehouse, hauling and drying charges. The rice crop was delivered to respondent. The merchandise was delivered by appellants to Kalfsbeek and Tolson and was used by them in handling the rice crop delivered to respondent. This delivery was made after the conversation between Hyde and appellant Christian, and after Christian had refused to deliver any sacks to the account of Kalfsbeek and Tolson. The merchandise was of the value of $1,180.40. The appellants called no witnesses on the issue of Hyde's authority, other than Hyde himself, and his testimony in reference to his duties and authority is sufficient to sustain the findings. Hyde testified:

"Mr. Freeman. Q. Were you authorized by anybody in the Rice Growers Association to buy any sacks? A. No.

"Q. And as a field man, Mr. Hyde, what were your duties? A. My duties were to contact members of the Association and independent growers, to assist members of the Association in obtaining seed and carrying information between the Association office and the members themselves.

"Q. Were you ever at any time authorized by the Rice Growers Association of California to furnish any sacks to Tolson and Kalfsbeek? A. No.

"Q. Did you ever purchase any sacks from Mr. Christian, the plaintiff in this case? A. No.

"Q. Did you ever agree to pay for any sacks? A. No.

"Q. Did you ever at any time tell Mr. Christian that the Rice Growers Association would pay for those sacks, regardless of the outcome of the crop? A. No.

"Q. Were you ever authorized by anybody in the Rice Growers Association to make any such statement as that? A. No.

"Q. Did you handle any of the finances at all of the Rice Growers Association? A. No, never did.

"Q. Did you do any buying for the Rice Growers Association? A. No.

"Q. Were you ever authorized by the Rice Growers Association to guarantee the payment to anybody for supplies furnished to any grower? A. No.

"Q. And did you as a fact in this case ever guarantee the payment of this bill for sacks? A. No."

George R. Freeman, general counsel and assistant to the president of the association, testified as a witness for the respondent as follows.

"Mr. Laine. Q. What are the duties Mr. Freeman of the field representative? A. The field representative goes out in the field—

"Mr. Miller. I am going to object to this testimony, your Honor, unless it is made specific.

"The Court. Objection overruled. A. The field man is supposed to go out and keep in contact with the members of the Association and to do anything else required by the officers, to get the number of sacks of rice warehoused, and see how the harvest is carried on, to be of assistance to our own growers; in the event we purchase rice, to see that the rice goes into the trucks, or if by rail, into the cars, and to report to the Association. That is generally their duties. They haven't any other duties than those things, to do what they are told to.

"Q. Mr. Laine. Do they have any authority to buy on behalf of the Association any supplies, sacks or supplies of any kind * * *? A. They have not."

[1, 2] The provisions of the Agricultural Code have no application in this case. The code does not prescribe the authority of an "agent" within the meaning of the act, and furthermore, the transaction involved does not involve a contract for, or solicitation of, "any farm products from a producer thereof" or the negotiation of the consignment or purchase of "any farm product on behalf of any commission merchant, dealer or broker." Sacks and twine are obviously not "farm products." We think that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding under the theory that Hyde was not the general agent of respondent, and clothed with the actual authority to bind it. Neither do we hold that the record, as a matter of law, shows that the agent had ostensible authority to bind respondents. It is provided in section 2317 of the Civil Code that "ostensible agency is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Whether or not Hyde was the agent of respondent was a question of fact for the trial court. Willey v. Clements, 146 Cal. 91, 79 P. 850.

[3] The law is well settled that ostensible authority must be established through the acts or declarations of the principal and not through the acts or declarations of the agent. In Hansen v. Farmers' Auto. Inter-Ins. Exch., 139 Cal.App. 388, at page 393, 34 P.2d 188, at page 190, the court states: "* * * It is well settled that apparent or ostensible authority of an agent can arise by implication only from the words, act or conduct of the principal and not from anything said or done by the agent."

In Wiley B. Allen Co. v. Wood, 32 Cal. App. 76, at page 84, 162 P. 121, at page 124, the court states: "The application of the rule of ostensible agency or authority depends primarily upon the acts or conduct or words of the principal, and not upon the acts or conduct or words of the agent. The rule is that a principal will be bound by those acts of his agent which he has given other persons reason to suppose are done by his authority, but, as suggested, such authority arises by implication, and can only spring from the words, acts, or conduct of the principal."

The record in the present case shows that Hyde at no time did any buying of supplies for the account of the association, in fact, Hyde did not handle any of the finances of the association. There is no evidence that the association or any of its officers had any notice or knowledge of any claim that Hyde had attempted to bind the association to pay for the sacks and twine furnished by the appellants to Kalfsbeek and Tolson, and there is no evidence of any acts or declarations of the association or any of its officers which in any way could have led the appellants to believe that Hyde had any authority to bind the association by the purported purchase of sacks and twine for the use of a rice grower.

In reference to the issue of ostensible authority, the trial court properly held that: "* * * there is no evidence that Rice Growers Association knew Mr. Hyde acted in excess of authority, and the first proof of notice of Christian Bros.' claim against the Rice Growers Association, to the Rice Growers Association, was the letter written by Mr. Christian on February 7, 1938, three months after delivery of the bags and twine."

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and STEEL, J., pro tem., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 637

UNITED STATES GUARANTEE CO. v. MATSON NAV. CO.

Civ. 11782.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 23, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Maritime liens 🔑73

Where attachment issued against a vessel to secure full amount prayed for as against both defendants in action to recover for work and materials furnished for vessel's benefit, such amount constituted the "demand in suit" within statute providing that after an attachment is levied on a vessel its owner may have attachment discharged upon giving to sheriff an undertaking in an amount sufficient to satisfy the demand in suit. Code Civ.Proc. § 822.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Demand in Suit".

2. Maritime liens 🔑73

Where an attachment was issued against a vessel to secure full amount prayed for as against both defendants in action to recover for work and materials furnished for vessel's benefit, an undertaking by a surety, to release vessel from attachment, to pay amount of whatever judgment might be recovered in the action amounted to no more than an agreement to pay the demand in suit or any part of it in case of recovery of judgment by plaintiffs, and hence the undertaking was no broader than requirement of statute. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 813, 815, 817–820, 822.

3. Maritime liens 🔑73

Where an attachment was levied on a vessel in connection with an action to recover for work and materials furnished for vessel's benefit, and owner gave an undertaking as provided by statute to obtain release of vessel from attachment instead of proceeding by a motion for discharge of attachment, in subsequent action against owner by surety on undertaking for reimbursement for sums paid by surety in settlement of an action by plaintiffs in attachment proceedings the owner was "estopped" from questioning sufficiency of complaint in original action to support issuance of writ of attachment and from urging that the demand in suit was not secured by a lien upon vessel. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 813, 815, 817–820, 822.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James G. Conlan, Judge.

Action by the United States Guarantee Company, a corporation, against the Matson Navigation Company, a corporation, for reimbursement for sums spent by plaintiff in settlement of a prior action. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and M. B. Plant, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ackerman, Wayland & Mathews, Lloyd S. Ackerman, and George H. Johnston, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

On December 6, 1936, Steffgen and Barclay commenced an action in the Superior Court of San Diego County against Matson Navigation Company and Showboat Hotels, Inc., for the recovery of $4,959.90 for "work, labor, materials, equipment, supplies and repairs" alleged to have been furnished at the special instance and request of the defendants "for the benefit of the steamer or vessel" "City of Los Angeles." The complaint alleged that the vessel was owned by Matson Navigation Company and that "the plaintiffs have and claim a lien upon the said vessel, or boat, with its tackle, apparel, and furniture, under the provisions of Chapter VI, of Part II of Title X of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California" for the amount sued for. The prayer asked for a personal judgment against both defendants, that a writ of attachment be issued for the attachment of the "City of Los Angeles" with its tackle, apparel and furniture and that the same be decreed to be sold to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim. The complaint was verified as required by section 815, Code of Civil Procedure, and the plaintiffs Steffgen and Barclay having furnished the undertaking required by section 818, a writ of attachment issued against the vessel and it was attached by the sheriff all pursuant to sections 817 to 820, Code of Civil Procedure.

The writ of attachment recited the commencement of an action "to enforce a maritime lien" against the "City of Los Angeles" and commanded the sheriff to attach the vessel and "to keep the same in your custody until discharged in due course of law, unless said defendants give you security, by giving to you the undertaking mentioned in section 822 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Thereafter Matson Navigation Company in San Francisco requested United States Guarantee Company as surety to execute and deliver an undertaking to release the vessel from this attachment and United States Guarantee Company through its San Diego agents using a printed form executed and delivered an undertaking, in the sum of $6,000, which was approved by a judge of the superior court and upon its delivery to the sheriff he released the vessel. The printed form of undertaking furnished and used was the form for the release of an ordinary attachment and its recitals were not patterned on the special provisions of part II, title X, chapter VI (secs. 813-827) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It bound the surety to pay "the amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action."

Thereafter Steffgen and Barclay in that action recovered judgment against Matson Navigation Company for $2,750 which Matson Navigation Company paid, and against Showboat Hotels, Inc., for $2,200 with certain interest and costs. The trial court found as to the amounts of both recoveries that they were not lienable under section 813, Code of Civil Procedure. After demand on United States Guarantee Company by Steffgen and Barclay to pay the amount of their judgment against Showboat Hotels, Inc., Steffgen and Barclay commenced an action on the undertaking and United States Guarantee Company paid to Steffgen and Barclay the sum of $2,429.55 in settlement of that action.

United States Guarantee Company then brought the present action against Matson Navigation Company for reimbursement and from a judgment for plaintiff Matson Navigation Company prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant argues that the undertaking furnished was broader in its obligations than required and that it should have been limited either to the payment of any judgment which was decreed to be a lien upon the attached vessel or at most to the payment of any judgment recovered against Matson Navigation Company. The decision of this question depends upon the construction to be placed upon the relevant sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and the allegations of the verified complaint filed by Steffgen and Barclay in the original action which resulted in the issuance of the attachment.

Section 813, Code of Civil Procedure, provides, so far as here material:

"All steamers, vessels, and boats are liable:

"1. For services rendered on board at the request of, or on contract with, their respective owners, masters, agents, or consignees.

"2. For supplies furnished in this state for their use, at the request of their respective owners, masters, agents, or consignees.

"3. For work done or materials furnished in this state for their construction, repair, or equipment."

Subdivisions 1 and 2 make the liability of the boat (the creation of a lien upon it) dependent both upon the rendering of services on board or the furnishing of supplies for its use and the request of or contract for such supplies or services by the owner, master, agent or consignee. Subdivision 3 makes the boat liable for work done or material furnished for its construction, repair or equipment without qualification. The complaint counted on "work, labor, materials, equipment, supplies and repairs for the benefit of said vessel" furnished "at the special instance and request of the defendants" and alleged the existence of a lien on the vessel therefor. It is obvious that if Showboat Hotels, Inc., was the agent or consignee within the meaning of subdivisions 1 and 2 or, as to equipment and repairs to the vessel, without regard to the status of Showboat Hotels, Inc., debts contracted by it would constitute liens on the vessel if they otherwise fell within the definitions of the first three subdivisions of the section. The verified complaint, which under the pertinent provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure takes the place of an affidavit in support of the attachment, asserted a lien against the vessel for the entire amount in suit. Whether its allegations were sufficient to support the issuance of the writ, if directly attacked upon motion to discharge the attachment, we need not pause to inquire, in view of the well settled rule of estoppel upon which the judgment in this case in our opinion was properly grounded.

The undertaking in this case was given under section 822, Code of Civil Procedure which reads: "After the attachment is levied, the owner, or the master, agent, or consignee of the steamer, vessel, or boat, may, in behalf of the owner, have the attachment discharged, upon giving to the sheriff an undertaking * * * in an amount sufficient to satisfy the demand in suit * * *."

[1, 2] In view of the fact that the attachment issued to secure the full amount prayed as against both defendants that constituted "the demand in suit" within the meaning of the section, and the undertaking to pay "the amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action" amounted to no more than an agreement to pay "the demand in suit" or any part of it in case of the recovery of a judgment by plaintiffs. It therefore was no broader than the requirement of section 822.

It is to be noted in this connection that after the levy of the writ of attachment appellant had two courses open to it to release its vessel. It could furnish the undertaking under section 822, which it elected to do in this case; or it could proceed under section 823 which reads: "After the appearance in the action of the owner, the attachment may, on motion, also be discharged in the same manner, and on like terms and conditions, as attachments in other cases * * *."

If appellant had elected to proceed under section 823 it could have attacked the sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint (which in this special type of attachment takes the place of an affidavit) to support the issuance of the writ of attachment (Anaheim National Bank v. Kraemer, 120 Cal.App. 63, 7 P.2d 765; O'Connell v. Walker, 12 Cal.App. 694, 108 P. 668) or by counter proof it could have established that no lien existed on the vessel to secure all or any part of the demand in suit. Fisk v. French, 114 Cal. 400, 46 P. 161; Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 174, 24 P. 113; Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 24 P. 608, 26 P. 789, 13 L.R.A. 187; Sparks v. Bell, 137 Cal. 415, 70 P. 281.

[3] Having elected to give the undertaking provided for in section 822, instead of proceeding by motion to discharge as provided in section 823, appellant under an unbroken line of authority is estopped to question the sufficiency of the complaint to support the issuance of the writ or to urge now that all or any part of the "demand in suit" was not secured by a lien upon the vessel. McMillan v. Dana, 18 Cal. 339, 349; McCormick v. National Surety Co., 134 Cal. 510, 511, 66 P. 741; McCutcheon v. Weston, 65 Cal. 37, 2 P. 727; Passow & Sons v. United States F. & G. Co., 177 Cal. 31, 170 P. 1124; Koehler v. Serr, 216 Cal. 143, 13 P.2d 673, 89 A.L.R. 262. The authorities are exhaustively reviewed in Passow & Sons v. United States F. & G. Co., supra, and again in Koehler v. Serr, supra. In the Passow case the court said at pages 37, 38 of 177 Cal., at page 1127 of 170 P.:

"No attack was made upon the attachment by Bowman in the main action. Instead of moving that it be dissolved on the ground that the affidavit that the debt was not secured by a lien was false, he procured the exemption of his property from the levy by giving the undertaking here sued on. In this condition of affairs the present defendant executed the undertaking sued on. It must be presumed to have accepted the conditions then existing as the measure of its rights, and to have executed the undertaking with that understanding. The principle is settled in this state that a surety upon an undertaking given under section 540 to release an attachment cannot interpose the objection, in a suit upon such undertaking, that the property attached, if any, was not subject to levy, or that the attachment was irregularly issued because of a false affidavit filed by the plaintiff to procure it. In McMillan v. Dana, 18 Cal. [339], 349, the court said of such an undertaking that: The sureties promise, 'in consideration of the release of the property from the attachment, that in the event of a recovery of the judgment by the plaintiff, they will pay the amount of the judgment. * * * The object of giving the undertaking was to procure this release, and this release was had in consequence of the undertaking; and the consideration of the undertaking therefore is the release so procured. In consideration of this release, the obligors agree to pay the judgment. Whether the property was redelivered to Vischer or not was wholly immaterial. * * * Nor does it matter whether the property was subject to attachment or not. That matter cannot be tried in this collateral way. It is enough that the plaintiff had this property levied on as subject to his debt, and that these sureties procured its release upon the stipulation that, in consideration of such release, they would pay the amount of the judgment to be recovered by the plaintiff in the attachment suit.' "

In Koehler v. Serr, supra, the court after quoting from the Passow case said at page 148 of 216 Cal., at page 675 of 13 P.2d, 89 A.L.R. 262: "If, on collateral attack, the fact that the affidavit is false as to the unsecured status of the debt is no defense, then the falsity of the affidavit as to the true character of the plaintiff's cause of action as disclosed by the proof can be no defense, where, as here, the allegations of the complaint and the averments of the affidavit are prima facie sufficient."

The foregoing disposes of all points urged for reversal. Under the authority of the cases last cited, including those quoted from, appellant having elected to secure the release of the vessel by furnishing the undertaking required by section 822 cannot now raise any question going to the nature of the cause of action as actually proved and found in the suit in which the attachment issued, but is bound by an estoppel to deny that the entire demand in that action was secured by a lien upon the vessel as alleged in the verified complaint upon the allegations of which the writ was issued.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concur.

50 Cal.App.2d 503

RILCOFF v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Civ. 13507.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 17, 1942.

1. Abatement and revival 🔑8(1)

Where superior court of one county has once acquired jurisdiction of a cause of action, so long as it is there pending, a plea in abatement will lie in another court where an action between the same parties involving the same subject matter is also pending. Code Civ.Proc. § 430.

2. Abatement and revival 🔑8(1)
Prohibition 🔑10(2)

Where wife's divorce action was transferred from Los Angeles County Superior Court to Kern County Superior Court, judgment of dismissal was entered, and wife appealed, but, before filing notice of appeal, filed action for separate maintenance in Los Angeles County Superior Court without alleging any facts occurring subsequent to commencement of divorce suit, Los Angeles County Superior Court had no jurisdiction of subject matter of action for separate maintenance because divorce action was "pending", and prohibition lay to restrain such court from enforcing order entered in action for separate maintenance. Code Civ. Proc. § 430.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Pending".

3. Equity ⚷51(1)

Equity abhors a multiplicity of actions, and it is the policy of the law to reduce to the minimum the number of actions which may subsist between the same parties.

4. Judgment ⚷622(2)

A defendant against whom an action is pending may not institute other proceedings relating to or depending upon the transaction involved in the pending cause, but must plead the facts for his affirmative relief in such pending cause, and if he fails to set up a counterclaim, neither he nor his assignee can thereafter maintain an action against the plaintiff. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 439, 442.

5. Prohibition ⚷3(3)

Where Los Angeles County Superior Court entered order directing certain payments by husband in wife's separate maintenance action although court had no jurisdiction of subject-matter of action because of pendency of wife's divorce action in Kern County Superior Court, appeal from such order was not an "adequate remedy at law" which would bar prohibition to restrain enforcement of order. Code Civ.Proc. § 430.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Adequate Remedy at Law".

6. Action ⚷64, 71

An action is "pending" from the time of filing the complaint until its final determination on appeal.

7. Abatement and revival ⚷8(1)
Prohibition ⚷5(3)

Where action for divorce and action for separate maintenance are pending between the same parties, plea in abatement or writ of prohibition is a proper remedy. Code Civ. Proc. § 430.

◆

Prohibition by Nicolai N. Rilcoff to restrain the Superior Court of Los Angeles County from enforcing a certain order.

Peremptory writ granted.

Harvey, Johnston & Baker, of Bakersfield, for petitioner.

Barry Sullivan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner was granted an alternative writ of prohibition upon which a hearing was had. The question presented by the pleadings and the briefs is whether or not the respondent court has jurisdiction to order payments of alimony, costs and attorney fees in a separate maintenance action after the filing of an action for divorce of the same parties, involving no facts other than those which occurred prior to the institution of the divorce action.

Inasmuch as petitioner is defendant in two separate actions, in both of which his wife Mary is the plaintiff, we shall refer to them hereafter respectively as defendant and plaintiff.

On August 23, 1941, plaintiff filed her action for divorce in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. On the 19th of September respondent court ordered defendant to pay plaintiff $75 monthly as alimony, $250 attorney fees and $25 costs. On the 29th day of September the case was transferred to the Superior Court of Kern County on the motion of defendant based upon his residence in that county. After the matter had been docketed the latter court modified the order theretofore made in the Los Angeles court by striking therefrom the monthly alimony payments. Following a hearing the general demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Plaintiff having failed to amend within the time allowed, after the lapse of three weeks, a judgment dismissing the action was entered. From such judgment plaintiff took her appeal and presented a bill of exceptions to the judge. The time for settling the bill was fixed for January 8th at which time the court ordered to be included certain documents consisting of parts of the record, which order was ignored by plaintiff's counsel.

Before filing her notice of appeal from the judgment in Kern County, plaintiff filed her action No. D-215178 for separate maintenance in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on December 15, 1941. Her complaint stated no facts that had occurred subsequent to the date of the commencement of her action for divorce. From affidavits and the clerk's certificate before us it is clear that the action for separate maintenance involves no party or cause of action other than those contained in the action for divorce. At the time of filing her new action, she procured an order requiring defendant to show cause before respondent court on the 21st day of January why he should not be required to pay alimony, costs and attorney fees in that action. On that day the court made an order that defendant pay plaintiff $15 per week, $150 attorney fees and $15 costs. At the time of the hearing upon the order, the court had before it the affidavit of defendant setting forth the origin, pendency, transfer and appeal of the divorce action in Kern County. Respondent court declined to order the transfer for the reason that defendant had not made the payments ordered on the 21st day of January. On the contrary, the court announced that defendant was in contempt and ordered defendant's motion for change of venue to be dropped from the calendar until he should be purged. On the following day a writ of execution was issued from respondent court to the sheriff of Kern County, directing that officer to levy upon defendant's salary in the hands of his employer. Such levy was made. Thereafter defendant was served with an order to show cause, in re contempt, requiring defendant to appear on a day certain to show cause why he should not be punished for disobeying the order of January 21st.

[1, 2] When the superior court of one county has once acquired jurisdiction of a cause of action, so long as it is there pending, a plea in abatement will lie in another court where an action between the same parties and the same subject matter is also pending. Dungan v. Superior Court, 149 Cal. 98, 84 P. 767, 117 Am.St.Rep. 119; Lee v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 46, 214 P. 972; Gorman v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 173, 72 P.2d 774; Chase v. Superior Court, 154 Cal. 789, 99 P. 355; Karst v. Seller, 45 Cal.App. 623, 188 P. 298; Plum v. Forgay Lumber Co., 118 Cal.App. 76, 4 P.2d 804. From this it follows that respondent court was divested of jurisdiction of all matters appertaining to the marital rights and obligations of plaintiff and defendant immediately upon the transfer of the divorce action to Kern County.

[3, 4] In the event the action now pending before respondent court should proceed by the application of all of the remedies available to plaintiff, defendant would be required to comply with the order of January 21st in addition to all of the things adjudged in the divorce action in Kern County. An order is pending in the latter court for the payment of costs and attorney fees. The order of January 21st was in the process of enforcement when our alternative writ issued. If the prosecution of the action now pending before the respondent court is proper, there is no reason why plaintiff cannot move into the several counties of the state and successively procure like orders from the superior courts of all the counties. Equity abhors a multiplicity of actions. It is the policy of the law to reduce to the minimum the number of actions which may subsist between the same parties. The legislature has made it impossible for a defendant in search of affirmative relief to go outside of the action pending against him already and institute other proceedings relating to or depending upon the transaction involved in the pending cause. He must in such case plead the facts for his affirmative relief. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 439, 442. If a defendant fail to set up his counter claim, neither he nor his assignee can thereafter maintain an action against the plaintiff.

[5] Defendant has no adequate remedy at law to prevent the oppression to which he would be subjected unless respondent court be prohibited from enforcing the order of January 21st. Although he might appeal from the order directing the payment of the sums ordered, such appeal would require the execution of an undertaking in double the amount accruing during the pendency of the appeal. Miller v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 733, 72 P.2d 868. In addition thereto, plaintiff would be at liberty to show her dire poverty and to demand a supplemental order for attorney fees for prosecuting the appeal and for additional alimony during its pendency. Bohnert v. Bohnert, 91 Cal. 428, 27 P. 732; Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal.App. 423, 138 P. 362.

[6, 7] An action is pending from the time of filing the complaint until its final determination on appeal. Ex parte Joutsen, 154 Cal. 540, 98 P. 391. Where an action for divorce and also an action for separate maintenance are pending between the same parties, a plea in abatement or a writ of prohibition is a proper remedy. Code Civ.Proc. § 430; Fresno Planing Mill Co. v. Manning, 20 Cal.App. 766, 130 P. 196. Also, see Helpling v. Helpling, 50 Cal. App. 676, 195 P. 715; Cardinale v. Cardinale, 8 Cal.2d 762, 767, 68 P.2d 351; Greer v. Greer, 142 Cal. 519, 77 P. 1106.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 634

WHITE v. ANDERSON et al.

Civ. 3009.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 20, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Venue ⚷41

A defendant is not entitled to have an action removed to county of his residence unless it appears that none of the other defendants are residents of county where action is brought. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

2. Venue ⚷41

Even when all of defendants join in a demand for or consent to a change of venue, the cause will be retained if complaint attempts in apparent good faith to state a cause of action against a defendant who resides in county where action was commenced. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

3. Venue ⚷41

When a defendant who resides in county in which action is brought is a necessary and proper party defendant, it is immaterial that another and the principal defendant resides in another county. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

4. Appeal and error ⚷863

On appeal from order denying one defendant a change of venue to county of such defendant's residence, the question is whether a good cause of action has been alleged against another defendant who resides in county in which action was begun or whether in good faith there has been an attempt to allege such cause of action, and in that connection the possibility of amendment is always material. Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

5. Venue ⚷41

In action to recover property or value thereof brought in the county where original defendant resided, as against whom a good cause of action was stated, a defendant who was a resident of another county and was added as a party by an amendment to complaint was not entitled as of right to a change of venue to county of his residence on ground that complaint was deficient as to him and that he was therefore an improper party in view of the Code section providing that if any person is improperly joined as a defendant, his residence must not be considered in determining venue. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 395–399.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Ernest Klette, Judge.

Action by L. C. White against Charles J. Anderson and Alex Highiet to recover property or the value thereof, wherein last named defendant filed a demurrer and a motion and demand for a change of venue. From an order refusing to grant the motion and demand for change of venue, the last named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Edward T. Taylor, of Modesto, for appellant.

Ralph Robinson and Clyde E. Cate, both of Fresno, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order refusing to grant a motion and demand for a change of venue.

In the original complaint Anderson, a resident of Fresno County, was named as sole defendant. It was alleged that he stole certain property from plaintiff's assignor and that he had refused to return the property or pay the value thereof although demand had been duly made. In an amended complaint Highiet was added as a party defendant and the stated value of the property taken was increased. It was there alleged that property of the value of $20,000 was taken, that thereafter a portion of the property, being of the value of $18,000, came into possession of the defendant Highiet, and that demand had been made on both defendants for a return of the goods. The property taken was described but it was not alleged which particular articles had come into possession of Highiet. The prayer was for the return of the property or its value in case the same could not be returned.

The defendant Highiet, who was a resident of Stanislaus County, filed a demurrer to the amended complaint and also filed a motion and demand for a change of venue, demanding that "the place of trial of the above entitled action be transferred" to the superior court of Stanislaus County, together with an affidavit in the usual form. After a hearing the court entered an order denying the motion and demand for a change of venue, and the defendant Highiet has appealed.

The appellant contends that the amended complaint does not sufficiently allege a cause of action as against him for the reason that it fails to allege any sort of joint action or joint relationship between him and the other defendant, that the allegations of the complaint present a situation which can only be tried or remedied by separate actions against the two defendants, and that he is, therefore, entitled to a change of venue as a matter of right under sections 395–399 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He concedes that a good cause of action is alleged as against Anderson, but contends that the complaint is deficient in this respect as against him. In effect it is claimed that two causes of action are alleged or attempted to be alleged and that the one against the appellant should have been brought in Stanislaus County. It thus appears that the real contention is that the appellant was an improper party in and to the action brought in Fresno County. While this situation, if true, could have been reached in another way, it does not furnish a sufficient reason for transferring the entire action to the other county. Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things: "If any person is improperly joined as a defendant * * * his residence must not be considered in determining the proper place for the trial of the action."

[1-3] A defendant is not entitled to have an action removed to the county of his residence unless it appears that none of the other defendants are residents of the county where the action is brought. Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 P. 730. Even when all of the defendants join in a demand for or consent to a change of venue the cause will be retained if the complaint attempts in apparent good faith to state a cause of action against a defendant who resides in the county where the action was commenced. McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 211 P. 17. When a defendant who resides in the county in which an action is brought is a necessary and proper party defendant it is immaterial that another and the principal defendant resides in another county. Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 P. 848.

[4] The appellant argues entirely with respect to whether a good cause of action was alleged against him when the real question on such an appeal as this is as to whether a good cause of action has been alleged against a defendant who resides in the county in which the action is begun, or whether in good faith there has been an attempt to allege such a cause of action. In that connection the possibility of amendment is always material. McClung v. Watt, supra; Richmond Terminal Corp. v. Parr Terminal Co., 96 Cal.App. 152, 273 P. 845.

[5] Whether the amended complaint was sufficient to allege a good cause of action as against this appellant is another question which we are not here called upon to decide. The appellant, in his briefs, seems to contend both that he was entitled to have the entire action removed to the other county and that the order should be reversed only insofar as it affects him. He applied for a change of the place of trial of the entire action, the order appealed from is one refusing a change of venue with respect to the entire action, and the correctness of that order is the only question before us.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 486

PIERCE v. PATERSON.

Civ. 11779.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

March 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑933(4)

In the absence of a statement in order granting new trial that new trial was granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict, the presumption is that it was not made on that ground.

2. Appeal and error 🔑854(6)

Where order granting new trial does not state that new trial was granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence, appellate court may not disturb the order if it can be upheld on any other ground.

3. Physicians and surgeons 🔑14(1)

A physician cannot be held to guarantee the result of his professional services, but in undertaking treatment of a patient a physician impliedly contracts and represents not only that he possesses the reasonable degree of skill and learning possessed by others of his profession in the locality, but that he will use reasonable and ordinary skill in the application of such knowledge to accomplish the purpose for which he is employed.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⚷14(1)

If injury is caused by want of reasonable and ordinary skill and care on part of physician, he is liable for the consequences.

5. Negligence ⚷134(2)

In the trial of civil cases, it is not necessary that circumstances shall establish the negligence of defendant as a proximate cause of injury with such absolute certainty as to exclude every other conclusion, and it is sufficient if there is substantial evidence upon which to reasonably support the judgment.

6. Physicians and surgeons ⚷18(9)

In malpractice action, where the evidence presented tends to show that the negligence alleged resulted in infection producing death it presents a case for the jury.

7. New trial ⚷39
Trial ⚷253(4)

In malpractice action against physician who treated crushed finger of patient who died from tetanus infection, where it was reasonable inference to be drawn from the testimony of expert witnesses and other evidence that the infection would not have occurred if wound had been properly cleansed and antisepticized, the giving of an instruction which excluded from consideration of jury all issues of negligence except failure to administer tetanus antitoxin was error and justified order granting new trial.

8. Appeal and error ⚷1066

An instruction is prejudicially erroneous which excludes an issue that is supported by evidence.

9. Evidence ⚷538

In malpractice action in Alameda county against physician who treated crushed finger of patient who died from tetanus infection, witness who graduated from university in 1897, was admitted to practice medicine in California in 1899, spent some time in post-graduate work in Chicago, New York, Vienna, Austria, and Berne, Switzerland, practiced for about five years in Portland, Ore., and from 1910 to 1920 was on railroad staff but in 1920 commenced practicing in Alameda county and became familiar with standard of care and skill ordinarily used by physicians, practicing in that county, in their treatment of wounds and of tetanus infection, was competent to testify as an expert witness.

10. Evidence ⚷351, 370(4)

In malpractice action against physician who treated crushed finger of patient who died from tetanus infection, exclusion of hospital records kept in connection with admission of the patient and treatment administered to him was not error, where it was not shown that any of the records excluded were required to be kept by law, and no proper foundation was laid for their introduction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Malpractice action by Frances R. Pierce against Adam Paterson. A verdict was returned for defendant. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Lamb and Hadsell, Sweet, Ingalls & Carroll, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lercara & Nelle, Lewis E. Lercara, and Clifford W. Nelle, all of Oakland, for respondent.

B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from an order granting a new trial in a malpractice action against a physician and surgeon. Willis Pierce, a boy of ten years, sustained a crushing of the middle finger of his right hand by getting it caught in the door of his bath room. His mother, the respondent, promptly summoned the defendant to treat the injury. On account of another emergency call he instructed her over the telephone to place the finger in an ice pack to stop the bleeding. This she did after replacing the nail which had been torn loose. Within about half an hour the defendant arrived. Considerable blood had flowed from the wound and clotted about the finger. It also developed later that the bone in the finger was crushed. Without any other preparation or cleansing, the defendant lifted the nail slightly and squeezed some tincture of merthiolate underneath it and then packed the finger in metanic jelly and bandaged it. Treatment in substantially this same manner was continued for several days when the boy developed symptoms of a tetanus infection. Another physician was immediately called and the patient taken to the Alameda County Hospital. Tetanus antitoxin was immediately administered but he failed to respond and died of the infection the following day. The case was tried before a jury which returned a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon moved for a new trial which was granted, and it is from this order granting a new trial that the appeal is taken.

[1, 2] The order granting the motion for a new trial does not specify the grounds upon which it was granted. In the absence of a statement in the order that the new trial was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the presumption is that it was not made on that ground. We may not, however, disturb the order if it can be upheld on any other ground. Phillips v. Powell, 210 Cal. 39, 290 P. 441. It is urged in support of the order, however, that the court erred in instructing the jury and in sustaining an objection to the admission of the records of the Alameda County Hospital pertaining to the treatment of the decedent in evidence. The position of the appellant is that the hospital records were properly excluded, and that there was not sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury thus rendering any error in instructing the jury of no consequence.

[3, 4] As the court said in Sim v. Weeks, 7 Cal.App.2d 28, 45 P.2d 350, 352: "It is well settled that a physician and surgeon cannot be held to guarantee the results of his professional services. 'However, it is equally well settled that in undertaking a treatment of a patient the practitioner impliedly contracts and represents, not only that he possesses the reasonable degree of skill and learning possessed by others of his profession in the locality, but that he will use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in the application of such knowledge to accomplish the purpose for which he is employed; and that, if injury is caused by a want of such skill or care on his part, he is liable for the consequences which follow. Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal.App. 321, 155 P. 128; Nelson v. Painless Parker, 104 Cal.App. 770, 286 P. 1078; Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 P. 642; Hesler v. California Hospital Co., 178 Cal. 764, 174 P. 654; Ley v. Bishopp, 88 Cal.App. 313, 263 P. 369; Patterson v. Marcus, 203 Cal. 550, 265 P. 222.' "

The contention here made is not that the defendant was not possessed of the requisite knowledge and skill but that he was negligent in the treatment of the injury. In this connection it is urged that there was no proper examination of the wound; no cleansing; no proper sterilization; and that the application of metanic jelly without cleansing and sterilization operated to seal in any bacilli that were present and directly induced the infection from which the boy died. In response to the question from plaintiff's counsel, "When you put the metanic jelly on this wound did you seal the wound?" and the defendant replied, "That was the purpose of putting it on".

[5, 6] Dr. Ruedy, a physician and surgeon called by the plaintiff, testified that under the circumstances of the case "the use of reasonable medical care and skill by the attending physician demanded a thorough cleaning of the sutured finger and to give the finger free access to the air to overcome any anaerobic tetanic germs". Several physicians and surgeons of established reputations called as witnesses by the defendant testified that in the case of such a wound as is here presented ordinary care would demand a thorough cleansing and the application of an antiseptic. Within eight or nine days after treatment of the wound by the defendant commenced the infection developed to the point that it became manifest. It is a reasonable inference to be drawn from the testimony of the expert witnesses and the other evidence that the infection would not have occurred if the wound had been properly cleansed and antisepticized. As is said in Barham v. Widing, 210 Cal. 206, 291 P. 173, 177: "It is not necessary in the trial of civil cases that the circumstances shall establish the negligence of the defendant as the proximate cause of injury with such absolute certainty as to exclude every other conclusion. It is sufficient if there is substantial evidence upon which to reasonably support the judgment. Ley v. Bishopp, 88 Cal.App. 313, 316, 263 P. 369." Where the evidence presented tends to show that the negligence alleged resulted in the infection producing the death it presents a case for the jury. Sim v. Weeks, supra; Swanson v. Hood, 99 Wash. 506, 170 P. 135.

[7, 8] In instructing the jury the court gave the following instruction: "The charge of negligence against the defendant, Doctor Adam Paterson, is that he was negligent in not administering tetanus antitoxin to the deceased minor, Willis Pierce. If you find from the evidence that in deciding not to administer said serum, the defendant doctor possessed and exercised the degree of skill, learning and care ordinarily possessed and exercised by physicians in the same line of practice in San Leandro, or similar localities, then your verdict will be against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant."

The vice in this instruction is immediately apparent. It limits the jury in their consideration to the decision of Dr. Paterson to not administer tetanus antitoxin and reserves from their consideration all of the other alleged negligent acts to which evidence was addressed. All issues of negligence except failure to administer tetanus antitoxin were excluded from the consideration of the jury by the instruction. It in effect instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant if it appeared that there was no negligence in failing only to administer antitoxin serum. The jury in effect was told to disregard all facts bearing upon the failure of the defendant to cleanse and sterilize the wound. It is not open to question that an instruction is prejudicially erroneous which excluded an issue that is supported by evidence. Galloway v. United Railroads, 69 Cal.App. 770, 232 P. 491; Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Starr v. Los Angeles Railway Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 201 P. 599. The existence of such compels the granting of a new trial.

[9] Another contention of the appellant is that there is no expert testimony in support of plaintiff's case and that it falls for this reason. In this connection it is urged that Dr. Ruedy, the only physician called by the plaintiff, did not qualify as an expert. This witness testified that he graduated from the University of Oregon in 1897, and was admitted to practice in California in 1898. He spent some time in post-graduate work in Chicago and New York, and in Vienna, Austria, and Berne, Switzerland. After completing his post-graduate work he practiced for about five years in Portland, Oregon, and from 1910 to 1920 was on the staff of the Spokane, Portland and Seattle Railroad at Spokane, Washington. In 1920 he removed to Oakland, in Alameda County, and has practiced his profession at said place ever since. He further testified that during all of the period of his practice in Alameda County he was familiar with the standard of care and skill ordinarily used, possessed and exercised, by physicians and surgeons practicing in Alameda County and in their treatment of wounds such as was suffered by the decedent, and of tetanus infections. Under well established rules these qualifications of Dr. Ruedy rendered him competent to testify as an expert witness. Hutter v. Hommel, 213 Cal. 677, 3 P.2d 554; Warnock v. Kraft, 30 Cal.App.2d 1, 85 P.2d 505; Valdez v. Percy, 35 Cal.App.2d 485, 96 P. 2d 142.

[10] The plaintiff produced and offered as original evidence the records of the Alameda County Hospital kept in connection with the admission of the decedent and the treatment administered to him. These records consist of the Admission Record, History Record, Treatment Record, Progress Record, Pathological Report, Clinical Chart, Report of Autopsy Surgeon and General Summary. Objection was made to the introduction of these records on the ground that no proper foundation had been laid for their introduction, and that they were hearsay. Even though it be assumed that they were admissible, a point we do not decide, no error was here made in excluding them, as no proper foundation was laid for their introduction. No proper showing was made that any of the records mentioned were required to be kept by any law.

We are of the opinion that the giving of the erroneous instruction complained of constituted sufficient grounds for the granting of a new trial.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 516

TOMAIER v. TOMAIER.

Civ. 3011.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 17, 1942.

1. Divorce ⚿184(6)

Whether the acts and conduct of wife inflicted grievous mental suffering upon husband so as to entitle him to a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty was a question of fact for determination of the trial court from all the facts and circumstances in the case.

2. Divorce ⚿130

Evidence supported trial court's conclusion that husband was entitled to a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

3. Divorce ⚿249(3)

In divorce action, trial court had no power to divide real property, standing in the names of husband and wife as joint tenants, as though it were in fact community property.

4. Husband and wife ⚿14(3)

As between husband and wife a community estate and a joint tenancy cannot exist at the same time in the same property.

5. Joint tenancy ⚿6

The chief incident of "joint tenancy" is right of survivorship.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Joint Tenancy".

6. Husband and wife ⚿14(3)

A "joint tenancy" is one estate and in it the rights of the spouses are identical and coextensive.

7. Husband and wife ⚿14(3)

A joint tenancy, the evidence of which the law requires to be on the face of the conveyance creating it, is of necessity an expression of the intention of husband and wife to hold property otherwise than as community property and the equal interest of the spouses must therefore be classed as their separate but joint estate in property. Civ. Code, § 164.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Charles Tomaier against Mildred Tomaier for a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking a divorce on the ground of desertion. From a judgment granting plaintiff a divorce and making a division of the property of the parties, defendant appeals.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Edward M. Selby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Appellant wife appeals from a judgment granting respondent husband a divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, and making a division of the property of the parties. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of cruelty on her part, and that she was entitled to a divorce on her cross-complaint on the ground of desertion.

[1, 2] No useful purpose would be served by setting forth the somewhat sordid evidence in the case on the charges of cruelty and on the counter charges of desertion. No hard and fast rule of law can be laid down as to what particular facts must be proved in order to justify a finding that a spouse has undergone grievous mental suffering. A correct decision must depend upon the sound sense and judgment of the trial court. Therefore, in the case at bar, whether or not the acts and conduct of appellant inflicted grievous mental suffering upon respondent was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court from all the facts and circumstances in the case (Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 P. 298, 16 L.R.A. 660; Hansen v. Hansen, 86 Cal.App. 744, 261 P. 503; Shaw v. Shaw, 122 Cal.App. 172, 9 P.2d 876) and a careful reading of the entire record convinces us that there is ample evidence to support the conclusion that respondent was entitled to a divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty.

The trial court found that respondent and appellant were the owners of the following property: Parcel 1. Lots 17 to 21, in Block 99, in the town of Mohave, leased to the Safeway Company and subject to an encumbrance in the sum of $5,000. Parcel 2. A residence in Kansas City, Missouri. Parcel 3. Money in escrow in the Bank of America, being the proceeds from the sale of Lot 5, Block 100, in the town of Mohave. Parcel 4. A Dodge, 1939 automobile coupe, house trailer, household furniture and furnishings in possession of respondent at Mohave.

The trial court further found that parcels 1, 2 and 3, stood of record in the name of appellant and respondent as joint tenants; and

"That the parties acquired said properties during their marriage and that it was not the intention of the plaintiff or of the parties that the defendant should be vested with or become the owner of any interest in either of said properties as her separate property; that said properties and each of them were acquired with separate funds of plaintiff and with community funds of plaintiff and defendant and not with any separate funds of the defendant; that plaintiff never at any time intended to make any gift to the defendant of any right, title or interest in or to any of said properties of either of them; that the interest in said properties which these parties now own was acquired by them with the purpose and intention that the same should be and become their community property; that the parties agreed to encumber and did encumber said properties for the improvement of the same for their common benefit and they agreed that the community income should be applied to the improvement and development of said properties for their common use and benefit and that they never had any intention that said properties or any of the same should be improved or developed or acquired for the benefit of the separate estate of the defendant; and that the property referred to as parcel 4 is personal property and the community property of the parties hereto."

The trial court then decreed that all of said property was community property and awarded parcels 1 and 4 to respondent, parcel 2 to appellant, awarded appellant $1,000 out of parcel 3, and respondent the balance of parcel 3, and awarded appellant $1,850, to be paid by respondent at the rate of $50 per month, commencing at the entry of the final decree, without interest.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in finding that parcels 1, 2 and 3 were community property, and argues that because said real property stood in the names of appellant and respondent as joint tenants, this finding cannot be sustained.

[3-7] We must agree with this contention and hold that the trial court had no power to divide the property held in joint tenancy as though it were in fact community property. This is clearly held by our Supreme Court in Siberell v. Siberell, 214 Cal. 767, at page 773, 7 P.2d 1003, at page 1005, there the court said:

"First, from the very nature of the estate, as between husband and wife, a community estate and a joint tenancy cannot exist at the same time in the same property. The use of community funds to purchase the property and the taking of title thereto in the name of the spouses as joint tenants is tantamount to a binding agreement between them that the same shall not thereafter be held as community property, but instead as a joint tenancy with all the characteristics of such an estate. It would be manifestly inequitable and a subversion of the rights of both husband and wife to have them in good faith enter into a valid engagement of this character, and following the demise of either, to have a contention made that his or her share in the property was held for the community, thus bringing into operation the law of descent, administration, rights of creditors, and other complications which would defeat the right of survivorship, the chief incident of the law of joint tenancy. A joint tenancy is one estate and in it the rights of the spouses are identical and coextensive.

"Second, on its face section 164 has no application to a case where 'a different intention is expressed in the instrument,' and it seems to us to be clear, as already pointed out above, that a joint tenancy, the evidence of which the law requires to be on the face of the conveyance creating it, is of necessity an expression of the intention to hold the property otherwise than as community property, and that the equal interest of the spouses must therefore be classed as their separate but joint estate in property." See, Estate of Harris, 9 Cal.2d 649, 72 P.2d 873.

Futhermore, we deem it proper to state that there is no evidence in the record that it was the intention of the parties that the property should be held other than in joint tenancy, so even if it were proper in such a case to show that there was such an intention, which we do not hold, there is no evidence to support it.

In view of the foregoing, that part of the judgment granting respondent an interlocutory decree of divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty is affirmed, and that part of the judgment as to the division of the property is reversed. Costs of appeal to be borne by each party.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 653

POLK v. POLK.

Civ. 13270.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 23, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 22, 1942.

1. Divorce ⚷6

A court is not authorized to deny a divorce where evidence of plaintiff, adequately corroborated, establishes the truth of allegations of complaint stating a cause for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty. Civ. Code, § 94.

2. Divorce ⚷184(10)

In action for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, every intendment is in favor of finding made by trial court and on appeal such finding is not to be overthrown unless to the appellate tribunal it is very plain that the conclusion reached cannot be supported by any rational view of the testimony. Civ.Code, § 94.

3. Divorce ⚷184(10)

In action for divorce for extreme cruelty, considerable latitude is allowed to the court in determining whether acts complained of constituted extreme cruelty of the kind and nature as to make mandatory a severance of the marital bonds. Civ.Code, §§ 55, 94.

4. Divorce ⚷147

In action for divorce for extreme cruelty, whether conduct of one of the spouses is such as to wrongfully inflict upon the other party to the marriage the grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering necessary to authorize divorce is a "question of fact" to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case. Civ.Code, § 94.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Question of Fact".

5. Divorce ⚷130

Evidence sustained judgment denying divorce sought by husband on ground of extreme cruelty. Civ.Code, § 94.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Action for divorce by Luther A. Polk against Mary Alma Polk. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CURTIS and CARTER, JJ., and PETERS, J. pro tem., dissenting.

Don Lake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny and Robert O. Curran, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This is an action for divorce wherein plaintiff sought dissolution of his marriage to defendant upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Civ.Code, sec. 94. An answer was filed admitting all the allegations contained in the complaint save and except the one which charged the wrongful infliction of grievous mental suffering upon plaintiff by the answering spouse. At the trial plaintiff introduced evidence of his marriage on January 19, 1910; that the parties thereto separated May 10, 1939; that three children were born as the issue of said marriage, all of whom have reached their majority. The plaintiff testified, and was corroborated in his testimony, that on an occasion in 1937, while traveling on a railroad train, plaintiff was standing in the aisle assisting two ladies with their baggage, when his wife, without saying a word, struck him in the face, in the presence of many passengers in the car. He further testified that his occupation was that of motorman, and that constantly upon his return home from his duties his wife would charge him with infidelity. He further testified that defendant never prepared meals for him, and upon returning home after working all night it was necessary for him to prepare them himself. Another incident testified to by the plaintiff occurred during a visit of his sister. On the last day of his sister's visit, while she and her family were at the home of plaintiff and defendant, he desired to spend the last day of his sister's visit with her, but his wife insisted that he take her out and compelled him to remain away from home until about thirty minutes before his sister and her family were required to leave. Plaintiff testified to a severe injury inflicted upon him by his wife on another occasion in the early part of 1938, from which injury he suffered for about six months. In explanation of why he continued to remain at the family home during the course of what he termed "many years" of alleged cruel and inhuman treatment, plaintiff testified that he did so "solely for the purpose of continuing the education of my children and until my son graduated from college, never at any time forgiving her for any of her acts, but only for the purpose of doing that which I could for the welfare of my children, and as soon as my son finished college I left the house and continued separate and apart since that time."

At the conclusion of plaintiff's case defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was denied. In presenting her defense, the defendant was the sole witness in her behalf. She testified: "The testimony of my husband was true, but I was in a nervous and excited condition at the time each of the matters complained of by him occurred; that he never forgave me for any of my actions, and on the 17th of April, 1940, I wrote him to forgive me and come home." Upon being shown a letter, the defendant wife identified it as the letter referred to in her testimony, and the same was admitted in evidence. It reads: "Dear Luther: Please call off that divorce suit and come home as we all love you and don't want to lose you or fight you. Forgive me of all I said or done. Anna."

After taking the case under submission, the court on May 9, 1940, rendered its decision denying plaintiff a divorce. Thereafter a motion for a new trial was argued, submitted, and by the court denied. This appeal is by the plaintiff from the judgment.

Appellant contends that under the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff as to the treatment received by him at the hands of his wife, the truth of which was admitted by the latter, the court was bound to find that the allegations in the complaint of cruel and inhuman treatment were true; that a contrary finding as made cannot be sustained by the evidence, and that a judgment predicated upon such unsupported finding must be reversed.

[1-3] True, it is the law that the court is not authorized to deny a divorce where the evidence of the plaintiff, adequately corroborated, establishes the truth of the allegations of the complaint. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 152 Cal. 316, 92 P. 853; Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467. The court is not invested with any arbitrary power to grant or refuse the relief, where a case has been made out. However, in every action for divorce the court is called upon to determine whether the evidence before it does establish the truth of the charge made in the complaint. As in other cases, every intendment is in favor of the finding made. On appeal such finding is not to be overthrown unless to the appellate tribunal it is very plain that the conclusion reached cannot be supported upon any rational view of the testimony. As has been so often said, the state itself is a party to every marriage contract and seeks to protect the family in its constitution and laws as the necessary basis of the social order and as indispensable to the welfare of the nation and the state. True, marriage under the law is a civil contract, Civ.Code, sec. 55, but out of such contract, as declared by statute, there arises a personal relation between the parties. In consonance with what we have just said, it follows that although it be admitted that the defendant's acts were wrong and unjustifiable, nevertheless considerable latitude is allowed to the court in determining whether such acts constituted extreme cruelty of the nature and kind as to make mandatory a severance of the marital bonds.

[4, 5] The trial court doubtless took into account the many years the parties to the instant litigation had lived together, the physical and mental infirmities with which the wife testified she was afflicted, and her protestations of love and affection for her husband as contained in the letter addressed to him and introduced in evidence, coupled with the fact that to her husband she had borne three children. Considerable latitude was allowed for the exercise of discretion in the trial court in determining whether under the facts and circumstances here present the conduct of the defendant constituted extreme cruelty. Moreover, in deciding that the conduct of the defendant in this case did not amount to extreme cruelty which warranted a divorce, the trial court was aided by the opportunity, not afforded us, of having the witnesses before it, of observing their temperament, demeanor, candor and truthfulness. Whether in a given case the conduct of one of the spouses was such as to wrongfully inflict upon the other party to the marriage the "grievous bodily injury" or "grievous mental suffering" referred to in the statute, is a pure question of fact, to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case, and as stated in Van Camp v. Van Camp, 53 Cal.App. 17, 199 P. 885, 887, "no arbitrary rule of law as to what particular probative facts shall exist in order to justify a finding of the ultimate facts of its existence can be given." Having in mind the policy of the law concerning the nature and character of the contract of marriage, coupled with the facts and circumstances herein narrated, we cannot say that the conclusion arrived at by the trial court should be disturbed on appeal.

The judgment denying a decree of divorce is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 538

THOMAS v. STUDIO AMUSEMENTS, Inc., et al.

Civ. 12799.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 18, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑934(1)

On appeal from a judgment notwithstanding a verdict, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the appellant, and every reasonable inference in her favor must be drawn therefrom.

2. Theaters and shows 🔑6

A roller skating rink patron does not "assume the risk" created by reckless action of other skaters capable of being prevented by guards who are stationed upon the rink for the protection of patrons.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Assume the Risk".

3. Theaters and shows 🔑6

The operator of a roller skating rink is not an "insurer" of his patrons' safety, but he owes a duty to protect the patrons from risks other than those normally incident to the sport.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Insurer".

4. Theaters and shows 🔑6

In action for injuries sustained in fall by patron on roller skating rink during period reserved for ladies only, evidence from which it could be inferred that the patron's fall was caused by a speedy blond skater who was ducking in and out among other skaters and who cut across the path of some of the skaters, whether the blond skater's actions caused the patron's fall, and whether the blond skater's actions were of such nature and extent that the operator's employees should have seen them in time to have prevented the accident was for the jury.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)

In action by patron of roller skating rink for injuries sustained in a fall, where evidence presented a question regarding liability of operator of the skating rink, the jury was the final arbiter of that question, and their conclusion could not be disturbed where supported by substantial evidence.

6. Negligence 🔑136(25)

Where roller skating rink patron fell and sustained a broken hip, in action for negligence in improperly handling the patron in first-aid room at rink after accident, which improper handling allegedly aggravated injury, and where evidence indicated that defendant falsely represented himself to the patron as a medical doctor, and that he stretched, pulled and rubbed the patron's leg and pounded her thigh and informed her that her injury was not serious, evidence was sufficient for jury on question whether the defendant's act aggravated the injury.

7. Negligence 🔑8

A layman assuming role and duties of a doctor and negligently causing aggravation of injury cannot avail himself of defense of having used standard of skill and care usually possessed or rendered by physicians in the locality, since such a defense is peculiarly the privilege of the medical profession.

8. Negligence 🔑8

A defense based on the use of standard of skill and care usually possessed or rendered by physicians in the locality is peculiarly the privilege of the medical profession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover, Judge.

Personal injury action by Zelma Thomas against Studio Amusements, Inc., and others. From judgment for defendants, notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and new trial ordered.

Randall J. Hood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred O. Reed, Richard L. Kirtland, and W. H. Abrams, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

[1] This is an appeal from separate judgments, notwithstanding the verdict of a jury in favor of plaintiff in an action for damages for injuries sustained in a fall on roller skating rink. The complaint contained two separate causes of action, the first based on the alleged negligence of respondent Studio Amusements, Inc., in failing, as the proprietor of the rink, to properly supervise the skaters thereon, and the second based on the alleged negligence of respondent Berman in improperly handling plaintiff in the first aid room at the rink after the accident, which improper handling was alleged to have aggravated plaintiff's injuries. Upon her information and belief plaintiff alleged that respondent Berman was employed by respondent Studio Amusements, Inc. At the opening of plaintiff's case the plaintiff conceded that the first count of the complaint did not state a cause of action against respondent Berman and the court sustained the objection of respondent Studio Amusements, Inc. (hereinafter for convenience referred to as respondent corporation), to the second count as not stating a cause of action against the latter respondent. The two causes of action were thus separated and the trial proceeded as a joint trial of two separate cases. Defendants moved for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case and for a directed verdict after both sides had rested. Both motions were denied and the cause was submitted to the jury, which rendered its verdict in favor of plaintiff and against both defendants. Thereupon the motions of defendants for judgment notwithstanding the verdict were granted and such a judgment was entered in favor of each defendant. In accordance with the settled rule on an appeal from a judgment notwithstanding a verdict, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to the appellant and every reasonable inference in her favor must be drawn therefrom. Respondents do not contend otherwise, but argue that there is no substantial evidence in appellant's favor.

The first cause of action of appellant's complaint charged respondent corporation with negligence in failing to control reckless and speedy skating on respondent's roller skating rink, and that, "as a proximate result of said great speed, one of said skaters collided with plaintiff," thereby knocking plaintiff (appellant) to the floor of the rink and causing the injuries complained of. The second cause of action charged respondent Berman with falsely representing himself to appellant as a medical doctor and thereupon handling appellant in a negligent manner in the first aid room adjoining the rink, and in representing to appellant that she had only suffered a slight injury, when in fact she had sustained a fractured hip; all of which, appellant in effect alleged, had aggravated her injuries. Evidence introduced upon each count was admitted only against the respondent to which it applied.

Appellant, in company with two friends, man and wife, visited the roller skating rink maintained by respondent corporation. The man accompanying appellant did not skate but sat in one of the loge boxes at the side of the rink, while his wife and appellant skated. Appellant sustained her fall during a period when ladies only were permitted to skate. When appellant fell, this skating period for ladies only had been going on for an undetermined time, possibly three minutes. The evidence as to the cause of her fall is not conclusive, but it may fairly be inferred therefrom that appellant's fall was caused by a speedy blond skater who was ducking in and out among the other skaters and who cut across the path of some of the other skaters. This blond woman's skate was seen to strike that of another skater, causing the latter skater to fall, thus precipitating the fall of three other skaters, appellant among them. Respondent corporation argues at length against drawing such a conclusion from the evidence, contending that the testimony of the witnesses reveals no connection between the blond skater's actions and appellant's fall; but the evidence is at least reasonably subject to the interpretation here given, and such an interpretation in appellant's favor must be adopted. During the skating period when appellant fell, some of the skaters were skating normally, others were skating fast, about half of the skaters were skating twice as fast as appellant. Some of the skaters were two-stepping or "rexing." There were probably 500 persons skating at the rink that evening, though it does not appear how many were skating during the period when appellant fell. The dimensions of the rink floor are approximately 100 by 200 feet. At the time of appellant's fall there was a skating instructor stationed at each of the four corners of the rink, and the skaters skated around on the outside of those four instructors. There were also two lady instructors on the floor. In addition there were four other instructors spaced around the rink. These latter instructors were in uniform and skated backwards around the rink in the direction of the skaters. The manager of the rink was out in the middle of the floor at the time. The guards or instructors were instructed that if they saw anyone skating "at such a speed or in such a manner that the other skaters would be in danger, beyond the normal risk of skating, to stop them or to slow them down as the necessity of the situation seemed to require." It was stipulated at the trial that these instructors, if called to the stand, would testify that on the evening in question they did not see the blond woman skater and could not recall any incident that occurred prior to appellant's accident. The gentleman who accompanied appellant to the rink, and who was sitting in the loge box, had his attention drawn to the blond skater because of her manner of skating; and he then watched this blond skater until her skate struck that of another skater as above mentioned. The length of time this witness observed this blond skater was not determined, though there is some evidence of the approximate distance over which she traveled during the time she was thus observed. After her fall appellant was unable to rise and she was picked up from the floor by two instructors, who put her on her feet and rolled her on her skates off the floor to the first aid room, where appellant was laid down on a table. Here respondent Berman, who was dressed in a white coat or jacket, told appellant he was a doctor, in answer to appellant's question to that effect. Berman stretched, pulled and rubbed appellant's leg and "pounded" her thigh with his open hand. He informed appellant that her injury was not serious and that she would be able to go to work the next day. He then assisted appellant to her feet and to walk out of the rink to a waiting car. Appellant was unable to get into the car and sat sideways on the running board, from which position Berman pulled appellant into the car and assisted her to the seat.

The extent of appellant's injuries is not disputed. She suffered a cervical fracture of the femur of the left leg, commonly designated as a broken hip. Appellant was operated upon twice, the second operation being necessitated because of a definite non-union of the bones. There had been a bad disturbance of the circulation through the blood vessels of the bone, these blood vessels having been ruptured so that circulation could not cross the fracture line. A shortening of the leg has taken place through absorption of the bone. A third operation is in prospect wherein a section of bone from the leg below the knee will be transplanted to the fracture line in the hip. Appellant's leg has thus been shortened about an inch and appellant will never again be in a normal condition with regard to the use of this leg. Appellant's physician, testifying as an expert in her behalf, stated that under the circumstances appellant should not have been moved from the spot where she fell until splints or a suitable substitute had been applied to the fracture to prevent movement between the broken fragments of bone. The physician's testimony indicates that the rupture of the blood vessels, which was responsible for the absorption of the bone fragments and consequent non-union of the bone, would be apt to be caused the first time weight was put upon the fractured hip; which of course was when the rink attendants first lifted appellant to her feet and rolled her to the first aid room, and before respondent Berman had anything to do with her. The doctor stated that "practically all the damage would be done the first time." However, he also indicated that the rest of her handling would be cumulative. It is to be noted that respondent corporation was not charged with negligence in improperly handling appellant after her fall. Respondent Berman contends that the expert testimony definitely established that Berman's actions and advice did not aggravate or add to appellant's injuries or cause her damage. However, the testimony referred to is by no means positive and unequivocal and the statements on the question are all qualified.

Upon this state of the record the question here to be determined is whether there was sufficient evidence to submit the question of the liability of the respective respondents to the jury. If so, the trial court must be held to have abused its discretion in granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict of the jury.

[2-5] Upon the pleadings and the evidence in support thereof, the liability of respondent corporation is necessarily predicated upon a theory that the blond skater's actions were of such a nature and extent that, under the circumstances, the respondent's employees should have seen the same in time to have prevented a continuance thereof. One of respondent corporation's defenses was the assumption by appellant of the risks incident to skating upon such a rink; but it cannot be argued that one of the normal risks involved is the reckless action of other skaters capable of being prevented by guards who are stationed upon the rink for the protection of patrons. While the operator of a skating rink is not an insurer of his patrons' safety, nevertheless, he owes a duty to protect them from risks other than those normally incident to the sport. From the evidence presented the jury might properly infer that the blond skater's actions caused appellant's fall; that the blond's actions were reckless; and from the description of those actions as given by the witness it could be inferred that the skater's actions had continued for a longer time than the period she was observed. The witness was sitting in a loge box, and as the skaters passed before him his attention was attracted to the blond skater by the manner in which she was skating. There is nothing to show that her speed and her actions were the result of a sudden spurt. On the contrary, the evidence tends more reasonably to support an inference that the blond skater's actions had continued during the time she was upon the rink. The skating period in question had been in progress for approximately three minutes when appellant's accident occurred. There is no evidence to show when the blond skater came upon the skating floor, but from the points marked by the witness on the chart in evidence, indicating where the witness observed the blond skater, it might reasonably be inferred that the blond had not just entered upon the rink. In fact, the markings upon the chart in this respect would support an inference that the skater in question had traveled over a considerable portion of the length of the rink. From the evidence, and from the ordinary course of the events thereby revealed, the jury might reasonably infer that the rink floor, during the skating period reserved for ladies only, was not as crowded as it would be during a period open to all skaters. Respondent corporation admits that at the time of the accident there were ten attendants, and the manager of the rink, upon the skating floor, and that the attendants were charged with the duty of supervising the conduct of the skaters. While, upon the foregoing evidence, a jury might decide the case either for or against appellant, it cannot be said that the conclusion reached was necessarily the result of pure surmise or conjecture. The evidence presented a question of fact as to respondent corporation's liability, and upon that question, the jury was the final arbiter, and their conclusion cannot be disturbed when supported by substantial evidence, however conflicting.

[6-8] A like situation is presented in respect to the case against respondent Berman. As already pointed out, the testimony of the experts did not definitely establish that respondent Berman's handling of appellant did not or could not cause aggravation of her injuries. The effect of this expert testimony was to indicate that the removal of appellant from the rink floor in the first instance was apt to be the principal cause of aggravation. This testimony by no means eliminated Berman's actions as a possible cause of aggravation. The question was left open for the jury to decide upon all the evidence presented. Respondent Berman calls attention to the testimony of a doctor, called as a witness in Berman's behalf, to the effect that a physician would have done approximately the same as Berman. Such testimony is of no avail. It is not a question of what a qualified medical practitioner would have done under the circumstances, but is rather a question of whether Berman under like circumstances should have assumed the role and duties of a doctor. If he did assume such a role and negligently caused aggravation of appellant's injuries thereby, manifestly, he could not avail himself of the defense of having used the standard of skill and care usually possessed or rendered by physicians in the locality. Such a defense is peculiarly the privilege of the medical profession.

Respondent Berman cites Owl Drug Co. v. Crandall, 52 Ariz. 322, 80 P.2d 952, 120 A.L.R. 1521, but the case is not in point. In that case the evidence showed that the plaintiff's injuries may have resulted from one of several causes, and that only one of the causes could be attributed to plaintiff's negligence. Here the question is whether Berman's acts aggravated appellant's injuries, regardless of what the cause of appellant's injuries was and regardless of what else was done to appellant. Upon this question there was sufficient evidence to submit to the jury. In both instances the trial court abused its discretion in granting judgments in favor of respondents notwithstanding the verdict.

The judgments appealed from are reversed and the trial court is ordered to enter judgments in accordance with the verdict of the jury.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 610

PEOPLE v. BROOKS.

Cr. 3533.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 20, 1942.

1. Indictment and Information ⚷189(2)

The crime of assault is a lesser offense included in charge of crime of assault with a deadly weapon.

2. Criminal law ⚷157

Where information charging crime of assault with a deadly weapon was filed within less than a month after date on which it was alleged the crime was committed, even though verdict finding defendant guilty of assault was not returned within statutory time of one year after commission of the offense, the Superior Court had authority to pronounce judgment against defendant, since she was convicted of an offense within the scope of the information. Pen.Code, §§ 801, 1426a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Vaughn N. Thompson, Judge Assigned.

June Brooks was convicted of the crime of assault, and she appeals.

Affirmed.

William G. Kenney, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

[1] In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, the defendant was accused of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, to which charge she entered a plea of not guilty. Upon a first trial of the cause defendant was convicted of the offense charged against her, but a new trial was granted in the superior court. Upon the second trial the jury disagreed. Following a third trial the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the crime of assault, a misdemeanor, a lesser offense necessarily included in the charge set forth in the information. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and she was sentenced to six months in the county jail, the execution of which sentence was suspended and the defendant placed on probation for the term of two years. From the judgment of conviction and the order denying her motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[2] The sole ground for reversal urged by appellant is that the trial court erred in denying her motion for a new trial for the asserted reason that "the verdict is contrary to law, in that the court had lost jurisdiction to impose sentence upon the verdict returned by the jury, in that the statute of limitations had run with respect to the crime designated by the verdict." In other words, as we understand appellant's argument, it is that even though a complaint, indictment or information charging a misdemeanor is filed within the statutory time of one year after the commission of the offense, Pen. Code, §§ 801, 1426a, nevertheless the court is without power to pronounce judgment where a guilty verdict is rendered or a plea taken after the expiration of the aforesaid statutory time. This claim is without merit. The information herein was filed less than a month after the date on which it was alleged the crime was committed. While the offense of which the defendant was informed against was of a higher grade than that of which she was convicted, nevertheless the offense of which she was found guilty is one necessarily included in the crime charged against her. She was therefore convicted of an offense within the scope of the information; and the last-named pleading having been filed within one year after the commission of the offense of which defendant was found guilty, the superior court was empowered and had authority to pronounce the judgment against her. Ex parte Donahue, 65 Cal. 474, 475, 4 P. 449.

The cases of People v. Picetti, 124 Cal. 361, 57 P. 156, and People v. Angelo, 24 Cal.App.2d 626, 75 P.2d 614, earnestly relied upon by appellant, do not aid her, for the reason that in both the cited cases, although the defendant was charged with a felony and convicted of a misdemeanor, the same being a lesser offense included in the greater one charged, as was the case here, the offenses therein charged had been committed more than a year prior to the return of the indictment or filing of the information. As heretofore noted, in the case at bar the information was filed within less than a month after the date when the offense charged was alleged to have been committed.

The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 592

PEOPLE v. COLEMAN.

Cr. 1785.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 19, 1942.

1. Homicide 🔑253(1)

Evidence warranted conviction of first degree murder of divorced wife.

2. Homicide 🔑163(1)

In murder prosecution, question propounded to mother of defendant as to where defendant had lived all his life, save during his married life, was properly excluded, as against contention that information sought was relevant as bearing on character and disposition of defendant as well as his physical and mental condition, since the subject matter was immaterial to the main issue of defendant's guilt of murder.

3. Criminal law 🔑1178

Where complaint was made of the giving and refusal to give certain requested instructions, but no argument was made and no authorities were cited in support of the objections so made to many of such questioned instructions, District Court of Appeal would consider only such as were attacked by argument or authority.

4. Homicide 🔑11

"Malice aforethought", either express or implied, is manifested by the doing of an unlawful and felonious act intentionally, deliberately and without legal cause or excuse, and does not imply a pre-existing hatred or enmity toward the individual injured.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Malice Aforethought".

5. Criminal law 🔑438

In homicide prosecution, photograph of deceased should not be introduced in evidence where photograph was unnecessary.

6. Criminal law 🔑438

In homicide prosecution, photographs of deceased were competent to show head injuries which were inflicted by butt of pistol and which defendant denied, and to corroborate physician's testimony of bullet holes fired from close range, and admission of photographs was not prejudicial where there was nothing about the pictures which was shocking, obscene or inflammatory.

7. Criminal law 🔑741(4)

In homicide prosecution against defendant entering plea of not guilty and not guilty by way of insanity, weight, effect and value of opinions of experts were matters for jury to determine, and jury had a right to weigh such evidence in conjunction with all the circumstances in determining whether insanity of defendant was shown by preponderance of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Dal M. Lemmon, Judge.

William Coleman was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

O. F. Meldon, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and J. Q. Brown, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

The defendant here was charged by information with the murder of Cretie Coleman, from whom he had secured an interlocutory decree of divorce. He entered a plea of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. After a trial by jury upon the pleas so entered he was found guilty of murder in the first degree, with recommendation of imprisonment for life, and on the trial of the second plea was found sane at the time of the commission of the offense. Judgment was thereafter pronounced, and a motion for a new trial was denied. This appeal followed.

The crime was alleged to have been committed in July, 1937, and at the time set for trial in October, 1937, the question of the then present sanity of the defendant arose, and after a hearing thereon it was determined that he was then insane, whereupon the trial was continued until such time as the defendant shall have been restored to sanity. He was committed to the State Hospital for the Insane at Stockton, and in 1941 he was declared sane. Thereupon the instant trial proceeded, resulting in his conviction.

The facts of the case as shown by the evidence are substantially as follows: The defendant had been engaged in the linen supply business in Sacramento, and the decedent, after their divorce, was working for one Samuel Cassinelli, who was engaged in the business of repairing typewriters and furnishing office supplies in Sacramento. In the evening of July 20, 1937, after closing the shop, Mrs. Coleman and Cassinelli drove out to William Land Park in the city, to have a picnic lunch. After parking their car they walked over some forty feet and sat down on the lawn, and as they started to partake of their food Cassinelli saw defendant approaching them, and asked the defendant, "what is the idea of following people around" to which the defendant responded, "I will show you, you little trouble maker," and at that the defendant pulled out his gun and started shooting. Cassinelli ran through the shrubbery to his car to obtain a policeman's club which he had, while Mrs. Coleman, pursued by the defendant, ran in another direction to where a Mr. and Mrs. Stam were also having a picnic. When Cassinelli returned from his car with the club, he testified, "the next thing I saw, when I come back, before I got to the spot where Mr. and Mrs. Coleman were, Mr. Coleman was standing over Mrs. Coleman hitting her over the head with the pistol he had in his hand,—she was crumpled to the ground which was right next to an automobile."

Mrs. Stam testified in part as follows:

"Q. What did you do after you heard the gun shots? A. Well, just in a few minutes she ran around.

"Q. Who? A. Mrs. Coleman, ran around and she hung on to my shoulder, so he ran around after her,—

"Q. (Interposing) Who did? A. Mr. Coleman.

"Q. The defendant? A. And, told me to get out of the way, so I dropped to the ground, and crawled,—I crawled a few feet into the road, then she went over and hung on to our car. * * *

"Q. Now you saw Mrs. Coleman then go to your car, and what did she do when she got to your car, if you noticed? A. She just hung on to the door; the car door was open, and she hung on to the car.

* * *

"Q. And slumped down,—what happened after that, if anything, that you saw? A. The next I heard, she said, 'Oh, someone help me.'

"Q. Was Coleman there then? A. Yes; he wouldn't allow any one to help her.

"Q. What did he do? A. He was swinging the gun, and he told everyone to move, get away from her."

This testimony was corroborated by her husband, Mr. Stam, who testified as follows:

"Q. What happened after you saw them? A. The lady came to my wife and she clinched my wife, then my wife shaken her off,—

"Q. Your wife did what? A. My wife shakened her off,—she wants to get away, she doesn't want to have anything to do with it.

"Q. Then what happened? A. Then she run to the car, to the door of the car, then she hung on to the door of the car, then this person was right back of her with the gun and he emptied the gun in her body.

"Q. How many shots? A. Oh, maybe two or three, I don't know; and one went through the windshield, and then his gun clicked, then he hit her over the head with the gun.

"Q. Do you know which end of the gun he hit her with? A. He turned it around, hit her with the butt.

"Q. Then what happened to the lady? A. What lady?

"Q. That he shot? A. She let go and she went up to the tree and she was hanging on there, then went down.

"Q. And the man who did that shooting, Mr. Stam, you identify as this defendant, Coleman, is that right? A. Yes, sir."

Two other witnesses who were driving by testified as to seeing the defendant waving his gun and warning them to stay away.

An autopsy surgeon testified that decedent died from hemorrhages; that she had two bullet wounds in her back and a laceration on her scalp, and also on her upper lip, which is also shown by photographs admitted as exhibits in evidence.

The defendant testified that he had had trouble with his wife over the matter of payment to her of alimony and that she had been urged to keep after him by Cassinelli; that he went out to the park by prearrangement, to have a talk with her about the question of alimony, and that as he approached them, Cassinelli called him a foul name and reached for his pocket, whereupon defendant started shooting, his wife running between the two of them, and the bullets hit her unintentionally.

[1] The defendant, appellant herein, first contends that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict of murder in the first degree in that there was no evidence of premeditation or deliberation upon the part of the appellant to take his wife's life, but at best it would justify a verdict of manslaughter only. We find no merit in this contention. The evidence discloses that appellant went to the park armed with a loaded revolver; that he carried it in the front compartment of his automobile, and that when he got out of his car he removed the gun and took it with him. What happened thereafter was entirely for the jury to determine, and we find no evidence which would warrant the conclusion that the crime was committed in the heat of passion or upon sudden impulse. There were no threats made against appellant, nor did he see any gun or weapon in the hands of his wife or Cassinelli. When Cassinelli ran to his car, appellant chased the deceased and fired two or three shots into her body and then struck her upon the head with the butt of his revolver. This, of course, could not have been accidental but rather appears to have been deliberately planned.

The act of killing may follow the intent to kill as quickly as follow the successive thoughts of the mind. People v. French, 12 Cal.2d 720, 87 P.2d 1014; People v. Blackwood, 35 Cal.App.2d 728, 96 P.2d 982; People v. Aranda, 12 Cal.2d 307, 83 P.2d 928.

[2] Appellant next complains of the ruling of the trial court in sustaining an objection by the prosecution to a question propounded to the mother of appellant as to where appellant had lived all his life, save during his married life. It is argued that the information sought was relevant as bearing upon the character and disposition of the appellant as well as his physical and mental condition. While the subject matter may have had some bearing upon the issue of insanity and proper to be brought out upon the later trial, it obviously was immaterial to the main issue then before the court and jury.

[3] Complaint is made of the giving and refusal to give of certain requested instructions, but no argument is made and no authorities are cited in support of the objections so made to many of such questioned instructions, therefore we will consider only such as have been attacked by argument or authority.

[4] The court instructed the jury fully upon the subject of murder in all its degrees as well as manslaughter, and upon the subject of "malice aforethought," to which instruction our attention is directed by appellant. The instruction given is as follows: "Malice aforethought, either express or implied, is manifested by the doing of an unlawful and felonious act intentionally, deliberately and without legal cause or excuse. It does not imply a preexisting hatred or enmity towards the individual injured."

It is the last portion to which exception is taken. It is argued that there was no evidence of hatred or enmity toward the decedent and therefore its absence should be considered as a circumstance negativing the existence of this necessary element of "malice aforethought."

The given instruction is a correct statement of the law and is invariably given in all homicide cases. People v. Fallon, 149 Cal. 287, 86 P. 689; People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 P. 1017.

We have examined the record and find the instructions given to be adequately full and complete.

[5, 6] Certain photographs of the decedent were received in evidence to which complaint is made as prejudicial error. While it is true that the introduction of such evidence in cases where it is unnecessary should be disapproved (People v. Burkhart, 211 Cal. 726, 297 P. 11), however, in the instant case the photographs were competent to show the head injuries inflicted by the butt of the pistol and which appellant denied, and also as corroborating the doctor's testimony showing definitely the two bullet holes fired from close range.

There is nothing about the pictures which is shocking, obscene or inflammatory, and no prejudice resulted to the defendant in that regard. People v. Magsaysay, 210 Cal. 301, 291 P. 582; People v. Sisson, 1 Cal.2d 510, 36 P.2d 116; People v. French, supra.

[7] The appellant finally contends that since there was a period of some four years which had elapsed from the date the offense was committed until the trial thereof, during which period appellant was an inmate of the State Hospital, a presumption, or at least a strong inference, arises that he was insane at the time of the commission of the crime. However that may be, it appears that the same jury which tried the main issue of not guilty was retained to try the issue of insanity, and in their deliberations they no doubt gave due consideration to all of the evidence which was introduced insofar as it had any bearing upon the question of the sanity or insanity of the appellant at the time the homicide occurred. Several expert witnesses testified on the issue of insanity, and while there is some conflict in the evidence regarding whether appellant knew right from wrong at the time of the homicide, the record nevertheless contains evidence of a substantial character amply sufficient to sustain the jury's verdict. The weight, effect and value of the opinions of the experts were matters for the jury to determine, and they have the right and it was their duty to weigh such evidence in conjunction with all the facts and circumstances in determining whether or not the sanity of the defendant was shown by a preponderance of the evidence.

We find no prejudicial error in the record which would warrant a reversal, and the judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concur.

50 Cal.App.2d 598

HEATH v. FRUZIA.

Civ. 2678.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 19, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Animals 🔑70

Generally, the owner of a dangerous or vicious animal who has knowledge that it is such an animal is liable for any injury it may inflict upon another unless injured person voluntarily or consciously does something which brings the injury upon himself.

2. Animals 🔑70

The liability of the owner of a dangerous or vicious animal, who has knowledge that it is such an animal, for injuries inflicted by the animal upon another is absolute, and owner is bound to keep animal secure, or he must suffer penalty for his failure to do so, unless it can be shown that injured person voluntarily or consciously did something to bring about injury.

3. Animals 🔑70

The gist of an action against the owner of a dangerous or vicious animal for injuries inflicted by the animal is not the manner of keeping animal but the keeping him at all with knowledge of vicious propensities.

4. Animals 🔑70

The owner of a dangerous or vicious animal, who has knowledge that it is such an animal, is an "insurer" against acts of animal to one who is injured by animal without fault, and question of owner's negligence is immaterial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Insurer".

5. Animals 🔑74(8)

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by defendant's stallion, whether stallion was a vicious or dangerous animal was for jury.

6. Animals 🔑74(5)

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by defendant's stallion, evidence supported jury's implied findings that stallion was a dangerous or vicious animal and that defendant knew of the vicious or dangerous trait which caused injuries.

7. Animals 🔑70

That defendant's stallion, in most of the prior incidents wherein stallion had displayed vicious propensities, had attacked people or animals by using his front feet rather than by kicking did not relieve defendant from liability in action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by stallion.

8. Animals 🔑74(8)

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by defendant's stallion, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was for jury.

9. Trial 🔑260(8)

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by defendant's stallion, instructing that where an injury is caused by a vicious animal which is known by its owner to be vicious, the owner is liable as an insurer unless injured person voluntarily does something to bring about injury and that question of negligence of owner is immaterial and refusal of instructions offered by defendant upon question of contributory negligence was not reversible error on theory that jury was told that negligence of plaintiff had no bearing upon his right to recover, in view of other given instructions.

10. Trial 🔑260(1)

Refusal of requested instructions was not reversible error where matters contained in refused instructions were covered by given instructions.

11. Trial 🔑243

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was kicked by defendant's stallion, instructions that where an injury is caused by a vicious animal which is known by its owner to be vicious, the owner is liable as an insurer unless injured person voluntarily does something to bring about injury and that plaintiff was bound to exercise that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person in plaintiff's position and with his knowledge would have exercised were not conflicting.

12. Appeal and error 🔑882(12)

Where defendant asked for an instruction in trial court, defendant could not object to the instruction on appeal.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Harold Heath against Jack Fruzia and another for injuries suffered by plaintiff as a result of being kicked by a horse. From a judgment for plaintiff, Jack Fruzia appeals.

Affirmed.

Calvin H. Conron, Jr., of Bakersfield, for appellant.

West & Vizzard, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for damages on account of injuries suffered by the plaintiff as a result of being kicked by a horse owned by the defendant Fruzia. The complaint originally contained two counts, the first based upon the theory that this horse was vicious and dangerous which fact was known to the owner, and the second based upon the theory of negligence on the part of the defendant Mahaffey, who was in direct charge of the animal at the time. The defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted as to the second cause of action and the matter was submitted to a jury upon the issues raised by the first cause of action and the answer. A verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Fruzia and he has appealed from the judgment which followed.

The horse in question was a stallion named "Duke." On this occasion Mahaffey was riding "Duke." Heath was riding another horse, and Fruzia was riding a third horse and leading a mare. They stopped at a cross-road store and ordered coca colas, a bottle being handed to each rider by the storekeeper. Mahaffey had dismounted and was holding "Duke" by the reins, with the reins wrapped around his arm while he was getting the money from his pocket with which to pay for the drinks. Heath, who had come to the scene after the others were there, at first rode his horse in near to where Mahaffey was standing at "Duke's" head and then backed his horse a few steps and moved around so that his horse was standing at the edge of the traveled portion of the road and parallel with "Duke," but facing in the opposite direction and about 16 feet away from "Duke." While he was in this position and drinking his coca cola, and while Mahaffey was trying to get his money out of his pocket, "Duke" suddenly and without warning whirled around, backed up a few paces and kicked, striking respondent and breaking his leg.

[1-4] The well-established general rule is that the owner of a dangerous or vicious animal who has knowledge that it is such an animal is liable for any injuries it may inflict upon another unless such other person voluntarily or consciously does something which brings the injury upon himself. In Opelt v. Al. G. Barnes Co., 41 Cal.App. 776, 183 P. 241, 242, the rule is thus stated: "The liability of the owner is absolute, in such cases, and he is bound to keep the animal secure, or he must suffer the penalty for his failure to do so, in making compensation for the mischief done, unless it can be shown that the person injured voluntarily, or consciously, did something to bring about the injury. Molloy v. Starin, 191 N.Y. 21, 83 N.E. 588, 16 L.R.A.,N.S., 445, 14 Ann.Cas. 57. The gist of the action is not the manner of keeping the vicious animal, but the keeping him at all with knowledge of the vicious propensities. Hammond v. Melton, 42 Ill.App. 186. In such instances the owner is an insurer against the acts of the animal, to one who is injured without fault, and the question of the owner's negligence is not in the case. Laverone v. Mangianti, 41 Cal. 138, 10 Am.Rep. 269; Clowdis v. Fresno Flume, etc., Co., supra [118 Cal. 315, 321, 50 P. 373, 62 Am.St.Rep. 238.]"

The appellant first contends that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain either the implied finding of the jury that "Duke" was a dangerous or vicious animal or the further implied finding that the appellant knew of the vicious or dangerous trait which caused this injury. It appears without contradiction, that on this occasion "Duke" wheeled around, pulled back and kicked suddenly and without warning. Mahaffey testified that he knew of no provocation to cause "Duke" to do this, that he was absorbed at the time in getting out his money and "I didn't know that the horse was going to kick." There was evidence that when "Duke" was about a year old a small boy started across a pasture in which "Duke" was confined, on his way to school, and that when he was about 200 yards away "Duke" took after him and knocked him down, breaking his leg. On another occasion, about two years before the time of the trial, while several men were riding along together "Duke," who was then being ridden by the appellant, suddenly reared and struck one of the other riders with one of his front feet, knocking the man half way out of his saddle. At another time, about a year before the trial, while several men, including the respondent and the appellant, were riding together "Duke" suddenly reared and the respondent seeing "Duke's" hoofs over his head "spurred my horse out and he came down on her hips." Shortly before the trial, "Duke" attempted to kick another horse which was being loaded into a two-horse trailer with him. One of appellant's witnesses testified with respect to "Duke," "I don't think he is exactly vicious, but so far as dangerous, I would want to stay out of his way. As far as that goes I wouldn't want to get too close to him." Another of appellant's witnesses testified: "Well, he is not, I don't believe he would hurt any human being but he would kick another horse or fight another horse." Both of these witnesses had seen "Duke" on many occasions.

[5-7] In view of this evidence it must be held that the question as to whether "Duke" was a vicious or dangerous animal was one of fact for the jury and not one which may here be determined as a matter of law. The evidence, with inferences which might reasonably be drawn therefrom, sufficiently supports the jury's finding in this regard. This being true, it follows that the finding that the appellant had knowledge of "Duke's" vicious or dangerous tendencies is also supported since the appellant was himself present on each of the occasions above referred to with the exception of the one where the boy was attacked in the pasture, and it is admitted that he was informed of that incident a few minutes after it occurred. There is no merit in appellant's contention that in most of the prior incidents referred to "Duke" attacked people or animals by using his front feet rather than by kicking. The question involved is the trait, disposition or characteristics of the animal rather than the exact manner in which previous attacks have been made. All of the attacks had been made without provocation and they were not so dissimilar to the one in question as to be immaterial or without evidentiary value.

[8] The appellant next argues that the evidence conclusively shows that the respondent negligently, voluntarily and consciously placed himself in a position of peril and thus brought about his own injury. It is argued that as an experienced horseman the respondent should have known that any horse might kick sometime, that "the most dangerous place about an animal is to be in the vicinity of its full stretch," and that by stopping the horse he was riding at that particular place the respondent did something which a prudent horseman would not have done and thereby "not only provoked the kicking, but also he made possible its serious consequences." It appears from the evidence that the respondent, after approaching the point where "Duke's" rider was standing, near "Duke's" head, backed his horse away, rode him over to one side where he was parallel to "Duke" but about 16 feet away, and as close to the road as he could get without standing on the traveled portion thereof. He was about twice a horse's length away from "Duke" and it cannot be said as a matter of law that he was then in a place of danger or that he should have anticipated that "Duke" would be so held by his rider as to permit him to wheel over and back up several paces where his heels would be within reach of the respondent. This question was also one of fact for the jury.

Appellant's final contention is that the court erred in giving instructions to the general effect that where an injury is caused by a vicious animal which is known by its owner to be vicious, the owner is liable as an insurer unless the injured person voluntarily or consciously does something to bring about the injury and the question of negligence on the part of the owner is immaterial, and in refusing certain instructions offered by the appellant upon the question of negligence and relating particularly to contributory negligence on the part of the respondent.

[9] The instructions, which were thus given, were in accordance with the general rules applicable in such cases as this, as well established in this state, and it is not contended that these instructions were incorrect in themselves. It is contended, however, that by giving these instructions and by refusing to give the other instructions relating to negligence on the part of the respondent, the jury was in fact told that the negligence of the respondent had no bearing whatever upon his right to recover in this case, and that this was erroneous. Assuming that the question of respondent's negligence might have had a bearing upon the real question in issue in this connection, as to whether the respondent voluntarily or consciously did something to bring about his injury, and further assuming that there was any evidence of such negligence on the part of the respondent, the contention here made is without merit since the jury was sufficiently instructed in this regard, if any instruction was necessary. The court, at the request of the appellant, gave this instruction: "Harold Heath, the plaintiff, during the entire period of time involving the accident of which he here complains, was under a duty to exercise that degree of care and prudence which an ordinarily prudent person in his position and with his knowledge would have exercised, and if you find that he did not exercise such care for his own safety and that such failure contributed to the injuries of which he complains, then the defendant is not liable."

And in another instruction, also requested by the appellant, the jury was told: "If you find from the evidence that at the time of the accident Harold Heath was fully aware of the character of the stallion in question, then in determining whether Heath was at fault you are charged that it is your duty to consider his conduct in the light of that knowledge."

[10] The instructions just quoted not only sufficiently covered all of the matters contained in the refused instructions, but clearly and directly submitted to the jury the very question which the appellant now contends should have been presented to it. Without going into the question raised as to the place of contributory negligence in an action of this kind, as having a possible effect upon the question of whether an injured party has voluntarily or consciously done something to bring about his injury, it clearly appears here that the jury was fully instructed even under the appellant's theory in that regard and no reversible error appears.

[11, 12] In this same connection it is suggested that, at best, these instructions were conflicting in that the jury was told that it was the duty of the respondent to refrain from voluntarily or consciously doing something to bring about his own injury, and, on the other hand, was told that the respondent should act as an ordinarily prudent person. Not only was any possible conflict introduced at the request of the appellant but it sufficiently appears that these two points of view are merely complementary and not conflicting. The jury was told that the respondent could not recover if he voluntarily or consciously had done anything to bring about his injury, and then was told that he could not recover if he failed to exercise the care and prudence which an ordinarily prudent person in his position and with his knowledge would have exercised, and if the failure to exercise such ordinary care contributed to his injuries. These were not so inconsistent as to be in any way misleading and any possible error in the latter instruction was in favor of the appellant and, having asked for it, he is in no position to object thereto.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 581

WOOD v. POWERS et al.

Civ. 12897.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 19, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑854(5)

On appeal from judgment of dismissal after granting of defendant's motion for nonsuit, such ruling will be sustained, if motion might have been granted on any ground, whether actually made a ground thereof or not.

2. Licenses 🔑39

In action to recover money paid as purchase price of corporate stock on ground that transaction was in violation of Corporate Securities Act and securities void, burden was on plaintiff to prove such violation and presence of all elements necessary under act to render securities void. St.1917, p. 673, as amended.

3. Licenses 🔑39

In action to recover money paid as purchase price of corporate stock on ground of violation of Corporate Securities Act, defendant's motion for nonsuit was properly granted, in absence of proof by plaintiff that one from whom plaintiff's assignor purchased stock was private owner thereof or bona fide owner disposing of his own property for his own account or that sales were made directly or indirectly for benefit of issuer or underwriter of securities or for direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with intent to violate or evade any provision of such act. St.1917, p. 673, § 2(c) (3), as amended by St.1933, p. 2312.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward R. Brand, Judge.

Action by Verne Wood against Frank W. Powers, Roger Averill, and others, to recover money paid as the purchase price of corporate stock. From a judgment of dismissal after granting of defendant Averill's motion for nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Wilbert C. Hamilton, John F. Hoornaert, and Walter Gould Lincoln, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Neice & Crane, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JESS E. STEPHENS, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to recover money paid as the purchase price for corporate stock. Defendant Averill alone answered and he will be hereinafter referred to as defendant.

The complaint was, in form, for money had and received, and upon the trial before the court without a jury it appeared that plaintiff's assignor in December, 1934, purchased certain stock of the Monarch Gold Mining Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Nevada. Plaintiff's assignor, Miss Beale, was a secretary in the office of one of her present counsel, who at that time represented defendant (but not the corporation) herein. Defendant was a stockholder in the above named corporation and frequently discussed with Miss Beale and the attorney the prospects of the mine belonging to the corporation and located in California. Both became interested in it and visited the mine, and eventually purchased stock in the corporation. Defendant, although active in taking numerous persons to see the mine and extolling its possibilities, was not an officer or agent of the corporation, or, so far as appears, connected with it in any manner other than as a stockholder.

Called as a witness by plaintiff under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, defendant testified that perhaps 40 people purchased stock as a result of his taking them to see the mine; that none of this stock was his own; that he was interested only as a stockholder in the success of the mine. In answer to the question, "Did you sell him [meaning a specific purchaser] any shares of the Nevada Monarch stock?" defendant replied: "I sold him some shares that belonged to Mr. F. W. Powers." Similar reply was given to at least one other such question. Upon cross-examination defendant was asked by his own counsel: "This stock that you testified on examination by Mr. Lincoln was sold to them, was that stock that was owned by Mr. Powers?" and he answered, "Yes." Objection to the question was afterward made by plaintiff's counsel, but no motion to strike the answer was made and no direct ruling made upon the objection; although when later defendant's counsel asked him, "Was that stock that had previously been issued to Mr. Powers?" objection was made by plaintiff's counsel and sustained.

There was no other evidence presented as to the ownership of any of the stock that was sold through the activities of defendant, whether it was or was not privately owned by Mr. Powers. No evidence whatever was offered as to the ownership of the specific stock purchased by Miss Beale, plaintiff's assignor, or whether if it was the privately owned stock of Mr. Powers he was a bona fide owner disposing of his own property for his own account or whether such sales were made directly or indirectly for the benefit of the issuer or an underwriter of such securities. No evidence was presented throwing any light upon the reason for the organization of the corporation in Nevada, and no evidence was offered indicating that this or any sale was made for the direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with the intent of violating or evading any provision of the Corporate Securities Act, St. 1917, p. 673, as amended.

[1] At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony defendant made a motion for nonsuit and this motion was granted. In granting the motion the court did not state the grounds upon which it was granted. The appeal is from the judgment of dismissal which followed the granting of the motion. It is well settled that upon such appeal the action of the trial court will be sustained if the motion might have been granted upon any ground, whether made a ground of the motion or not. Balian v. Balian's Market, 48 Cal.App.2d 150, 119 P.(2d) 426; Anchester v. Keck, 214 Cal. 207, 213, 4 P.2d 934.

[2, 3] At the time of the transaction complained of (December, 1934) the portion of the Corporate Securities Act with which we are here particularly concerned provided as follows (sec. 2[c], 3): "Except as herein expressly provided, the provisions of this act shall not apply to the sale of any security in any of the following transactions: * * * 3. The sale of securities when made by or on behalf of a vendor not the issuer or underwriter thereof who, being a bona fide owner of such securities, disposes of his own property for his own account, and such sale is not made, directly or indirectly, for the benefit of the issuer or an underwriter of such security, or for the direct or indirect promotion of any scheme or enterprise with the intent of violating or evading any provision of this act." Amendment approved June 12, 1933; Stats. 1933, p. 2309. Plaintiff's cause of action is based upon the claim that the transaction was in violation of the Corporate Securities Act, and that the securities were therefore void and plaintiff was entitled to the return of the money paid. The burden was of course upon plaintiff to prove that there was a violation and that there were present all of the elements which, under the act, were necessary in order to render the securities void. As clearly indicated by the recital hereinabove, plaintiff failed to make such necessary proof. The motion for nonsuit was therefore properly granted.

Counsel devote considerable discussion to the question of whether or not plaintiff's action was barred under the statute of limitations, but in view of what has already been said it will not be necessary to pass upon this question.

Judgment affirmed.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 499

CROWN BODY CORPORATION, LIMITED v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

Civ. 13483.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
March 17, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑458(3)

The District Court of Appeal has no authority to grant supersedeas staying proceedings for enforcement of mandatory injunction decree pending appeal from order denying motion to modify such judgment six months after entry thereof, as such power to stay proceedings is limited to restraining action on judgment or order appealed from.

2. Appeal and error 🔑488

A judgment for injunction is not stayed by appeal from order made after judgment, even by filing bond for stay.

3. Appeal and error 🔑488

A bond on appeal from order denying motion for new trial is only exception to rule forbidding stay of proceedings on judgment granting injunction by appeal from order made after judgment.

4. Appeal and error 🔑477

The District Court of Appeal has inherent power to preserve status quo pending appeal from order made after judgment only when it clearly appears that such order is demonstrably arbitrary, and hence cannot grant writ of supersedeas staying proceedings to enforce mandatory injunction judgment, which was stipulated after action had lain dormant for 10 years, pending appeal from order denying motion to modify judgment.

5. Appeal and error 🔑477

An order denying motion to modify injunction decree by extending effective date of mandatory provision therein was self-executing, and no process was necessary for its enforcement, so as to require denial of supersedeas suspending enforcement of judgment pending appeal from such order.

6. Appeal and error 🔑458(2)

Where no process is required to be issued for enforcement of order made after judgment, no supersedeas to stay proceedings for enforcement of judgment pending appeal from such order is allowed.

◆

Original proceeding by the City of Los Angeles and others for a writ of supersedeas, suspending enforcement of a judgment, granting the Crown Body Corporation, Limited, a mandatory injunction, pending petitioners' appeal from an order denying their motion to modify such judgment.

Petition denied, and order to show cause discharged.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Attorney, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Dudley R. Furse, of Hollywood, and Walter L. Bruington, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

This is an original proceeding to effect the suspension of the enforcement of all proceedings under a judgment for mandatory injunction pending appeal from an order refusing to modify the injunction granted some five months prior to such order.

On August 5, 1931, plaintiff instituted its action against defendants for an injunction to enjoin them from operating an asphalt plant within the limits of defendant city on the ground that the operation of such plant constituted a nuisance. Defendants duly filed their answer. Following certain proceedings and in accordance with a stipulation of the parties filed in the action, almost ten years later, to-wit on July 30, 1941, the superior court made and filed an injunction enjoining defendants from operating in any manner or degree whatsoever, in whole or in part, the asphalt plant described in plaintiff's complaint after the first day of November, 1941, and ordering them to commence the dismantling of said plant within fifteen days thereafter. The injunction further provided that at any time after said plant had been dismantled, defendant might construct a new plant on the same property and required that they comply with certain specified requirements. On October 22, 1941, the injunction was modified by extending its effective date to January 1, 1942. Pursuant to such injunction, the operation of the plant was actually suspended January 1, 1942, and has not been operated since that day.

On January 12, 1942, defendants presented their motion to the superior court for a modification of the injunction as amended October 22, 1941, by extending the effective date of the mandatory provision for the dismantling of the plant to "fifteen days after the termination of the present national emergency or within fifteen days after it should become possible to procure materials necessary for the building of a new asphalt plant." This appeal is from the order denying such motion.

Defendant's petition recites that the dismantling of the plant was begun January 16, 1942, and has proceeded continuously and diligently to the date of this petition.

The bases of the last motion filed for a modification of the injunction, as contained in the supporting affidavits, are as follows:

(1) Necessity for the preservation of the asphalt plant to the end that it might be utilized for the repair of streets in the event of dire necessity incident to damage caused by an act of the enemy of the United States or by increased use of the city streets due to military traffic; (2) that it does not appear from the records that the mere maintenance of the plant, as distinguished from its operation, constitutes a nuisance; (3) that the action was brought to enjoin the operation of the plant and did not seek its immediate destruction; (4) that the injunction of July 30, 1941, contemplates the erection of a new plant on the site of the old and does not contemplate the dismantling of the old without the erection of the new; (4) that by reason of the present shortage of steel and other materials for civilian purposes, it is impossible to procure materials necessary for the construction of the new plant; (5) that without the facilities of the old plant, it might become impossible properly to repair the streets of the city if damaged by acts of war; (6) that the modification of the decree sought by the motion of January 12th does not contemplate the operation of the plant but merely its preservation so that it might be used in the event of dire necessity in the interest of national defense if the superior court will allow its operation; (7) that the defendants intend to and will, in the event of such contingency, apply to the superior court for an order allowing the operation of the plant temporarily under such conditions as the court might impose; (8) that the denial of defendants' motion makes necessary a great waste of material and "potential productive capacity" and that said ruling is arbitrary and unreasonable and constitutes an abuse of discretion; (9) that in the event of the failure of defendants to comply with the mandatory provision of the injunction, plaintiff will apply to the superior court for an order citing defendants in contempt for disobedience of the injunction.

[1-3] We must, therefore, determine whether or not under the facts recited this court should stay proceedings pending appeal from the order of January 12, 1942, refusing to modify the consent decree of July 30, 1941.

Under the facts recited, in the light of the authorities we cannot do so. The order appealed from was entered six months subsequent to the entry of the stipulated judgment for an injunction ordering the dismantling of the plant. This court has no authority to grant a supersedeas under such circumstances. Such power is limited to restraining action upon the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken. The judgment for injunction is not stayed by an appeal from an order made after the judgment even by filing a bond for stay. Carit v. Williams, 67 Cal. 580, 8 P. 93; McCann v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 4 Cal.2d 24, 47 P.2d 283; Olsen v. Board of Supervisors, 30 Cal.App.2d 635, 638, 87 P.2d 36; Bryan v. Superior Court, 169 Cal. 761, 762, 147 P. 938. A bond on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial is the one exception to the rule which forbids the stay of proceedings on the judgment by appeal from an order made after judgment. Weldon v. Rogers, 154 Cal. 632, 634, 98 P. 1070.

[4] It is true that the court has inherent power on appeal from an order made after judgment to preserve the status quo of the decree when it clearly appears that the order appealed from is demonstrably arbitrary. Rogers v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 467, 468, 111 P. 357. No such inference can be drawn from the record in this case. The judgment for injunction was stipulated after the action had lain dormant for ten years and its enforcement was once thereafter delayed for two months on defendant's request. Moreover the order appealed from is merely a denial of a further stay of execution.

[5, 6] Defendants contend that the order in question is not self-executing but that a further affirmative act is required to make it effective (citing Feinberg v. One Doe Co., 14 Cal.2d 24, 92 P.2d 640). But on the contrary the order in question is self-executing and no process is necessary for its enforcement. Hulse v. Davis, 200 Cal. 316, 253 P. 136; Dulin v. Pacific Wood & C. Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 P. 123. If no process is required to be issued for the enforcement of the order, no supersedeas is allowed. Tyler v. Presley, 72 Cal. 290, 292, 13 P. 856.

For the reasons given, it is ordered that the petition for a writ of supersedeas be and it is hereby denied and the order to show cause is hereby discharged.

W. J. WOOD and McCOMB, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 643

JOHNSTON v. YARBROUGH et al.

Civ. 13256.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 23, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 22, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

Fraud 🔑58(1)

Evidence was sufficient to show that contract by which inventor who had assigned application for patent to corporation in return for 50 per cent. of stock of corporation sold his stock in corporation to owner of rest of stock in consideration of cash payment, and additional payments in the future, and reduction of corporation's indebtedness to inventor by means of cash payment and receipt of certain percentage of gross proceeds of corporation, was not result of fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Action involving a contract by M. O. Johnston against Harold C. Yarbrough and others. From judgments for the defendants, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe and Kenneth K. Wright, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Raphael Dechter, B. L. Hoyt, and Michael G. Luddy, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Appellant brought the instant action against two distinct sets of defendants, to wit: (1) H. C. Yarbrough, Oil Tools, Inc., Yarbrough Guns Co., and (2) Technicraft Engineering Corporation, Lane-Wells Co., Walter Wells and Wilfred G. Lane, and prosecutes this appeal from judgments in favor of said defendants, contending that the evidence is insufficient to sustain certain of the findings of fact, and that the court erred in its rulings excluding evidence sought to be introduced by appellant.

The record herein reveals that in December of 1932, appellant, claiming to be the inventor of a "gun perforator involving the fire retarding means and sequential firing," filed an application for letters patent in the United States Patent Office. A gun perforator is used in the oil well industry for perforating oil well casing after it has entered the well, in order to permit the oil to filter through such perforations from oil bearing strata. Previous to filing his application, appellant had been working with respondents Wells and Lane in an endeavor to perfect the device under an agreement whereby he, as inventor, was to have a 50 per cent interest in the same. Unknown to appellant, and while they were carrying on their experiments with the gun, respondent Lane made application for letters patent therefor, whereupon appellant withdrew from his association with these two men, and filed his application, as hereinbefore mentioned. Appellant's application, after some preliminary proceedings in the patent office, came into interference with the application of respondent Lane which application later became the property of respondent Technicraft. On June 29, 1935, the patent office declared interference between the two applications and the matter was then ready for determination of the question as to who was the inventor of the device and to whom said patent should be issued.

It also appears that at the time appellant filed his application for letters patent there had been issued by the patent office patents to various other persons covering various types and kinds of "gun perforators," including a patent on a gun perforator known as the "Mims" patent which was "analogous to what is known as a basic patent in the patent office," and which was also controlled by Technicraft.

On April 18, 1934, the appellant and the respondent Yarbrough entered into a writtent contract by the terms of which appellant agreed to convey to respondent Oil Tools, Inc. (which corporation had been organized on March 17, 1934, by respondent Yarbrough) his application for letters patent, together with a license agreement which he owned under another patent known as the Ridley & Sutliff patent, in exchange for which appellant was to receive one-half of the stock of Oil Tools, Inc., the other half to be issued to and owned by said Yarbrough, each party contributing to the corporation the sum of $1,500 in cash.

Pursuant to said contract, appellant conveyed his application and license agreement to the corporation and received one-half of the stock issued, the other half being issued to Yarbrough. The corporation then commenced operations with Yarbrough as its general manager, and subsequently became the owner by assignment of an application for letters patent filed by Yarbrough embracing a gun perforator. Up to this time the gun had not been used commercially.

The subsequent operations of Oil Tools, Inc., were mainly experimental, and during the course of such experiments both appellant and Yarbrough advanced and loaned to the corporation considerable sums of money which were used to carry out the experimental work. Much difficulty was experienced by the corporation in its endeavor to make a gun into a workable product, it being unable to acquire certain types and kinds of equipment necessary for this purpose, such as cable, measuring devices and other patented appliances, patents for which were controlled by other organizations, including Technicraft.

During this period of development by Oil Tools, Inc., respondent Yarbrough devoted his entire time and attention, together with his money, in an endeavor to make the corporation a success; appellant was engaged in other phases of the oil business, but in so far as Oil Tools, Inc., was concerned, he was acting in an advisory capacity. Meanwhile respondent Technicraft which controlled the Mims, as well as other patents embracing several phases of the art of gun perforating, built up a large and lucrative business and was entirely successful in the field.

About December 15, 1935, it became necessary for Oil Tools to obtain more money to carry on its work, whereupon Yarbrough called upon appellant to put up an additional $1,500, which appellant refused to do unless Yarbrough would do likewise. Yarbrough was short of funds and advised appellant he could advance no more money. Discussion between the parties ensued which culminated in a "buy or sell" proposition, appellant agreeing to sell his interest in Oil Tools. Appellant gave Yarbrough a ten-day option to purchase said interest, the substance of which was that appellant's stock was to be purchased for $5,000—$1,500 cash and $3,500 to reduce Oil Tools' indebtedness to appellant—and a further 8 per cent of the gross proceeds received from the rental or sale of gun perforators to be applied on the balance of the indebtedness due appellant from Oil Tools, which balance was therein fixed at the sum of $6,642.30, payable two years after date. Said option also provided for payment to appellant over a period of seventeen years thereafter of 2 per cent of the gross receipts, or at least $1,200 per year. This option was given with the understanding and for the purpose of enabling Yarbrough to raise money to exercise the same. However, he was unsuccessful in his effort, and appellant gave him a verbal extension thereof, and on January 31, 1936, Yarbrough and appellant executed an agreement pursuant to the terms of the option.

While the option was pending, Yarbrough continued his efforts to raise the money and on January 15, 1936, contacted and had his first meeting with respondent Wells, an officer of respondent Technicraft Engineering Corporation. At this meeting they discussed the various aspects of the situation, to wit: the respective patent applications; the interference proceedings between appellant's application and the Lane application (the latter then being owned by Technicraft) and the possibility of a compromise of the same for the mutual benefit of the contending parties, as well as the expense involved in a determination thereof; also the fact that Technicraft had theretofore threatened Oil Tools, Inc., with infringement of the Mims patent.

Negotiations continued intermittently between respondent Yarbrough and respondent Wells, the latter definitely stating to Yarbrough that he would make no deals with Oil Tools, Inc., so long as appellant was interested in any manner with said corporation. As a result of such negotiations, a meeting was held on January 28, 1936, in the office of Mr. Brown, the patent attorney for Technicraft, at which time discussion took place between the interested parties, and Brown prepared a memorandum addressed to Yarbrough's attorney outlining the basis upon which Technicraft would deal with Oil Tools, Inc. Another meeting was held on January 31, 1936, at which time respondent Wells was apparently satisfied that Yarbrough either had purchased or was in a position to purchase appellant's interest in Oil Tools, Inc.

On February 2, 1936, Oil Tools, Inc., consented to and joined in the execution of the agreement of January 31, 1936, between Yarbrough and appellant, whereupon Yarbrough completed his contract with appellant for the purchase of the latter's interest in Oil Tools, paying him the sum of $5,000 cash from the $7,000 which Yarbrough had previously received from Wells as a loan. Yarbrough personally guaranteed the performance of the contract of January 31, 1936, but there is a dispute in the evidence as to whether Yarbrough told Wells that he intended to use part of the $7,000 loan to purchase appellant's interest. Appellant made no inquiry and Yarbrough made no disclosure as to where the latter was to get the money to exercise the option and they had no discussion relative to Technicraft. Final agreement between Oil Tools, Inc., and Technicraft was not reached until February 14, 1936; appellant had no knowledge of the negotiations being conducted between Yarbrough and Technicraft, but in all of these negotiations leading up to the contract of February 14, 1936, Technicraft was represented by its attorney, J. Calvin Brown, and Oil Tools, Inc., by its attorney, Frank L. A. Graham. The court found that the terms of said agreement were unknown to appellant until January 31, 1937.

Oil Tools, Inc., subsequently received from Technicraft the sum of $15,000 cash, including the $7,000 above referred to, all of which was used in Oil Tools' business except the $5,000 paid to appellant. By the terms of the contract of February 14, 1936, between Technicraft and Oil Tools, Inc., the latter transferred to the former appellant's application for letters patent, the Yarbrough application and the license agreement under the Ridley and Sutliff patents, in return for which Technicraft granted to Oil Tools a nonexclusive license to make and use, but not to sell, the devices, including gun perforators, covered by the generic Mims patent controlled by Technicraft; the Lane application; the appellant's application, and a sub-license under the Ridley application. Likewise, Technicraft agreed to sell to Oil Tools specially constructed cables, weight indicators and measuring devices, power takeoffs and other patented devices made under its patents at the regular selling price. The lack of these devices had been one of the reasons why Oil Tools had been unable to commercially operate the gun perforator which it had been attempting to perfect.

It should be noted that by the above agreement of February 14, 1936, the threatened suit by Technicraft against Oil Tools on the Mims patent and the pending interference proceeding between the appellant's and the Lane applications with its probable cost, were eliminated. Said interference proceeding was dissolved by reason of common ownership of such applications and a patent was issued on appellant's application under date of July 21, 1936, being serial number 2,048,451.

Subsequent to the agreement of February 14, 1936, Technicraft extended a line of credit to Oil Tools, Inc., advanced money to it to keep it going and also furnished information and facilities to Oil Tools for its use in the gun perforating business.

Prior to the execution of the option agreement of December 15, 1935, and the agreement of January 31, 1936, between Yarbrough and appellant, the latter requested that Oil Tools assign the application for letters patent to him as security for the indebtedness owing by Oil Tools to him. This Yarbrough was unable to do, and offered appellant a mortgage on his home. Appellant refused such offer but demanded and received a block of Yarbrough's stock in Oil Tools as security for such indebtedness.

On August 31, 1936, and without the knowledge of Technicraft, Oil Tools executed a chattel mortgage to Yarbrough on its assets for moneys which Yarbrough had advanced to it. Yarbrough assigned this mortgage to Oilfields National Bank at Brea to obtain credit and the bank later foreclosed said mortgage and bid in the property. Appellant knew of the proposed execution of said mortgage and attempted to prevent it by making demand on Oil Tools under date of August 29, 1936, of "immediate payment of ten per cent (10%) of the gross receipts from the rental, use, and/or sale of gun perforators received by you, your licensees and agents during the months of March, April, May, June and July, 1936 * * * the immediate payment to me of damages in the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) sustained by me during the aforesaid months by reason of the breach by you of the aforesaid agreement (of January 31, 1936) and in particular the following covenants thereof, which you have breached and which read in part as follows:

"'It is further understood and agreed that said corporation will at all times assert reasonable effort to create a demand for the general use of its perforating gun and will satisfy said demand; * * *.

"'It is further covenanted, understood and agreed that said corporation will within sixty (60) days from the date hereof have one complete casing perforating gun outfit operating and shooting reasonably continuously, and that the said corporation will within six (6) months from the date hereof have an additional complete casing perforating gun outfit operating and shooting reasonably continuously * * *.'"

Appellant served notice of such demand upon the Oilfields National Bank of Brea.

After the foreclosure of the mortgage, Yarbrough succeeded in interesting outside capital, as a result of which respondent Yarbrough Guns Company was organized. The former assets of Oil Tools which had been acquired by the bank were transferred to Yarbrough and by him to the new guns company in exchange for stock in that company. Approximately $100,000 was raised from these outside sources which went into Yarbrough Guns Company. Before the organization of the Yarbrough Guns Company around March 1, 1937, Yarbrough contacted appellant and advised him of the condition of Oil Tools and the proposed refinancing thereof, and offered appellant stock in the new company on the same basis that he, Yarbrough, would receive stock therein, to wit: on a dollar for dollar basis for the moneys due appellant and Yarbrough which they had theretofore contributed to Oil Tools. This appellant refused to do and demanded that Yarbrough and Oil Tools perform the terms of the original contract of January 31, 1936. Appellant at this time knew of the terms of the Oil Tools-Technicraft contract of February 14, 1936. Yarbrough on behalf of Yarbrough Guns Company then attempted to obtain a new license agreement from Technicraft embracing the matters set forth in the original agreement of February 14, 1936, and was informed that such license would not be given unless the moneys which were due Technicraft were paid, which at this time amounted to approximately $18,000.

Upon the payment of this sum by Yarbrough Guns Company on March 15, 1937, Technicraft gave said guns company a new license agreement covering the letters patent and applications for letters patent which were embraced in the original contract of February 14, 1936, and upon substantially the same terms. None of the persons connected with Yarbrough Guns Company was in any wise connected with Technicraft, nor did Technicraft have knowledge of the organization of the guns company until Yarbrough sought the new license agreement from it.

While it is admitted that appellant first became aware in the month of July, 1936, of the transfer of his patent application to Technicraft, it is urged that "he did not know of the facts which gave him the right to rescind, nor did he even know that Oil Tools, Inc., had made the transfer under circumstances which showed that Technicraft had knowledge of his rights at the time of the assignment."

It is alleged in the second amended complaint that appellant on September 24, 1937, "caused to be served upon all of the defendants herein, with the exception of H. C. Yarbrough and defendant Yarbrough Guns Company, his notice of rescission, and then and there offered to return everything of value received by him in said transaction, and to place all parties in the same position they were in before the execution of said contract dated January 31, 1936."

After setting out in haec verba the agreement of January 31, 1936, the consent and joint execution of Oil Tools, Inc., dated February 2, 1936, and the guaranty of Yarbrough, the court found: "that in the negotiations leading up to the execution of said contracts and agreements hereinabove set forth and referred to, that there was no plan or scheme on the part of defendants or any of them to defraud Plaintiff, nor was the execution of any of said agreements by the Plaintiff herein induced by or caused by a plan or scheme of any nature whatsoever to defraud or otherwise illegally deprive Plaintiff of any rights or properties which might have been owned or which were conveyed away or disposed of under the terms of said agreements hereinabove set forth; the court further finds that the Plaintiff at all times during the negotiations leading up to the execution of the agreement of January 31, 1936, was represented and advised by independent counsel; that no representations of any kind were made by the Defendant Yarbrough to induce the Plaintiff to execute such agreement of January 31, 1936; that said agreement of January 31, 1936 was entered into by the Plaintiff voluntarily and free of any fraud, coercion or undue influence on the part of anyone; that said agreement of January 31, 1936, was the result of Plaintiff's own offer to the Defendant Yarbrough that he would either buy or sell the stock of Oil Tools, Inc., from or to the Defendant Yarbrough, on the terms set forth in the agreement of January 31, 1936. That prior to the execution of the agreement of January 31, 1936, Plaintiff had given the Defendant Yarbrough an option to purchase his stock interest in Oil Tools, Inc., substantially on the terms and conditions set forth in the agreement of January 31, 1936, being Exhibit 'B' of the Second Amended Complaint; that no representations of any kind had been made by the Defendant Yarbrough to the Plaintiff to induce him to enter into such option agreement; that at no time were any representations of any kind made by the Defendants in this action, or any of them, of a false or misleading nature, or any representations at all to induce the Plaintiff to execute the agreement of January 31, 1936 or the option agreement of December 14, 1935. The court further finds that at no time did any conspiracy or scheme or plan on the part of the Defendants or either or any of them ever exist to defraud the Plaintiff in any wise whatsoever."

Appellant urges in his closing brief: (1) That the contract of January 31, 1936, was made without any intention on the part of Yarbrough to perform and that this fact is established by the contract of February 14, 1936, between Oil Tools, Inc., and Technicraft; (2) that the findings of fact establish that the promises of Yarbrough and Oil Tools, Inc., were made without any intention to perform; (3) that the parties were bound to disclose to appellant the negotiations for transfer of the patent applications to Technicraft; (4) that the liability of Technicraft is clearly established by the terms of the several contracts; (5) that the assignee of a patent takes subject to existing equities therein; (6) that the rights of innocent parties have not intervened; (7) that certain findings of fact are wholly unsupported by the evidence, to wit: (a) that Yarbrough and appellant were not the sole directors of Oil Tools, Inc., up to January 31, 1936; (b) that appellant did not have confidence in Yarbrough and did not rely upon his promises; (c) that Oil Tools, Inc., could not have restrained Technicraft from patent infringement; (d) that Yarbrough did nothing to prevent appellant from learning of the facts in connection with the contract of February 14, 1936; (8) that the court erred in refusing to determine the question of inventorship and also in excluding certain proffered evidence.

When the contract between appellant and Yarbrough was executed on January 31, 1936, following the terms of the option agreement theretofore existing between them, both parties knew that Oil Tools, Inc., was in difficulties and had no assets with which to raise the capital required to continue the business. At that time appellant sought to procure his patent application as collateral security for the balance due him from Oil Tools, Inc., but Yarbrough refused to turn it over for the reason that he needed it in his effort to finance Oil Tools, Inc.

In interpreting the contracts the trial court of necessity took into consideration the situation of the parties, the objects to be accomplished, as well as the problems confronting the parties at the time the contracts were entered into. That the court weighed these various aspects of the situation in construing the contracts and in arriving at its ultimate conclusion is clearly revealed by the complete findings of fact made in this cause.

With the facts heretofore narrated before it, the trial court determined in the light thereof that there was no concerted plan or scheme to defraud appellant, and refused to draw an inference of unfair dealing from circumstances, which at best apparently were regarded by said court as merely suspicious.

An examination of the entire record discloses sufficient evidence to support the findings of fact and the judgment, and likewise that no errors were committed by the trial court in the conduct of the trial.

For the reasons stated, the judgments appealed from are affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

PEOPLE v. PUTNAM.*

Cr. 3525.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 18, 1942.

Hearing Granted April 16, 1942.

1. Criminal law 🔑238

Testimony of complaining witness at preliminary hearing was sufficient to indicate clearly that there was reasonable cause to commit accused under statute dealing with crimes against children, and that there was no error in denying accused's motion to strike the information. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 995.

2. Infants 🔑20

Evidence sustained conviction under statute dealing with crimes against children. Pen.Code, § 288.

3. Criminal law 🔑785(6)

In prosecution under statute dealing with crimes against children, wherein prosecuting witness who was 12½ years of age at time he testified narrated his version of what took place in a clear and concise manner, trial court did not err in failing to give requested instruction of defendant that jury should view with great care and caution the testimony of a child of immature years, since the prosecuting witness was not a child of "immature years". Code Civ.Proc. § 1880, subd. 2; Pen.Code, § 288.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Immature Years".

4. Criminal law 🔑878(3)

In prosecution under statute dealing with crimes against children, and for contributing to the delinquency of a minor, acquittal of defendant of count charging contributing to delinquency, did not constitute an acquittal of the count charging violation of the statute dealing with crimes against children, in view of statute providing that a verdict of acquittal of one or more counts shall not be deemed an acquittal of any other count. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 954.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Roy J. Putnam was convicted of a violation of the statute dealing with crimes against children, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root and Eugene V. McPherson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Bayard Rhone, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was charged in an information with a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. He was arraigned on May 22, 1941, entered his plea of "not guilty" to the charge and trial was set for August 5th. On June 6th, he moved to strike the information under section 995 of the Penal Code "on account of the insufficiency of the preliminary transcript." On June 11th such motion was denied and an amended information was filed adding count 2 charging "contributing to delinquency, a misdemeanor," whereupon appellant was rearraigned and entered his plea of "not guilty, as charged in each count of the amended information."

The jury returned its verdict finding appellant guilty of a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, as charged in count 1 of the amended information, and "not guilty" of contributing, as charged in count 2 thereof. Thereafter, appellant's motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment, as well as his application for probation, were denied, sentence was pronounced and judgment of conviction was entered.

---

* Subsequent opinion 129 P.2d 367.

This appeal is taken from the judgment of conviction and from the order by which appellant's motion for a new trial was denied.

It is contended by appellant that while the complaining witness, who was a boy twelve years of age, testified at the preliminary hearing that his private parts had been touched by appellant, his testimony clearly showed that he did not understand the meaning of the words "private parts," and therefore it was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to deny appellant's motion to strike the information under section 995 of the Penal Code. It is further contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict for the reason that it shows at most a mere casual touching of the boy while riding in appellant's automobile, and that the testimony of the boy given at the trial is glaringly inconsistent with that given by him at the preliminary hearing with regard to the number of times he was touched by appellant, these varying from four to ten times.

From the testimony of the complaining witness given at the preliminary examination, a transcript of which is before this court, it appears that he met appellant in Westlake Park in the City of Los Angeles on Wednesday of Holy Week in 1941, which was April 9th; that appellant asked him if he would like a job distributing bills and he said that he would. Appellant thereupon told him to be at the park the next morning at 10 o'clock. They met at the time and place agreed upon, the complaining witness testifying that appellant told him that "we should go now, because he (appellant) said he had to go home and change clothes and then he had to go to the printer's to get the bills because they weren't ready * * * so he went and got in his car and went to his house. * * * Well, we got out of the car and went up into his apartment, and he got—he changed clothes. And on the way over to his house, that is, he kept feeling my private parts." When asked "Where are your private parts?" the boy indicated the front of his crotch and the rear and stated that appellant "kept feeling me here (indicating) and between the crotch (indicating)." In answer to the question, "Will you tell us now, Harry, just what part of your body this defendant touched in the apartment when you said he felt you?" the boy replied, "my private parts." On cross-examination, the attorney for the defense questioned the boy with regard to how many times appellant "placed his hand upon, touched or patted the boy's leg," the words "private parts" not being used by said attorney during this examination of the boy. After appellant and the boy left the apartment, the latter testified "we walked down the hall and opened the front door and then he went to the car, and I said, 'Get another boy. I'm just through with you'." The boy immediately proceeded to his home and reported the incident to his mother.

At the trial of appellant in the Superior Court, the complaining witness testified that after they got in the automobile appellant "kept putting his hand on my leg." At the suggestion of the attorney for the defense, the boy was asked to stand up and show where appellant touched him, at which time the court made the following statement for the record: "Well, that is pretty close to the groin, I would say, on the front of the leg, though, right directly on the front of the leg opposite the groin. That is the left leg." The witness then testified that appellant touched him more than once during the ride, and when asked to describe how, he replied: "Well, he kept feeling me in the same place, only higher up here more toward the groin. Q. Did he at any time touch your private parts? A. He did." It further appears that when they reached the apartment, appellant asked the boy if he would like to see his private parts, and the boy told him "No." Upon cross-examination, the witness testified that appellant touched him only once while they were in the apartment.

[1] The testimony of the complaining witness at the preliminary hearing of appellant, hereinbefore recited, clearly indicates that there was reasonable or probable cause to commit appellant, and that there was no error on the part of the trial court in denying appellant's motion to strike the information under section 995 of the Penal Code.

[2] While it is true that the record discloses some inconsistencies between the testimony given by the complaining witness at the preliminary examination and that given by him during the trial of the cause, nevertheless, the evidence considered as a whole definitely indicated that appellant was guilty of the offense charged against him.

It is further claimed by appellant that the court erred in failing to give the cautionary instruction requested by him, "You are instructed to view with great care and caution the testimony of a child of immature years."

[3] Subdivision 2 of section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly, cannot be witnesses. The witness in this case was twelve and a half years of age at the time he testified, and he narrated his version of what took place in a clear and concise manner. In view of the record in this case, it cannot be said that the complaining witness was a child of immature years.

[4] Appellant's final point, that the acquittal of the second count of the information constituted an acquittal of count 1, is without merit. Section 954 of the Penal Code provides that "A verdict of acquittal of one or more counts shall not be deemed or held to be an acquittal of any other count." See, also, People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 696, 117 P.2d 321, 325.

For the reasons stated, the judgment and order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

WASHER v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N et al.*

Civ. 11728.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 16, 1942.

Rehearing Granted April 15, 1942.

1. Libel and slander ⇨15, 33

Defamatory words may be actionable or not according to whether they are denounced by libel and slander statutes, and if the words uttered fall within the ban of the statutes, they may be actionable in themselves, and if their injurious effect is not readily ascertainable on their face, the plaintiff to recover is required to plead the injury by proper allegation and support it with proof. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

2. Libel and slander ⇨33

If defamatory publication is of unprivileged and unfounded statements and charges which expose one to contempt or obloquy, or tend to injure him in his occupation in their natural consequence, the law presumes an injury from the bare fact of the publication itself. Civ.Code, § 45.

3. Libel and slander ⇨33, 101(1)

A defamatory publication which is "actionable per se" imports malice as well as damage, and neither damage or malice need be pleaded or proved, and the utterance of the defamatory words is all that is required to be shown. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Actionable Per Se".

4. Libel and slander ⇨19

Words which are alleged to be "defamatory" must be considered according to their natural import and as ordinary hearers would understand them and the court should as nearly as possible place itself in the position of a hearer or reader of the words and determine the meaning of the language according to its natural and popular construction. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Defamatory".

5. Libel and slander ⇨34

Generally the circumstances giving rise to publication of defamatory words are of great importance in determining whether words violate libel and slander statutes, and relation existing between the parties, their standing in the community, time and place of the publication and persons to whom publication was addressed are all important factors to be considered, especially where character is involved, or fitness of one to occupy position or to follow a profession is assailed. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

6. Libel and slander ⇨18

Where newspaper reporters and others had assembled to obtain views of large bank which occupied high position in banking world, concerning decision of National Labor Relations Board ordering bank to reinstate an employee, statement to the group made by the bank's vice president and personnel director that "we cannot see how this institution could possibly reinstate anybody who had admitted he had falsified his expense account, who has been guilty of flagrant insubordination" was "actionable per se" under libel and slander statutes. Civ. Code, §§ 45, 46.

---

* Subsequent opinion 123 P.2d 575.

7. Libel and slander 🔑34, 54, 93, 94(1), 101 (4, 5)

When defamatory words uttered are actionable per se, defendant in order to avoid liability may show that the statement was in fact the truth or was privileged, but it is incumbent on defendant to plead specially and to prove the truth of the charge or that it was privileged, including the absence of malice, unless truth of charge or privilege appear on face of complaint. Civ.Code, §§ 45–47.

8. Libel and slander 🔑36

The privilege to make a defamatory statement in proper discharge of official duty or in any legislative, judicial or other official proceeding, is termed an "absolute privilege", since an absence of malice is not essential to make the privilege available. Civ. Code, § 47, subds. 1, 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Absolute Privilege".

9. Libel and slander 🔑41

The privilege to make a defamatory statement granted to certain persons making communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, and to one making a fair and true report without malice in a public journal, concerning public official proceeding, and to one making fair and true report without malice of proceedings of public meeting if meeting was lawfully convened for lawful purpose and open to public or publication of matter complained of was for public benefit, is a "qualified privilege" since one claiming the privilege must show absence of malice. Civ.Code, § 47, subds. 3–5.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Qualified Privilege".

10. Libel and slander 🔑83

In action for libel and slander an allegation of intent on part of defendant to injure plaintiff by utterance of defamatory words was sufficient allegation of actual malice. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

11. Libel and slander 🔑83

Where malice is pleaded or may be inferred in libel or slander action and complaint otherwise shows on its face that libelous publication was made, a cause of action is stated regardless of whether the persons to whom the publication is addressed are interested. Civ.Code, §§ 45–47.

12. Libel and slander 🔑83

Where complaint alleged that newspaper reporters and others had assembled to obtain views of large bank which occupied high position in banking world concerning decision of National Labor Relations Board ordering bank to reinstate an employee, and that for purpose of injuring employee, the vice president and personnel director of bank stated "We cannot see how this institution could possbly reinstate anybody who had admitted he had falsified his expense account, who has been guilty of flagrant insubordination", the complant was not demurrable on ground that it disclosed an "absolute privilege" or a "qualified privilege" to make the statement. Civ.Code, §§ 45–47.

13. Libel and slanger 🔑116, 120(1)

On publication of a statement which is actionable in itself a cause of action for both actual and punitive damages is conclusively established. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

14. Libel and slander 🔑101(1), 120(2)

Where publication is libelous per se the law presumes malice and in absence of evidence rebutting such presumed malice, plaintiff is entitled to exemplary damages. Civ. Code, §§ 45, 46.

15. Libel and slander 🔑116, 118

"Actual damages" recoverable for defamation are both general and special and "general damages" are such as compensate for the natural and probable consequences of the libel and "special damages" are such as will compensate for the actual pecuniary loss sustained. Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Actual Damages", "General Damages", and "Special Damages".

16. Libel and slander 🔑33

General damages may be recovered in libel and slander action in absence of actual proof and upon general allegation of damage, to an amount which in estimation of jury will compensate plaintiff, but special damages must be alleged and proved unless the publication is actionable per se. Civ. Code, §§ 45, 46.

17. Libel and slander ⚷116, 118

Allegation that prior to defamatory publication plaintiff had excellent reputation in banking business for honesty, integrity, and efficiency as bank employee and as an attorney, and that publication of the statement proximately and materially damaged his reputation among bank and trust companies to extent of rendering him unable to secure employment at his trade or employment presently and in the future sufficiently alleged both "general damages" and "special damages". Civ.Code, §§ 45, 46.

18. Damages ⚷159(3)

Generally, in actions of tort, damages arising out of loss of earning power are considered under the allegation of general damages.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Action by Edward C. Washer against the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association for libel and slander. From an adverse judgment plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with instructions.

William H. Mackay, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari, G. D. Schilling, and Kenneth M. Johnson, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem.

In this case a general demurrer was sustained to a second amended complaint without leave to amend. The appeal is from the judgment thereupon entered. The complaint contains two counts, one sounding in libel and the other in slander. No point is made by the respondents that the demurrer was sustained only to the complaint generally. As is stated in their brief, each count is founded on the same publication and the arguments in defense of the alleged statement apply equally to each count.

The defamation alleged is set out in paragraph three of the complaint wherein it is pleaded that the defendant Fenton, who at the time was vice-president of the defendant bank and its personnel director, made of and concerning the plaintiff the following statement: "We cannot see how this institution could possibly reinstate anybody who had admitted he had falsified his expense account, who has been guilty of flagrant insubordination." This statement, so it is alleged, was made at a gathering of newspaper reporters and others who had assembled for the purpose of obtaining the views of the defendant bank upon a decision of the National Labor Relations Board by which decision the defendant bank had been ordered to reinstate the plaintiff in its employ.

A copy of this decision, consisting of the findings of the board and its order, is attached to the complaint and made a part thereof by way of exhibit. From the findings it appears that the defendant bank is one of the ten largest in the world, and one of the five largest in the United States with a branch in London, England, in addition to 493 branches in 307 California communities. The findings indicate that it does business through correspondents in at least thirty-four states of the Union, with resources of approximately one and one-half billion dollars, earning for its stockholders over twelve million dollars in paid dividends and undivided profits in the year 1936. The respondent employed the appellant, Washer, in the chief clerk's division of its trust department in Los Angeles in March, 1935, at a salary of $125 per month. Prior to this employment, he had had approximately fifteen years of banking experience and was the holder of an LL.B degree. It appears that in 1937 Washer engaged in some union labor activities and was transferred to the Fresno branch of the defendant bank. Later, he was instructed to report at the San Jose branch of the bank, which instructions were changed and he was directed to report at the branch in Chico, California. Some friction developed between Washer and one Kieferdorf, the senior trust officer of the bank, and on November 10th, 1937, Washer made a trip to San Francisco from Chico to confer with Kieferdorf at Kieferdorf's request concerning the disagreement. A further controversy arose between the bank and Washer over his expense account for this trip. In the findings it is stated: "The expense account rendered by Washer for this trip amounted to $15.12. Of this, $6.12 represented Washer's railroad fare and $9.00 represented meals and lodgings while in San Francisco. After Washer submitted this expense account, it was returned to him by Kieferdorf with the request that he itemize his daily expenses. Washer replied to Kieferdorf stating that he was 'writing off as a loss the $15.12 I considered a nominal but fair expense account for a two-day trip to San Francisco made upon your order.' Kieferdorf thereupon wrote to Washer stating that there was 'no complaint as to the amount of the expense involved' and asking Washer to return the expense statement, which Washer did. He then received a check payable to him in the amount of $15.12 with which there was enclosed a new statement of traveling expenses which Washer was asked to sign and return. This new statement had been prepared by the respondent and contained a purported itemization of Washer's expenses on the San Francisco trip. Washer thereupon wrote a letter, addressed to the trust officer from whom he received this new statement, explaining that his failure to itemize the expenses, in the first instance, was due to the fact that while in San Francisco he had stayed with friends and as a result had not incurred a hotel bill. He explained, however, that he had thus become obligated to his friends and it had been necessary for him to reciprocate by entertaining them while in San Francisco, and that the expenses actually incurred by him on the trip exceeded $15.12. With this letter, Washer returned the check and asked that the respondent return the check to him 'if after reading this letter you are convinced of the fairness of the account as rendered. * * * If you do not consider the accounting satisfactory you may forget the entire matter.' The account was then approved by the respondent and the check returned to Washer."

The board states in its findings that "The respondent relies upon this incident to show that Washer made a false claim and was, therefore, dishonest. We find no merit in this contention. It would appear that had Washer been dishonest he would not have returned the check insisting that he did not want to receive payment unless the respondent understood thoroughly the entire situation."

The board further found that the defense of the respondent based on insubordination was not supported by the evidence.

Both actual and punitive damages are claimed by the plaintiff.

The respondents take the position that the alleged words are not actionable per se; that there is no sufficient allegation of damage; that the truth of the statement is demonstrated in the findings of the National Labor Relations Board; and that the complaint shows upon its face that both the bank and the defendant Fenton were, upon the occasion of the publication, clothed with both an absolute and qualified privilege under the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Code.

Libel is defined as a "false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation," by section 45 of the Civil Code.

Section 46 of the same code defines slander as "a false and unprivileged publication other than libel, which", among other things, "charges any person with crime", or "tends directly to injure him in respect to his office, profession, trade, or business, either by imputing to him general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his office, profession, trade, or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profits."

[1-3] Defamatory words may be actionable or not according as they are or are not denounced by the statute. If the words uttered fall within the ban of the statute they may be actionable in themselves. If their injurious effect is not readily ascertainable upon their face, the plaintiff before he can recover is required to plead the injury by proper allegation and support it with proof. But if the publication is of unprivileged and unfounded statements and charges which expose a person to contempt or obloquy, or which tend to injure him in his occupation in their natural consequence, the law presumes an injury from the bare fact of the publication itself. In either case it is the uttered words which are the natural and proximate cause of the pecuniary damage. In the one case the damage must be pleaded and proved, and in the other it is conclusively presumed to result. A publication which is actionable per se, imports malice as well as damage. As is stated in Turner v. Brien, 184 Iowa 320, 167 N.W. 584, 585, 3 A.L.R. 1585, "upon the proof of such publication, the law will presume the falsity of the matter charged, that the publication was with malice, and that some damage follows." Neither the damage nor the malice need be pleaded or proved where the words are actionable in themselves. The utterance of the defamatory words is all that is required to be shown. Tonini v. Cevasco, 114 Cal. 266, 46 P. 103; Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 P. 290; Bohan v. Record Publishing Co., 1 Cal.App. 429, 82 P. 634; Dewing v. Blodgett, 124 Cal.App. 100, 11 P.2d 1105; Semple v. Andrews, 27 Cal.App.2d 228, 81 P.2d 203; Rosenberg v. J. C. Penney Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 609, 86 P.2d 696; Gilman v. Lowell, 8 Wend., N.Y., 573, 24 Am.Dec. 96; Harris v. Curtis Pub. Co., 49 Cal.App.2d 340, 121 P.2d 761.

[4, 5] Words which are alleged to be defamatory are to be considered according to their natural import, and as ordinary hearers would understand them. The court should as nearly as possible place itself in the position of a hearer or reader of the words and determine the meaning of the language according to its natural and popular construction so that the interpretation may be fair and unstrained. As the court said in Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 270, 11 P. 713, 715, "And not only is the language employed to be regarded with reference to the actual words used, but according to the sense and meaning, under all the circumstances attending the publication, which such language may fairly be presumed to have conveyed to those to whom it was published; so that in such cases the language is uniformly to be regarded with what has been its effect, actual or presumed, and its sense is to be arrived at with the help of the cause and occasion of its publication." In most cases the circumstances giving rise to the publication are of great importance in determining whether the words violate the statute. In this connection the relations existing between the parties, their standing in the community, the time and place of the publication, and the persons to whom it was addressed are all important factors to be considered. Tonini v. Cevasco, supra; Schomberg v. Walker, supra; Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 270, 11 P. 713; Cole v. Millspaugh, 111 Minn. 159, 126 N.W. 626, 28 L.R.A.,N.S., 152, 137 Am.St.Rep. 546, 20 Ann.Cas. 717. They are indicative of the motive of the speaker and tend to show how the words were intended, or received and understood. This is especially true where character is involved or the fitness of one to occupy a position or to follow a profession is assailed.

[6, 7] It is common knowledge that in every community the banker has stood for decades as a symbol of character and integrity. He has been generally acclaimed as the custodian of the widow's mite, and counsel for the orphan. Only in rare cases has the banker failed to live up to this public trust. In speaking from such a position, the defendant here, with its influence reaching into practically every community in the state, into almost every state in the union, and across the ocean, was in a position by its slightest word to do great good or great harm. There can be no question but that the words were uttered concerning the plaintiff, although his name was not used. No other person was involved in the controversy between the officials of the bank and the plaintiff, or in the proceedings before the National Labor Relations Board. The words are limited to its regard of Washer by the bank. The statement clearly bases this regard upon their past dealings. It does not in any sense purport to be a criticism of a political principle or of a public policy. Nor is it a statement of economic theory. The words were aimed directly at Washer, and the natural imputation attached to them is thievery and falsification. Coming from a bank of such character and standing as the defendant, occupying the position that it does in the banking world, they could have but one effect, and that to blight the reputation of the plaintiff. Spoken of one engaged in the banking business in which integrity and character are of such prime importance, the words were devastating and come squarely within the code definitions of both libel and slander. Draper v. Hellman Com. T. & S. Bank, 203 Cal. 26, 263 P. 240.

[8] When the words uttered are actionable per se, as here, in order to avoid liability the defendant may show that the statement was in fact the truth, or that he had a right or privilege to make it. However, it is incumbent upon him to specially plead and prove the truth of the charge, or that it was privileged, including the absence of malice, unless the truth of the statement or the privilege appear upon the face of the complaint. Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 214 P. 968; Morcom v. San Francisco Shopping News, 4 Cal.App.2d 284, 40 P.2d 940; Hale Company v. Lea, 191 Cal. 202, 215 P. 900.

The right or privilege to make a statement otherwise actionable of or concerning another in this state is declared in section 47 of the Civil Code, where it is provided: "A privileged publication is one made—1. In the proper discharge of an official duty. 2. In any (1) legislative or (2) judicial proceeding, or (3) in any other official proceeding authorized by law; provided, that an allegation or averment contained in any pleading or affidavit filed in an action for divorce or an action prosecuted under section 137 of this code made of or concerning a person by or against whom no affirmative relief is prayed in such action shall not be a privileged publication as to the person making said allegation or averment within the meaning of this section unless such pleading be verified or affidavit sworn to, and be made without malice, by one having reasonable and probable cause for believing the truth of such allegation or averment and unless such allegation or averment be material and relevant to the issues in such action. 3. In a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, (1) by one who is also interested, or (2) by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or (3) who is requested by the person interested to give the information. 4. By a fair and true report, without malice, in a public journal, of (1) a judicial, (2) legislative, or (3) other public official proceeding, or (4) of anything said in the course thereof, or (5) of a verified charge or complaint made by any person to a public official, upon which complaint a warrant shall have been issued. 5. By a fair and true report, without malice, of (1) the proceedings of a public meeting, if such meeting was lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and open to the public, or (2) the publication of the matter complained of was for the public benefit."

[9, 10] The privilege provided in subdivision 1 and 2 of section 47 is usually referred to as an absolute privilege, as an absence of malice is not essential to make it available. The privilege referred to in the other three subdivisions is commonly referred to as a qualified privilege as it is incumbent upon the defendant to show an absence of malice before he can claim its benefits. Such an absence of malice is an express limitation upon the qualified privilege accorded under these subdivisions of section 47 of the Civil Code. Hale Company v. Lea, supra. In either case, as already stated, privilege is open only as a special defense, unless it clearly appears upon the face of the complaint.

No tenable ground here appears upon the face of the complaint which justifies an absolute privilege. In making the statement to the newspaper reporter as alleged, the defendants obviously were not acting in the discharge of any official duty nor participating in any legislative proceeding. No language has been pointed out, and neither is there any in the complaint, which would tend to show that the statement made to the newspaper reporters after the decision was made and the order of the board had been entered is in any way relevant or material to the proceedings. If, as contended by respondents, they intended to appeal from the order, there is nothing in the complaint to so indicate. The complaint does not plead any absolute privilege in the defendants.

[11, 12] Any qualified privilege to which the respondents may be entitled must, under the circumstances of the case, arise under subdivision 3 of section 47. In all cases involving the question of qualified privilege, the existence or non-existence of malice is of prime importance. Here, we are only concerned with it insofar as it may, or may not, be a pleaded fact. The plaintiff, in addition to pleading the actionable statement which imports actual malice (Tingley v. Times Mirror Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 P. 1097), has alleged that said statement was made by Fenton with malice, for the purpose of injuring, disgracing and defaming plaintiff, and interfering with his ability to obtain employment; that it was false and known by Fenton to be false at the time it was made and Fenton did not have probable cause or any cause for believing it to be true; and that the statement was made and given to the newspaper reporters by Fenton for the purpose of having it printed in various newspapers; and that he, Fenton, requested the reporters to print and publish the statement and that it was printed and published in various newspapers throughout the country. An intent upon the part of the respondents to injure the plaintiff by the utterance of the defamatory words is alleged, and this is a sufficient allegation of actual malice. Tingley v. Times Mirror Co., supra; Siemon v. Finkle, 190 Cal. 611, 213 P. 954. Where malice is pleaded, or may be inferred, and the complaint otherwise shows upon its face that a libelous publication was made to others, a cause of action is stated regardless of whether the persons to whom the publication is addressed are interested or not. Layne v. Kirby, 208 Cal. 694, 284 P. 441.

[13, 14] It is, of course, elementary that upon the publication of a statement actionable in itself, a cause of action for both actual and punitive damages is conclusively established. As is said in Tingley v. Times Mirror Co., supra [151 Cal. 1, 89 P. 1102], "Where the publication is libelous per se, the law presumes malice in fact in its publication, and, in the absence of evidence on the part of the defendant rebutting this presumed malice, plaintiff is entitled to an award of exemplary damages".

[15-18] Actual damages are both general and special. General damages are such as compensate for the natural and probable consequences of the libel. Special damages, as a branch of actual damages, are such as will compensate for the actual pecuniary loss sustained. While general damages may be recovered in the absence of actual proof and upon a general allegation of damage to an amount which in the estimation of the jury will compensate the plaintiff, special damages must be alleged and proved, unless the publication is actionable per se. Harris v. Curtis Publishing Co., supra; Bates v. Campbell, 213 Cal. 438, 2 P.2d 383; Layne v. Kirby, supra. The complaint here alleges that prior to the defamatory publication the plaintiff had an excellent reputation in the banking business for honesty, integrity and efficiency as a bank employee and as an attorney, and that the publication of the statement proximately and materially damaged his reputation among bank and trust companies to the extent of rendering him unable to secure employment at his trade or employment presently and in the future. A similar allegation based upon an alleged libel was held to be a sufficient allegation of both general and special damages in Oberkotter v. Woolman, 187 Cal. 500, 202 P. 669. Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 394, 47 P. 129, and Waite v. San Fernando Pub. Co., 178 Cal. 303, 173 P. 591, are to the same effect. The general rule is that in actions of tort, damages arising out of loss of earning power are ordinarily considered under the allegation of general damages. Hoffmann v. Lane, 11 Cal.App.2d 655, 54 P.2d 477; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513.

We are of the opinion that the demurrer should not have been sustained.

The judgment appealed from is reversed and the cause remanded with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendants to answer if they are so advised.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 507

OVERLAND v. DAVIS.

Civ. 12860.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.
March 17, 1942.

1. Sales 🔑52(6)

Evidence of transactions between cattle dealer, and two livestock brokers, failed to sustain judgment against broker D for reasonable value of cattle sold by broker O to dealer who shipped them to broker D for sale, on theory that dealer purchased cattle for broker D, or for dealer and broker D jointly, or that dealer acted and broker O dealt with him as ostensible agent of the broker D. Agricultural Code, §§ 368, 1263.

2. Sales 🔑359(3)

In action on check which was payable to livestock broker O, and livestock dealer, and was issued as an advance to the dealer from livestock broker D to whom dealer shipped the cattle for sale, evidence which failed to show nonpayment of amount represented by the check, on which payment was stopped, was insufficient to authorize recovery by broker O.

3. Evidence 🔑354(26)

In action against livestock dealer and livestock broker D for reasonable value of cattle sold by livestock broker O to dealer who shipped the cattle to broker D for sale, account books of broker O showing account of dealer were not admissible against broker D in absence of showing of joint liability of dealer and broker D for items in the account.

4. Evidence ⊜354(26)

In action against livestock dealer and livestock broker D for reasonable value of cattle sold by livestock broker O to dealer who shipped the cattle to broker D for sale, account books of broker O showing account of dealer were not admissible against broker D, where the books did not purport to embrace transactions between the two brokers and did not purport to be confined to transactions with dealer in which broker D was interested.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Georgia P. Bullock, Judge.

Action by J. H. Overland against John A. Davis and another for reasonable value of cattle allegedly sold to defendants and for amount of check given in connection with the sale transactions and on which payment had been stopped, wherein named defendant filed a counterclaim. From an adverse judgment, the named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Bailey & Poe, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger R. Walch, of Hanford, for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

Defendant Davis has appealed from a judgment against him and his defaulting codefendant Palumbo in the sum of $2,374.48. One count of the complaint was for the reasonable value of cattle sold to the defendants in that amount; the second count was based upon a check of defendant Davis in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,000 given in connection with transactions, and included in the sum, involved in the first cause of action, and upon which payment had been stopped. Findings were in favor of plaintiff on both causes of action.

A reversal of the judgment is called for because of the insufficiency of the evidence and for error in the admission of evidence.

The proper disposition of the appeal has required a somewhat tedious study of the evidence relating to matters of accounting between two livestock brokers and a cattle dealer with whom they had a multitude of business transactions within a brief period of time. While the amount involved is not large, the evidence was presented in a confusing manner. The labors of the trial judge would have been considerably lessened had counsel in the case provided the services of a skilled accountant for the assistance of the court. Judges should not be expected to do the work of accountants.

We shall discuss the facts as they are established by uncontradicted evidence. There is in reality no conflict as to the controlling facts.

Plaintiff Overland was a licensed livestock broker and auctioneer with a sales yard at Hanford. Davis was engaged in the same business at Hynes, California. Defendant Palumbo was a licensed dealer in livestock. These are distinct avocations, separately licensed by the State. Agricultural Code, secs. 368, 1263, Deering's Codes of California 1937, pp. 80, 284. During the months of August to November, inclusive, 1937, Palumbo purchased livestock from Overland, in the latter's auction ring at Hanford, and shipped them to Davis to be sold by the latter in his auction yard at Hynes. Palumbo made all of the purchases from Overland, his account with Overland was in his own name, and the cattle sold were not charged to Davis. The latter could be held responsible for the account only upon the theory that Palumbo purchased the cattle for Davis, or for himself and Davis jointly as the agent of the latter, or upon the theory that he acted and Overland dealt with him as the ostensible agent of Davis. None of these theories of liability is sound.

[1] Palumbo had been a cattle dealer for some twenty-five years; he had transacted business with Overland in the latter's capacity of livestock auctioneer for some six years. He expressed to Overland a desire to ship cattle to the Los Angeles market, which the latter advised him not to do. However, about the first of August, 1937, Palumbo visited Davis at Hynes and made an arrangement to ship cattle from Hanford to Hynes for sale at auction by Davis, who agreed to and did advance some $2,300 to Palumbo which the latter was to use for the purchase of cows. Palumbo deposited $400 with Davis for the shipment of one carload of cattle consisting of about twenty-five head, which deposit was to serve as a guarantee to Davis against loss on the shipment. Under the arrangement then made Davis was to receive cattle in his yard as they were shipped by Palumbo, to care for them until they were sold, and to sell them upon the customary terms for the sale of livestock at auction. Davis' advances were in the form of drafts upon himself which were furnished in blank to Palumbo, to be filled in and delivered to the sellers of the cows as purchases were made. The form of draft used was accompanied by a bill of sale and warranty of title by which Palumbo conveyed to Davis title to the cows as they were purchased. These transfers of title were purely by way of security. Palumbo shipped the first carload and from time to time made other shipments. On Davis' books Palumbo's account was charged with advances, with the expenses connected with the handling of the cattle, with Davis' commissions as auctioneer, and was credited with the amounts received for cattle sold. Davis had no interest in any profits which might result from Palumbo's operations; his sole remuneration was that which came to him as a livestock broker, including minor charges for work of a clerical nature. During all of the period in question the business of the two men continued on this basis. Palumbo drew comparatively small sums of money against expected profits, which were charged to his account by Davis, he received statements of auction sales as often as they were held—there were twelve in all,—he always had on hand at Davis' yard a number of cattle which had not been sold, and no balance of the account was ever struck until on or about the 26th day of November, 1937, when all cattle which had been shipped in Palumbo's name had been sold. The periodical statements took into consideration the cows that were on hand, apparently at their cost prices. After all cattle on hand in November had been sold, Palumbo remained in debt to Davis in the sum of $132.46.

The business between Overland and Palumbo was carried on as follows: Palumbo purchased cows at auction in Overland's sales yard and these sales were charged to his account. He also bought cows from farmers and brought them to Overland's yard. When a sufficient number had been accumulated a shipment was made by Palumbo to the Davis yard at Hynes. In the beginning Palumbo drew drafts on Davis in payment for cattle, and not infrequently when the sellers would not accept the Davis drafts Overland would issue his own checks in payment for cattle purchased by Palumbo and would accept in exchange drafts drawn on Davis. Palumbo received cash advances from Overland which were charged to his account. He also had a great variety of dealings with Overland which were entirely foreign to his business with Davis. During the time in question an open account with Palumbo was carried by Overland. Although from time to time, as shipments were made, Palumbo would issue drafts on Davis in favor of Overland which would be credited to Palumbo's account and would be paid by Davis, the business was not done on a cash basis. Palumbo purchased more cattle than he paid for and more than he shipped to Davis, he had a variety of other dealings with Overland, and when the account was closed in December, 1937, it showed a balance due Overland of $2,374.48. Overland had no interest in Palumbo's business. He operated as Davis did, solely as a livestock broker and auctioneer.

It appears without doubt that each of the three men involved conducted his own business in which he alone was interested. There was no partnership arrangement or sharing of profits between Palumbo and Overland or Palumbo and Davis. Neither of the brokers guaranteed to the other payment of Palumbo's account and neither had any interest in cattle purchased by Palumbo except in so far as possession and control of the cattle from time to time afforded security for moneys that had been advanced to Palumbo. Prior to the institution of this suit neither broker at any time called on the other to make good Palumbo's indebtedness.

There is nothing in this evidence to show that Davis either by himself or jointly with Palumbo was a purchaser of cattle from Overland. He made no purchases directly nor did Palumbo ever have authority to purchase for him. All of the latter's purchases were made for his own account. The manner in which Davis conducted his business with Palumbo demonstrates that he was acting merely as a broker. In every statement rendered to Palumbo he charged the latter with all of the expenses of handling and selling the cattle and credited him with all of the receipts from sales. There was therefore no evidence to support a finding that Overland sold any cows to Davis or that the latter ever agreed to pay for any that were sold to Palumbo.

It is contended by respondent that Palumbo acted as the ostensible agent of Davis and that Overland so regarded and dealt with him. There is nothing in the record to support this contention. Overland in his testimony repeatedly and consistently stated that his sales were made to Palumbo and, as we have seen, they were all charged to the latter. Palumbo did not represent to Overland that he was purchasing for Davis' account nor did Overland testify that he understood that Davis was interested in any of the transactions as a buyer. It is clear from Overland's testimony of conversations had with Davis that he understood that the latter was financing purchases by Palumbo as an incident to his brokerage business, and that he was not purchasing cattle himself or jointly with Palumbo. In fact Davis financed other dealers who also purchased cattle from Overland as a broker, and Overland in the same manner financed Palumbo and other dealers in the purchases of cattle, although upon a smaller scale, but they did not buy and sell upon their own accounts. Overland testified to a conversation he had with Davis about September 1, 1937, at which time none of the transactions here involved had taken place, as follows: "He (Davis) went on to tell me that he had made arrangements with Mr. Palumbo for him to buy cattle up to a truckload, and he had gone in and bought $3,000 worth of cattle and he was not financing any man for that much money * * * and I did tell him at the time that he had better hold Mr. Palumbo down a little bit, because he was a great hand for shooting in a big way and lots of times it was dynamite. * * *

"Q. He told you at that time that his arrangement with Palumbo was to finance him just for a load of cattle at a time? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He said that this was more than Palumbo should have purchased, but he made it good just the same, did he? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Following that discussion did Mr. Palumbo continue to buy cattle from you to ship to the Davis Sales Yard? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And did Mr. Davis continue to pay for the cattle? A. Yes, sir."

In October, 1937, Palumbo purchased sixteen head of cows from Overland, which he represented to Davis to be "queens" or "top cows." Davis issued his check to Palumbo and Overland in the sum of $1,000 as part payment for the cows, having arranged with Palumbo to advance that amount. The cows were shipped to Davis by Overland and Davis stopped payment on the check. Overland went to see Davis and the latter stated as a reason for his having stopped payment that the cows were inferior. Overland questioned Davis at that time about the condition of Palumbo's account, asking, "Well, how much is it in the red?" and Davis replied, "Well, four or five or six cows will straighten it up." Overland said, "If that is the case, go ahead and sell them and we can work it out. Q. Go ahead and sell them and credit it onto the account? A. Yes." This Davis did, although some of the cows had to be fed for a long time, before they were fit to sell. Overland at the same time requested Davis to send him any balance remaining after Palumbo's account was paid, stated that any shipments in the future would be made in his own name and requested that remittances should be made to him. He examined Palumbo's account on Davis' books at that time. Overland's name was substituted for that of Palumbo on Davis' books, but it does not appear that Overland was advised of that fact. It has no significance in the case, however. The business continued, but under somewhat different conditions. Overland as a broker continued to sell cattle to Palumbo on open account and to ship them, not as an owner but as a broker, to Davis but Davis was not called upon to finance the purchases. He received and sold them and made remittances to Overland. Palumbo meanwhile purchased cows elsewhere with drafts on Davis which were paid and the cows were sold through the same account as the ones coming from Overland. Although the account was not closed out until the end of January, 1938, when all cattle had been sold, it was transferred to Overland's name as of November 1st and Palumbo's account was balanced as of November 26th, showing a balance in Davis' favor of $132.46 but the business went on, notwithstanding. Overland's account with Palumbo showed items as late as December 20, 1937. Upon a final closing of Davis' books a balance was due him in the amount of $124.53. Undoubtedly Overland arranged that all moneys payable by Davis should come to him as a measure of security when he learned that Palumbo's account with Davis showed a balance in the latter's favor. But he had no account with Davis on his books, continued to make sales to Palumbo without transferring title to him, and continued to sell through Davis. There was nothing in this course of business even suggesting the sale of cows to Davis. All of the evidence upon the subject tends to show that Overland knew exactly what the business arrangement and relationship were between Davis and Palumbo.

[2] As to the second cause of action the evidence sustains the findings as to the issuance of the check for $1,000 and that payment was stopped thereon, but the finding that the sum of $1,000 represented by the check has not been paid is not sustained by the evidence.

The evidence shows without dispute that Davis and Palumbo were dealing solely in dairy cows and bulls. Calves which accompanied the cows or were born of cows in Davis' possession were necessarily involved in the account. Records of the account between Davis and Palumbo and between Davis and Overland, as heretofore explained, were introduced in evidence, together with a detailed record of all cattle received by Davis and the proceeds received from sales. The accuracy of these books was not and is not questioned. It appears therefrom that Davis not only paid for everything he received from the beginning to the end of his dealings with Palumbo and Overland, but also that there remained unpaid to him on the two accounts the total sum of $256.99.

[3, 4] The account books of Overland showing the account of Palumbo, and which showed a balance of $2,374.48 in favor of the former, were introduced in evidence in support of the claim of Overland, over the objections of Davis. These objections should have been sustained for various reasons. The account books were not admissible against Davis in the absence of a showing of a joint liability of Palumbo and Davis for the items in the account. There was no proof of such joint liability. Other reasons are that the account did not purport to be one embracing transactions between Overland and Davis and it did not purport to be confined to transactions with Palumbo in which Davis was interested. Palumbo's business with Davis, as we have seen, consisted of shipping dairy cattle to the latter for sale, and nothing else. However, at the same time his business with Overland covered a much wider field. The account of transactions on which Davis was sued embraced also all of the business dealings between Palumbo and Overland. There were many transactions shown in the account with which Davis had nothing whatever to do. A few examples will suffice to demonstrate this fact. Palumbo purchased "Whiteface" steer beef, paying therefor $1,347.22, which Overland advanced to him. This amount was charged to Palumbo in the Overland account. They were sold for $957.88, or at a loss of $389.34, and this loss is included in the account in question. Also included in the account are charges and credits showing dealings in horses, mules, one colt, heifers, calves, pigs, an animal referred to by counsel as a "bull cow," hay, feed, promissory notes, cash advanced, unexplained checks and advances, and telephone calls. The promissory notes were for $1,254.23 and $300, respectively. Palumbo was questioned about them but was unable to offer any explanation as to what the notes represented. In fact no explanation at all was given of these items or of many others which went into the account upon which the judgment was based. The account was admitted against Davis upon the assurance of respondent's counsel that no recovery was sought against Davis for items in the account which did not relate to transactions in which he was engaged. It does not require a meticulous examination of the account to see that $1,943.57 of the amount claimed could not be chargeable to Davis or recovered in this action upon any theory because the three items mentioned did not concern Davis, nor involve purchases of cows. The further the account is examined the more questionable it appears whether cows purchased with Davis' money were not reported to Davis as having cost considerably more than Palumbo had paid for them.

There was only a smattering of evidence in the record which attempted to segregate the items in the account representing shipments to Davis and those which could not under any tenable theory be charged against him. It appears that Palumbo's total operations with Overland, assuming that he was credited with all sums received by Overland from Davis, showed a net loss in operations of $2,374.48. But it likewise appears, and much more satisfactorily, that Davis paid in full for all cattle received by him from the beginning to the end of his dealings with both Palumbo and Overland. The amount represented by the check has therefore been paid.

The loss which Overland has sustained is traceable to only two sources, first to expenses incidental to the handling of the cattle by Davis, including feeding, branding, testing, hauling, losses by death, commissions on auction sales, etc., all of which charges naturally reduced the cash amounts remitted by Davis from the proceeds of auction sales, and secondly, to Palumbo's independent operations and business transactions with Overland, which were entirely separate and apart from the business in which Davis was interested. Davis was not shown to be responsible or liable for those losses.

Davis had a counterclaim against Overland for $124.53, the balance of his account at the end of the business between the two. No finding was made with reference to this counterclaim although the effect of the judgment was to disallow it.

The judgment is reversed.

SCHAUER, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 549

ROYAL INS. CO., Limited, v. MAZZEI et al.

Civ. 2666.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 18, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1942.

1. Negligence 🔑32(1)

The duties owed to chattels in the possession of a business invitee are the same as the duties owed to the business invitee personally.

2. Negligence 🔑32(1)

A landowner is not an insurer, but owes duty of ordinary care to keep the premises reasonably safe for business invitees.

3. Negligence 🔑52

The owner of premises is under obligation to warn business invitee of any dangers of which he has knowledge and which are not readily apparent to the eye, but there is no obligation to give warning of an obvious danger or one which should have been perceived by the invitee through ordinary use of his own senses.

4. Negligence 🔑52

The owner of premises is entitled to assume that business invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses, and is not required to give invitee notice or warning of such an obvious danger.

5. Pleading 🔑53(1)

Inconsistent causes of action may be pleaded in separate counts where pleader thinks it desirable so to do, as where exact nature of facts is in doubt or exact legal nature of plaintiff's right and defendant's liability depends on facts not well known to the plaintiff, and in such case an election of remedy cannot be forced.

6. Negligence 🔑52

Where dangerous condition on premises arises from causes or conditions not readily apparent to the eye, and such danger should have been known to owner by exercise of reasonable diligence, but not to business invitee, owner has duty of giving invitee reasonable notice or warning of such danger.

7. Appeal and error 🔑917(1)

On appeal from judgment entered after refusal to amend complaint after sustaining of demurrer, it is presumed, in support of judgment, that pleader has pleaded his case as strongly as it can be stated in his favor, and all ambiguities and uncertainties must be resolved against pleader.

8. Electricity 🔑19(3)

In suit by insurer to recover amount paid under fire policy for damage to cotton which was burned when hoist on truck on which cotton was being carried came in contact with electric wires in defendant's cotton gin yard, where there was no allegation that wires were maintained by defendant in violation of law, the presumption that defendant was not guilty of a violation of law was against the pleader. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 1.

9. Electricity ⟹19(2)

In suit by insurer to recover amount paid under fire policy for damage to cotton which was burned when hoist on truck on which cotton was being transported came in contact with electric wires in defendant's cotton gin yard, complaint which failed to allege that the electric wires constituted a latent and obscure danger, and that defendant had knowledge thereof and failed to warn the trucker of such danger, and which alleged that the trucker negligently failed to observe position of the wires, failed to state a cause of action against the defendant.

10. Negligence ⟹62(1)

A prior remote cause cannot be made basis of action if it did nothing more than furnish condition making injury possible, if there intervened between such remote cause and the injury a distinct and efficient cause of the injury, even though injury would not have happened but for such condition.

11. Negligence ⟹62(1)

Where independent negligent act or defective condition sets into operation circumstances which result in injury because of a prior defective condition, the subsequent act or condition is the "proximate cause".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Suit by the Royal Insurance Company, Limited, against Roy G. Mazzei and Harry E. Abraham, to recover the amount paid by the plaintiff on a fire insurance policy insuring cotton damaged by fire when truck driven by first-named defendant came in contact with electric wires maintained by the last-named defendant. From a judgment of dismissal entered in favor of the last-named defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Arthur C. Shepard and Richard V. Aten, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Claflin, Dorsey & Campbell, of Bakersfield, and Wild & Carlson, R. H. Reeve, and R. F. Maxwell, all of Fresno, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered in favor of respondent Harry E. Abraham, after his demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, appellant having declined to further amend. The defendants, other than Abraham, did not demur and the judgment does not mention them.

The material allegations of the third amended complaint are that on October 27, 1939, defendant Harry E. Abraham owned and operated a cotton gin and yard; that at that time he had in his possession, in storage, 30 bales of cotton owned by R. G. Hamilton & Company and insured against fire loss by plaintiff and appellant Royal Insurance Co., Ltd.; that defendant Roy G. Mazzei, a common carrier and independent contractor, on behalf of R. G. Hamilton & Company, paid defendant Abraham the storage charges due on said cotton and loaded the cotton onto his truck; that in leaving respondent's place of business Mazzei traveled on a road through the cotton gin yard maintained by respondent for use by cotton trucks entering and leaving the yard; that Mazzei's truck was equipped with an immovable hoist extending 12 feet, 11 inches above the road bed; that respondent knew the foregoing facts and that all cotton trucks were equipped with such hoists extending to that height and higher; that, nevertheless, he was at that time negligently maintaining three electric wires crossing said road at a height of approximately 12 feet; and that the failure to give warning of the position of said wires was a proximate cause of the damage. The complaint then recites that the hoist on Mazzei's truck came into contact with the wires and the electricity ignited the cotton, damaging it to the extent of $1,104.40; that appellant paid this sum to R. G. Hamilton & Company under the fire insurance policy and the claim for damage to the cotton was assigned to appellant. As to the respondent, there is no allegation that the three electric wires constituted a latent and obscure danger, and that the invitor had knowledge thereof and failed to warn the invitee of such danger. On the other hand, the complaint in the same cause of action, as against the common carrier, recites that they "negligently failed to observe the position of said wires prior to the time said wires were struck by said hoist" and that said negligence was a proximate cause of the damage.

The trial court held, in sustaining the demurrer, that the alleged negligence of respondent, if any, in failing to give any warning of the position of the wires, was a remote cause and not a proximate cause of the accident; that the complaint affirmatively showed that there was no breach of duty by respondent in this respect and therefore no negligence was alleged as to him; that the complaint affirmatively showed that the negligence of the defendant Mazzei was the superseding and sole cause and that the alleged negligence of the respondent was a remote cause, if any, which was superseded by the negligence of defendant Mazzei, in failing to see a danger that would have been obvious in the exercise of ordinary care.

[1-4] Under the allegations of the amended complaint defendant Mazzei was a business invitee upon the land of respondent and as such business invitee Mazzei had the cotton owned by appellant's assignor in his possession and under his exclusive control when the cotton was damaged. The duties owed to chattels in the possession of a business invitee are the same as the duties owed to the business invitee personally. Restatement of the law of Torts [Am.Law Institute], sec. 497. California authorities are in accord with this rule. California Annotations to the Restatement of the Law of Torts, sec. 497. Since the respondent landowner owed the same duties toward the chattels in defendant Mazzei's possession as he owed to Mazzei personally, and since Mazzei was a business invitee, the duties here involved are those of landowner to business invitee. For the purposes of this opinion it may be assumed that Mazzei was a business invitee upon the premises of respondent. The rule is well established that in such a case the owner of the premises is not an insurer but that he owes a duty of ordinary care to see that the premises are reasonably safe. Among other things, the invitor is under the obligation to warn the invitee of any dangers of which he has knowledge and which are not readily apparent to the eye. There is no such duty where the dangers are obvious or as well known to the invitee as to the owner of the premises. There is no obligation to give a warning of an obvious danger or one which should have been perceived by the invitee through ordinary use of his own senses. Ambrose v. Allen, 113 Cal.App. 107, 298 P. 169; Blodgett v. B. H. Dyas Co., 4 Cal.2d 511, 50 P.2d 801; Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, 211 Cal. 556, 296 P. 76; Vitrano v. Westgate Sea Products Co., 34 Cal.App.2d 462, 93 P.2d 832. Such an owner is entitled to assume that such invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses. He is not required to give to the invitee notice or warning of an obvious danger. Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 197 P. 793.

Respondent cites Hayden v. Paramount Productions, Inc., 33 Cal.App.2d 287, 91 P.2d 231, 236. That case involved the duty of a landowner to an innocent business invitee with reference to electric high power tension wires maintained on the premises. The facts are similar to the case at bar with the exception that personal injuries resulted to an innocent third party rather than injury to his goods, and the cause of the injury was due to a crane contacting an electric high tension power line on a leaning pole. The action was to recover for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of respondent as a landowner. The other defendant, City of Los Angeles, maintained an electric power line over property belonging to respondent owner. The line sagged to some extent due to a leaning pole. A building was being erected on that property and the steel in that building was being placed, through use of a crane, by an independent contractor. The independent contractor was not made a party to the action. The plaintiff and appellant was an employee of the independent contractor. The crane was operated by a fellow employee. While the appellant was guiding a column of steel being carried by the crane, his fellow employee caused the boom of the crane to come into contact with one of the city's high tension wires and the innocent appellant was injured, receiving an electric shock and burns. The trial court granted a nonsuit at the close of appellant's evidence, and the judgment of dismissal was affirmed. The appellant sought to impose liability on the landowner, Paramount Productions, Inc., on the ground that it exercised control over the power line of the city by refusing to permit the city to replace the leaning pole with a taller pole, and was negligent in so maintaining the wires and failing to give warning of the danger. On this point, i.e., negligence of the landowner toward the innocent business invitee, the appellate court held that even assuming that the landowner controlled the wires, still there was no breach of duty and no negligence on its part as the wires were open to view and presented an obvious danger. The court said: "It was not incumbent upon Paramount to warn appellant of any danger, because the high voltage wires were open to view and presented a patent danger by reason of common knowledge of the fact that power lines such as the one here in question are dangerous instrumentalities, and ordinary prudence dictates that one situated as were appellant and his fellow employees should refrain from exposing himself to the danger occasioned by contact with such wires. [Citing cases.] * * * Respondent Paramount * * * having exercised ordinary care in its conduct, thereby discharged its obligation as an invitor to the appellant invitee."

In the instant case the respondent landowner owed no greater duty to appellant's assignor's goods carried by the business invitee Mazzei than he owed to Mazzei personally, or would have owed to appellant's assignor had he been personally present as a business invitee. Hayden v. Paramount Productions, Inc., supra.

[5, 6] It becomes apparent from the pleadings that appellant predicates its cause of action against respondent Abraham upon the theory that the electric wires were not maintained at a sufficient height to allow the safe passage of the invitees in similar trucks similarly loaded upon the premises, and that the respondent negligently failed to give any warning of the position of the wires and that such failure was a proximate cause of the damages. Appellant apparently predicates its cause of action against the common carrier set forth in the same count, not upon this ground, but upon the ground that the wires were and the danger therefrom was, apparent to any person using reasonable care, and that the common carrier failed to exercise such care. Appellant recognizes these inconsistent theories of liability between the respondent and the common carrier because it alleges that it "is in doubt as to whether it is entitled to redress from the defendant Abraham or from the defendant Mazzei" or both. Inconsistent causes of action may be pleaded in separate counts where the pleader thinks it desirable so to do, as where the exact nature of the facts is in doubt, or when the exact legal nature of plaintiff's right and defendant's liability depends on facts not well known to the plaintiff. An election of remedy under these circumstances cannot be forced. Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, 159 P. 709. To hold the respondent owner liable, then, it would have to be alleged in the count charging him with such negligence that there was a danger attending upon the entry by a business invitee, and that such danger arose from causes or conditions not readily apparent to the eye, and that such danger would or should have been known to the invitor by the exercise of reasonable diligence, and not to the invitee. It would then be the duty of the owner to give such invitee reasonable notice or warning of such danger if the dangerous condition was known or should have been known to the owner and not to the invitee. The owner was not required to give to the invitee notice or warning of an obvious danger. Shanley v. American Olive Company, supra; Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, supra; Dingman v. A. F. Mattock Co., 15 Cal.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26.

[7-9] As to the respondent, the complaint fails to allege that there was a dangerous known condition not readily apparent to the eye, and that the dangerous condition was known to the invitor and not to the invitee. Whether the electric wires in the instant case were hidden from view by foliage or for some other reason were not open to view and not clearly visible to the eye, cannot be determined by the pleadings in so far as this respondent is affected. The only allegation in this respect would indicate that the wires were open to view and clearly visible. The presumptions are against the pleader.

Upon appeal from a judgment entered after refusal to amend a complaint after a demurrer is sustained, in support of the judgment of the trial court it is presumed that the pleader has stated his case as strongly as it can be stated in his favor, and all ambiguities and uncertainties must be resolved against the pleader. McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 P. 69; Higgins v. Security Trust, etc., Bank, 203 Cal. 398, 264 P. 744; Hauser v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 133 Cal.App. 222, 23 P.2d 1068. Many of appellant's cited cases were actions against a power company for maintaining its high-voltage lines over or across public highways or agricultural lands. In those cases it has been held that the failure of the company to maintain the wires at a height less than that height required by the Railroad Commission or ordinance was negligence per se. Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 8 Cal.2d 631, 67 P.2d 678; Howell v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp., 87 Cal.App. 44, 261 P. 1107; Fairbairn v. American River Electric Co., 179 Cal. 157, 175 P. 637. In the instant case there is no allegation that the wires were maintained in violation of law or of a ruling or regulation of the Railroad Commission. The legal duty of respondent to maintain the wires at any particular height is not shown. The presumption that respondent was not guilty of a violation of law is against the pleader. Sec. 1963, subd. 1, Code Civ.Proc. Hauser v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra, presented a similar question to the one here involved. There the facts gathered from the pleadings show that the defendant company maintained a pole line carrying high tension wires along a certain lane and across a yard or corral. Plaintiff, with the permission of the owner and lessee, went upon the lands to move a hay derrick. He hitched his horses to the derrick and was moving the derrick across the corral when the boom thereof came in close proximity to the electric wire, and the electricity arced across the intervening space and thence into the body of plaintiff. The complaint alleged the negligence as follows [133 Cal. App. 222, 23 P.2d 1069]: "* * * Was moving and conveying the same (derrick) across the aforementioned yard * * * toward the * * * power line when, because of defendant's carelessness, recklessness and negligence in maintaining aforesaid wires within dangerous proximity and at an insufficient height from the ground and failing to insulate same the boom came in close proximity * * * and as a result thereof * * *" that "the contact was caused solely and due to the negligence of the defendant in the maintenance of said power line" and "that as a result of defendant's carelessness * * * plaintiff received a severe electrical shock" and also, "as a further result of defendant's carelessness" etc., plaintiff required the attendance of a physician. The court said, in sustaining an order for judgment on the pleadings: "It is obvious that all of the foregoing allegations are as to the cause of the injury, leaving the fact of negligence to inference and innuendo." (Citing cases.) It then said: "Examining the present complaint further, we find no allegation of any duty owed by defendant to plaintiff, nor * * * that plaintiff unwittingly nor accidentally came in contact with wires negligently maintained. * * * If there were an allegation that the wires were maintained in violation of law or of a rule or regulation of the Railroad Commission, then the law would impose the duty. No such allegation is here found except by recital that the wires were maintained 'in dangerous proximity' and at 'an insufficient height' above the ground. Such words are meaningless as allegations of fact, and are averments of opinion of the pleader only."

In support of the trial court's ruling respondent not only advances the contention that appellant did not plead any act of negligence of respondent, but if there was one pleaded that such act of negligence was a remote cause and not a proximate cause of the accident.

[10, 11] The governing rule is stated in 45 Cal.Jur., page 931, sec. 491 (referred to in Hauser v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra [133 Cal.App. 222, 23 P.2d 1070]), as follows: "A prior and remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition or give rise to the occasion by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened between such prior or remote cause and the injury a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury, even though such injury would not have happened but for such condition or occasion. If no danger existed in the condition except because of the independent cause, such condition was not the proximate cause. And if an independent negligent act or defective condition sets into operation the circumstances which result in injury because of the prior effective condition, such subsequent act or condition is the proximate cause."

In Hauser v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra, it was held that the contact with the wire was the deliberate act of the plaintiff with full knowledge of all of the circumstances; that the pleading brought the plaintiff within the rule above quoted and that from the complaint it appeared that plaintiff knew of the dangerous character of the wires and their exact location and condition and deliberately moved a derrick into them and was injured; and that from the foregoing it appeared that the complaint and amended complaint failed to set forth any cause of action. The amended complaint in the instant action was similarly defective as to respondent Harry E. Abraham.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 389

WHITFIELD v. DEBRINCAT.

Civ. 11602.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 11, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 10, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 8, 1942.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(42)

In action for injuries sustained in head-on automobile collision, evidence with respect to gouges cut in the roadway, one of which was on plaintiff's side of the road and the other not shown to have been connected with the collision, did not support defendant's contention that collision resulted because plaintiff was driving on left hand side of highway.

2. Evidence ⇨383(10)

In action for injuries sustained in head-on automobile collision, wherein plaintiff and defendant each contended that the other was driving on the wrong side of road, photographs showing injuries to plaintiff's automobile failed to establish whether it was struck once or twice and hence did not support defendant's contention that plaintiff's automobile was on wrong side of highway and was struck twice.

3. Trial ⇨267(3)

The trial court's modification of defendant's requested instruction, relating to the statutory duty of a motorist to keep on right half of highway except when overtaking or passing another vehicle, by striking statement that if jury found from evidence that plaintiff failed to comply with the statute and that such failure proximately caused the injury, plaintiff was guilty of negligence and could not recover, was not error, notwithstanding instruction as given was not addressed to the issue on trial, in that plaintiff, if he was driving on wrong side of road, was violating a different provision of the Vehicle Act. St.1931, pp. 2124, 2125, §§ 122, 124.

4. Appeal and error ⇨928(4)

Where record failed to show at whose request instructions, to which defendant objected on appeal, were given, but showed the instructions given, instructions requested by defendant which the court modified and gave, and instructions requested by defendant which the court refused to give, it would be presumed in support of judgment in favor of plaintiff that the objectionable instructions were given at the request of the defendant.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1067

Where instructions given stated affirmatively the statutory duty of drivers of motor vehicles, court's refusal to give defendant's requested instruction that defendant was not required to use the utmost care, although such instruction might properly have been given, was not reversible error. St.1931, pp. 2120, 2124, 2125, §§ 113(a), (b)1, 122, 124(a).

6. Appeal and error ⇨1067

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision, where jury was instructed that one who is himself exercising ordinary care has right to assume, until the contrary becomes apparent, that all other persons using street or highway will obey the law and use ordinary care, court's refusal to give defendant's requested instruction that plaintiff was not entitled to assume that others would exercise ordinary care if plaintiff was acting in a negligent manner or was himself violating any of the rules of the road, although such instruction might properly have been given, was not reversible error.

7. Automobiles ⇨243(14)

In action for injuries sustained in head-on automobile collision, wherein participants each contended that the other was driving on the wrong side of the road, court did not err in permitting plaintiff's witness to testify over objection concerning where certain gouges made in the roadway commenced.

8. Witnesses ⇨226

The object of all examinations of witnesses in judicial tribunals is to elicit truth and there are many cases where the form of question, and the manner of examination must be left to the discretion of the trial judge.

9. Appeal and error ⚷690(3)

Where plaintiff in personal injury action, after introducing evidence regarding nature of injuries, his incapacity to follow his profession as a dentist and continuation of such incapacity, waived his claim for loss of earnings and it was stipulated that such items should be withdrawn from the jury, defendant could not complain for the first time on appeal that he was thereby deprived of cross-examination in the absence of any showing in the record that attempted cross-examination concerning such item of damages had been restricted by trial court.

10. Damages ⚷216(7)

In personal injury action wherein plaintiff waived any claim for loss of earnings, an instruction that if jury found plaintiff should recover, damages should be awarded in such amount as would compensate plaintiff for the injuries sustained by him, if any, including such amount as would compensate him for pain and suffering certain to result in the future, was not erroneous.

11. Evidence ⚷383(9)

In action for injuries sustained in head-on automobile collision, plats drawn to scale, from which jury might have found that at the place of collision plaintiff's view was not obstructed within a distance of 200 feet ahead, warranted finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery for violating statute limiting speed to 15 miles per hour in traversing curves where driver's view is obstructed within a distance of 200 feet ahead. St. 1931, p. 2120, § 113(b)3.

12. Appeal and error ⚷204(2), 237(2)

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision, the statement volunteered by plaintiff's witness that in his opinion it was impossible to determine the time when a gouge in the roadway was made did not constitute prejudicial error where no objection was made thereto and there was no motion to strike.

13. Appeal and error ⚷1004(1)

To say that a verdict has been influenced by passion and prejudice merely amounts to saying that the verdict exceeds any amount justified by the evidence.

14. Damages ⚷132(13)

An award of $14,000, nearly $3,700 of which constituted special damages proved by dentist, for injuries which required dentist to be under the constant care and treatment of a physician for almost a year and finally resulted in the amputation of the little finger on his left hand, was not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Albert J. Whitfield against Joseph Debrincat for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

For prior opinion, see 120 P.2d 40.

John J. Taheny, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, of San Francisco, Archibald D. McDougall, of Sacramento, and A. Dal Thomson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

At about 8:15 p. m. on the evening of July 8, 1933, plaintiff was driving a light Buick automobile in a southerly direction on the Skyline Boulevard in San Mateo County. The defendant Debrincat was driving a heavy Buick automobile northerly along said boulevard. At a point about two miles south of the boundary line between San Mateo County and San Francisco the two automobiles collided. To recover damages for injuries sustained in said collision the plaintiff commenced this action. The defendant answered and on the issues framed a trial was had. The verdict was in favor of the defendant. A motion for a new trial was granted. A second trial was had in May, 1935, and the verdict was in favor of the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial was granted and the order was affirmed on appeal. Whitfield v. Debrincat, 18 Cal.App.2d 730, 64 P.2d 960. A third trial was had in July, 1937, which resulted in favor of the defendant. A new trial was ordered and that order was affirmed on appeal. Whitfield v. De Brincat, 35 Cal.App.2d 476, 96 P.2d 156. A fourth trial was had in April, 1940, which resulted in a verdict of $14,000 in favor of the plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment entered upon said verdict.

At the point where the accident occurred the plaintiff was driving uphill and the defendant was driving downhill on a grade of about 4½ per cent. Neither car was traveling faster than 30 miles per hour. Both cars had their lights turned on and each car was seen by the driver of the other several hundred feet distant. The roadway was paved and had a white stripe painted along its middle line. The course of the road was curved but at about the point of the collision the arcs of the curves were broad.

Riding in the car with the plaintiff was a guest, Madeline Trobock. Riding with the defendant was Joe Grima. Excepting those individuals there was no other eyewitness. It was the contention of the plaintiff that the defendant was driving on his left-hand side of the road and of the white line. On the other hand it was the contention of the defendant that the plaintiff was driving on his left-hand side of the road and of the white line. These two conflicting theories were presented by the attorneys for the respective parties with meticulous care in their opening statements. The evidence introduced by the parties was conflicting.

[1, 2] The defendant claims the physical facts show he was not to blame. He calls attention to gouges cut in the roadway. An examination of the record discloses that one gouge was on plaintiff's side. Considered solely by itself it is opposed to the defendant's contention. The other gouge mentioned was about 70 feet south from the gouge first mentioned. When that gouge was made the evidence does not show. Neither does the evidence connect it with the collision. It is of little help. Another physical fact relied on by the defendant is the condition of the plaintiff's car after the accident. The defendant claims the body of the car shows it was struck twice and that such fact tends to support the defendant's theory that the plaintiff's car was on the wrong side of the highway and was struck twice as defendant drove forward. The photographs show such injuries to the plaintiff's car that the question as to whether it was hit once or twice is clearly debatable.

[3] The defendant asked the trial court to give an instruction as follows: "You are instructed that the California Vehicle Act, in effect at the time of the accident complained of, provided that upon all highways of sufficient width, other than one-way highways, the driver of a vehicle shall drive the same upon the right half of the highway and as close to the right-hand edge or curb of such highway as is practicable, except when overtaking and passing other vehicles, in which event the overtaking vehicle may be driven on the left side of the highway, if such left side is clearly visible and is free of oncoming traffic for a sufficient distance ahead to permit such overtaking and passing to be made completely without interfering with the safe operation of any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction; and provided that such overtaking vehicle shall return to the right-hand side of the highway before coming within one hundred feet of any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction, and in no event shall a driver drive to the left side of the center line when approaching the crest of a grade or upon a curve in the highway where the driver's view along the highway is obstructed, and if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff, Whitfield, failed to comply with said law, and that such failure proximately caused his injuries, then you are instructed that said plaintiff was guilty of negligence and cannot recover against the defendant." (Italics ours.) The trial court struck out the portion we have italicized and then gave the instruction. The defendant contends that the modification was error. We think it was not error. The instruction as given was not an erroneous statement of the law. § 122, California Vehicle Act, St.1931, p. 2124. But it was not addressed to the issue on trial. If plaintiff was driving on his left hand side of the middle of the highway and a collision occurred, the cause thereof was his violation of the provisions of section 124, St.1931, p. 2125, and not section 122 of the California Vehicle Act. The violation of the provisions of the latter section would be at most a remote cause and not the proximate cause of the accident.

[4] The trial court gave the following instructions:

"You are instructed that the plaintiff while in the operation of his automobile immediately prior to and at the time of the accident involved in this case, was not under the duty to exercise the utmost or highest degree of care. The only duty imposed upon plaintiff was that of exercising the care of an ordinarily prudent person acting under like circumstances, and if you should find from the evidence in this case that said plaintiff immediately prior to and at the time of the said accident, was conducting himself while in the operation of his automobile in the same manner that any other person of ordinary care and prudence, acting under like circumstances, would have conducted himself, then said plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

"Before the plaintiff can recover in this action it must first appear by a preponderance of evidence that the defendant was guilty of some act of negligence which contributed proximately to the accident.

"Contributory negligence is defined as such an act or omission on the part of an injured party amounting to a want of ordinary care, as, concurring or cooperating with the negligent act of a defendant, was the proximate cause of the injury complained of. Unless it is shown by, or may be inferred from the evidence offered by plaintiff, such negligence is a matter of defense, to be proved affirmatively by the defendant. It is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that he was free from contributory negligence. Contributory negligence cannot be presumed from the mere fact of injury." The defendant objects to each one. He asserts or implies each was given at the request of the plaintiff. The record does not show such was the fact. It shows (1) the instructions given; (2) instructions requested by defendant which the court modified and gave; and (3) instructions requested by defendant but which the trial court refused to give. As it is presumed the trial court did not err, we must assume in support of the judgment that each of said instructions was given at the request of the defendant. 2 Cal.Jur. 870; Sutter Butte C. Co. v. American R. & A. Co., 182 Cal. 549, 554, 189 P. 277.

[5] The trial court gave instructions which stated affirmatively the duties of drivers of motor vehicles. § 113(a), § 113(b) 1, § 122, and § 124(a), California Vehicle Act St.1931, pp. 2120, 2124, 2125. But defendant asked and the trial court refused to give an instruction that the defendant was not required to use the utmost care. The requested instruction might well have been given, but where, as here, the court states the rules of law affirmatively it is not reversible error to refuse to negative other possible elements not contained in the statutory rules.

[6] The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "One who is himself exercising ordinary care has a right to assume, until the contrary becomes apparent, that all other persons using a street or highway will obey the law and use ordinary care." It is not claimed the instruction was an erroneous statement of the law. Moreover it applied to both parties. But the defendant asked and the trial court refused an instruction worded as follows: "While it is the law that the plaintiff Albert Whitfield had a right to assume that all others, including the defendant, would exercise ordinary care and obey the rules of the road herein defined, he was not entitled to assume that others would exercise ordinary care if at the same time the plaintiff was acting in a negligent or careless manner or was himself violating any of said rules of the road." The defendant contends it should have been given and he cites and relies on Varner v. Skov, 20 Cal.App.2d 232, 239, 67 P.2d 123. As intimated by the court in the cited case the requested instruction might well have been given. But as stated by the same court it was not reversible error to decline to give it.

[7, 8] The plaintiff called Charles T. Rowley as a witness. He arrived at the scene of the accident a few minutes after the collision. His attention was directed to the "gouge" in the road near the white post. The attorney for the plaintiff then asked him, "Q. Where did you see the marks commence? Mr. Taheney: Just a moment. I object to his testifying where they commence. The court: Objection overruled. A. When I first got out of the car I walked across the road. Those marks was definite, you couldn't help but see them, and I presume, by that marker, they commenced about five feet south of the marker." We think the trial court did not err in overruling the objection. Nolan v. Nolan, 155 Cal. 476, 101 P. 520, 132 Am.St.Rep. 99, 17 Ann.Cas. 1056. On page 481 of 155 Cal., on page 522 of 101 P., 132 Am.St.Rep. 99, 17 Ann.Cas. 1056, the court quoted with approval as follows: "While it would not have been a legal error to have sustained the objection, I am of the opinion, under the circumstances of this case, that it was not a legal error to overrule it. The object of all examinations in judicial tribunals is to elicit truth, and there are many cases where the form of questions and the manner of examination must be left to the discretion of the trial judge. No injustice could have been done, because the answer would not be likely to prevail against facts which might be drawn out on cross-examination, or proved by other witnesses, inconsistent with it."

[9] The defendant assigns misconduct of the attorney for the plaintiff. The alleged acts involved the following facts. The trial commenced on the 25th day of April, 1940. As from the beginning the plaintiff introduced evidence regarding the nature of his injuries, his incapacity to follow his profession as a dentist, the continuation of that incapacity, and also evidence regarding surgical operations which took place in the meantime. It transpired that the plaintiff carried accident insurance and was compensated at the rate of $350 per month. On the third day of the trial, for reasons not disclosed in the record, a conference was held in the chambers of the judge of the trial court without the presence of the jury. In that conference plaintiff's attorney stated that the plaintiff waived "* * * the issues and proof relative to any loss of earnings from the period of the accident until the period he returned to work." No objection was made to the waiver. In the same conference it was stipulated "* * * that at the conclusion of the trial the court can give the jury instructions that the subject of the loss of earning capacity is not a matter for them to consider in estimating damages." Later the terms agreed on at the conference were carried out. At this time the defendant complains that he was deprived of cross-examination. However, we find no place in the record that he sought to cross-examine, that an objection was sustained, or that any other ruling was made by the trial court. In the light of the foregoing facts the contention comes too late.

[10] The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that if your verdict is in favor of the plaintiff, Dr. Whitfield, in fixing his damages you should award him such amount as will compensate him for the injuries sustained by him, if any, including such amount as will compensate him for pain and suffering certain to result in the future." The defendant objects to that instruction and to others. His objection is closely allied to the point last discussed. He says: "To tell the jury that they may in the face of a waiver for all claim of loss of earning capacity, award damages for the pain and suffering and for the injury is to ignore the waiver." A comparison of the waiver with the language of the instructions given discloses that there was no conflict. On the contrary the instructions given were more favorable to the defendant than was permissible under the terms of the waiver.

[11] The defendant asserts that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. He relies on the provisions of section 122, subdivision (b) of the California Vehicle Act. We have discussed that contention above. He also relies on the provisions of section 113, subdivision (b) 3. That provision limits speed as follows: "Fifteen miles an hour in traversing or going around curves or corners of a highway when the driver's view is obstructed within a distance of two hundred feet along such highway in the direction in which he is proceeding." There is evidence that there were curves in the highway. However, there were plats in evidence drawn to a scale by competent engineers. An examination of such plats discloses that at the place of the impact the jury might have found the plaintiff's view of the road was not obstructed nor was it obstructed two hundred feet north of said point. In other words, this court is unable to say that the jury erred in finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[12] The plaintiff called Carl Stern as a witness. He drew the witness' attention to a gouge in the road. Having asked the witness several questions, the following proceeding occurred: "Q. Let me ask you this—now, your Honor, I want to show the witness this transcript and the testimony. This is Mr. Taheney's direct examination. The Witness: I will say this, that the mark at that time (November, 1934) that I saw out there first, appeared to be what you just termed a fresh mark. As to the definite time when it was made, I don't think that is humanly possible to determine that." No objection was made, nor was there a motion to strike. The volunteer remark of the witness was not prejudicial error.

[13, 14] The defendant also contends that the verdict, $14,000, was grossly excessive. The special damages proved by the plaintiff amounted to $3,695.48, a little over $10,000 was awarded as general damages. Admitted facts are that for nearly a year the plaintiff was under the constant care and treatment of doctors; and that in the early part of 1935 a final operation was performed and the little finger on his left hand was amputated. There is nothing in the record showing passion or prejudice. To say that a verdict has been influenced by passion and prejudice is but another way of saying that the verdict exceeds any amount justified by the evidence. Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 141, 144, 57 P. 774. All facts considered we are unable to say the verdict in the instant case was excessive.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 661

BALKWILL v. CITY OF STOCKTON.

Civ. 6738.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 24, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 21, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑819(1, 6)

In pedestrian's action against city for injuries sustained when she stepped in a hole in concrete sidewalk in business district, evidence sustained implied findings that hole was dangerous and that city had either actual or constructive knowledge of its existence so as to warrant recovery by pedestrian. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1001(1)

Jury's findings, supported by substantial evidence, are binding on District Court of Appeal.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑768(3)

City is not liable for injuries resulting from slight defects in a sidewalk from which it may not reasonably be anticipated accidents may result. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑768(3)

Cracks and defects in sidewalks may be so slight and unsubstantial that a court should determine, as a matter of law, that accidents could not be reasonably anticipated therefrom, and that consequently city could not be held liable for injuries resulting therefrom. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑821(6, 15)

In pedestrian's action against city for injuries sustained when she stepped in a hole four or five inches long, two inches wide, and from one-half to two inches deep in concrete sidewalk in business district, whether such hole, which had previously caused similar accidents, although not serious, and which had been observed and deliberately avoided by other citizens, was dangerous, and whether city was chargeable with knowledge of its existence, were for the jury. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑790

Where city employed an inspector to periodically examine the sidewalks for holes or other defects which might be dangerous to pedestrians, city was chargeable with the knowledge of such inspector relative to the existence of holes in sidewalk in business district. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑821(6, 15)

Whether defect in sidewalk was dangerous and whether city was chargeable with knowledge of the existence thereof so as to render city liable to pedestrian for injuries sustained as a result thereof are properly questions for the jury, where the evidence is so conflicting that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn with respect thereto. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 5619, § 2.

8. New trial 🔑144

Where separate affidavits of eight jurors disclosed that, although a quotient sum was obtained as a basis for subsequent discussion as to amount of damages to be awarded, the verdict adopted and approved was not a quotient verdict but the result of subsequent consideration, court properly denied defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that verdict was adopted by means of chance in violation of statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

9. New trial 🔑6

Whether a new trial should be granted or denied rests within the sound discretion of trial judge, even though motion for new trial is based on affidavits.

10. Appeal and error 🔑977(5)

Trial judge's denial of a motion for new trial, even though motion is based on affidavits, will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of clear abuse of trial judge's discretion in such matters.

11. Trial 🔑315

A "quotient verdict" does not necessarily constitute a "chance verdict", prohibited by statute, provided the average sum which is thus procured is not adopted without subsequent consideration or balloting by the jurors. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Chance Verdict" and "Quotient Verdict".

12. Trial 🔑315

The purpose of statute which prohibits the rendering of a verdict which is the result of chance is to preserve to litigants the benefit of the independent judgment of jurors with respect to both the party who is to prevail and the amount of damages to be awarded. Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 2.

13. Appeal and error 🔑207, 688(2)

Prejudicial error could not be predicated upon statement made by defense counsel during argument to the jury by plaintiff's attorney that it was improper to go outside the evidence in the case and court's reply that attorney should confine himself to the evidence in the case, where challenged argument did not appear in the record, defendant failed to assign the remarks as prejudicial, and court was not asked to direct jury to disregard them.

14. Appeal and error 🔑1060(1)

In pedestrian's action against city for injuries sustained when she stepped in a hole in concrete sidewalk, the quotation by plaintiff's attorney in the course of argument to the jury from Supreme Court opinion in a similar case to the effect that drunk man is as much entitled to a good sidewalk as a sober one and much more in need of it, as illustrative of his contention that every pedestrian is entitled to assume that city will not knowingly permit its sidewalks to remain in a dangerous condition, was not prejudicial.

15. Appeal and error 🔑207

Appellant "waived" its objection to opposing counsel's argument to the jury by failing to assign such argument as prejudicial and by omitting to ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard it.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

16. Trial 🔑296(9)

Requested instruction relating to the actual or constructive notice of the defect essential to charge city with liability was not erroneous as assuming that there was a dangerous and defective condition of the sidewalk, where jury was told in other instruction that it possessed sole province of determining from the evidence whether the defective or dangerous condition existed and that if it found it did not the verdict should be for the city.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Lyda A. Balkwill against City of Stockton to recover damages for a fractured hip sustained when plaintiff stepped into a hole in the concrete sidewalk in the business district of defendant city. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Joseph C. Tope, City Atty., and H. C. Stanley, Asst. City Atty., both of Stockton, for appellant.

J. LeRoy Johnson, of Stockton, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Acting Presiding Justice.

The City of Stockton has appealed from a judgment for damages in the sum of $8,500, in favor of the plaintiff, to compensate her for a broken hip resulting from stepping into a hole in the concrete sidewalk in the business portion of the city, and falling thereon. It is not contended the judgment is excessive.

For the period of a year two holes were permitted to exist in the surface of the concrete sidewalk on California Street in the business portion of Stockton. They were only a few inches apart, and were approximately four or five inches long, two inches wide and from one-half to two inches in depth. Mrs. Anna McDade testified from observation in that regard that the hole in question was about six inches long, two and a half inches wide and "almost three inches deep." She said "It seemed to be full of pulverized cement." Arthur Shaw, the City Engineer of Stockton, testified that he measured the holes after the accident occurred and that the one in question was four and five-eighths inches long, two inches wide and one-half inch deep. The plaintiff was 59 years of age. She wore glasses. About noon on the 24th day of April, 1940, she was walking along California Street in the vicinity of the Penney Store, on her way to mail a package. As she approached the point where the holes existed, she was accosted by a lady friend from a position somewhat to her rear. She turned about to respond to the greeting, and inadvertently stepped into one of the holes. Catching the heel of her shoe, she fell violently to the pavement and fractured the neck of her right femur bone. The plaintiff's shoe was received in evidence. The leather was skinned from the heel at a point about half an inch from the bottom. The heels were neither extremely long nor slender. On the contrary, they were sensibly-shaped heels. After the accident the plaintiff was taken to a hospital where she remained for about a month. The broken bone failed to knit. A subsequent operation was necessarily performed to fasten the fractured ends in apposition. At the time of the trial, which was more than a year from the date of the accident, she was suffering severely from her injury. It is evident that she may be permanently disabled.

The hole, which caused the plaintiff to fall, had existed in the middle of the sidewalk in a business portion of the city for nearly a year before the time of the accident. Mrs. Ten Bruin, who lived in Stockton, testified that she was familiar with the street where the accident occurred and that she knew of the defective condition of the sidewalk. She said in that regard: "On one occasion I had seen a lady trip in that very same place. She fell on her knee and I helped pick her up." That was in the summer of 1939. She added, "I walked past there frequently and I always avoided that spot." Mrs. Violet Hunt, who also lives in Stockton, testified she had observed the holes in question, and in December, 1939, she stepped in one of them and turned her ankle. She also took pains to avoid the holes. There is some conflict regarding the exact size of the holes. For the purpose of this appeal we may assume the evidence of the exact measurements furnished by the city engineer should prevail over the estimates of the depth of the hole made by other witnesses, although, ordinarily, the determination of such facts is a matter for the jury where there is a conflict of evidence. Regardless of the size and depth of the holes, the question still remains as to whether the city authorities knew of the existence of the holes and that they constituted a hazard to the safety of pedestrians.

For the purpose of showing that the defendant had knowledge of the existence of the alleged dangerous and defective condition of the sidewalk the city engineer was called as a witness and testified that the city regularly employed an inspector whose duties it was to periodically examine the sidewalks for holes, cracks or defects which might be dangerous to pedestrians, and that the inspector actually examined the sidewalk on California Street, where the accident occurred, on the 12th day of March prior to the date of the accident, but reported no holes or defects. Mr. Cowell, the city sidewalk inspector, testified that he examined the sidewalks in the vicinity of the accident on March 12, 1940, but observed no holes or defects "which he considered dangerous." The evidence shows that the particular holes in question had existed for a year or more previous to the accident. They were repaired immediately thereafter.

Regarding the legal liability of the city for the damages resulting from the accident, two questions are primarily involved, namely: Was the hole in the sidewalk, into which the plaintiff stepped, a dangerous defect, and did the city have either actual or constructive knowledge thereof? Both of these questions were determined by the jury adversely to the defendant.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion this court may not determine on appeal, as a matter of law, that the hole in the sidewalk which caused the injuries sustained by the plaintiff was not so dangerous as to create a liability on the part of the city for negligently permitting it to remain without repair. In other words, under the circumstances of this case, the implied findings of the jury that the hole was dangerous and that the city had knowledge of its existence are binding upon this court for the reason that they are supported by substantial evidence.

[3-6] It is true that a city will not be held liable for injuries resulting from slight defects in a sidewalk from which it may not reasonably be anticipated accidents may result. Whiting v. National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990; 7 McQuillin's Municipal Corporations (2d ed.), p. 312, sec. 3033, note 76. Holes, cracks and defects in sidewalks may be so slight and unsubstantial that a court should determine, as a matter of law, that accidents could not be reasonably anticipated therefrom. In the present case, the hole was large enough to catch the heel of a pedestrian so as to cause a serious accident. It proved to be actually dangerous in this case. It had previously caused other similar accidents, although they were without serious results. The holes existed in the surface of a smooth, sloping, concrete walk in the business portion of the city where many persons were accustomed to travel. They were clearly observable. Others had seen them and knew of their presence. They were apparently dangerous enough so that other citizens deliberately avoided them. Under such circumstances we may not say, as a matter of law, that the defects were not dangerous. Nor may we hold that the city was not chargeable with knowledge of their existence. The city sidewalk inspector did not say that he failed to observe the holes in question. All that he testified to was that he did not see any holes in that walk "which he considered dangerous." There is ample evidence from which we must assume the inspector saw the holes and knew they existed, or that, in the exercise of ordinary care, he should have seen them. The knowledge of the inspector, with relation to the existence of the holes, necessarily charges the city with that knowledge, since he was employed by the city for the express purpose of examining the walks for that very purpose. It was his duty to critically examine the walks for cracks, holes and other defects. We must assume the jury was warranted in finding that he actually saw and knew of the existence of the holes.

The liability of the city is based on the provisions of paragraph 2 of Statutes of 1923, page 675 (2 Deering's Gen. Laws of Calif. of 1937, p. 2630, Act 5619), which reads in part: "Counties, municipalities and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property in all cases where the governing or managing board * * * or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition * * * and failed or neglected, for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice, to remedy such condition * * *."

[7] In spite of the fact that defects in sidewalks may be so slight or trivial as to create mere questions of law regarding their dangerous nature, it is, nevertheless, true that when the evidence is so conflicting that different conclusions may reasonably be drawn regarding the dangerous character of the defects, or concerning the question of notice thereof on the part of the officers of the city, the determination of such questions should be left to the jury and their conclusions should not then be disturbed on appeal. Ackers v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.App.2d 50, 104 P.2d 399; 25 Am.Jur. 876, sec. 589; 119 A.L.R. 168, note; 9 Cal. Jur., Ten-Year Supp., 641, sec. 194. In the authority last cited it is said in that regard: "Whether or not a county, municipal corporation or school district is liable for an injury caused by defective or dangerous condition of streets, buildings or other public property should ordinarily be determined by the jury from the facts of the particular case. Thus the jury should ordinarily determine, as a question of fact, whether a dangerous or defective condition existed, whether the plaintiff's injury proximately resulted from such condition, whether the proper authorities had notice or knowledge of the condition, and whether a city through the persons 'having authority to remedy such condition,' failed or neglected for a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge of the defective condition, to remedy the same. However, a nonsuit may be granted if the evidence wholly fails to show liability upon the part of the defendant."

Under the circumstances of this case, we may not say, as a matter of law, that the hole which is here involved was not dangerous, nor that the city authorities should not have reasonably anticipated that it was hazardous. Certainly we may not hold that reasonable persons could not differ in their conclusions regarding those questions. If those are proper questions for the jury, under the circumstances of this case, this court has no right to substitute its judgment for that of the jury. The hole in question was actually dangerous, for the plaintiff broke her hip on that account. It caused two other ladies to fall. The city promptly repaired the hole after plaintiff was injured. Eleven jurors and the trial judge believed that liability on the part of the city was adequately shown. A motion for new trial was denied. We must assume the city had actual knowledge of the existence of the holes at least a month and a half before the accident occurred, which was ample time within which to have repaired the defects. The inspector actually examined that very walk, in search of defects, on March 12, 1940. The accident did not occur until April 24th. The holes were plainly visible. We must assume he saw them. The plaintiff is not bound by his opinion that the holes were not dangerous enough to require repairing. We therefore conclude there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict and judgment against the city.

The facts of no two cases of this character are exactly alike. Each must be determined on its own particular facts. Scores of cases from numerous jurisdictions, based on somewhat similar facts, are reported, as indicated by the elaborate annotation of that subject which appears in 119 A.L.R. at page 161. The same questions have frequently arisen in this state. In support of its contention that nonliability of the city, under the circumstances of this case, should be determined as a matter of law, the appellant relies chiefly on three cases: Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725; Whiting v. National City, supra, and Balmer v. City of Beverly Hills, 22 Cal.App.2d 529, 71 P.2d 854. Each of these cases appears to have been reversed on the theory that the cities had no actual notice of the defects, and that constructive notice thereof would not be presumed from the mere fact that the defects had existed for short periods of time prior to the accidents. In other words, these cases were apparently reversed for lack of evidence constituting constructive notice of the defective sidewalks. In the Nicholson case [5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 727] it is said in that regard: "The rule as stated in the cases relied upon by the respondent is that the existence of a conspicuous defect or dangerous condition of a street or sidewalk for a considerable length of time will create a presumption of constructive notice. * * * There is no evidence of any prior event which would put the city on inquiry as to the existence of a dangerous break at this point, and aside from the testimony that it had existed for several months, that it was about an inch and one-half high, and that the plaintiff thought it was caused by the root of a tree growing in the parking beside it, there is no testimony with regard to the defect itself. This, we think, is insufficient to sustain a finding that, had the city fulfilled its duty of reasonable inspection and supervision of the streets of the city as a whole, it would have had actual knowledge of the break."

In the present case actual inspection of the very sidewalk where the hole existed was made about six weeks before the accident occurred.

The Whiting case was clearly reversed on the same ground that constructive notice of the presence of a defect in the sidewalk will not be presumed from its mere continued existence for a brief period of time. The court [9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 991] concludes its opinion in that case by this statement: "In view of the holding in the Nicholson case and the pertinent authorities elsewhere, we conclude that the constructive notice found by the court is insufficient to support the judgment."

The Balmer case was likewise reversed for lack of evidence of constructive notice of the existence of the dangerous defects. That case was specifically determined on the authority of the Whiting case. No previous inspection of the walks were made prior to the accidents in any of these reversed cases. At least, the weight of recent California authorities in this character of action favors the support of the judgment in this case.

Contrary to the preceding cases, judgments for damages recovered under somewhat similar circumstances were supported in four recent California cases. In three of them hearings by the Supreme Court were denied. Ackers v. City of Los, Angeles, supra; Barrett v. City of Sacramento, 128 Cal.App. 708, 18 P.2d 356; Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal.App. 547, 5 P.2d 643; Allen v. City of Los Angeles, 43 Cal.App.2d 65, 110 P.2d 75.

We therefore conclude that the questions of the existence of dangerous defects in the sidewalk, the knowledge thereof on the part of the city authorities, and the consequent liability of the city for negligence in failing to repair the hole in question until after the accident occurred were properly submitted to the jury, and that its verdict and the judgment in this case are adequately supported by the evidence.

The defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict was adopted by means of chance, contrary to subdivision 2 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was properly denied. The motion was heard on affidavits of the jurors. There is a conflict of evidence regarding the method by means of which the verdict was reached. The verdict awarded plaintiff damages in the sum of $8,500, which sum was confirmed by the jury in open court. One juror averred that the amount which was inserted in the verdict was the result of dividing by twelve the aggregate sum of the several amounts placed on separate ballots by the individual jurors, without subsequent consideration or balloting thereon, and with the previous agreement that sum should become their verdict. Two other jurors averred that the quotient thus obtained "was to be the verdict of the jury," but they failed to state that it was adopted without further consideration. On the contrary, eight jurors aver, in separate affidavits, that it was not a quotient verdict. They assert that a quotient sum of $6,500 or $7,000 was obtained as a mere basis for subsequent discussion, and that after subsequent consideration and balloting ten jurors agreed to adopt the different figure of $8,500 as their award of damages, which sum was thereupon inserted in the verdict, returned to the court and approved by the jury in open court.

[8-10] The overwhelming weight of evidence therefore supports the conclusion that the verdict was not what is commonly termed a quotient verdict, nor was it obtained by resorting to chance. The court therefore properly denied the motion for new trial on that ground. The trial judge has a sound discretion in granting or denying a motion for new trial even though the motion is based on affidavits. In the absence of clear abuse of such discretion the denial of a motion for new trial, which is based on affidavits, will not be disturbed on appeal. Spadoni v. Maggenti, 121 Cal. App. 147, 156, 8 P.2d 874.

[11] A quotient verdict does not necessarily constitute a chance verdict, provided the average sum which is thus procured is not adopted without subsequent consideration or balloting by the jurors. If, after a quotient figure is obtained, the jurors discuss and ballot upon the adoption or rejection of that sum, it is conclusive evidence they were not bound by a previous agreement to accept it without further consideration. Certainly an award of damages may not be said to constitute a quotient verdict, when the average sum thus obtained was subsequently actually changed to another and different amount, as the majority of the jurors averred was done in the present case. Under the circumstances related by most of the jurors in this case, the verdict which was returned was neither a quotient verdict nor a chance verdict. Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 46 Cal. App. 148, 153, 189 P. 462; Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co., 1 Cal.2d 400, 35 P.2d 513; 52 A.L.R. 44, note; 23 Cal. Law Rev. 218; 8 So.Cal. Law Rev. 163. In the Ham case, supra [46 Cal.App. 148, 189 P. 464], the amount of a quotient verdict was held to be void, on the theory that it was the result of chance, because it was adopted "without further discussion, balloting or assent" of the jurors. But it was therein significantly said that: "It is true * * * that there is no impropriety in the jurors making an average of their individual estimates as to the amount of damages for the purpose of arriving at a basis for discussion and consideration, nor in adopting such average if it is subsequently agreed to by the jurors; but to agree beforehand to adopt such average and abide by the agreement, without further discussion or deliberation, is fatal to the verdict." (Italics added.)

[12] The purpose of the statute which prohibits the rendering of a verdict which is the result of chance is to preserve the benefit to litigants of the independent judgment of jurors with respect to either the party who is to prevail or the amount of damages to be awarded. Chance verdicts are destructive of the very foundation upon which the right of trial by jury is based. But the amount which will adequately compensate one for personal injuries is not usually susceptible of mathematical calculation. Reasonable men will differ greatly in that regard. The honest and fair judgment of jurors is all that may be expected in such litigation. There is no objection to the use of a quotient figure as a basis for discussion of the jurors, if it is subsequently fairly and freely considered or balloted upon. Certainly it is not objectionable or fatal if a different figure is subsequently adopted as the verdict of the jury. The motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict was the result of chance was properly denied.

[13] We find no prejudicial misconduct of counsel for the plaintiff in his argument to the jury. The transcript discloses the fact that, in the course of his argument, the attorney was interrupted by a statement from defendant's attorney that, "Your Honor, I don't think it is proper to go outside the evidence in this case." The court replied, "No, you confine yourself to the evidence in this case." The challenged argument does not appear in the record. We have no way of ascertaining what counsel said to the jury nor can we determine whether the statements were within the evidence. The defendant failed to assign the remarks as prejudicial, and the court was not asked to direct the jury to disregard them.

[14] It was not prejudicial for plaintiff's attorney, in the course of his argument, to quote the language of the Supreme Court in a similar suit for damages growing out of injuries sustained by falling on a defective sidewalk as follows: "A drunk man is as much entitled to a good sidewalk as a sober one, and much more in need of it." He was merely illustrating his contention that every pedestrian was entitled to assume that a city would not knowingly permit its sidewalks to remain in a dangerous condition. It does not appear this statement was objected to. It was not assigned as prejudicial. It may have been an extreme illustration, but it does not appear to have been beyond the realm of legitimate argument. Nor do we see how it could have been prejudicial.

[15] Moreover, the appellant waived its objection to the challenged language by failing to assign it as prejudicial, and by omitting to ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. Kershaw v. Tilbury, 214 Cal. 679, 690, 8 P.2d 109; Rogers v. Foppiano, 23 Cal.App.2d 87, 95, 72 P.2d 239; People v. Ward, 40 Cal.App.2d 143, 150, 104 P.2d 537.

[16] The appellant contends the court committed reversible error in giving to the jury an instruction at the request of the plaintiff in which it was assumed there was a "dangerous and defective" condition of the sidewalk. In view of the entire charge to the jury, we are of the opinion the challenged instruction could not have misled the jury in that regard. This instruction reads in part:

"It is for you to determine from the evidence whether or not the city had notice of the dangerous and defective condition alleged in the complaint, and if it did, whether it failed to remedy the condition within a reasonable time.

"Notice of such a condition may be of two kinds, namely, actual notice or constructive notice. Actual notice is where the dangerous or defective condition, if any, is known to the City Counsel or to the persons or officers of the city whose duty it is to correct such conditions. Constructive notice is notice received by virtue of facts and circumstances sufficient to put the city officials, as reasonable persons, on notice of the actual condition of the sidewalk which is alleged to be defective and dangerous.

"If the evidence satisfies you that the city had constructive notice of the alleged defective and dangerous condition, the requirements of the law are met the same as if the proof satisfies you that the city had actual notice thereof."

It is apparent that the foregoing instruction purports to deal only with the subject of actual or constructive notice of the alleged defect so as to charge the city with knowledge thereof. Under the proper subject, the jury was elsewhere clearly instructed that it possessed the sole province of determining from the evidence whether a defective or dangerous condition of the sidewalk did exist, and that if they were not satisfied it did exist, it then became their duty to return a verdict in favor of the city. For instance, the third instruction following the previously-challenged one informs the jury that the city is not liable for any and all defective sidewalks even though injury may be sustained thereby. It then declares that "If you find from the evidence that the sidewalk at the place of the alleged injury was in a reasonably safe condition for use by pedestrians, then you will find for the defendant." Moreover, the jury was also clearly informed that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove the affirmative of every issue raised by the complaint. The chief issue at the trial was whether there existed in the sidewalk where the plaintiff was injured a defective and dangerous condition. The very challenged instruction clearly indicates that the court did not charge the jury, as a fact, that a dangerous and defective condition of the sidewalk actually existed. The second paragraph, in reciting the character of notice that would charge the city with knowledge said that "actual notice is where the dangerous or defective condition, if any," is known to the city. Twice in succeeding paragraphs of the same instruction the "dangerous and defective condition" is referred to as that "which is alleged" in the complaint.

We are of the opinion the challenged instruction is neither misleading nor erroneous. We are perfectly satisfied the jury could not have been mislead thereby. The giving of that instruction is certainly not reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEEL and TUTTLE, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 585

FIELD v. MOLLISON.

Civ. 6632.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 19, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Gifts ⚿4

The essentials of a valid "gift inter vivos" are competency of donor to contract, voluntary intent of donor to make gift, actual or symbolical delivery amounting to transfer of title, actual or imputed acceptance, complete divestment of all control by donor, and lack of consideration in return for gift.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gift Inter Vivos".

2. Gifts ⚿29

Transfer on books of corporation is not required to effect a valid gift of stock of corporation.

3. Gifts ⚿49(1)

While testimony of donee of gift should be viewed with caution and even with suspicion to prevent fraud, there is no presumption that such testimony is false.

4. Appeal and error ⚿994(3), 1012(1)

To trial court is committed determination of credibility of witnesses and weight of evidence, and such court must be assumed to have been guided by the appropriate rules of law in determining questions of fact.

5. Appeal and error ⚿931(1)

The District Court of Appeal must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of findings and must consider such evidence in the most favorable aspect toward the prevailing party, and if there be substantial evidence to support conclusion of trial court, such conclusion is final.

6. Gifts ⚿49(6)

Evidence was sufficient to show that grandmother, handing grandson an envelope containing two stock certificates and separate assignments of each to grandson, made a valid "gift" of stock to grandson.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Gift".

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Marie C. Field, as administratrix of the estate of Marie C. Dorfler, deceased, against Walter D. Mollison, and others, to recover, on behalf of the estate, the possession of stock certificates and to quiet title thereto. From a judgment in favor of the named defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

T. C. Van Ness, Jr., and Abraham Setzer, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Raymond Haizlip and Orrick, Dahlquist, Neff & Herrington, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

HELD, Justice pro tem.

On April 21, 1925, certificate No. A754, for 40 shares of the capital stock of Fireman's Fund Insurance Company was issued to Marie C. Dorfler, and on April 17, 1929, certificate No. B15333, for 20 shares, was also issued to her. The ownership of these certificates, and the stock thereby represented, with accrued dividends, is here involved. Marie C. Dorfler died on January 2, 1935, and after due proceedings had, appellant was appointed administratrix of her estate, and has brought this action to recover, on behalf of the estate, the possession of the certificates, and to quiet title thereto. The defendants Gertrude Mollison and Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, by their respective answers, disclaimed any interest in the property involved herein. Defendant Walter D. Mollison filed an answer, denying title in the estate, and claimed ownership by virtue of an alleged gift to him by Marie C. Dorfler. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant Walter D. Mollison, and plaintiff administratrix appeals.

It is the claim of appellant that the findings are entirely unsupported by credible or substantial evidence. This renders it necessary to consider the evidence in detail. Marie C. Dorfler had, among other children, two daughters, Marie C. Field and Gertrude Mollison. Each of these had one child. Gertrude Schwab is the daughter of Marie C. Field, and respondent Walter D. Mollison is the son of Gertrude Mollison. Mrs. Dorfler, who, at the time of her death, was 78 years of age, made her home, sometimes with one of her daughters, and sometimes with the other, and, on occasions, also visited with her granddaughter, Mrs. Schwab, who resided in Los Angeles. The respondent was born on January 8, 1911, and lived with his parents in San Francisco. The home of Mrs. Field was in Oakland.

Respondent, Walter D. Mollison, testified that in the latter part of 1932, at his parent's home, and while his grandmother temporarily resided there, she handed him an envelope and told him to look inside and see what he would find; that he accepted the envelope, and examined its contents, and found it to contain the two stock certificates here involved, and an assignment of each, separate from the certificates; that when he expressed his gratitude and appreciation, his grandmother told him she wanted him to have the stock, and thought it best to give it to him then, but admonished him to mention the circumstances to no one; that he placed the envelope, with its contents, in a cash-box in a closet in his home, where it remained until the month of January, 1933, at which time he rented a safe deposit box at the home office of the Bank of America in San Francisco, and placed the documents therein, in a sealed envelope; that they remained there until he removed them on the day following the death of Mrs. Dorfler; that at the time of the gift, his grandmother was mentally sound; that he told neither of his parents, nor anyone else, of the gift, nor was the matter ever subsequently discussed between his grandmother and himself. No transfer of ownership of the stock was made on the corporate books, and all dividends were mailed to, and received by Mrs. Dorfler, until shortly prior to her death.

On the trial, the stock certificates and separate assignments were produced from the possession of respondent, and offered and admitted in evidence. Each certificate was the original issued to Marie C. Dorfler and bore on the reverse side a blank form of assignment, which purported to be signed by Marie C. Dorfler in the presence of Gertrude Schwab, and the signature guaranteed by an official of the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association. The assignments separate from the certificates, each purported to be signed, witnessed and guaranteed in the same manner as the endorsements on the certificate. Instead, however, of being in blank, there appeared in each separate assignment, the name of Walter D. Mollison as assignee, and the number of the certificate assigned. These assignments were dated as of September 17, 1931.

Respondent produced as witnesses his mother, Gertrude Mollison, and his father, Walter P. Mollison. The former testified to a conversation with her mother during the month of January, 1934. At that time, Mrs. Dorfler's mailing address was the home of Mrs. Field, in Oakland, and she expressed concern that her dividend checks, which were mailed to her at that address, might go astray during Mrs. Field's absence from her home. The witness sought to reassure her mother, whereupon the latter said, "Well, I have not got the stock, anyway; it does not belong to me." The witness asked, "What did you do with it, did you sell it?" Her mother laughed and replied, "No; some day you will know. You will find out."

Respondent's father, Walter P. Mollison, related an incident which occurred in June, 1934, while the witness was driving Mrs. Dorfler from San Francisco to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Field, in Oakland. During the trip, Mrs. Dorfler burst into tears, and when asked the cause, said she dreaded going across the bay, presumably to the Field home, because, "All I hear over there is 'stocks, stocks, stocks', and I get sick of it; what a surprise they will get when they find out."

The foregoing, we think, is a fair résumé of the case made out by respondent. In rebuttal, Mrs. Schwab testified that while en route to the undertaking establishment to arrange for the funeral of Mrs. Dorfler, respondent stated to the witness and others then present in an automobile, that his grandmother had given him an envelope for safekeeping, with the request that he open it when she passed away, and that he would be surprised, and that he did so open it, and that he was surprised. In this, the witness was corroborated by her mother, Mrs. Field. Respondent's version of this incident was that on the journey referred to, Mrs. Field stated to others, in his presence, that Mrs. Dorfler had given respondent the stock, and that it was nice that he had it. He denied making any statement indicating his ignorance of the contents of the envelope.

Mrs. Field also testified that on the evening following the death of Mrs. Dorfler, she and Mrs. Mollison made a search for the stock certificates among the effects of Mrs. Dorfler, in the Field home in Oakland, but without success; that Mrs. Mollison then left for her home in San Francisco; that before she left, she arranged for a meeting with her sister at the office of the American Trust Company, in San Francisco, on the following day, for the purpose of withdrawing, and dividing between them.

a bank deposit of approximately $12,000, which stood in the name of Mrs. Dorfler and Mrs. Mollison as joint tenants; that it was understood between them that when Mrs. Mollison reached her home she should make search among Mrs. Dorfler's effects there, for the stock certificates, and report the result of her search to her sister by telephone. It is conceded that a conversation by telephone was had between Mrs. Mollison and her sister, shortly after the former arrived at her home, but the parties differ as to the purport thereof. Mrs. Field testified that her sister said, "The stock is found." Mrs. Mollison denied this. She testified that on her return to her home she referred, in the presence of respondent, to the search for the stock certificates which had been made among the effects of Mrs. Dorfler in the Field home; that respondent then, for the first time, told her that his grandmother had given him the envelope. However, he still did not reveal to her the nature of its contents, but requested that she tell her sister that he had an envelope which he desired to exhibit to his mother and aunt at the meeting which they had arranged for the following day. Thereupon, Mrs. Mollison telephoned to her sister. She denied, however, that she said anything about the certificates having been found, and claims that she did not herself then know that the certificates were in the envelope referred to by her son.

There is also some difference between the witnesses as to the conversation had on the following day, when the parties met at the office of the American Trust Company. It is the testimony of Mrs. Field that on that occasion respondent produced an envelope which he showed to her, and that he then said, "Well, grandma left me the stock. She gave me the envelope to take care of, and she said whenever she passed away, and I opened it, I would be surprised, and I was surprised." Respondent, on the other hand, testified that when he met his mother and aunt at the Trust Company's office, he produced the envelope which he had that morning withdrawn from his safe deposit box, and handed it to Mrs. Field, unopened; that he said to her and his mother, "That this was an envelope that I wanted them to see, or I wanted them to see it together"; that Mrs. Field "then opened the envelope and looked at its contents, and congratulated me on having the stock; said it was nice that I had it, that 'Gram' had always thought a lot of me, and so it was nice that I had it."

In addition to the foregoing statements attributed to respondent by Mrs. Field and Mrs. Schwab, these two, and the latter's husband, testified to several occasions on which Mrs. Dorfler had expressed to them a desire, and an intention, to divide the shares of stock equally between Mrs. Field and Mrs. Mollison. Mrs. Schwab also detailed the circumstances under which the stock certificates and separate assignments were executed. Her testimony was that in the month of March, 1931, at her mother's home in Oakland, Mrs. Dorfler spoke concerning the disposition she desired to make of the stock in the event of her death, and that upon that occasion she stated that "she wanted to fix it so that in case anything happened to her, she wanted it equally divided between my mother, Mrs. Field, and Mrs. Mollison." The witness advised her that to accomplish this, it would be necessary that she sign the assignments on the reverse of each certificate, and also the assignments separate from the certificates, and to have the signatures guaranteed by an officer of a banking institution. Mrs. Dorfler thereupon signed her name, in the presence of the witness, to each of the four assignments, and requested Mrs. Schwab to arrange for the necessary guarantee of the signatures. Thereafter, Mrs. Schwab presented the certificates and assignments to an official of the Bank of America in Oakland, and was told by him that it would be necessary that she add her signature as a witness to that of Mrs. Dorfler; that she thereupon signed her name as a witness on each instrument, and the guarantees were thereupon placed on each instrument by the bank official. Mrs. Schwab testified, also, that at the time of the execution of the assignments, and the return of the documents to Mrs. Dorfler, all the assignments were in blank, and that neither the date, nor the name of respondent, appeared on any.

Appellant stresses greatly the fact that on the trial in the court below, respondent fixed the time of the gift as in the latter part of 1932, while in the answer, verified by him, it is alleged to have been made on September 17, 1931, and in a deposition of respondent, taken before trial, he fixed the time as the middle of 1932. These discrepancies as to date, and the inability of respondent to recall certain of the details surrounding the gift, such as the color of the envelope in which the documents were contained at the time he received them from his grandmother, the room in which, and the hour of the day when the transaction took place, appellant contends, discredits the testimony of respondent to such an extent that it should have been wholly disregarded and rejected by the trial court.

[1, 2] The essentials of a valid gift inter vivos are set forth in 13 Cal.Jur., at page 32, as follows: (1) Competency of the donor to contract; (2) a voluntary intent on the part of the donor to make the gift; (3) delivery, either actual or symbolical, amounting to transfer of title; (4) acceptance, actual or imputed; (5) complete divestment of all control by the donor; and (6) a lack of consideration in return for the gift. Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 259 P. 947; Lynch v. Lynch, 124 Cal. App. 454, 12 P.2d 741. Respondent has established all these, and we cannot say that his testimony is of such a character that it should have been rejected by the trial court. Transfer on the books of the corporation is not required to effect a valid gift. Delannoy v. Quetu, 73 Cal.App. 627, 239 P. 71.

[3-5] While the testimony of the donee of a gift should be viewed with caution, and even with suspicion, to prevent fraud, there is no presumption that such testimony is false. To the trial court is committed the determination of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence, and that tribunal must be assumed to have been guided by the appropriate rules of law in determining questions of fact. Eckstrom v. Brooks, 115 Cal.App. 727, 2 P.2d 207; Burrows v. Burrows, 18 Cal.App.2d 275, 63 P.2d 1135. This court must accept as true all evidence tending to establish the correctness of the findings, and must consider such evidence in the most favorable aspect toward the prevailing party. 2 Cal.Jur. 880. And, if there be substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court, that conclusion is final. 13 Cal.Jur. 47; Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 P. 432; In re Estate of Filippi, 9 Cal.App. 2d 407, 49 P.2d 892; Brown v. Canadian, etc., Co., 209 Cal. 596, 289 P. 613; Clark v. Abrams, 49 Cal.App.2d 497, 121 P.2d 750; Kennington v. Neff, 49 Cal.App.2d 692, 122 P.2d 58. In Bright v. Zabler, 43 Cal.App. 2d 706, 111 P.2d 387, 389, the court said: "If there is competent evidence to support the findings of fact in question, disregarding all conflicts and considering the evidence most favorable to plaintiff, then they must be sustained."

[6] Here, there is competent evidence to support the finding that Marie C. Dorfler made a valid gift of the stock in question to the respondent, and that finding we are not at liberty to disturb. It follows, therefore, that the judgment appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 520

KELLEY et al. v. RUSSELL.

Civ. 3012.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Mines and minerals 🔑53

Where lessor made certain objections to notice of exercise of election by lessee to purchase land on which oil had been discovered, he "waived" all other objections.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

2. Mines and minerals 🔑53

Where there were two leases and options giving lessees right to purchase lands on which oil was discovered, and the interested parties were the same, they could join in one notice of election to exercise option, particularly where lessor was in no way prejudiced thereby.

3. Mines and minerals 🔑53

Where lessees having the option to purchase land on which oil had been discovered notified lessor of their election, the fact that the deeds which accompanied the original notice were deficient in form was immaterial, since it was the duty of the lessor to furnish deeds, and to name and describe any tract or parcel he was entitled to have excluded.

4. Specific performance 🔑121(11)

In action by lessees having the option to purchase land on which oil had been discovered, proof that notice of election to exercise option was given lessor, and that an offer was made to comply with all the terms of the leases and options, and that lessees offered to pay the full amount due and deposited it with abstract company, and later paid the money into court for whoever was entitled thereto, and offered to except any land to which lessor was entitled, sufficiently showed an offer and tender and sufficient attempt to exercise options, and was a sufficient performance of conditions thereof. Civ. Code, §§ 1496, 1511; Code Civ.Proc. § 2076.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑53

The mere fact that lessor had the right under the options to claim and exclude from the 40-acre tracts which lessees were obliged to offer to purchase, any 10-acre parcels upon which a water supply had existed at the time lease containing option was made, did not make option contract so uncertain as to be unenforceable, since if lessor desired to exercise the right given him to exclude any 10-acre tract, the exclusion depended upon facts which were readily determinable, and the entire matter was one well within the powers of a court of equity.

6. Mines and minerals 🔑53

Where leases gave lessees options to purchase any 40-acre tract of land according to legal subdivision thereof on which oil should be discovered, and provided that lessor should not be required to sell any 10-acre parcel on which water supply was located, it must be assumed that use of different language in describing the 40-acre tracts and the 10-acre parcels was intentional, and such different descriptions should be considered and interpreted in connection with the other provisions of the leases and options.

7. Specific performance 🔑126(2)

Where leases gave lessees options to purchase any 40-acre tract of land according to "legal subdivision" thereof on which oil should be discovered, and provided that lessor should not be required to sell any 10-acre parcel on which water supply was located, but failed to specifically provide for the shape or form of the 10-acre parcels, trial court properly required the lessor in suit for specific performance to select any such 10-acre parcels in such manner as to best protect his water rights while at the same time interfering as little as possible with the lessees' oil rights there being no such thing as a "legal subdivision" of less than 40 acres.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Legal Subdivision".

8. Specific performance 🔑121(3)

Where leases gave lessees options to purchase any 40-acre tract of land according to legal subdivision thereof on which oil should be discovered and provided that lessor should not be required to sell any 10-acre parcel on which water supply was located at time of making lease, in suit for specific performance, evidence sustained finding that creek flowing on certain 10-acre parcels at time of trial did not so flow at time leases were executed.

9. Specific performance 🔑130

In suit for specific performance of contracts to convey land under which oil should be discovered, where contracts providing that lessor should not be required to sell any 10-acre parcel on which water supply was located at time of lease, and it appeared that on one 10-acre parcel a well then existed, but had since been abandoned, and lessor did not wish to select the 10-acre parcel in accordance with the exact rights given him by the contracts and had offered to do equity, court was justified in giving the lessor an easement to use all the waters of a certain creek instead of allowing lessor to retain the legal title to particular 10-acre parcel.

10. Evidence 🔑318(1)
Trial 🔑56

A letter written by brother of party was properly excluded as "hearsay" where brother had no interest in the land in controversy, and no error appeared in excluding the letter, where it was also cumulative.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Hearsay".

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Robert B. Lambert, Judge.

Action by Lillian Kelley and others against Hubbard S. Russell for specific performance of contracts to convey land. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Cobb, Campbell & Kelley and Edward Flam, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Siemon and Bennett Siemon, both of Bakersfield, Sullivan, Roche & Johnson and J. H. Farraher, all of San Francisco, and U. T. Clotfelter, L. W. Butterfield, and Louis L. Swarthe, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiffs in an action for specific performance.

The respondent Lillian Kelley was formerly the owner in fee of all of the land here involved. On July 30, 1919, she conveyed about 900 acres of land in Kern County to one Anderson and, as a part of the same transaction, took back a lease on the same property giving her the right to explore for, develop and produce oil and other minerals therefrom during the term expiring July 30, 1939, without royalty or other payment to the lessor. The lease also provided that Miss Kelley should have the right, during said term, to purchase at $20 per acre the fee title "to any forty (40) acre tract of said land (according to the legal subdivision thereof) upon which" oil or other minerals had been discovered in paying quantities, together with not more than three additional forty-acre legal subdivisions cornering or adjoining the one on which discovery was made, with the further provision that the minimum number of acres which might be purchased when oil was discovered was forty acres unless the legal subdivision upon which oil was discovered was a fractional forty acres. It was also provided that in the event any land was purchased under this provision the lessor should have the right to repurchase the same at $20 an acre at any time thereafter when the wells or mines were abandoned. The lease further provided that the lessor should have the right to any water developed by the lessee on the land and not required in her operations. The lease also contained this provision: "It is expressly understood, any provisions of this lease, notwithstanding, that in no event shall the lessee have the right to purchase, or shall lessor be required to sell any ten-acre parcel of said premises upon which is located any water well, spring or other water supply now used for watering cattle, irrigation or domestic purpose."

In 1923, the respondent Kelley also conveyed about 200 acres of adjoining land to the appellant Russell and one Babbitt and took back a lease thereon, the terms of which were practically identical with the terms of the lease above described, and this lease and option was also to expire on July 30, 1939. The appellant Russell acquired title to and became the owner of both of the tracts above mentioned, subject to these leases, and about the same time he purchased other land in the vicinity, acquiring in all about 9,000 acres. He was in the cattle business and purchased the land for grazing purposes.

The respondent Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company acquired by assignment from Miss Kelley her interest in a portion of the lands thus leased to her, and respondent Kelley still retains her interest in the remainder of the lands under the leases subject to certain subleases and agreements to other parties who claim under her, including the respondent Golden Bear Oil Company. Oil was discovered on the property and sixteen producing oil wells were drilled thereon by these two oil companies at a cost of some $500,000, and these wells are still producing oil in paying quantities.

In May, 1939, and prior to the expiration of the leases and options, the respondents Kelley and Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company attempted to exercise their options to purchase six forty-acre tracts according to the legal subdivision thereof, being the tracts on which oil had been developed with certain forty-acre tracts adjacent thereto. At their request, an abstract company wrote to the appellant Russell advising him that these parties were exercising their optional rights and that the agreed purchase price would be paid to him upon his advising them that he would execute the necessary deeds. Russell replied to the effect that he had had no dealing with the abstract company and that he had thus far received nothing from the real parties in interest indicating their desires or intentions.

On June 20, 1939, respondents Kelley and Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company wrote to Russell notifying him that they had elected to and did thereby exercise the options to purchase these six described forty-acre tracts, as provided for in the leases and by virtue of the discovery of oil in paying quantities upon certain described forty-acre tracts, and also informing him that they had been advised by the defendant Pacific Indemnity Company that it was entitled to receive the money to be paid for the land, and that they had deposited the purchase price of the land, amounting to $5,213.80, with the Bakersfield Abstract Company to be paid to the party entitled thereto and offering to pay this amount to Russell or to the Pacific Indemnity Company, as might be directed by them, upon the conveyance of the fee title. With this letter were sent forms of conveyances, with the request that these be executed and returned to the abstract company with instructions regarding the delivery of the same and the payment of the purchase price therefor. A copy of this letter was sent to the Pacific Indemnity Company. It is admitted that Russell had previously assigned his interest in these leases to the Pacific Indemnity Company for security purposes.

On June 22, 1939, Russell replied to this notice of election and offer to pay the purchase price, stating that he had no proof that oil had been discovered on the land; that since at the time of the execution of the lease the waters of Poso Creek as well as certain water wells were located upon a portion of the premises "it will be necessary to have a rather careful and authentic survey made to determine which ten-acre portions are excepted under said paragraph from the option provisions involved"; that there was a discrepancy in their notice with respect to the date of one of the leases; that the amount of the purchase price as stated by them was slightly too high; and that "I merely wish to point these discrepancies out to you in order that we may not at a later time be under any confusion in reference to the matter." The respondents replied to this letter on June 23, 1939, correcting the discrepancy in the date of the lease; explained the amount of money deposited in escrow by saying that some of the forty-acre tracts, according to the Government legal subdivisions, contained slightly more than forty acres; stating that the existence of the oil wells was well known and could be easily proved; and saying that if any water wells, springs or other water supply were actually located on the property they were electing to purchase at the time the leases were executed these could be excepted from the conveyance if Russell would advise them what land should be so excepted. On June 30, 1939, Russell replied to this letter saying he was turning the matter over to his attorney and stating "I wish to settle the matter with the least possible difficulty."

On June 28, 1939, Russell was again advised by an attorney for the respondents that the money for the purchase of these lands was in the hands of the Bakersfield Abstract Company but no offer to convey or expression of willingness to convey the property in question or any part thereof or upon any terms whatever were communicated to the respondents by the appellant. Being unable to get such a conveyance the respondents filed this action on July 26, 1939, and before the leases and options had expired. The complaint alleged, among other things, that written notice of a desire to exercise these options had been given on June 20, 1939, with a request for a conveyance of that part of the property; that the defendants had failed and refused to convey said lands or any part thereof, although no objection had been made to the manner of the exercise of the option or to the mode or amount of the offer and tender; that the purchase money was ready and available at the time of the offer and tender and is still ready and available; and that respondents offered to pay and deposit the amount due in court to be paid to the appellant or the other defendant upon a conveyance of the property. The amount of the purchase price was later and during the trial actually paid into court.

During the trial the respondents offered to accept deeds to the property in question, excepting therefrom any ten-acre parcels upon which there had been wells, springs or other sources of water supply, provided these were so chosen as not to include any property upon which there was a producing oil well, and it is conceded that a similar offer was made by the respondents before the action was filed. The court found in all respects in favor of the respondents and entered the judgment from which this appeal was taken. In this connection it may be observed that while the court found that there was a water well upon the property in question at the time the leases were executed and that this water well was later abandoned, the judgment gave the appellant a license and easement to use any water on the premises at the time of the trial instead of excepting any ten-acre parcel from the conveyances ordered to be made to the respondents. This portion of the judgment was based, in part, upon findings to the effect that the appellant had refused, and still refuses, to pick out a ten-acre parcel upon which there was or had been a water supply without including therein any property upon which there was a producing oil well. It should be further observed that in his answer and ever since, the appellant claims that five ten-acre tracts along the southern boundary of the property here in question are excepted under the terms of these options because they had water wells or other sources of water supply located thereon at the time the leases were executed. It so happens that nine of the sixteen oil wells are located on these five ten-acre tracts.

While the leases themselves indicate rather clearly an intention to give the lessees all of the oil and mineral rights and to preserve the water rights for the use of the lessor, the appellant now appears to be interested only in obtaining the oil rights. His two main contentions are that he is entitled, in selecting the land that is to be excepted from any conveyance under the terms of the lease, to take any square ten-acre parcel which constitutes one-fourth of a legal subdivision of forty acres and upon any part of which a water supply existed, and that he is entitled to retain all of the property on which oil wells are located since the options were not properly exercised.

It is first contended that the options were not properly exercised for the reasons that only one notice of election to exercise the options was served although there were two leases and options; that Miss Kelley had assigned a portion of her option rights to other parties who did not join in the notice of election; that the notice of election, as given, covered certain forty-acre tracts but did not exclude the five ten-acre parcels which the appellant claims he was not bound to convey and therefore was not in accordance with the terms of the options; that the deeds which the respondents sent with the notice of election did not contain certain reservations provided for in the leases and options; and that no sufficient tender was made.

[1-4] It may be first observed that with the exception of the point that the notice of the exercise of these options applies to more land than the lessees were entitled to purchase since it did not exclude any ten-acre parcel on which there had been a water supply, the objections to the exercise of the option now raised were all waived by the appellant since they were not included in such objections as were raised in replying to the notices first given by the abstract company and later given by the respondents on June 20, 1939. While there were two leases and options the interested parties were the same and no reason appears why the two parties entitled to exercise the options could not join in one notice. The appellant was in no way prejudiced and no reason appears why he could not have complied insofar as he was bound, without affecting his right to claim an exception as to a part of the property. The mere fact that the two optionees joined in one notice is immaterial. There was good reason for the respondents to attempt to complete the transfer through an escrow with an abstract company since the Pacific Indemnity Company was claiming the money which was to be paid to the appellant. Several of the objections to the form of the offer and to the tender are eliminated by the fact that the appellant did not recognize the escrow with the abstract company and a new notice of election was directly given by the respondents. The fact that the deeds which accompanied the original notice were deficient in form is immaterial since they were not used. They were offered as a mere matter of courtesy and the duty of furnishing deeds rested upon the appellant. When the appellant, in reply to the notice of the desire to exercise the option, called attention to the provision of the leases for the exclusion of any ten-acre parcel containing a water supply and stated that it had not been determined what land should be excepted on that account, the respondents offered to exclude any such ten-acre parcel from the conveyance to be made. The duty rested upon the appellant to name and describe any such ten-acre parcels and the original notice of election was not rendered invalid by the failure to exclude any such parcels. The leases expressly provided in this connection that the lessees, in exercising the options, must offer to purchase full forty-acre tracts or fractional forties, according to the government description. The only way they could comply with the terms of the options was to do this and if the appellant was then entitled to exclude any portion thereof from the conveyance under other clauses of the lease, it was incumbent upon him to do so. There was ample evidence that while Miss Kelley had subleased portions of the property, she had assigned no part except that held by the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company, and with that exception she had retained the full right to exercise the options in her own name and her sublessees, while they may have been proper parties, were not necessary parties either to the notice of election or to this action. Not only was there an offer to pay the full amount due, which amount was deposited with the abstract company, since another party claimed to be entitled thereto, but the appellant refused to name and describe any ten-acre parcel which he desired to except from the conveyance as containing a water supply, and this made it impossible for the respondents to make a personal tender of the exact amount due. This situation was brought about by the act of the appellant and the respondents filed this action before the option time had elapsed and in their complaint offered to comply with all of the terms of the leases and options, offered to pay the money into court for whoever was entitled thereto, and during the trial the money was actually paid into court. During the trial the respondents offered to permit the appellant to select any ten-acre tract upon which there had been a water supply at the time the leases were executed provided that any such tract was so selected as not to include one of the oil wells. The appellant conceded that this same offer had been made to him before the action was begun. We think a sufficient offer and tender appears. Civ.Code, §§ 1496 and 1511; Code Civ.Proc., § 2076. It further appears that there was a sufficient attempt to exercise the options with a sufficient performance of the conditions thereof. Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 P. 1115; Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 147 P. 944; Marshall v. Hilton, 209 Cal. 531, 289 P. 165. A number of the objections now raised were waived, and any possible defects in connection with the form of the election and of the tender were cured by the timely commencement of this action and the offer to pay the money into court, which was actually done.

[5] Appellant's next point is that these option contracts cannot be specifically enforced because they were uncertain and lacked mutuality. This is based on one of the findings of the court to the effect that there is no ten-acre parcel containing a water well, spring or other water supply which is defined or can be identified by the terms of the leases, and that the appellant has failed and refused to properly designate or specify any such ten-acre parcel which he claims the right to except from the conveyance. From this it is argued that the option provisions are so uncertain that they cannot be specifically enforced. Any uncertainty which exists arises neither from the terms of the options nor from the court's finding but from the refusal of the appellant to designate any such parcels upon which a water supply existed without including land upon which the oil wells were located. The mere fact that the appellant had the right under the options to claim and exclude from the forty-acre tracts, which the respondents were obliged to offer to purchase, any ten-acre parcels upon which a water supply had existed at the time in question, does not make these option contracts so uncertain as to be unenforceable. Lange v. Waters, 156 Cal. 142, 103 P. 889, 19 Ann.Cas. 1207; Stamm v. Colvin, 94 Cal.App. 180, 270 P. 744; Janssen v. Davis, 219 Cal. 783, 29 P. 2d 196. If the appellant desired to exercise the right given him to exclude any ten-acre tracts from the conveyances he was required to make, this exclusion depended upon facts which were readily determinable and the entire matter was one which was well within the powers of a court of equity. Relovich v. Stuart, 211 Cal. 422, 295 P. 819; Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 P. 276.

[6, 7] The real controversy in this connection is as to whether the appellant had a right under the terms of the options to select any ten-acre tracts upon which a water supply had existed by taking a square ten-acre parcel constituting the one-fourth part of any forty-acre tract, instead of selecting such a ten-acre parcel by taking ten acres around the water supply, whatever the form might be, but in such a manner as not to interfere, when possible, with the respondents' oil wells. The appellant concedes that there is nothing in the exception provisions of the options to indicate the shape or form of the ten-acre parcels he might be entitled to retain, but claims that since the rights to purchase were limited to forty-acre parcels according to the "legal subdivision," it follows that the parties intended that the ten-acre parcels should also be according to the "legal subdivision." The leases do not so provide but use different language with reference to the ten-acre parcels than that used with reference to the forty-acre tracts. It not only should be assumed that this was intentionally done, but this provision of the options should be considered and interpreted in connection with the other provisions of the leases and options. The instruments as a whole clearly disclose an intention to give the oil rights to the lessees if oil is found and so long as it is produced and to preserve the lessor's rights to all unused water since he was interested only in the use of the land for the purpose of grazing cattle thereon. The appellant was even given the right to repurchase oil land which had been purchased under the options, after its use for oil purposes had been abandoned. The leases having failed to specifically provide for the shape or form of the ten-acre parcels, it certainly was reasonable for the trial court, as it did, to interpret this provision in the light of the entire instrument and the obvious intention of the parties, as requiring the appellant to select any such ten-acre parcels in such a manner as to best protect his water rights while at the same time interfering as little as possible with the respondents' oil rights. That this was the intention of the parties not only may be reasonably inferred from the leases themselves, but appears from appellant's letter to the respondents in reply to their notice of election in which he states that a survey will have to be made in order to determine which ten-acre tracts are to be excluded. This indicates that even at that time he did not understand that the parcels in question were to be exact quarters according to "legal subdivision" of forty-acre tracts as thus legally described, since no survey would then have been necessary and the deeds could have been drawn by describing quarters of forty-acre tracts. Incidentally, there is no such thing as a legal subdivision of less than forty acres. Fredericks v. Zumwalt, 134 Cal. 44, 66 P. 38. In our opinion, the court's interpretation of this clause of the option is a reasonable one and must be upheld.

[8] The appellant has contended at the trial and here that the options were not properly exercised since the notice of election demanded the conveyance of more land than that to which the respondents were entitled and in this connection has contended that five square ten-acre tracts along the southern boundary of the property here in question were parcels each of which had upon it a well, spring or other water supply at the time the leases were executed. Our attention is called to no evidence whatever of any such water supply on either the westernmost or easternmost of these ten-acre parcels. It is contended, however, that Poso Creek, at the time the leases were executed, flowed over the south half of the middle one of these ten-acre parcels and in entering and leaving that parcel also flowed over the corner of the two adjoining ten-acre parcels. The court found, however, that while Poso Creek now flows in this manner over a portion of these three ten-acre parcels, that it did not so flow at the time these leases were executed. There is evidence that the course or channel of this creek has moved north through the years, caused by the washing down of rocks and debris from the surrounding hills by heavy storms, thus blocking the old channel and causing the waters of the creek to pass more to the north. While there is some conflict in the evidence, there is evidence justifying the inference that this creek did not flow over any of the lands here in question at the time these leases were executed; that the creek was then a considerable distance south of the southerly boundary of these lands; and that the waters of the creek did not flow over any of this land prior to about 1931. The evidence sufficiently supports the court's finding in this regard. The court also found that the waters of this creek were not intended by the parties as such a source of water supply as was intended to come within the provision for the exclusion of any ten-acre parcel "upon which is located any water well, spring or other water supply now used." It seems rather incredible that it should have been intended to include any such source of water supply as would come from an open creek running across thirty acres of land when the parties used the language referred to. Had such a source of water supply then existed, it seems probable that different language would have been used in describing it. It is unnecessary, however, to give the matter further consideration in view of the finding that this creek did not flow over this land at that time.

[9] Technically, but not equitably, the most serious question presented is whether the provision of the judgment giving the appellant an easement to use all of the waters of Poso Creek instead of allowing him to retain the legal title to a particular ten-acre parcel can be sustained. The court found in accordance with the evidence that upon one of the ten-acre parcels as now outlined by the appellant there was, at the time the leases were executed, a well which had been used for watering cattle, and that this well had been abandoned many years before the trial. While that is true, the exception provision of the options relates to land upon which a water supply existed at that time. It happens that the ten-acre parcel, as outlined by the appellant, upon which this water well then existed was one of the three ten-acre parcels, as thus outlined, over which Poso Creek now flows and in which the appellant was given an easement for the use of all of the water. While this easement gives the appellant more than he is entitled to, insofar as the use of the water is concerned, this portion of the judgment does not strictly follow the provisions of the options. On the other hand the appellant, although he had the right to have excepted from any conveyance and to reserve the fee title to a ten-acre parcel upon which there had been a water well, he was not entitled under the court's interpretation of the contract to make an arbitrary selection of a square ten acres constituting a one-fourth part of the forty-acre tract according to legal subdivision thereof. It appears that it was perfectly possible to select a ten-acre parcel upon which this old water well existed without interfering with any of respondents' oil wells. As a matter of fact, it appears that it would be possible to select a ten-acre parcel including both this old water well and all of Poso Creek which now flows over the lands in question, without interfering with any of these oil wells. This the appellant did not desire to do and refused to do. Moreover, no point is here raised attacking the judgment for this particular reason and to the end of obtaining his exact rights in this respect. The whole question is raised and presented as a part of the contention that no valid exercise of the option was made, that respondents are without any rights at all, and that the appellant is entitled to refuse to make any conveyance to the respondents and to retain not only the oil wells located upon the five ten-acre parcels which he has selected but all of the oil wells upon all of the lands in question. It clearly appears that the appellant did not and does not desire to select a ten-acre parcel in accordance with the exact rights given him by the leases and options, and under the circumstances, the appellant having himself offered to do equity, the court was justified in treating the matter as it did and no good reason is here presented for reversing the judgment in order to secure a more strict compliance with something which the appellant does not want. What he asks for is a judgment to the effect that the options were never exercised.

[10] The only other point requiring consideration is that the court erred in refusing to admit into evidence two exhibits consisting of letters. The first of these was from a brother of Miss Kelley, who had no interest in the land and who had since died, and the statements in the letter were not only hearsay but were merely cumulative to the other evidence in the same connection. The second exhibit was entirely immaterial and no error in either connection appears.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 533

PEOPLE v. VIVIAN.

Cr. 2191.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 18, 1942.

1. Witnesses ⇨344(2)

In prosecution for statutory rape, evidence that complaining witness had had sexual intercourse with other men was not admissible to show want of credibility in complaining witness' testimony. Pen.Code, § 261.

2. Rape ⇨40(5)

In prosecution for statutory rape on complaining witness, a girl about 15 years of age, there was no issue of consent, and evidence that complaining witness had had sexual intercourse with other men was not admissible on issue of consent. Pen.Code, § 261.

3. Witnesses ⇨350, 359

In prosecution for statutory rape, where defendant admitted convictions of three prior felonies, facts that one felony was a violation of the Dyer Act and that the other two were forgeries could properly be shown by cross-examination of defendant or by the record of the judgments. Pen.Code, §§ 261, 264, 1323; Dyer Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 408.

4. Criminal law ⚷713

In prosecution for statutory rape, the district attorney in his argument in submitting the case acted within his rights in asking the jury so to frame its verdict that defendant would be sent to state prison and not to county jail, in view of statute authorizing jury by its verdict to make recommendations to the court concerning whether punishment should be by imprisonment in county jail or state prison. Pen.Code, §§ 261, 264.

5. Criminal law ⚷1178

In a criminal case, points not stated, argued and supported by authorities need not be considered by a reviewing court.

6. Criminal law ⚷1130(2)

On appeal in a criminal case, counsel should point out clearly and concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous and reasons why they are erroneous with reference to authorities, if any.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert L. McWilliams, Judge.

Homer Vivian, Jr., was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Raine Ewell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

Homer Vivian, Jr., was charged by information, tried, and convicted of violating section 261 of the Penal Code, statutory rape, upon the complaining witness, Dorothy May Kirby, a girl about fifteen years of age and who was not the wife of the defendant. He made a motion for a new trial. His motion was denied and he appealed from the judgment and order.

The information alleged the offense took place on the 12th day of August, 1940. It also charged the defendant with three prior convictions of felonies: the first, on October 25, 1935, in the United States District Court in the State of Texas for violation of the Dyer Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 408; the second, on June 10, 1939, in the Superior Court of the State of Florida, of the crime of forgery; and third, in the Superior Court of this State of the crime of forgery. The last-mentioned offense is discussed in the case entitled People v. Vivian, 46 Cal. App.2d 163, 115 P.2d 559. The instant case is closely connected in point of time with the cited case. The defendant admitted all of the priors, entered a plea of not guilty to the charge of rape and was tried thereon.

Dorothy May Kirby, the prosecutrix, hitch-hiked from her home in Missouri to Los Angeles in the month of June or July of 1940, where she stopped with her mother for two or three weeks. While there she was employed at the Casino on Main Street under the name of Dorothy Humphries as a taxi dancer; she gave her age there as twenty-two years. She then came to Oakland, where she was employed as a waitress and part of the time as a taxi dancer at the Broadway Academy under the name of Jean Garrison. Here she stated her age to be twenty-two. She then secured employment at the Marino Club on Ellis Street, San Francisco, as a B-girl, under said name of Jean Garrison. She was paid a salary and received a commission on the drinks men purchased. She had been there a week when she met appellant; it was the night of the 12th of August, 1940. He asked her to dance with him, which she did. He invited her to become his partner at a Walkathon. From the Marino Club that night they went to a cafe, where they had something to eat, after which they went to the Walkathon and, at about 2 a. m., they drove to his apartment at 706 Polk Street. They were accompanied by his friend, Charlie Sinclair, whom she knew as Charlie. The apartment contained two rooms, a living room and kitchenette. There was a folding bed and a lounge. The prosecutrix and appellant retired and slept together on the folding bed that night and the succeeding night. On each of said nights he had sexual intercourse with her. The first night she was menstruating. He purchased some Kotex for her.

She earned from two to four dollars a night at the Marino Club, which, she testified, appellant took from her. Appellant purchased a pair of stockings, two pairs of step-ins, a slip and a suit of pajamas at Magnin's, where, on August 14, 1940, he was arrested by the police for forgery.

Some time after 11 o'clock on the night of August 14th, he was taken to his apartment by the police to search for checks. On the arrival of the police they found the prosecutrix asleep on the lounge; she was alone. Under the name of Jean Garrison she was booked for vagrancy by the police and after a week in the City Prison she was turned over to the juvenile authorities, who finally placed her in the custody of her mother. To the juvenile authorities she gave her true name as Dorothy May Kirby and her true age as fifteen.

[1, 2] During the trial the defendant attempted to prove that the complaining witness had had sexual intercourse with other men but the objections of the prosecution were sustained. He now contends that such evidence was admissible as showing a want of credibility in the testimony of the complaining witness. But it was not admissible for that purpose. People v. Murphy, 53 Cal.App. 474, 200 P. 484. Again he claims it was pertinent on the issue of consent. However, as she was only fifteen years of age, there was no such issue. 22 Cal.Jur. 375 "Rape," sec. 22.

[3] The defendant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf. He admitted convictions of three prior felonies. On cross-examination the district attorney asked questions tending to show that one felony was a violation of the Dyer Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 408, and the other two were forgeries. The defendant objected, claiming he could not be cross-examined on such matters. Penal Code, sec. 1323. He is mistaken. Such facts could properly be shown by cross-examination or the record of the judgments. People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 20, 21, 87 P. 1016.

Before proceeding let it be noted that the defendant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf. He testified to all incidents occurring between the early part of the evening of Monday, August 12th, and extending to a time about 4 a. m. Wednesday, August 14, 1930, regarding the acts of himself, of the prosecuting witness, and of his friend Charlie Sinclair. The defendant denied that he had had sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness. He volunteered that he had made some purchases for her. He volunteered that he was writing checks and that both Charlie and Dorothy were broke. The defendant testified that he slept on a couch alone, but that Charlie and Dorothy slept together in the only bed in the apartment. He now complains because on cross-examination he was asked questions regarding the checks he wrote and the purchases he made for the prosecutrix. But we have not found any ruling that was made by the trial court which improperly extended the boundaries of the cross-examination of a defendant in a criminal action. Penal Code, sec. 1323; People v. Turco, 29 Cal.App. 608, 610, 156 P. 1001; People v. D'Angelo, 13 Cal.2d 203, 206, 88 P.2d 708.

[4] In his argument in submitting the case the district attorney asked the jury to so frame its verdict that the defendant would be sent to state prison and not to the county jail. He acted clearly within his rights. The punishment for the offense on trial is provided in section 264 of the Penal Code. Under certain facts the jury by its verdict is entitled to make recommendations to the court as to the punishment to be imposed. Under such circumstances it is quite clear that the district attorney was entitled to include within the scope of his argument what recommendation, if any, should be made by the jury.

[5, 6] No other point is stated, argued, and supported by authorities. Points not so presented need not be considered by a court of review. In People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, at page 309, 67 P. 770, at page 771, the court said: "We again repeat what we have said before,—that we will not examine alleged errors presented in this way. It is due to this court from the members of the bar to point out clearly and concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous and the reasons why they are so, with reference to authorities, if any. In case counsel will not take the trouble to do so, we shall deem the matter as of not sufficient importance to merit notice in an opinion. People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. [294] 297, 52 P. 833." That passage is directly applicable to a number of contentions contained in the brief of the defendant.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 622

SCOVILLE et al. v. DE BRETTEVILLE et al.

Civ. 2963.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 20, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 18, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)

An appellate court must accept as true those portions of the evidence supporting findings and judgment of lower court.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑83

Where defendants, as lessees of an oil lease, entered into an agreement with plaintiffs for financing the completion of drilling of well, which provided that contract should terminate if first well was completed for 200 barrels per day or less, and which further provided for an executive committee to have charge of drilling operations, plaintiffs could not complain because production test was not made by committee named in contract, where it appeared that plaintiffs had virtually abandoned the project until through efforts of defendant, the well was improved so that it produced oil in paying if not large quantities.

3. Evidence 🔑518

The expression "the first well be completed for 200 barrels per day or less", as used in an agreement by defendants, as lessees of oil lease, with plaintiffs for financing completion of drilling of a well, with the provision that contract should terminate if first well was completed for 200 barrels per day or less, had a technical meaning given to it by those engaged in oil industry, and, hence, the meaning of words as used in the contract was a proper subject for expert testimony. Civ.Code, § 1645.

4. Mines and minerals 🔑83

Where lessees of oil lease entered into an agreement with plaintiffs for financing completion of drilling of a well, which provided that contract should terminate if first well was completed for "200 barrels per day or less", plaintiffs could not add number of barrels of casinghead gasoline to number of barrels of oil mixed with water and other impurities in order to reach a production of more than 200 barrels, in view of evidence showing that the term 200 barrels of oil per day as used in contract meant clean marketable oil.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "200 Barrels per Day or Less".

5. Contracts 🔑143

When clauses in written agreement, doubtful in meaning, are construed, entire agreement must be looked to for light in determining meaning to be given particular clause under scrutiny.

6. Contracts 🔑169

Circumstances and relations of parties at time of execution of agreement and insertion of particular clauses therein are considered in construing doubtful clauses. Civ. Code, § 1647.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1008(3)

Where a construction given an instrument by trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with intent of parties making it, appellate courts will not substitute another interpretation even though it seems equally tenable.

8. Mines and minerals 🔑83

Where lessees of oil lease, entered into a contract with plaintiffs for financing of completion of drilling a well, which agreement provided for drilling of two other wells if first well proved sufficiently productive, and further provided that if first well was completed for 200 barrels per day or less plaintiffs would quitclaim to lessees all their interests under agreement, except as to such first well, trial court's construction of provision that plaintiffs would quitclaim to lessees all their interest under agreement, except as to such first well, as including a surrender of their right of joint management in operation of first well was reasonable and consistent with intent of parties.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)

Conflicts in evidence are addressed to and settled by trier of fact, and a judgment may not be reversed on appeal because of conflicts in the evidence.

10. Mines and minerals 🔑52

In action to enjoin defendants from interfering with drilling and production operations in connection with an oil well and for accounting of the receipts from and disbursements made in connection with well, plaintiffs could not complain of portion of judgment discharging receiver who was appointed to take charge of and operate the well, where it was determined that plaintiffs had no right of management of the well, and there was no indication that plaintiffs would not receive their participating royalties from the net production of the completed well.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Walter B. Scoville and others against G. deBretteville and others to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs' drilling and production operations in connection with an oil well, for an accounting of the receipts from disbursements made in connection with the well, for judgment for any moneys found due them, and for a receiver pendente lite to take charge of and operate the well. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry G. Bodkin and Charles S. Gass, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

Plaintiffs brought this action to enjoin defendants from interfering with their drilling and production operations in connection with an oil well known as "Treasure No. 8," for an accounting of the receipts from and disbursements made in connection with this well, for judgment for any moneys found due them, and for a receiver pendente lite to take charge of and operate the well.

The receiver was appointed and the order appointing him was stayed by an appropriate appeal bond. The case was tried on its merits and the judgment before us for review was rendered in which the receiver was discharged. An appeal was taken from the order appointing the receiver. That appeal has been decided, Cal. App., 123 P.2d 622.

[1] The trial of the case was protracted and is presented to us in a long typewritten record. The evidence on many questions is conflicting and cannot be harmonized. Under the time honored rule that we must accept as true those portions of the evidence supporting the findings and judgment we will briefly summarize such of that evidence as may be necessary and will not attempt to detail other evidence conflicting with it.

The Treasure Company had oil leases on four parcels of land in the Del Rey Hills in Los Angeles County which are known respectively as the Fletcher lease and the Burns No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 leases. It had endeavored to drill a well on the Fletcher lease but could not complete the undertaking because of financial difficulties. Negotiations were started with the Adamant Company, through Walter B. Scoville, its representative, looking to its financing the completion of the well. These negotiations resulted in the execution of a written contract, dated April 5, 1938, between the Treasure Company as first party, the Adamant Company as second party, and Walter B. Scoville as third party. The proper construction to be placed on some of its provisions is determinative of the principal issues in this case.

This contract recites the ownership of the various leases by the Treasure Company; that the well on the Fletcher lease had not been completed; that the Fletcher and Burns No. 1 leases were to be combined into one operating lease; that the parties desired to complete the first well and drill a well on each of the other Burns leases, No. 2 and No. 3, if the first well proved to be sufficiently productive; that the Adamant Company would furnish $10,000 for the purpose of carrying this program into effect, subject to its approval by the Commissioner of Corporations.

It was agreed that the Treasure Company would furnish the derrick, machinery, and drilling equipment for the completion of the well, and the Adamant Company would furnish the money. This money was to be deposited in a bank to the credit of the Treasure Company and withdrawn on checks signed by it and J. O. Seeple.

The Adamant Company was to receive a twenty-five per cent participating royalty in the leases, and Walter B. Scoville a participating royalty interest of nineteen per cent in the Fletcher and Burns No. 1 leases if the well were completed for less than one thousand barrels, to be reduced to sixteen and one-half per cent if it should be capable of producing one thousand or more barrels per day upon completion, and eighteen and one-sixth per cent participating royalties in the other two leases. These royalties were to be subject to their pro rata share of all operating and maintenance charges of all wells.

The contract also contained the following provisions:

"When the first well has been drilled to the basement the parties hereto agree to cooperate in obtaining the necessary casing and other completion equipment and material on credit or in connection with production contracts, or otherwise. If necessary, all monies payable on the royalties to be issued to Second and Third Parties, and the interest retained by First Party, after payment of operating expenses, shall be made available to pay for such completion costs. It is agreed, that should Second Party and Third Party decide, after the first well has been drilled to the basement schist, that they do not desire to proceed further, this contract shall then be terminated and they will quitclaim to First Party all of the interests to be received by them hereunder, except one-third (⅓) of their interests in the first well. It is also understood that should the first well be completed for two hundred (200) barrels per day or less, this contract shall terminate, and Second Party and Third Party will thereupon quitclaim to First Party all of their interests hereunder, except as to first well. * * *

"J. Orville Seeple, on behalf of the Second Party and Third Party, and G de Bretteville, on behalf of First Party, shall form an executive committee to have joint control and advisory powers with respect to all drilling and producing operations hereunder. No purchases shall be made on credit and no expenditures or other obligations incurred without the joint approval of both members of said committee."

This contract was later modified by adding Harry Wynn to the executive committee created in the last quoted paragraph of the contract.

The Corporation Commissioner issued his permit for the issuance of the participating royalties. Deepening the well started in April, 1938, and was continued until about May 28th of that year when it had been drilled to a depth of 6,510 feet. Differences arose between the parties over additional financing necessary to bring the well into production. To keep the hole from caving in and the well from blowing out, large quantities of drilling mud and water were pumped into it. The well remained in this condition until November, 1938.

Under date of November 2, 1938, J. Orville Seeple, Walter B. Scoville and the Adamant Company wrote the Treasure Company the following letter:

"The undersigned, for and on behalf of the Adamant Company, Walter B. Scoville, and himself, hereby agrees that Oliver Maze shall be employed as Drilling Superintendent and Tool Pusher in connection with the completion of the Treasure Well, now being drilled on Lot 9, Block 33, Tract 9809, Del Rey Hills, California, and we will assure you the necessary funds will be forthcoming to complete said well."

Work on cleaning out the well and reaming it to receive the casing were started about November 10, 1938, the casing was set several days later, and the other work was done preparatory to a production test. Swabbing started about November 25th, and was continued to December 3rd. The well went on the pump about December 7, 1938. It produced about eighty barrels a day. Up to December 15, 1938, all operations were in charge of plaintiffs or their agents.

The wages of the workmen, due on December 15, 1938, were not paid and defendants took charge of the operations on the afternoon of the following day. According to evidence offered by defendants no objection was made to this change of control until May, 1939.

Under defendants' management the production was increased to an average of about 180 barrels per day. It was not clean oil and required dehydrating before it could be marketed. The well also produced about 300,000 cubic feet of gas per day from which casinghead gasoline was extracted.

In May, 1939, plaintiffs tried to take physical possession of the well and were resisted by defendants. This action was started on June 1, 1939.

It seems to be the theory of the plaintiffs that the well was capable of producing more than 200 barrels of oil per day; that its production was wrongfully held down by defendants in order to defraud plaintiffs of their right of joint management and their interests in Burns No. 2 and No. 3 leases.

The trial court found that defendants did not forceably take possession of the well; that all the money furnished by plaintiffs was actually used in deepening the well and putting it on production; that all work on the well up to December 16, 1938, was under the control of Harry Wynn and J. O. Seeple; that they did not consult with deBretteville about such operations and contracted bills without his consent; that many bills were unpaid on December 16, 1938, when deBretteville took over the management of the well; that none of the plaintiffs objected to his so doing until May 18, 1939; that the operation of said well by defendants was well, efficiently, capably and skillfully done in accordance with good practices in the oil industry; that the well was completed and put on production not later than January 1, 1939, and that the average daily production for thirty days thereafter was less than 200 barrels of oil a day; that "it is not true that at the time said complaint was filed herein that said well was producing more than 200 barrels of oil a day, or as much as 200 barrels of oil per day, and the Court finds that said well was not capable of producing a monthly average of 200 barrels of oil a day for any month during the period of time from the date said well first produced until December 31, 1939, and was at no time capable of producing, nor did it produce more than 200 barrels of oil per day;"

The trial court further found that in November, 1938, the average production of oil was 51.38 barrels per day, in December, about 78.88 barrels a day, and in January, 1939, about 102.3 barrels a day.

There is ample competent evidence in the record to sustain the foregoing findings.

It was further found that "the clause 'be completed for two hundred barrels per day or less' in said contract, means, and did at the time of the execution of said contract mean, and was intended by all parties to it to mean 200 barrels, or less, of clean oil per day; the Court further finds that said well was not completed for 200 barrels of clean oil per day, but was completed for less than 200 barrels of clean oil per day, and that said contract and addendum thereto insofar as it provided for control or management of said well by plaintiffs, or any of them, or by a committee composed of plaintiffs J. O. Seeple and Harry Wynn, terminated no later than January 31, 1939, and plaintiffs thereby lost their interests in all leaseholds described in said contract other than the leasehold interest described" on which the first well was located.

It was also found that on some individual days in the months of February, March, April and May, 1939, the well did produce more than 200 barrels of oil per day but that during no month did it produce an average of 200 or more barrels of oil a day; that "said well and pump were properly operated and controlled so as to produce the maximum amount of oil and gas and that said defendants did nothing in the operation of the said pump, or otherwise, to delay the removal of mud and water or to diminish and retard the production of oil and other hydrocarbons; the Court further finds that the cleaning out of the mud and water from said well was not delayed nor the production of said well retarded or diminished."

These findings are supported by substantial evidence. Therefore, the only question left open for consideration is the legal effect of these findings in support of the judgment which terminates plaintiffs' interest in the leases (except in Treasure No. 8 well) and plaintiffs' rights of joint management of the leases and that well.

[2] Plaintiffs argue that no production test of the well was ever made under the terms of the contract and draw the conclusion that there is no evidence to support the finding that the well was completed for a production of less than 200 barrels of clean oil per day.

The foregoing argument is based on the theory that the only production test that could have been made under the terms of the contract would have to have been made by the three named members of the executive committee, and as no test was made by them there was no proof at all that the well was not capable of producing more than 200 barrels of oil per day; that defendants wrongfully took possession of the well on December 16, 1938, and should not profit by their own wrong. This argument overlooks the evidence indicating, as found by the trial court, that plaintiffs virtually abandoned the well on December 15, 1938; that without objection from anyone, defendants took possession of the abandoned well on the following day and proceeded to clean it out and put it on production; that the well was skillfully operated and did not produce 200 barrels of oil a day. The contingent rights of plaintiffs depended upon the amount of oil the well produced, and not upon a test by any particular person or persons.

A study of the record supports the inference that plaintiffs were not interested in a well having a small production; that they were disappointed in their efforts to put it on production and with its small production; that as a result they virtually abandoned the project on December 15, 1938, and did not again become interested in it until, through the efforts of defendants, the well was improved so that it produced oil in paying if not large quantities together with wet gas from which gasoline was extracted. Further, the well was skillfully operated by defendants and under the evidence and findings was produced to its maximum capacity. Under these circumstances plaintiffs cannot now complain because the production test was not made by the committee named in the contract.

[3] The trial court admitted evidence as to the meaning given in the oil industry to the expression "the first well be completed for two hundred (200) barrels per day or less." This evidence was to the effect that the expression meant 200 barrels of clean marketable oil produced; that the production of a well is determined by its average daily production of clean oil fit for commercial use over a period of thirty days after it is first put on production; that the expression does not mean emulsified oil and water and does not include gas or casinghead gasoline produced from such gas.

It is rather clear that the expression has a technical meaning given to it by those engaged in the oil industry. This being true it is settled that the meaning of those words, as used in the contract, was a proper subject for expert testimony. § 1645, Civ.Code; Alta Planing Mill Co. v. Garland, 167 Cal. 179, 138 P. 738. Further, it would be impossible to suppose that "two hundred (200) barrels per day," when used in a contract dealing with the production of an oil well, could refer to anything other than 200 barrels of oil per day. When used in an oil lease or a contract dealing with oil in the sense here appearing, the terms, when referring to oil, should be held to mean crude petroleum as produced from a well less free water therein, and less water and other foreign substances emulsified in it which render it commercially unfit for market as oil in the state in which it was produced. Certainly the term oil does not include gas or gasoline extracted from such gas unless such special meaning be clearly given it in the contract in question. No such special meaning is given the word in the contract before us.

[4] The trial court correctly received this evidence and was privileged to accept it as true. Plaintiffs cannot add the number of barrels of casinghead gasoline to the number of barrels of oil mixed with water and other impurities in order to reach a production of more than 200 barrels. In view of the evidence and findings their arguments in support of such a method of computing the amount of oil produced daily are untenable.

Plaintiffs further argue that the clause "Second Party and Third Party will thereupon quitclaim to First Party all their interest hereunder, except as to such first well" does not include a surrender of their right of joint management and operation of the first well.

It must be conceded that the clause of the contract under consideration is not definite in its terms and required construction by the trial court.

[5, 6] There are two rules of construction that must control here. The first is set forth in Smith v. Carlston, 205 Cal. 541, at page 550, 271 P. 1091, at page 1094, as follows:

"When clauses in a written agreement between parties, doubtful in meaning, are to be construed, it is a cardinal rule of interpretation that the entire agreement must be looked to for light in determining the meaning to be given to the particular clause thereof under scrutiny (6 Cal.Juris. 258, § 16, and cases cited), and a not less important rule for the guidance of courts in determining the intent of parties in the insertion of particular clauses in their written agreements is that the circumstances and relations of the parties at the time of the execution of their agreements and of the insertion of particular clauses therein shall be carefully considered in aid of such interpretation. (Civ.Code, § 1647.)" See, also, Lemm v. Stillwater Land & Cattle Co., 217 Cal. 474, 19 P.2d 785.

[7] The second rule is set forth in Tide Water Assoc. Oil Co. v. Curtin, 41 Cal.App.2d 884, at pages 895, 896, 107 P.2d 945, at page 951, as follows: "* * * it cannot be said that the two instruments, considered in the light of the facts, are not susceptible of the interpretation placed upon them by the court. Hence, we cannot disturb the decision. It was the province of the trial court to resolve doubtful language in the lease and to determine the meaning and effect of the subsequent agreement. Adams v. Petroleum Midway Co., Ltd., supra, [205 Cal. 221, 270 P. 668].

"When the construction given an instrument by the trial court appears to be reasonable and consistent with the intent of the parties making it, courts of appellate jurisdiction will not substitute another interpretation even though it seems equally tenable. Berdan v. Berdan [39 Cal.App. 2d 478], 103 P.2d 622."

[8] When we apply these rules to the facts before us we can not disturb the construction placed on the contract by the trial court. It rather clearly appears from the evidence that at the time the contract was executed the plaintiffs would not be interested in continuing with the contract unless the well was a good producer. They described a well producing a thousand barrels of oil or more a day as coming within that class and as coming within their hopes and expectations although they placed their minimum at a production of more than 200 barrels a day in the contract. They virtually abandoned the well when their efforts resulted in a small production. These facts, and others in the record, indicate that plaintiffs construed the contract to mean that their rights of management, not only of the Burns No. 2 and No. 3 leases, but of the first well, ended upon it appearing that the well produced less than 200 barrels of oil a day. As the construction placed by the trial court on the contract is reasonable and seems to be in accordance with the intent of the parties when it was executed and with the construction placed upon it by their subsequent actions we cannot disturb that construction here.

Plaintiffs complain of many of the items appearing in the accounting which were approved by the trial court.

The record discloses that under a stipulation of the parties the trial court appointed Eugene M. Berger, a certified public accountant, to audit the books of defendants and to render an account to the court. When this account was submitted, plaintiffs, being dissatisfied, employed their own accountant who prepared another account. Five days were consumed in taking evidence on this phase of the case. Certain of the more controversial items were reserved for future consideration and decision under stipulations made in open court. Other items were modified and as so modified were approved in the findings which went into very considerable detail concerning them.

[9] Without reviewing in detail the very considerable and somewhat conflicting evidence offered on this phase of the case it should be sufficient to state that there was very substantial evidence supporting the conclusion reached by the trial judge. This being true the findings and judgment on these questions become final here under the familiar rule that conflicts in the evidence are addressed to and settled by the trier of fact and that a judgment may not be reversed on appeal because of conflicts in the evidence.

[10] Plaintiffs complain of the portion of the judgment discharging the receiver who was appointed on July 19, 1939. The order appointing the receiver was stayed, pending appeal, by an appropriate bond so that the receiver never acted.

As plaintiffs have no right of management of the undertaking, and as there is no indication that they will not receive their participating royalties from the net production of the completed oil well, and because the controversies between the parties have been settled and no good reason for a receiver appears, the order discharging the receiver was proper and must be affirmed.

It is unnecessary to consider the other questions argued by counsel.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 633

SCOVILLE et al. v. DE BRETTEVILLE et al.

Civ. 2775.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 20, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 18, 1942.

Appeal and error ⚿790(3)

Where it appeared that receiver appointed by court had never acted and that final judgment rendered in the case discharged him from his office, question of legality of his appointment had become "moot".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Moot Question".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Action by Walter B. Scoville and others against G. deBretteville and others. From an order appointing a receiver, the defendants appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Henry G. Bodkin and Charles S. Gass, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order appointing a receiver to take charge of an oil well and the property on which it was situated. The order was stayed by an appropriate bond pending the decision of this appeal and the receiver has never acted.

Pending this appeal the case was tried and a final judgment entered in favor of defendants in which the receiver was discharged. This judgment has been affirmed in an opinion this day filed. Cal.App., 123 P.2d 616.

As the receiver has never acted, and as the final judgment rendered in this case discharged him from his office, the question of the legality of his appointment has become moot and need not be decided.

The appeal from the order appointing the receiver is dismissed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 570

FRITZ v. METROPOLITAN LIFE INS. CO.

Civ. 12858.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 19, 1942.

As Corrected on Denial of Rehearing April 17, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1942.

1. Insurance ⚿516, 539(1)

The quoted words in provision in group policy that, on receipt of due proof that employee "while insured hereunder and prior to his sixtieth birthday" has become totally and permanently disabled, certain payments will be made to employee, meant that disability and not due proof of disability must occur while insurance is in force in favor of insured.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "While Insured Hereunder and Prior to His Sixtieth Birthday".

2. Insurance ⚿146(1, 3)

A policy of insurance should be construed, in the absence of any ambiguity, according to the plain, ordinary, and proper sense of the words used; but, where language used is conflicting, policy should be construed against the party who is responsible for the contradictory language used.

3. Insurance ⚿147(2)

The interpretation of group policy issued in Missouri is governed by the laws of Missouri.

4. Courts ⚿95(1)

Where interpretation of contract is governed by laws of Missouri, decision of intermediate court of appeals on the point involved must be accepted by the parties and California District Court of Appeal as stating the law of Missouri, in absence of any conflicting decision by any other intermediate court of appeals or by Supreme Court of Missouri.

5. Insurance ⚿536, 539(1)

Under Missouri law, insurer's liability for disability benefits under group policy providing that, on receipt of due proof that employee while insured thereunder and prior to his 60th birthday has become totally and permanently disabled, such payments will be made to employee, and that amount of each monthly payment shall be such as amount of insurance in force on life of employee at date of receipt of proof of disability will purchase, liability is not dependent on the employee's having given due proof while the policy is in force, and due proof while policy is in force is not a "condition precedent" to right of recovery.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition Precedent".

6. Appeal and error ⟹1

On appeal from judgment in action on group policy the interpretation of which was governed by laws of Missouri, the question whether litigant waived requirement of policy as to time when proofs of disability shall be made, by not making the point in trial court, involved a question of procedure governed by California law.

7. Appeal and error ⟹173(14)

An insurer sued for disability benefits under group policy could not complain for the first time on appeal that due proof had not been given while insurance was in effect.

8. Insurance ⟹516

Under Missouri law, an insured making sporadic and futile attempts to resume his work, and in fact doing some minor work, does not thereby lose his status as "totally and permanently disabled" within group policy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Totally and Permanently Disabled".

9. Insurance ⟹648(1)

In action for disability benefits under group policy, evidence whether insured was receiving disability benefits under some other policy was not admissible.

10. Evidence ⟹318(3), 333(7)
Witnesses ⟹216

In action for disability benefits under group policy, report concerning insured made by government physicians to Federal Veterans' Bureau was not "public record" made by public officers under act of Congress, so as to be admissible as exception to "hearsay" rule, where act of Congress provided that report could be disclosed only in proceedings in nature of an inquest of competency or in judicial proceedings when director of Veterans' Bureau deems such disclosure necessary and proper. World War Veterans' Act of 1924, § 30, 38 U.S.C.A. § 456.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Hearsay" and "Public Record".

11. Appeal and error ⟹926(5)

On appeal from judgment in action for disability benefits under group policy, District Court of Appeal would not assume that trial court admitted in evidence a report concerning insured made by government physicians to Federal Veterans' Bureau, for limited purpose and considered the report only so far as the law permitted, where trial court overruled objections generally and did not purport to limit the report for a particular purpose.

12. Appeal and error ⟹1050(1)

The contention that admission of evidence did not constitute reversible error on ground that evidence was merely cumulative, would not be sustained where there was no other evidence to sustain the judgment.

13. Insurance ⟹665(5)

The admission of insured suing for disability benefits under group policy, that insured had claimed and received disability benefits under later business men's policy issued by insurer, did not entitle trial court to infer that insured was not totally and permanently disabled while group policy was in force.

14. Insurance ⟹665(5)

In action for disability benefits under group life policy, evidence was insufficient to sustain finding that insured was not totally and permanently disabled during period of insurer's risk under the policy.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thurmond Clarke, Judge.

Action to recover disability benefits under group insurance policy by Charles C. Fritz against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed for new trial.

Herzbrun & Chantry, Kenneth N. Chantry, and David Mellinkoff, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walker, Adams, Duque & Smith, Henry Duque, and Mark E. True, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action brought to recover disability benefits under a group policy of insurance issued in Missouri by respondent in July, 1926, to The Long-Bell Lumber Company of Kansas City, Missouri, as the employer, for the benefit of its employees, of whom plaintiff was one. Respondent's risk under the policy ended at midnight February 28, 1933, leaving the insurer without liability except as to such obligations as had then accrued under the terms of the policy. At the hour just mentioned a new group policy of insurance issued by Business Men's Assurance Company took effect. This policy, like that of respondent's, was procured by the employer for the benefit of its employees, of whom plaintiff was one. On the trial below plaintiff contended (1) that in 1932 he became totally and permanently disabled within the purview of the policy issued by respondent and while it was in full force and effect, and (2) that he submitted to respondent due proof of such disability in June, 1934. The court expressly found that plaintiff was not totally and permanently disabled prior to midnight February 28, 1933. Notwithstanding this finding the trial court also found that at the time of the trial, in December, 1939, plaintiff was totally disabled as a result of psychoneurosis, and that the condition was presumably permanent and had existed for some time. On these findings judgment went for defendant and the case is here on plaintiff's appeal.

The questions presented are: (1) Whether the policy by its terms requires the insured, where he becomes totally and permanently disabled while the policy is in effect, to submit due proof thereof to the New York office of the insurer while the policy is in full force; (2) if the terms of the policy so require, has the requirement been waived by the insurer in the trial below; and, if so, (3) is the admissible evidence sufficient to sustain the finding that plaintiff was not totally and permanently disabled during the period of respondent's risk under the policy.

First: Respondent argues that under the terms of the policy its obligation rests not alone upon the existence of insured's disability but is expressly conditioned upon (1) the receipt by it of proof of disability and (2) the receipt of such proof while the employee is insured under the policy and while it is in force. In support of its position it points first to the language in the first paragraph of the policy and secondly to the language of the second paragraph, both set forth in the margin.[1] However, the second paragraph deals with the computation of the company's liability and not with the time within which proof is to be given. Accordingly, before discussing it we turn to a consideration of the first paragraph, which alone bears directly on the subject.

[1] In his written argument counsel for respondent not only rests heavily on the language of paragraph two, but he quotes in connection therewith paragraph one and italicizes therein the words "while insured." From this we apprehend that he implies that the pertinent sentence from paragraph one should be deemed to read: "Upon receipt, at the Home Office * * * of due proof [while insured] that any Employee, while insured hereunder, and prior to his sixtieth birthday, has become totally and

---

[1] "Upon receipt, at the Home Office in the City of New York of due proof that any Employee, while insured hereunder, and prior to his sixtieth birthday, has become totally and permanently disabled, as the result of bodily injury or disease, so as to be prevented thereby from engaging in any occupation and performing any work for compensation or profit, the Company will waive the payment of further premiums as to such Employee and three months after receipt of such proof will commence to pay, in lieu of the payment of insurance at his death, monthly instalments as defined below to the said Employee or to a person designated by him for the purpose. * * *

"The number of such instalments shall be limited to either sixty, or to one instalment for each $25.00 of Insurance whichever number is less. The amount of each monthly instalment shall be such as the amount of insurance in force on the life of said Employee at the date of receipt of proof of such disability will purchase, as of the due-date of the first instalment, on the basis of three and one-half per centum per annum, compound interest, and on the assumption that the insured will continue totally and permanently disabled for the period covered by the number of instalments described above.

"The following table illustrates the number of instalments, and the amount of each instalment for certain amounts of insurance:

"If such Amount of Insurance is:	Maximum Number of Instalments	Amount of Each Monthly Instalment
* * *	* * *	* * *
10,000	60	180.00

"On approval of claim of such disability, the insurance in force on the life of said Employee under this Policy shall be discontinued as of the date of receipt of due proof of disability."

permanently disabled * * *." But the phrase "while insured hereunder," as a matter of grammatical construction, modifies the word "Employee" and does not refer to the matter of due proof. More persuasive than mere grammatical construction, perhaps, is the support given by the fact that with the phrase "while insured hereunder" is grouped the further phrase, "and prior to his sixtieth birthday." The latter phrase could have no intelligent bearing on the time when due proof should be made, but does appear as a proper, if arbitrary, limit on the time within which disability must occur. Both phrases clearly have reference to the same event, and the second phrase clearly concerns the matter of time of disability and not time of proof. The clear meaning of the words "while insured hereunder and prior to his sixtieth birthday" is that the disability, and not due proof of disability, must occur while the insurance is in force in favor of the insured. This is buttressed by the more explicit language which is found in the certificate[2] which the insurer issued to the plaintiff.

While one would assume, as the first paragraph of the group policy deals with the question of "due proof," that all provisions in respect thereto would be found in that paragraph only, we are told by counsel for respondent that this is not so. To sustain his view he points to the language in the second paragraph, reading: "The amount of each monthly instalment shall be such as the amount in force on the life of said Employee at the date of receipt of proof of such disability will purchase * * *." Because of this language he contends that it follows that "due proof" must be made while the insurance is in force, and that it is a condition precedent to recovery. For this view he cites Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Phillips, 236 Ala. 259, 182 So. 35, 36. In that case the language of the policy and the certificate was substantially the same as is here involved. The court there said: "The furnishing of proofs was not merely the event upon which payments should begin, but proof while the policy was in force is, by this policy, a condition precedent to liability for benefits." We agree that by the language used in the policy and certificate there involved, as in the instant case, the obligation is to pay in monthly instalments such an amount "as the amount of insurance in force on the life of the employee at the date of receipt of proof of disability will purchase as of the due date of the first instalment [three months hence], on the basis of 3½ per centum per annum, compound interest," and that this language, read literally, prohibits a recovery where the proof was not made while the policy was in effect. However, we do not agree with the Alabama court if its opinion implies that it is a condition precedent to recovery that the insured allege and prove that due proof was made while the policy was in force. Rather, the provision deals with the amount that will be paid, and that amount is nothing if the policy is not in force on the date the due proof is received. But this is not the same thing as saying that due proof while the policy is in effect is a condition precedent. In other words, the failure to make due proof while the policy is in effect is a matter of defense and not an element of the insured's cause of action.

In viewing the clause in question we think it is quite plain that the insurer had in mind, not that due proof of disability should be given while the insurance was in effect, but that the amount it should pay was to be predicated on the amount of insurance in effect at the date of due proof rather than that which might have been in effect at the date insured became totally and permanently disabled. Even so, the insurer neglected to provide, whether intentionally or not, for a situation where the insured was wholly and permanently disabled while insured, and who for want of time, disability or otherwise was unable to, or did not, give due proof while the policy was in force. Such a situation could have been covered by a provision that the computation would be made as of the last day the policy was in force. Had the policy, in terms, so provided, it is clear that the insured would be required to give due proof within a reasonable time. If, on the other hand, it may be said that the insurer intended to stand on the literal language used, then it follows that it must be charged with a desire to entrap not only its unwary policy holders but even those who were quite cautious. We are loath to believe that a company of the size and character here involved would stoop to such a practice. The logical and proper place for all provisions as to due proof was in the paragraph dealing with due proof, and not in the one dealing with the computation of the instalments to be paid.

---

[2] "Under the terms of the Group Policy mentioned on page one of this Certificate, any employee shall be considered totally and permanently disabled who furnishes due proof to the Company that, while insured thereunder and prior to his sixtieth birthday, he has become so disabled as a result of bodily injury or disease as to be prevented permanently from engaging in any occupation or from performing any work for compensation or profit.

"Three months after receipt of such proof, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company will pay to such employee, in lieu of the payment of the insurance under said Policy at his death, equal monthly instalments, the number and amount of such instalments to depend upon the amount of insurance in force on the life of such employee at such date, as shown in the following table. * * *"

[2-4] However, it must be conceded that a careful reading of the second paragraph, read alone, makes it clear that the literal language thereof, in direct conflict with the language of the first paragraph, requires, if it may be permitted to control the language of the first paragraph, a holding that the insurer has no obligation to pay the insured anything where he does not submit his due proof of disability while the policy is in full force. Giving full and controlling effect to such an interpretation would require a holding that an insured employee, who through accident became totally and permanently disabled a few minutes or hours before midnight of the day the policy lapsed, would be wholly without redress even though it had not been humanly possible to submit due proof, at the home office of the insurer in New York, before midnight of the day of the injury. As harsh as such a rule would be, it would accord with the literal language of the second paragraph of the policy of insurance. Such a ruling, if it may be said there is no ambiguity in the language involved, could be sustained on the ground that a policy of insurance, like any other contract, should be construed, in the absence of any ambiguity, according to the plain, ordinary and proper sense of the words used. However, it is plain that the provisions in the second paragraph directly, or at least essentially, conflict with the finality of the language used in the first paragraph. In that situation an insurance contract, like any other contract, is to be construed against the party who is responsible for the contradictory language used. While courts often say that the same rules of construction govern in the interpretation of policies of insurance as in any other contract, it must be admitted that ambiguities are often too easily found in insurance contracts. This is accounted for, perhaps, by the fact that many policies of insurance particularly group insurance, are regarded merely as manufactured commodities—as easily and quickly purchased as a legal form in a stationery store, or a ready-to-wear suit in a clothing store, represented to be all wool and no shoddy.

So far we have discussed the language of the policy in the light of general rules of law, without referring to precedents. As the contract was issued in Missouri, its interpretation is governed by the laws of that state, and so we turn to the decisions of that state for support of what we have said. The only decision from that jurisdiction, on the point here involved, which has come to our attention is that of an intermediate court of appeal. In the absence of any conflicting decision by any other intermediate court of appeal or by the Supreme Court of that state, and we know of none, the decision must be accepted by the parties as well as by this court as stating the law of Missouri. Six Companies of California v. Joint Highway, etc., of California, 311 U.S. 180, 61 S.Ct. 186, 85 L.Ed. 114; Stoner v. New York Life Ins. Co., 311 U.S. 464, 61 S.Ct. 336, 85 L.Ed. 284; Fidelity Union Trust Co. v. Field, 311 U.S. 169, 61 S.Ct. 176, 85 L.Ed. 109; West v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 311 U.S. 223, 61 S.Ct. 179, 85 L.Ed. 139, 132 A.L.R. 956. This is a universal rule. The Supreme Court of the United States has made it plain in the above cited cases that it regards a decision of an intermediate court of appeal of a state as stating the law of the state, unless it is in conflict with the decision of another co-ordinate court, even though such decision is not binding on the highest court of appeal of the state, so long as that court has not pronounced otherwise. In view of that holding the full faith and credit clause would require us to follow it, even if we were of a different view, which we are not.

[5, 6] In Corcoran v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., Mo.App., 93 S.W.2d 1027, 1029, the Missouri court, in construing the language of a Metropolitan group insurance policy evidently the same as the one before as, said: "Defendant further contends that plaintiff's recovery should be defeated because of his delay in making his claim for benefits under the policy. Inasmuch as there is no provision in the policy requiring proof to be made within a specified time after disability arises, we can see no merit in this contention." In view of the foregoing quotation we take it that the Missouri courts would hold that liability is not dependent on the policy-holder's having given due proof while the policy is in force, and at all events that it is not a condition precedent. But regardless of what the Missouri courts would hold on that particular point, we think they would decide that Metropolitan waived the requirement that due proof be made while the policy was in effect. Moreover, as Metropolitan did not make the point below—and that involves a question of procedure governed by the laws of this state—it has no standing to raise the point in this court.

[7] Second: The record discloses that appellant submitted due proof of his disability to the insurer on July 9, 1934. Insurer shortly thereafter denied liability on the ground that insured had not become totally and permanently disabled during the currency of the policy, but it made no claim that the proof tendered was not timely within the terms of the policy. Moreover, the record discloses that when counsel for appellant sought to offer from the files of Metropolitan his letter to it dated July 9, 1934, opposing counsel objected to it because of certain statements contained in it, but stated he had "no objection to the document going in as proof that due proof was made to Metropolitan." In his opening statement to the court counsel for appellant stated that the case would turn on the question as to when the plaintiff became totally and permanently disabled. We think it significant that at no time during the progress of the case did counsel for Metropolitan challenge this statement or make any motions indicating that it was necessary for the insured to allege and prove that due proof of his disability had been given during the period the insurance was in force; nor did it demur to the complaint or raise the point in its answer. The complaint itself alleged that due proof had not been given until July 9, 1934, and that the proof was to that effect. It was not until the court's findings were prepared for signature that there was improperly incorporated therein a negative finding—not within the scope of the issues—that due proof had not been given while the insurance was in effect. As Metropolitan made no issue on the point in the court below it cannot for the first time make it here.

[8] Third: The evidence in behalf of appellant was ample to have sustained a finding that he had become totally and permanently disabled while the policy was in force. The only evidence offered by respondent that tended to contradict it consisted of two items. Accordingly we turn to respondent's evidence to ascertain whether it raised a substantial conflict with the evidence of the appellant. A neurologist called by it, basing his opinion on a recital of factual matters, testified that appellant was not totally and permanently disabled prior to a certain date in 1936. On cross-examination the witness disclosed that he was of the opinion that appellant was totally disabled from October 4, 1932, to the latter part of February, 1933, but that he was not so disabled from the latter date to a date in 1936, as he had made sporadic and futile attempts in that interval to resume his work, without success, and so was not totally and permanently disabled until the effort completely failed. The witness further indicated that his answer to the hypothetical question was predicated on the fact that in his opinion one could not be said to be totally and permanently disabled as long as he made an attempt to, and did, do some minor work. This is not a correct definition under Missouri law, and so the testimony must be held to be inadequate to raise a substantial conflict with the testimony of the witnesses for appellant. It is altogether too vague and inconclusive to support the judgment.

[9, 10] The only other item of evidence produced on the issue by respondent was a report made by government doctors to the Federal Veterans' Bureau. The introduction of the report was objected to on the ground it was hearsay. When that objection was made counsel for respondent stated that his purpose in offering the report was to rebut an inference that appellant was being paid disability benefits by the Veterans' Administration for a condition of total and permanent disability existing prior to 1938. Whether the insured under some other policy was receiving disability benefits, on the theory that he was or was not totally and permanently disabled while respondent's policy was in force, was not admissible evidence. Much less would the trial court have been privileged to draw any inference from the fact. The objection was overruled and the record admitted in evidence. In support of the ruling respondent argues (1) that the record was admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule, in that it was a public record made by public officials under an act of Congress; (2) that as counsel for respondent indicated the purpose for which he offered the record, it must be assumed that the trial court considered the record only for such limited purpose for which it was admissible; and (3) that as the evidence was merely cumulative its admissibility did not constitute prejudicial or reversible error. We see no merit in any of these contentions. In the first place, the record was not a public record. By the statute (38 U.S.C.A. § 456) it may be disclosed only in proceedings in the nature of an inquest of competency or in judicial proceedings when the Director deems such disclosure necessary and proper. Such a restriction on its disclosure completely annuls the contention that it is a public record. The record was in every respect hearsay and not one within an exception to that rule, and should have been so viewed by the court below.

[11, 12] The further contention that we must assume the trial court admitted the record in evidence for a limited purpose and considered it in evidence only so far as the law permits it, is utterly untenable. The trial court overruled the objection generally, and so did not purport to limit the evidence for a particular purpose. Moreover, respondent did not by a mere statement of its purpose, without restricting his offer, limit the evidence. Accordingly, as the trial court did not announce he was receiving the evidence for a limited purpose, we may not assume it did not consider the record in evidence for all purposes. The notion that a trial court when it admits evidence admits it and considers it only so far as it is admissible under the law is not true, either theoretically or practically. However, as respondent by its argument concedes it was not evidence, it follows there is no evidence to support the findings. The further contention that the admission of the record was not prejudicial or reversible error accordingly need not detain us; this for the reason that without it there was no evidence to sustain the judgment. Accordingly, whether the record was or was not considered on the vital issue in the case becomes immaterial, as it was inadmissible and there is no other evidence to sustain the findings and the judgment.

[13] A further contention of respondent, that the trial court was entitled to infer that appellant was not totally and permanently disabled while respondent's policy was in force, because he admitted he had claimed and received disability benefits under the later business men's policy, is demolished on the reef of respondent's own argument. Such an argument is equally as unmeritorious and equally as futile as the argument that because one sues only one of two joint tort-feasors he admits the other was not a tort-feasor. The rules of logic do have their limits.

[14] From the foregoing discussion it is clear that the finding that the insured was not totally and permanently disabled on or prior to February 28, 1933, is not sustained by the evidence. Accordingly, the judgment must be reversed for a new trial on that issue, and that alone.

Judgment reversed.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., and McCOMB, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 558

PEOPLE v. ROBERTS.

Cr. 3548.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 19, 1942.

1. Criminal law ⟹553

Before testimony can be strictured as inherently improbable or unbelievable per se, it must appear therefrom that something has been done which could not possibly be done under the circumstances described.

2. Criminal law ⟹1159(2)

In prosecution for rape and commission of lewd act upon body of child under 14 years of age, with defense of alibi, where accused offered no evidence upon his previous reputation for chastity and morality, evidence was not so inherently improbable as to require reversal of conviction on ground of apparent impossibility of commission of crimes described. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1; § 288.

3. Criminal law 🔑741(1), 742(1)

The jury has the exclusive right and duty to evaluate evidence and determine credibility of witnesses based upon such considerations as bias and candor of a witness, the reasonableness of his story, and his relation to or interest, if any, in the case or the parties thereto. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2061.

4. Criminal law 🔑737(1)

In prosecution for rape and commission of a lewd act upon body of child under 14 years of age with defense of alibi, sufficiency of identification of accused was for the jury in the first instance and for the trial court on motion for new trial. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1; § 288.

5. Criminal law 🔑338(1), 419(1)

In prosecution for rape and commission of a lewd act upon body of child under 14 years of age, testimony by accused of identification of policeman by unknown child, not connected with case or produced as witness, at police station on occasion accused was identified by a victim was inadmissible as irrelevant and "hearsay". Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1; § 288.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Hearsay".

6. Criminal law 🔑768(1)

In prosecution for rape and commission of a lewd act upon body of child under 14 years of age where testimony of prosecutrix was corroborated by direct and circumstantial evidence, refusal of cautionary instructions admonishing jury of dangers with which the prosecutions were fraught and of opportunity for malice and private vengeance and fact accused was almost defenseless was not prejudicial error. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1; § 288.

7. Criminal law 🔑768(1)

A cautionary instruction is proper where testimony of child prosecutrix in prosecution for sexual offenses is uncorroborated.

8. Bail 🔑44

Where accused had been properly convicted of rape and commission of a lewd act upon body of child under 14 years of age, denial of application for admission to bail pending appeal was not an abuse of discretion. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 1; § 288.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Harold W. Roberts was convicted of rape and the commission of a lewd act upon the body of a child under 14 years of age, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Willard W. Burgess, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and R. S. McLaughlin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was charged in count 1 thereof with a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code and in count 2 with a violation of subdivision 1 of section 261 of the same code. Following the entry of not guilty pleas to each count of the information, defendant was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict finding him guilty on both counts and fixing the punishment under count 2 as imprisonment in the county jail. Following the denial of his motion for a new trial, defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the offense charged in count 1 and to the county jail for that alleged in count 2. From both the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant concedes that the evidence, if believed, was sufficient to show that the offenses charged were in fact committed, but argues that the identification of appellant as the perpetrator thereof was insufficient. In view of appellant's concession aforesaid, it becomes unnecessary to detail the evidence, except so far as the same is necessary to show what if any testimony was given upon which the jury could predicate a verdict against the defendant.

There is in the record evidence that on the late afternoon of July 30, 1941, about 5:30 o'clock, the complainant in count 1, a girl nine years of age, was walking on the north side of Calaveras Street, in Altadena, in Los Angeles County. She was with her brother, aged five years, who was riding his tricycle. As they approached the intersection of El Molino and Calaveras Streets, the girl saw defendant driving west in his car; he drove past her and her brother, turned his car around at the intersection of Catherine and Calaveras Streets, and brought the same to a stop alongside the complainant and her brother. Defendant, who was alone in the car, told the children that he had lost his pocketbook on the school grounds and asked them to go with him in an effort to find it. Complainant told him that she would rather go home and ask her mother, but by this time defendant had gotten out of his car; he took hold of the complainant by the arm and told her he would not let her go home. She then told her brother to return home, but he refused. According to the testimony, the defendant then took the two children behind his car, across the street, up the lawn of the school, behind a deodar tree, to the steps leading to the school, and went through the corridor between the wall and the fence. At this point defendant told the complainant's brother to go up to the tennis court, which was in back of the playground, and look for the lost purse. The little boy demurred, but when defendant gave him a dime he acquiesced, and went toward the tennis court. Defendant then took the girl to another corridor, with high walls on each side, near some steps. It was there on the steps that the acts of perversion alleged in count 1 took place. During the commission of the offense the defendant told the girl that he would not hurt her, because he had a little girl of his own. About that time complainant's brother returned, and defendant pushed the girl down the stairs and slapped her in the face, making a mark under her left eye. She started to scream, whereupon defendant told her to desist or he would kill her; nevertheless she continued to scream. Finally he gave her a quarter, but notwithstanding she continued to scream louder than ever. Thereupon defendant ran in an easterly direction to the fence around the school yard. By that time the complainant had her brother by the hand and together they ran down the corridor and steps to the lawn in front of the school, where they met Mrs. Carrie G. Christie and Mr. Charles L. Walters. Accompanied by Mrs. Christie, the complainant went across the street to the automobile out of which defendant had come when he accosted the children. Each of them noted the California state license number 4W592. The complaining witness also testified that she saw the defendant as he ran to his car.

On the following afternoon at the sheriff's substation in Altadena, the complainant was asked to go into a room and see if the man she had seen the day before was in there. At that time there were five or six men in that room, including the defendant, the latter of whom had his hat on and his head down, and was reading a newspaper. The child returned, stating that the man she had seen the preceding afternoon was not in the room. Shortly thereafter she went back and looked at the man who had been reading the newspaper and identified him as her assailant.

The witness Mrs. Christie, who lived across the street from the complainant, was working in her kitchen on the afternoon in question. She saw the little girl and her brother playing along Calaveras Street. She observed a very light gray-colored club coupe drive up to the curb and stop. She saw a man come around the back of the car holding the complainant by her left arm. She saw the man and the child cross the street on to the school grounds, where they disappeared from her view. She was 75 feet from them and could not recognize the man's features. Shortly thereafter Mrs. Christie heard screams coming from the direction of the school and caught the words "Johnnie," "Mother," and "kill." Mrs. Christie looked about for help and saw three high school students riding bicycles, and observed Mr. Walters, a neighbor, approaching in his automobile. Hailing them, she accompanied Mr. Walters toward the steps on the west side of the school. She saw the man who had previously crossed the street with the complainant running along the open corridor of the school. At that time she observed him quite plainly before he turned and ran back into the school. She then saw the complainant and her brother coming down the steps on the other side of the building toward her. She took them across the street to the car and noted the license number of the car parked at the curb, which was the heretofore-mentioned club coupe. Mrs. Christie took the children into her kitchen, where she wrote down the license number. It was then about ten minutes before six o'clock. Looking out of her breakfast room window, Mrs. Christie saw the automobile in question going east on Calaveras Street and heard a screech of brakes as the car swerved around Mr. Walters, who was out in the middle of the street with his arms outstretched attempting to halt the automobile. Mr. Walters jumped to one side as the car swerved.

It further appears in the testimony that when Mrs. Christie hailed Mr. Walters, the latter parked his car. As he approached the school building, he saw the children coming down the steps, and also saw the figure of a man retreating through the school corridor. He gave pursuit, but could not overtake him. When he returned to the front of the school he saw a man running to a light-colored two-door car parked in front of the school. This man was about the same general build as the defendant. The man got in the car and drove east toward Mr. Walters, who was standing in the middle of the street with his arms outstretched. The car passed to the north of him, almost striking Mr. Walters' parked automobile. As this car passed him, Mr. Walters turned and read the number on the rear of the car. It was California 1941 state license number 4W592.

Another witness was Betty Lou Goldwater, who was with two other high school students. Her testimony was substantially the same as the foregoing, except that she saw the man cut across the intersection from the church to the south side of Calaveras Street. She saw Mr. Walters coming down the steps and she called to him. The man turned and looked at her and then started to run toward his car. She testified that man was this defendant. She further testified that she had an opportunity to look at the defendant when his car swerved around Mr. Walters, as she was standing in the street at that time. She noticed that his hair was gray.

About six o'clock, Mrs. Belle Robison was driving south on Santa Rosa Street, approaching Alameda Street. This intersection is one block south and west of the intersection of Calaveras and El Molino. The defendant, who was driving his automobile, failed to make a boulevard stop while traveling 40 miles per hour, and struck Mrs. Robison's automobile. He proceeded down the street without stopping, but turned east on a dead-end street, and a Mr. Fay, who had heard the crash, pursued him. Mr. Fay took the license number on the car, which was 4W592. He saw defendant get out of the car; the defendant was the only occupant thereof. Defendant at that time told Mr. Fay his name was W. Case, and inquired if the lady driving the other car was all right. Mr. Fay took the defendant back to the corner to see Mrs. Robison. The witness present on that occasion testified concerning the defendant: "He had no coat on; he had on a shirt, and I believe they were gray trousers; his shirt was just like he had been under a shower bath; and he got out all red in the face and he was terribly upset, scared or something, or whatever it was, but he was in an awful—well, in an unsettled mood. He told the ladies that it was all his fault. He just took all the blame himself and said that he would pay for everything and he wanted to go someplace and settle the matter."

At approximately 25 minutes after six, defendant telephoned his home, saying to his wife, "Don't wait for me to come home to eat. You folks go on. I will be tied up with the boys, and I will call you later in the evening." Defendant was wearing a light gray suit that day. The record also contains testimony to the effect that on the following day, when the defendant, accompanied by his attorney, called on Undersheriff Jewel of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's office, where a conversation was had, the undersheriff asked the defendant "what caused him to do this," to which defendant replied, "Captain, I have been fighting this since I was in high school."

As to count 2, it appears that on a Sunday morning in August, 1940, the prosecutrix, aged 14 years, and her brother, aged 11, were walking through a park located at Washington and Raymond Streets in Pasadena, about 9:30, on their way to church. The prosecutrix saw defendant seated on a bench near the tennis courts. Returning from church, she again saw defendant sitting on the same bench. As she and her brother approached Washington Junior High School, she saw defendant standing in the driveway leading to the school. He stopped them and asked them if they had seen a gray pocketbook and if they would like to help him find it. After some protest on their part, he instructed the boy to go around the driveway. When the prosecutrix started to go with her brother, defendant insisted that she go with him, taking her by the hand and leading her through various corridors of the school. When she started to scream, he slapped her in the face several times. Since appellant does not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to show that the crime charged was not in fact committed, we will not set forth the details thereof. The child started to scream again, whereupon defendant slapped her and she fell, striking her head. Finally, he knelt beside her, gave her a dollar, told her not to tell her mother and walked down the steps and across Raymond Avenue. When the child arrived home she was hysterical, her face was red, and her clothing was badly soiled. Her mother called police, who took the child to a hospital. Upon being returned to the school grounds, she found a barrette which she had been wearing. Upon that morning a medical examination disclosed recent tears in the child's hymeneal ring, the same having been inflicted, in the opinion of the physician, within less than 24 hours. It was the opinion of the same physician that the child had had a recent act of sexual intercourse. The prosecutrix named in court 2 positively identified the defendant as the man who outraged her person.

[1, 2] Appellant first urges a reversal because of the claimed inherent improbability that he committed the offenses charged, in view of his long and prominent association with outstanding musical and civic organizations in this community, as well as the normality of his family life. In this connection, however, it should be borne in mind that although entitled to offer evidence touching upon his previous reputation for chastity and morality, traits involved in the offenses charged against him, defendant did not choose to do so, notwithstanding his long residence in Los Angeles County. The ground advanced by appellant in support of the claimed inherent improbability in the testimony of his accusers is not the true test. Before testimony can be strictured as inherently improbable or unbelievable per se, it must appear therefrom that something has been done that it would not seem possible could be done under the circumstances described. Neither the direct nor the circumstantial evidence which we shall later discuss, nor the inferences deducible therefrom, can be thus indicted. While the arguments here advanced as to the improbability of the testimony identifying the defendant as the perpetrator of the assaults charged afforded opportunity for a persuasive argument to the jury, we find in them nothing that would justify a reviewing court in concluding that such testimony is per se unbelievable and that it was therefore the duty of the jury not only to wholly disregard it, but to accept the alibi evidence offered by the defendant, or at least find that the defendant's guilt had not been proved by the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. As this court has often heretofore stated, reviewing judges are obviously in no position to determine the credit which should be accorded witnesses or to weigh their testimony. With undoubted recognition of this fact, and in accord with the constitutional provision, the legislature has declared that the jurors are the exclusive and final arbiters of the credibility of witnesses (Code Civ. Proc., sec. 1847), and are the judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, except in those cases where it is ordained by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 2061.

Appellant next attacks the sufficiency of the testimony identifying him as the man who committed the crimes charged. We are satisfied that the evidence touching upon the identification of the defendant was amply sufficient and that his challenge to it is without merit. In the first place, we must remember that the defendant was present near the scene of the crime charged in count 1. The positive identification of his automobile demonstrates that fact. Then we have the positive identification by the prosecutrix named in each count and that of a third witness, Betty Lou Goldwater, in connection with count 1. The conduct of the defendant following the automobile accident in which he figured furnished grounds for an inference that the rate of speed at which he was traveling and his disregard of a boulevard stop signal constituted an effort to flee from the scene of the criminal attack made upon the victim named in count 1. The correctness of the description of defendant's automobile and his general appearance and dress also furnished circumstantial evidence of the correctness of the child's testimony identifying him as her assailant. As to count 2, the complainant positively identified the defendant. She had seen him on her way to church and again when she returned, and was in his company and custody during the time he committed the assault upon her. The jury was also authorized to consider the identical modus operandi resorted to in the commission of both offenses, viz., the claim by the defendant to the children that he had lost a wallet or purse, coupled with the request, on both occasions that the intended victim aid him in finding it. Added to the foregoing is the fact that at the time of his arrest, when being questioned by Undersheriff Jewel, with whom the defendant had enjoyed a friendship extending over a long period of years, the latter, in answer to a question as to "what caused him to do this," replied, "Captain, I have been fighting this since I was in high school."

[3, 4] With reference to the claimed inconsistencies in the testimony of some of the witnesses, we might observe that it rarely happens that a case is presented on appeal in which some inconsistency in the testimony of some of the witnesses may not be discovered. Seldom does a case arise upon the circumstances of which the witnesses precisely agree in all respects, but it does not follow of necessity in such cases that some one or more of the witnesses have willfully given false testimony in relation to the matters about which they have testified. Some one or more may be mistaken or some might have observed circumstances that others did not. Therefore, as we have heretofore pointed out, the law leaves to the triers of fact the exclusive right and duty to evaluate the evidence, determine its inherent value and to award to each witness the credibility which in the judgment of the jury the witness is entitled, based upon such considerations as the bias or prejudice, the candor or lack of candor of the witness, the reasonableness of his story, his relation to or interest, if any, in the outcome of the case, or the parties thereto. It therefore follows that in the case before us the jury was authorized, if it conscientiously felt warranted in so doing, as apparently it did, to reject the testimony of the defendant and the members of his family as to where he was at the time the offenses charged were committed, and to accept as true the testimony of the witnesses who positively identified the defendant, as well as the testimony given by other witnesses, circumstantial in nature, but productive of inferences upon which corroboration of the direct testimony of certain witnesses could be predicated. Uncertainties and discrepancies in the testimony of witnesses, if any there were, the strength or weakness of the identification testimony. all were matters committed to the observation and sound consideration of the jury in the first instance and to the consideration of the trial court on a motion for a new trial. The latter has approved the conclusion reached by the jury, and we being unable to say as a matter of law that substantial evidence is lacking to support the conviction, cannot disturb the same. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 463, 2 P.2d 814.

[5] Appellant next complains of the action of the trial judge in his ruling upon the admissibility of evidence concerning what took place at the sheriff's substation at Altadena on the occasion of the identification of defendant by the children who were complainants against him and by Betty Lou Goldwater. In this connection appellant testified that there were 15 or 18 school children present at the time. Appellant's counsel then propounded to him this interrogatory: "Well, without calling it unusual, I ask you if you recall anything that happened as any of these—any one child may have come to the door of the room with the other group there while you and the police officer, your attorney and the two newspaper men were on the inside; what did you see any of them do?" To this question defendant answered: "Well, I saw them come in and point to the police officer sitting next to me and identify him and a big uproar of laughter went out." The foregoing referred to an identification made by a child who was not identified and who was not connected with the case and did not appear as a witness therein. Upon motion of the district attorney the answer was stricken. In so ruling the trial court was correct. The record is barren of any evidence as to who the other 15 or 18 children were, or what their connection was, if any, with the instant case. The reason for their presence at that time is unexplained. Whether the witness who identified a police officer was asked to point out a person in the room in connection with the charges made against defendant, or in connection with other or similar crimes, or in connection with any crimes, does not appear. As was cogently pointed out by the learned trial judge in ruling upon the motion to strike the aforesaid answer, "we haven't the slightest idea as to what was in the mind of that person when he went to the door, what he identified the individual for, whether he in fact made any identification, or what the meaning was of his pointing. In other words, all we have is an unknown person walking in the door of a room, pointing to a police officer, and what is left? We know nothing of the context, and the matter apparently is disconnected with the case, because the witness, so far as the record now shows, is a witness disconnected with this case." Thereupon appellant's counsel said, "Yes, your Honor, I don't know the name of any such witness." Had the witness who made the mistaken identification of the police officer at the substation been called as a witness at appellant's trial and there identified him, then for the purpose of impeachment such witness could have been questioned as to the erroneous identification made upon another occasion. But under the circumstances here appearing, the proffered testimony was irrelevant, immaterial and hearsay.

[6] Appellant next suggests prejudicial error upon the part of the trial court in its refusal to give to the jury, at the request of the defendant, certain cautionary instructions in which the jury would have been admonished of the dangers with which the class of prosecutions here involved is fraught; of the ample opportunity therein for the free play of malice and private vengeance; of the fact that in such prosecutions the accused is almost defenseless. We are in accord with the expression of our Supreme Court in the case of People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 221, 223, 65 Am.Dec. 506; but in that case the prosecution was based solely upon the testimony of the prosecutrix, unsupported by facts or circumstances corroborating it, and in itself so inherently improbable as to challenge belief by reasonable men. However, where as here, the testimony of the prosecuting witness is amply corroborated by direct and circumstantial evidence, it is not prejudicial error to refuse such cautionary instructions. People v. Rangod, 112 Cal. 669, 672, 44 P. 1071; People v. Adams, 14 Cal.2d 154, 162, 164, 93 P.2d 146; People v. Stangler, 18 Cal. 2d 688, 693, 117 P.2d 321; People v. Corey, 8 Cal.App. 720, 730, 97 P. 907; People v. Currie, 16 Cal.App. 731, 735, 117 P. 941; People v. Scott, 24 Cal.App. 440, 443, 141 P. 945; People v. Caldwell, 55 Cal. App. 280, 298, 203 P. 440; People v. Vaughan, 131 Cal.App. 265, 274, 21 P.2d 438; People v. Agullana, 4 Cal.App.2d 34, 38, 40 P.2d 848; People v. Garrett, 27 Cal.App.2d 249, 252, 81 P.2d 241.

[7] That a cautionary instruction is not only proper but wholesome in the interests of justice in cases where the testimony of a child prosecutrix in cases such as this is uncorroborated, is practically the unanimous holding of our courts. As was said in People v. Lucas, 16 Cal.2d 178, 182, 105 P.2d 102, 104. 130 A.L.R. 1485, "As pointed out in the Adams case, supra, '"There is no class of prosecutions attended with so much danger, or which afford so ample an opportunity for the free play of malice and private vengeance. In such cases the accused is almost defenceless, and Courts, in view of the facility with which charges of this character may be invented and maintained, have been strict in laying down the rule which should govern the jury in their finding."' * * * However, because of some unfortunate language in the case of People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 159, 196 P. 47, trial judges in some instances have felt justified, as here, in refusing such an instruction. The Anthony case is contrary to the uniform rule of decisions in this state to the effect that such an instruction is not improper. Moreover, the objection there voiced to such an instruction, that it contains 'statements of fact, not of law', would appear to have spent much of its force in view of the recent amendment to section 19 of article VI of the Constitution authorizing a trial court to comment on the facts.

"We therefore expressly disapprove of the language in the Anthony case tending to suggest the propriety of refusing cautionary instructions in cases of this character. * * *"

Because the testimony of the prosecutrix in both counts of the information before us was credibly and impressively corroborated, we would not be justified in directing a reversal herein because of the refusal of the trial court to give the requested instructions of a cautionary nature. It should also be noted that the trial court admonished the jury that in deciding the case they were to be governed exclusively by the evidence and were not to be swayed by any motives of sympathy, passion or prejudice.

A reading of the rather voluminous transcript in this case impresses us that the learned trial judge was fair and just to both the prosecution and the defense. Throughout the rather long trial he was patient and kindly disposed toward all the parties and counsel for both sides. Appellant has been fairly tried and justly convicted of the offenses charged against him.

[8] Since this cause was placed upon the calendar of this court appellant has presented an application for admission to bail pending appeal. That application was ordered submitted February 24, 1942. For the reasons herein stated, we find no abuse of discretion in the action of the trial court refusing to admit appellant to bail pending his appeal.

The application for admission to bail is denied. The judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is, affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concurred.

GUDGER v. MANTON et al.*

Civ. 11900.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

March 18, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 17, 1942.
Hearing Granted May 14, 1942.

1. Trial 🔑397(1)

In action for slander of title tried by the court where evidence supported allegation of malice of defendant in causing execution to be levied, finding thereon should have been made by the trial court.

2. Libel and slander 🔑135

A valid lien may not be the basis of an action for slander of title and, if the lien is invalid though the cloud may be removable, the damaging effect on the property in the meantime is measurable, depending upon the facts of the case, and fact no cloud actually existed, standing alone, does not mean there was no damage to the title.

3. Libel and slander 🔑132

The gist of any action for "slander of title" is the besmirching of the title which may be accomplished by wrongfully attempting to impose on property a charge for the obligation of another.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Slander of Title".

4. Libel and slander 🔑132

A person is not always liable in damages for an effort judicially to assert what he believes to be true, but filing and continuing a lien the falsity of which is ascertainable to annoy and vex property owner to a point where he might consent to pay an illegal demand gives rise to action for slander of title.

5. Libel and slander 🔑136

Recordation and continued maintenance of a levy imputing actual interest in property to one known by party responsible for levy to have no such interest is not "privileged".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Privileged".

6. Libel and slander 🔑131

Filing or recording an instrument such as a lien not actionable per se, but in fact maliciously levied and producing actual damage, is a "defamation against title" and actionable as such.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Defamation Against Title".

7. Libel and slander 🔑139

Evidence showing a plan to secure payment of judgment against wife, by levying execution on property of husband as that of wife and that plan was conceived maliciously and pursued malevolently, justified recovery for "slander of title".

8. Attorney and client 🔑29
Libel and slander 🔑138

Where New York attorney without direct authority employed California attorneys to collect judgment of New York attorney's client with implied suggestion that pressure be brought on judgment debtor's husband to effect settlement for fee based upon percentage of New York attorney's contingent fee, New York attorney was a "principal" and not a "forwarding attorney", and was liable for "slander of title" committed by California attorneys who remained record attorneys in local suit on New York judgment in levying execution on property of husband as that of judgment debtor.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Forwarding Attorney" and "Principal Attorney".

9. Attorney and client 🔑102
Execution 🔑462

A principal may be responsible for actual damage caused by wrongful levy of execution by his agent, but is not liable in a suit for damages for agent attorney's malicious conduct, except upon proof of authorization or ratification.

10. Libel and slander 🔑131

Malice, express or implied, is an essential element of any action based upon slander of title.

11. Appeal and error 🔑994(3)

Where case was tried by the trial court without a jury, credibility of the evidence was for the court.

12. Libel and slander 🔑139

Evidence showing the recording of an apparent lien against plaintiff's property for the debts of his wife, offers during the pendency thereof to buy for stated amount, failure to purchase when informed of the lien, market value of the property, and repeated demands for release of the lien, justified an award of damages for slander of title representing the difference between one of the offers and the price that could have been obtained for the property following the release of the levy.

---

* Subsequent opinion 134 P.2d 217.

13. Libel and slander ⚷135

Contention that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for slander of title of property because of a lien, in that he brought the damages on himself by informing prospective purchasers of the existence of the lien, could not be sustained, since the "proximate cause" of damages to plaintiff's title was the slander of title and not his acknowledgment of the existence of the lien.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Proximate Cause".

14. Appeal and error ⚷886

In action for slander of title tried by the court where evidence supported and pleading alleged malice of defendant but there was no finding of that fact by the trial court, findings were amended to cover that fact by appellate court and judgment was affirmed. Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action to quiet title and for alleged slander of title by Francis A. Gudger against Lucile Pugh and Mabel Manton and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, Lucile Pugh appeals.

Findings amended and judgment affirmed.

Harold A. Fendler and Bertin Weyl, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eckman & Lindstrom, Ralph G. Lindstrom, Arthur W. Eckman, and Robert L. Moore, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages for alleged slander of title to certain real property belonging to him, rendered in an action brought against defendants Manton and a number of attorneys, including appellant, to quiet title to the property and to recover said damages. No question is raised on the appeal with respect to that part of the judgment quieting title in plaintiff as prayed.

The facts of the case are as follows: In 1932 a default judgment in the sum of $40,166.45 was entered in the state of New York against plaintiff's wife and in favor of Mabel Manton, growing out of a premarital tort of the former. As the result of a contingent agreement for payment of services appellant, who had represented Mrs. Manton in the action, had a "substantial interest" in the judgment. On December 6, 1934, she wrote Hamilton and Hoornaert of Los Angeles, non-appealing defendants herein, to "immediately institute proceedings for the collection of the judgment in this matter." This direction was without authorization from Mrs. Manton. Following communications between them, appellant wrote Hamilton and Hoornaert on January 10, 1935, in part as follows: "I also note your verification of our understanding upon which you are handling this matter, namely, that you are to receive 20% or 1/5 of my 40% contingent fee. * * * Of course, while the property of the husband is not subject to this judgment, nevertheless, the husband's social and financial position is a factor to be considered." On January 7, 1935, a complaint upon the New York judgment was filed in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles against plaintiff's wife. Some negotiations were conducted among the parties directed toward a compromise of the suit but when no satisfactory progress was made, appellant on February 11th advised the Los Angeles attorneys to "return the papers * * * with your bill." On February 14th, Hamilton and Hoornaert complied with this direction, advising appellant at the same time that they had requested the entry of a default judgment. This was entered February 18th in favor of Mabel Manton and against Mrs. Gudger, plaintiff's wife, in the sum of $48,296.76. The appellant never paid the bill of Hamilton and Hoornaert. For several years thereafter, purporting to act for her client Mrs. Manton, appellant had other attorneys working on the case, consulted them with reference to a substitution of attorneys—which she attempted to procure—and various other phases of the litigation, including the payment to them of percentages of her contingent fee. During this time she also continued to correspond with her original Los Angeles representatives with reference to the litigation, and neither as a party interested in the Manton judgment, nor as the purported attorney for Mrs. Manton, did appellant cause other attorneys to be substituted for Hamilton and Hoornaert. C.C.P., sec. 284.

In the meantime, having attempted to obtain from appellant her authority to proceed with the collection of the default judgment, but without success, Hamilton and Hoornaert communicated with plaintiff Manton direct and received authority from her to collect the judgment against Mrs. Gudger. To this end, without advice to appellant, they gave Sadicoff, another of the defendants herein, authority to levy a writ of execution and, pursuant thereto, the sheriff levied upon "all right, title and interest of defendant * * * in and to" certain real property standing in the name of plaintiff herein, her husband. This writ appears of record in the office of the county recorder of the county of Los Angeles. Immediately thereafter the attorney for the plaintiff herein advised Sadicoff, Hamilton and Hoornaert that Mrs. Gudger had no interest in the property attached and that he would look to each of said parties for "full legal accountability." Following several months' investigation, which included the taking of depositions, the inspection of a safe deposit box, conferences, etc., Sadicoff advised Hamilton and Hoornaert that he was convinced Mrs. Gudger had no interest in any of the property attached; that she "had never had any right, title and interest whatsoever therein" and that the attachment should be released. This was not, however, done, notwithstanding much urging of Hamilton and Hoornaert by the attorney for the plaintiff herein, and the present action was commenced, as above stated, to quiet title to the property and to recover damages for slander of title, appellant Pugh being named as one of the defendants and being served with summons and complaint in New York. After a considerable lapse of time, Hamilton and Hoornaert did release the attachment.

[1] Plaintiff's complaint alleges that the claims of defendants to his property were maliciously made, and that in refusing to cause the levy of the writ of attachment to be released, although they knew it to be inoperative so far as Mrs. Gudger was concerned, defendants acted maliciously, with intent to vex and harass plaintiff, and with full knowledge that their actions would result in a cloud upon, and a slander of the title to plaintiff's property. Damages were predicated upon the malicious and wrongful acts of defendants. Appellant's answer was in effect a general denial, thereby putting in issue the allegations of the complaint. Trial by jury having been waived, the case was tried by the court as a slander of title action, but no findings were made upon the issue of malice, although the evidence is ample to support the allegations of the complaint in this particular. Such a finding should have been made, at least in so far as the appellant herein is concerned. Upon this theory appellant's further contentions will be considered.

The court found that two bona fide offers to purchase plaintiff's property were made during the period of the existence of the lien thereon; that the prospective buyers would have made such purchase for $32,500 and $35,000 respectively but for the cloud upon the title; that the value of the property on the date of the release of the attachment was not in excess of $16,500.

Appellant's initial contention is that the levy of a writ of execution upon "all the right, title and interest" of a judgment debtor in and to real property standing in the name of the judgment debtor's husband does not constitute either a lien against, nor a cloud upon, nor a slander of title to real property, but that even assuming it constituted defamation it may not be designated as a slander of title, for the reason that such levy and such defamation, if any, are privileged.

[2, 3] The validity of a lien depends upon the legality of its foundation. If valid, it may not be the basis of an action for slander of title. If invalid, the "cloud" may be removed by proceedings to quiet title, but the damaging effect, if any, on the property in the meantime is measurable in damages, depending upon the facts of the case. The fact that it may be determined there was no "cloud," may not, standing alone, be the basis of a logical argument that there was no damage to the title. The gist of any action for slander of title is the besmirching of the title, which in this case was accomplished by attempting wrongfully to impose on the property a charge for the obligation of another.

[4] A person is not always liable in damages for an effort judicially to assert what he believes to be true, but if a lien is false, and its falsity ascertainable, and the continuance thereof is prompted by an intention to annoy and vex plaintiff to a point where he might consent to pay an illegal demand, the filing and continuance of such lien is wrongful, and gives rise to an action for slander of title to the property. Ezmirlian v. Otto, 139 Cal.App. 486, 34 P.2d 774.

[5, 6] Needless to say, such defamation could not be privileged. In Coley v. Hecker, 206 Cal. 22, 29, 272 P. 1045, 1048, the court said: "It was the filing, maliciously and falsely, of a document which clouded the title of respondent that caused the injury. The effect would be the same had said document been a forged deed, rather than an unauthorized abstract of judgment." The allegations of pleadings in a proceeding to be tried in a court of justice are sometimes privileged, but this rule does not extend to the recordation and continued maintenance of a levy imputing actual interest in property to one who is known by the party responsible for the levy to have no such interest. It is the imposition, without probable cause, of the cloud of an apparent lien, which defames the title until it is dissolved, that constitutes slander of title to real property. The filing or recording of an instrument, such as a lien, not actionable per se, but which is in fact (Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 116 P. 530; Fitzpatrick v. Clark, 26 Cal.App.2d 710, 80 P.2d 183) maliciously levied and produces actual damage, is a defamation against title and actionable as such. Coley v. Hecker, supra; 37 C.J., p. 130, § 594; Fearon v. Fodera, 169 Cal. 370, 148 P. 200, Ann.Cas.1916D, 312.

[7] The evidence shows that there was no justification for the retention of the lien against plaintiff's property after a clear showing that his wife had no interest therein. This fact, plus defendant's opinion as expressed, that the "social and financial position" of plaintiff was a factor to consider are amply sufficient to demonstrate that the plan was conceived maliciously, and pursued malevolently, in the hope of exacting tribute for the release of the lien.

In the findings, in determining the liability of the parties, the defendants, except in a few instances, were referred to as a group. The appealing defendant was not differentiated from the others, all being referred to as "defendants and each of them." Appellant contends that there was no evidence to justify a finding that she caused the writ of execution to be levied or recorded, or that demand was made upon her for its release, or that she refused to act in that regard.

[8] The first claim in this respect is that a forwarding attorney is not liable for wrongful acts committed by correspondent attorneys in a foreign jurisdiction. It is true that the documents filed do not disclose the name of Lucile Pugh either as a party to the action or as attorney therein. The fact that Pugh, without the knowledge of her client Mrs. Manton, or the authority of Mrs. Manton's then legal representative or attorney in fact, employed Hamilton and Hoornaert to take all steps necessary to collect the judgment against plaintiff's wife for a fee based upon a percentage of Pugh's contingent interest arising from the action in New York, Mrs. Manton's interest in such judgment being in no way involved for the payment of the fee, places appellant outside of the sphere of a forwarding attorney, and legally classifies her as a principal, employing attorney agents directly for herself. The fact that incidentally the employment may have been of advantage to Mrs. Manton in no way changes the relationship of Pugh and her legal representatives. It is true that at one time appellant notified Hamilton and Hoornaert that "it was useless for your office to proceed further in the matter," and instructed them to return the papers "with your bill." The bill for services, $200, seems to have been ignored. Several months later, Hamilton wrote Pugh: "In accordance with your instructions the above entitled matter has been lying dormant." That appellant was interested in prosecuting the claim is indicated by her reply in which she requested the Los Angeles attorneys to kindly advise "what will insure collection after the first execution is levied." As stated, Pugh discussed with Hamilton and Hoornaert the matter of their fee to be paid from her contingent interest; she also communicated with other attorneys relative to execution on the judgment, and fees to be paid them for proposed participation in the action, although her client Mrs. Manton never gave her direct authority to attempt to collect the judgment outside of the state of New York. She left Hamilton and Hoornaert as attorneys of record, however, and never caused other attorneys to be substituted for them notwithstanding that subsequently such substitution was signed by Mrs. Manton. Incidentally, this substitution was permitted to remain unused in appellant's office files. Subsequently Pugh visited Los Angeles, but even then no action was taken to substitute other attorneys.

The delay in the issuance of execution was principally caused by Hamilton and Hoornaert's insistence that their contingent fee should be enlarged as it was found necessary to pay "others." Under a separate agreement with Mrs. Manton, the fee was increased and the levy of execution followed. There should be no hesitancy, is so far as appellant is concerned, in approving findings that "the defendants and each of them caused a writ of execution * * * to be levied," and that after demand by plaintiff or his attorney the defendants other than Sadicoff "refused to release said levy of execution."

[9, 10] Appellant contends "In any event a principal is not liable for a slander of title committed by an agent." The general rule is that a principal may under the circumstances of the particular case be responsible for actual damage caused by a wrongful levy on the part of his agent, but is not liable in exemplary damages for the agent attorneys' malicious conduct except upon proof of authorization or ratification. 7 C.J.S., Attorney and Client, p. 852, § 68. In the present case only compensatory damages were awarded. Proceedings in California upon the New York judgment originated with appellant Pugh as a principal, without the knowledge of Mrs. Manton, her client; she communicated by letter and wire with attorneys in Los Angeles, finally making a journey to California in connection with the matter, and, although she knew that "the property of the husband is not subject to this judgment," she maliciously called attention to plaintiff's property as a factor for consideration, based upon his social and financial position. Though there is evidence from appellant as a witness herein that she had no direct knowledge of the levy, the record is replete with documentary evidence that she intended to maliciously harass and annoy respondent Gudger to the point, if possible, of forcing him to pay the pre-marital tort judgment against his wife. Malice, express or implied, is an essential element of any action based upon slander of title. Fearon v. Fodera, supra. The trial court failed to make a finding thereon. The malicious intent of appellant will be disposed of in the order affirming the judgment.

[11, 12] The briefs of appellant discuss at great length the sufficiency of the evidence, the bona fides of the offers of purchase and the paucity of evidence touching the question of the market value of the property. The complaint and the evidence sufficiently conform. The attack is primarily aimed at the weight and not the admissibility of the evidence. The evidence is not inherently improbable and, if believed—a matter for consideration of the trial court—sufficient to sustain the findings. Russell v. Ramm, 200 Cal. 348, 254 P. 532; Cottingham v. Smith, 28 Cal.App.2d 345, 82 P.2d 479; Coley v. Hecker, supra. The evidence shows the recordation of an apparent lien; offers during the pendency thereof to buy for stated amounts; failure to purchase when informed of the lien; the market value of the property on various dates, taking into consideration the period of recordation; the repeated demands for release following a full investigation of ownership, and the date of release. The amount of damages awarded represents the difference between one of the offers and the price that could have been obtained for the property following the release of the levy.

[13] Other points raised by appellant are without merit, including the contention that plaintiff brought the damages on himself by informing the offerors of the existence of the lien. We cannot subscribe to the doctrine that the owner of property should enter into a contract to sell without disclosing to the purchaser the existence of a cloud against its title. The proximate cause of damages to plaintiff was the slander of title of his property and not his acknowledgment of the existence of the lien.

[14] In conformity with the provisions of section 956a, Code of Civil Procedure, a trial by jury having been waived in the above entitled matter, an additional finding should be and is hereby made. In accordance with the pleadings, the evidence and the views herein expressed, a finding numbered XV on pages 33 and 34 of the clerk's transcript filed for this appeal is hereby amended to read as follows: "That it is true that defendant, Lucile Pugh, employed defendants Hamilton and Hoornaert for the purpose of 'instituting' in California 'necessary proceedings for the collection of the judgment' obtained in New York as aforesaid, and said action numbered 382124 was instituted for that purpose. That in causing the lien to be levied, recorded and continued, defendant Lucile Pugh acted wrongfully and with malicious intent to oppress, vex and annoy the plaintiff Francis A. Gudger." With this amendment to the findings the judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and E. P. MURPHY, Justice pro tem., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 604

KARN v. WILLS et al.

Civ. 12804.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
March 20, 1942.

1. Principal and surety 🔑179

Under the statute relating to action by surety against his debtor after an obligation becomes due and before surety has paid it himself, the principle underlying the statute is of equitable origin and cognizance and is based upon the duty of every person to perform his agreements, and, acting upon such consideration, a court of equity enforces the actual accomplishment of a thing stipulated for on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done. Civ. Code, § 2846.

2. Courts 🔑92

Where Supreme Court held that the cause sued upon was an action ex delicto for fraud, the statement by the court that, under the statute, a writ of attachment could not be granted in actions where equitable relief was sought, was not controlling. Code Civ.Proc. § 537.

3. Attachment 🔑5

Where $4,000 worth of tires were delivered to a partnership in reliance upon contract of guaranty by the terms of which guarantor was to receive 10 per cent. of profits of partnership which allegedly defaulted on contract of purchase, action brought by guarantor to compel payment of purchase price or return of tires to seller, and for an accounting was an action for the recovery of a specific sum of money upon an "express contract", and hence an attachment would issue regardless of the fact that the exercise of equitable powers of the court was also incidentally involved. Code Civ. Proc. § 537.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Express Contract".

4. Attachment 🔑5

Under statute providing for attachment, phrase "direct payment of money" does not mean direct to plaintiff, since by the use of the word "direct" the Legislature intended merely to exclude causes of action for unliquidated sums of money and not to exclude collateral contracts, for a collateral contract or promise may be for the "direct payment of money" as well as the principal promise. Code Civ.Proc. § 537; § 538, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin J. Scheinman, Judge.

Action by B. G. Karn against Howard W. Wills and others, wherein a writ of attachment was issued. From an order denying the motion of Anthony A. Alphier and another for the discharge of the writ of attachment, Anthony A. Alphier and another appeal.

Order affirmed.

William E. Empey, Jr., of North Hollywood, for appellants.

No appearance for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This appeal is prosecuted by Anthony A. Alphier, individually, and Alphier and Wills Tire Company, a copartnership, from an order denying their motion for the discharge of a writ of attachment. Respondent Karn has made no appearance in this court, and the following statement of facts is taken from appellants' brief and the clerk's transcript, which two documents comprise the record on appeal.

On March, 1940, defendants Alphier and Wills formed a copartnership under the name of Alphier and Wills Tire Company, for the purpose of conducting a general retail tire business. In connection therewith, respondent Karn and defendant Wills (on behalf of himself and his partner Alphier) entered into an agreement whereby Wills promised to pay to Karn ten per cent of the profits made from the business, in consideration for which Karn agreed to "have a consigned stock of tires delivered to the above address, the total amount not to exceed at any time $4,000.-

00." Pursuant thereto, respondent Karn entered into a written contract with defendant Fisk Tire and Rubber Company under the terms of which he guaranteed payment for all goods sold by said company to the partnership. The Fisk Company thereafter sold and delivered to the partnership a stock of tires of the value of $4,000, which sum Wills and Alphier agreed to pay in monthly installments of $400, and executed and delivered to the Fisk Company their promissory note for $4,000. Upon default in their first monthly payment to the Fisk Company, respondent Karn brought action against Wills and Alphier, joining the copartnership and the Fisk Company, and prayed that Wills and Alphier be compelled to pay to the Fisk Company the sum of $4,000, or in the alternative, to return the stock of tires to said company; that Wills and Alphier render an accounting of the profits made from the business, and that he be awarded a judgment against the partners for an amount equal to ten per cent of the profits realized from the business, it being alleged in the amended complaint that "said Fisk Co. has orally agreed to accept said tires so sold to defendants, as aforesaid, in satisfaction of said obligation, but that said defendants Wills and Alphier have failed and refused to return said tires to said Fisk Co."

A writ of attachment issued in connection with said suit, but none of the steps taken to procure its issuance appears in the record before this court. On June 29, 1940, the trial court denied appellants' motion to discharge the said writ of attachment.

Upon this appeal from the order denying such motion appellants present the statement of the question involved as follows: "May an attachment properly issue in an action by a surety or guarantor to compel the principal obligors to pay and satisfy the principal obligation due another, when the surety or guarantor has not paid the principal obligation, and where there is no allegation of any indebtedness due and payable to plaintiff?"

While it is admitted that section 2846 of the Civil Code permits a surety to maintain an action against his debtor after an obligation becomes due and before such surety has paid it himself, appellants maintain that such action is wholly equitable in nature, and will not support an attachment. It is further argued that "direct payment of money" under section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure means that plaintiff must be suing on a money demand or indebtedness due to him.

[1] With respect to section 2846, supra, which provides that a surety may compel his principal to perform the obligation when due, it is stated in 23 Cal.Jur. 1072: "The principle underlying this statute is of equitable origin and cognizance, and is based upon the duty of every person to perform his agreements; acting upon this consideration a court of equity enforces the actual accomplishment of a thing stipulated for on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done. (Williams v. Coleman, 70 Cal.App. 400, 233 P. 397; Josephian v. Lion, 66 Cal.App. 650, 227 P. 204.) Under this rule a surety may bring an action to enforce payment of the obligation by the principal without first making payment himself. (Kreling v. Kreling, 118 Cal. 413, 50 P. 546; Los Angeles Rock & Gravel Co. v. Coast Construction Co., 185 Cal. 586, 197 P. 941, stating that a surety against whom a judgment has been rendered, may, without making payment himself, proceed in equity against the principal to subject the estate of the latter to the payment of the debt; Williams v. Coleman, supra, holding that a surety need not defer his action until the creditor has obtained judgment against him, or until he has paid the debt.)" See, also, Eastin v. Roberts, Carpenter & Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 567, 571, 66 P.2d 224.

[2] In support of their contention that an equitable action does not authorize an attachment, appellants cite the case of Hallidie v. Enginger, 175 Cal. 505, 166 P. 1, 2, in which it was stated: "And, finally, let it be remembered that our statute, and statutes like ours grant a writ of attachment only in cases ex contractu, and therefore deny it, both in actions ex delicto and in actions where equitable relief as such is sought." It should be noted, however, that the Supreme Court in that case held that the cause there sued upon was an action ex delicto for fraud, and the decision, therefore, is not controlling here.

In Bennett v. Superior Court, 218 Cal. 153, 160, 21 P.2d 946, 948, it is stated:

"The weight of the decisions of this state is to the effect that, where the foundation of the action is a demand for equitable relief the attachment will not issue, but, as the authorities state, where some exercise of equitable powers, as in settling accounts and striking a balance, is incidentally involved in the action, the writ will issue if the pleadings warrant it. Hallidie v. Enginger, 175 Cal. 505, 166 P.1; De Leonis v. Etchepare, 120 Cal. 407, 52 P. 718; Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 P. 741.

"Stanford Hotel Co. v. M. Schwind Co., 180 Cal. 348, 181 P. 780, 782, disposed of questions very similar to those presented in the instant case. One of the reasons assigned as grounds for discharging the attachment was that it was an action in equity. In that case the prayer of the complaint was for a temporary restraining order enjoining defendants from selling or otherwise disposing of the property involved in the bill of sale, and that the sale be declared void, and that it be decreed that the defendant held the property charged with the payment of plaintiff's claim in the sum of $3,617.60, that the property be sold, and for further and proper relief. The court points out that in that case, as in the instant case, there was no suggestion that fraud entered into the making of the contract. In discussing whether or not an attachment would lie, the court said: 'If a recovery upon such a contract is the purpose of the suit, so far as the right of attachment is concerned, it is immaterial whether the action be regarded as strictly legal or strictly equitable, or partly legal and partly equitable. The subdivision [Subd. 1, sec. 537, Code of Civ.Proc.] does not in terms prescribe that the action must be one in law, or that it may not be one in equity, or that it may not be one of either law or equity, or of both. Hence it is not necessary in order to uphold the writ of attachment to establish the proposition that the action is either legal or equitable. What must be established is that the action is based upon contract, either express or implied, for the direct payment of money. It is clear that this action addresses itself to both the legal and the equitable powers of the court. But that circumstance will not operate to deny the plaintiff a writ of attachment if he is seeking recovery upon the breach of such contract. * * * Consequently, even if such an action may properly be regarded as partially legal and partially equitable, it will make no difference. The plaintiff is nevertheless entitled to a writ of attachment by virtue of the fact that he is suing for a recovery upon the contract which is the gravamen of the action.' * * * The rule is established upon well-considered authority that, if upon the examination of the complaint the gravamen of the action forces the conclusion that it is an action for the recovery of a specific sum of money upon a contract, express or implied, an attachment will issue regardless of the fact that the exercise of equitable powers of the court are also incidentally involved." (Emphasis added.) See, also, McCall v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 527, 36 P.2d 642, 95 A.L.R.1019.

The reasoning of the Bennett case, supra, especially the reference and quotation from the Stanford Hotel Co. v. M. Schwind Co. opinion, is particularly applicable to the facts presented by the case here under consideration.

[3] The contract between respondent Karn and the partnership for the delivery to the latter of a consignment of tires provides that the total amount of such consignment shall not exceed the sum of $4,000 at any time. Thereafter, the Fisk Tire and Rubber Company delivered to the partnership $4,000 worth of tires, relying upon its contract of guaranty with respondent Karn by the terms of which the latter guaranteed payment for all goods sold by said company to such copartnership. An examination of the amended complaint herein forces the conclusion that it is an action for the recovery of a specific sum of money upon an express contract, and that, therefore, an attachment will issue regardless of the fact that the exercise of equitable powers of the court are also incidentally involved.

[4] Appellants' contention that "Direct payment of money under Code Civ.Proc. § 537, means direct to plaintiff," cannot be sustained because while the language "direct payment of money" has been held to be obscure and uncertain, nevertheless when construed in connection with subdivision 1, section 538 of the same code, the courts of this state have come to the conclusion that by the use of the word "direct," the legislature "intended merely to exclude causes of action for unliquidated sums of money, and not to exclude collateral contracts, for a collateral contract or promise may be 'for the direct payment of money' as well as the principal promise." 3 Cal.Jur. 415, citing Willett & Burr v. Alpert, 181 Cal. 652, 185 P. 976; Dunn v. Mackey, 80 Cal. 104, 22 P. 64; Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161.

For the reasons stated, the order appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN, and WHITE, JJ., concurred.

20 Cal.2d 65

COHN v. COHN et al.

S. F. 16564.

Supreme Court of California.
March 25, 1942.

1. Taxation 🔑856, 889

Generally, the state assesses privilege of succeeding to property and computes the tax upon interests of legatees and the degree of relationship, if any, to decedent.

2. Wills 🔑736

The inheritance tax is not one of the "expenses of administration" or a charge upon general estate of decedent, but rather it is collectible out of each specific share or interest to which the beneficiary succeeds.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Expense of Administration".

3. Wills 🔑736

Under Inheritance Tax Act, the personal representative of estate of decedent is primarily liable for payment of inheritance tax, and tax is chargeable against money and other property of the estate in his hands, but fact that personal representative must pay the tax and is authorized to deduct amount assessed against distributive share of each person succeeding to estate does not change the nature of the tax as one upon the right to inherit. Gen.Laws 1923, Act 8443, §§ 3, 9.

4. Wills 🔑736

The provisions of Inheritance Tax Act concerning collection of the tax are "administrative" in character, and they do not fix liability for tax upon the estate. Gen.Laws 1923, Act 8443, §§ 3, 9.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Administrative".

5. Wills 🔑736

The heirs and legatees of a decedent may agree among themselves as to apportionment of inheritance tax, but tax becomes fixed at date of decedent's death and accrues against shares of legatees in accordance with terms of will, and the agreement of heirs and legatees does not affect state's right to the tax or change basis upon which tax is to be computed.

6. Wills 🔑736

In absence of a contrary intent clearly expressed, a contract by which beneficiaries under a will agree to divide estate differently than testator provided does not shift the responsibility for inheritance tax, but each beneficiary must pay amount assessed by state upon value of property bequeathed to him, instead of upon share which he has agreed to accept under terms of the contract.

7. Contracts 🔑152

The terms used in a written contract are to be construed according to ordinary and usual meaning of the language, unless an intent that they should be interpreted otherwise plainly appears.

8. Executors and administrators 🔑289

An estate of a decedent is "available for distribution" only if it is legally capable of being distributed and under state inheritance tax laws an estate is not distributable until all such taxes have been paid. Probate Code, § 1024.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Available for Distribution".

9. Wills 🔑230

Where agreement in settlement of a will contest provided that contestants would accept 55 per cent. of the estate available for distribution, the remaining 45 per cent. thereof to be distributed to respondent individually, the phrase "available for distribution" would be construed as indicating intention of parties to divide amount remaining in estate after payment of all taxes. Probate Code, § 1024.

10. Contracts 🔑154

Where one construction would make a contract unreasonable and another construction equally consistent with the language would make it reasonable, the latter construction is the one which must be adopted.

11. Action 🔑6

In action for declaratory relief to construe contract entered into by beneficiaries under a will in settlement of will contest, documents offered by defendants for purpose of showing that plaintiff had admitted that she was obligated under the agreement to pay inheritance tax upon the 80 per cent. interest devised to her assignor rather than upon the 45 per cent. interest which she agreed to accept, were properly rejected, where none of the documents showed any material facts sought to be established by defendants.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert L. McWilliams, Judge.

Action by Bertha Cohn, as assignee of Levi Cohn, against Alfred Cohn and others, for a declaratory judgment construing a contract entered into in settlement of a will contest. From an adverse judgment, the defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Joseph A. Brown, O'Connor, Neubarth & Moran, Tobin & Tobin, M. L. Choynski, Milton D. Sapiro, Norman A. Eisner, Frederick W. McNulty, and Joseph T. O'Connor, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

James K. Abercrombie, of Visalia, and Gregory, Hunt & Melvin and Wallace Sheehan, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

After certain heirs of Charles Cohn filed a contest of his will, they entered into a contract with Levi Cohn, a brother of the deceased, by which each agreed to accept a stated amount in settlement of his interest in the estate. Subsequently a dispute arose among the parties to the contract concerning the apportionment of the inheritance tax between them, and the respondent, as the assignee of Levi Cohn, brought this action for declaratory relief. The trial court construed the contract as an agreement upon the part of each heir to take a stated percentage of the amount remaining in the estate after the payment of all taxes, and the appeal is from the judgment rendered accordingly.

The will of Charles Cohn devised and bequeathed four-fifths of his estate to his brother, Levi Cohn. The remaining one-fifth was divided between the appellants, who are five brothers and sisters and the issue of a deceased brother and sister. Under the contract made by the heirs, the appellants agreed to accept "fifty-five (55) per cent of the estate available for distribution," the remaining "forty-five (45) per cent thereof to go to and be distributed to * * * [Levi Cohn] individually * * *." Following the execution of this contract, the will was admitted to probate, and all claims, expenses of administration, the federal estate tax and inheritance taxes were paid in full.

As the agreement of the heirs did not affect their liability for the inheritance tax, the state assessed and collected approximately $100,000 based upon the provisions of the will. Of this amount, $94,886 was charged against the interest of Levi Cohn and the balance charged ratably against the appellants. The respondent successfully contended in the trial court that, in determining the share of each of the heirs under their agreement of compromise, the tax paid upon all of the interest should be deducted from the value of the estate, and the remainder, or the amount "available for distribution" apportioned as agreed upon. The position of the appellants is that the contract makes no provision for the payment of the inheritance tax and that the interest of Levi Cohn is chargeable with four-fifths of the amount paid to the state. If this theory is correct, the appellants will pay only one-fifth of the tax although they receive 55 per cent of the estate.

[1-4] Generally speaking, the state assesses the privilege of succeeding to property, and computes the tax upon the interests of the legatees or devisees and the degree of relationship, if any, to the decedent. In re Estate of Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 P. 181; In re Estate of Miller, 184 Cal. 674, 195 P. 413, 16 A.L.R. 694; In re Estate of Watkinson, 191 Cal. 591, 217 P. 1073; In re Estate of Bloom, 213 Cal. 575, 2 P.2d 753; In re Estate of Rath, 10 Cal.2d 399, 75 P.2d 509, 115 A.L.R. 836. The tax is not one of the expenses of administration or a charge upon the general estate of the decedent; it is collectible out of each specific share or interest to which the beneficiary succeeds, and not from the general property of the estate. In re Estate of Wilmerding, supra; In re Estate of Kennedy, 157 Cal. 517, 108 P. 280, 29 L.R.A.,N.S., 428; In re Estate of Chesney, 1 Cal.App. 30, 81 P. 679; 24 Cal.Jur. 460. Under the Inheritance Tax Act of 1921 (Stats.1921, p. 1503, sec. 3; Deering's Gen.Laws, 1923, Act 8443), which was in effect at the date of Charles Cohn's death, the inheritance tax constitutes a lien upon the property passed or transferred, and executors and administrators are liable for it. By Section 9 of the Act, any executor or administrator having in charge any legacy or property for distribution, is directed to deduct the tax therefrom, or, if the property be not money, he is directed to collect the tax thereon from the legatee. Under these sections, therefore, the personal representative of the estate is primarily liable for the payment of the tax and it is chargeable against the money and other property of the estate in his hands. However, the fact that the executor or administrator must pay the tax and is authorized to deduct the amount assessed against the distributive share of each person inheriting or succeeding to the estate does not change the nature of the tax as one upon the right to inherit. The provisions concerning collection of the tax are administrative in character; they do not fix the liability for it upon the estate. Hostetter v. United States, 3 Cir., 113 F.2d 64.

[5, 6] Admittedly, the heirs and legatees of a decedent may agree among themselves as to the apportionment of the inheritance tax, but it becomes fixed at the date of death and accrues against the shares of the legatees in accordance with the terms of the will. Such an agreement does not affect the right of the state to the tax or change the basis upon which it is to be computed. In re Estate of Rossi, 169 Cal. 148, 146 P. 430; In re Estate of Holt, 61 Cal.App. 464, 215 P. 124; Kelso v. Sargent, 11 Cal.App.2d 170, 54 P.2d 26. And in the absence of a contrary intent clearly expressed, a contract by which the beneficiaries under a will agree to divide the estate differently than the testator provided, does not shift the responsibility for the inheritance tax. Each beneficiary must pay the amount assessed by the state upon the value of the property devised or bequeathed to him by the will instead of upon the share which he has agreed to accept under the terms of the contract. Kelso v. Sargent, supra. Although the present compromise agreement makes no reference to the inheritance tax, the contracting parties agreed to accept certain percentages of the estate "available for distribution," and the controversy which has arisen centers upon the meaning of these words. The appellants contend that they simply paraphrase the language used by the testator in his will and were intended to identify the property described by him as: "All my estate of every kind and character whatsoever and wheresoever situate and not required for the payment of funeral expenses, expenses of last illness, properly proven debts, and expenses of administration, * * *." But thus construed, the phrase would be superfluous. The heirs could only agree upon a division of the amount remaining in the estate after the payment of all debts and expenses of administration; these deductions would have to be made regardless of any contract between them.

[7] Terms used in a written contract are to be construed according to the ordinary and usual meaning of the language unless an intent that they should be interpreted otherwise plainly appears. Scudder v. Perce, 159 Cal. 429, 114 P. 571; Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1, 96 P. 884.

[8, 9] An estate is "available for distribution" only if it is legally capable of being distributed, and under the inheritance tax laws of this state an estate is not distributable until all such taxes have been paid. Furthermore, section 1024 of the Probate Code, which superseded former section 1669 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declares that before any decree of distribution is made, the inheritance tax must be paid. See In re Estate of Cohn, 20 Cal.App.2d 550, 67 P.2d 362. Only when these statutory requirements have been satisfied may the estate be distributed, and the language used by the parties to the compromise agreement clearly indicates an intention to divide the amount remaining in the estate after the payment of all taxes.

The case of In re Estate of Chesney, supra, relied upon by appellants, merely holds that in determining the amount of money in the hands of an executor available for the payment of a particular legacy, the court was not required to take into consideration the amount of the inheritance tax imposed upon other bequests. Instead of being of any aid to appellants, the decision is contrary to their position, for it implicitly recognizes that a bequest is not available for distribution until the inheritance tax levied thereon is paid.

[10] Another factor which is entitled to consideration in construing the agreement is that if the contention of the appellants were correct and $94,886 of the tax is deducted from the interest of Levi Cohn under the will, the respondent will receive only about 30 per cent of the estate, based upon a market value of $650,000. On the other hand, if the entire tax is deducted from the value of the estate before it is apportioned among the heirs, the respondent will receive 45 per cent of the amount "available for distribution." Where one construction would make a contract unreasonable or unfair, and another construction, equally consistent with the language, would make it reasonable, fair and just, the latter construction is the one which must be adopted. Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, 90 P. 536; Yeremian v. Turlock, etc., Co., Inc., 30 Cal.App.2d 92, 85 P.2d 515.

[11] The appellants complain that the trial court committed prejudicial error in rejecting certain documents which they offered in evidence. By these documents, it is asserted, the respondent admitted that she was obligated to pay the tax assessed upon the 80 per cent interest of Levi Cohn, and they should have been admitted in evidence as conduct upon the part of the respondent consistent only with a construction of the compromise agreement contrary to that now advanced by her.

The documents, however, do not support the appellants' statements concerning them. In the first of them, which is entitled, "Objections of Bertha Cohn to Confirmation of the Report of the Inheritance Tax Appraiser and to the Fixing of the Inheritance Taxes in Accordance Therewith, and Petition for Adjudicating said Tax," the respondent claimed that the inheritance tax should be based upon the interests allocated by the settlement and that she is liable only for 45 per cent of the tax. This pleading is in accord with her present position.

The second document is a stipulation entered into between the attorneys for the respondent and those representing the state controller by which the amount of the inheritance tax was levied upon the interests of the legatees as set forth in the will. This stipulation may not be construed as an admission that the respondent is liable for 80 per cent of the tax. She had previously objected to the basis upon which the inheritance tax was levied, and the stipulation was intended only as an agreement establishing the total tax to be paid to the state by the executor. Neither the compromise agreement nor the manner in which the tax should be ultimately charged to the respective parties in interest was in any way involved.

The final document is a petition by the respondent for partial distribution of the estate. This was filed in 1935. In it, the respondent asked that the court order the executor to deliver 45 per cent of the estate to her. No mention whatsoever is made of inheritance taxes being charged against her share of the partitioned property. As none of the three documents shows any material fact sought to be established by the appellants, they were properly excluded from evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CURTIS, HOUSER, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

---

20 Cal.2d 71

RITTENHOUSE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

L. A. 18096.

Supreme Court of California.

March 26, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 23, 1942.

1. Prohibition 🔑27

In proceeding for a writ of prohibition to restrain superior court from trying deputy sheriff for accepting a bribe from operator of bookmaking joint, evidence showed that grand jury investigation at which petitioner testified was held for sole purpose of determining whether petitioner had accepted money to protect persons guilty of violating state gaming laws and hence petitioner was not entitled to immunity granted by statute to witnesses testifying in investigation of gaming. Pen.Code, §§ 68, 330, 334, 337a.

2. Witnesses 🔑304(4)

No protection is afforded a witness testifying in an investigation when the subject of the investigation is bribery, but protection is confined solely to those witnesses who testify in a case where the defendant is charged with gaming or in an investigation of the offense of gaming. Pen.Code, §§ 68, 330, 334, 337a.

HOUSER, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceeding by Charles J. Rittenhouse for a writ of prohibition directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County to restrain such court from trying a certain criminal action therein pending against petitioner, or from making any order or taking jurisdiction in such action, except to dismiss it, and for a writ of review of an order entered by the court denying petitioner's challenges of its jurisdiction.

Petition for writ of prohibition denied, and alternative writ discharged, and petition for writ of review denied.

Rehearing denied; EDMONDS and CARTER, JJ., dissenting.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, Harold W. Kennedy, Asst. Co. Counsel, John F. Dockweiler, Dist. Atty., and W. E. Simpson, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, Justice.

Petition for a writ of prohibition directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, to restrain said court from trying a certain criminal action therein pending against petitioner, or from making any order or taking jurisdiction in said action except to dismiss said case.

Petitioner was charged in the indictment with the crime of bribery in violation of section 68 of the Penal Code. Said indictment contained 61 counts, each of which was in the same language excepting as to dates. Petitioner during the entire time embraced within the accusations of said indictment was a deputy sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, and it was charged in Count One of said indictment that defendant on the 26th day of September, 1938, "did wilfully, unlawfully, corruptly, knowingly and feloniously, ask, receive, and agree to receive of and from John R. Osborne, a bribe, to-wit: the sum of One Hundred Dollars ($100.00), lawful money of the United States, for the purpose of corruptly influencing the action of said defendant, Charles Rittenhouse, and upon an agreement and understanding that the action of said defendant, Charles Rittenhouse, upon a matter then and there pending, and which was then and there before, and which might be brought before said defendant, Charles Rittenhouse, in his official capacity, to-wit, the arrest of the said John R. Osborne, and his agents and employees, for violations and a violation of various subdivisions of Section 337a of the Penal Code of the State of California, should be unlawfully and corruptly influenced thereby, said defendant, Charles Rittenhouse, being then and there an executive officer, to-wit, a duly appointed, commissioned and acting Deputy Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, State of California."

Respondent filed a demurrer and answer to said petition. In view of the conclusion which we have reached, the issues raised by the answer become immaterial.

The indictment was returned on May 28, 1941. Prior thereto and on May 14, 1941, petitioner, in response to a subpoena issued and served on him, testified before the grand jury of said county in an investigation then being made by said grand jury. In his petition for said writ petitioner has set forth certain matter occurring before the grand jury, on the occasion of his appearance as a witness before that body and has made the reporter's transcript of his testimony taken at that time a part of his said petition. It is petitioner's contention that at said session of the grand jury he testified to matters concerning gaming in the county of Los Angeles, and particularly with reference to gaming at a place operated by one John R. Osborne in the so-called West Hollywood strip, which is not within the limits of any city and is therefore under the police jurisdiction of the county of Los Angeles. He accordingly claims that he was given statutory immunity under section 334 of the Penal Code, "and that such statutory immunity has removed the jurisdiction of said superior court to try the petitioner on the charge on which he was indicted."

On the other hand, respondent contends that petitioner testified voluntarily before said grand jury and expressly waived any immunity afforded him by the terms of said section 334. As a further defense to said petition, respondent urges that the immunity provided for by said section of the Penal Code attaches only in those cases in which the investigation concerns gaming violations, and that it may not be invoked when, in an investigation of another class of offense, testimony respecting gaming is received because it is relevant to such other offense under investigation. In view of the conclusion we have reached in respect to this last-mentioned contention, we deem it unnecessary to consider the argument of respondent that petitioner voluntarily testified before said session of the grand jury and expressly waived the immunity afforded by the terms of section 334 of the Penal Code.

Respondent's position, as indicated by the language of its second contention stated above, is that the investigation at which petitioner testified was one to determine whether section 68 of the Penal Code [Receiving a Bribe by a Public Officer] had been violated by petitioner, and not whether section 337a or any other section of the Penal Code concerning the offense of gaming had been violated. In the case of In re Critchlow, 11 Cal.2d 751, at page 760, 81 P.2d 966, 971, this court, speaking of the immunity granted under section 334 of the Penal Code, held: "The protection is afforded only when the testimony is given in investigations of offenses which are the subject of the statute, viz., gaming; and not when for any reason the investigation is of a different class of offense."

The record before us, and particularly the reporter's transcript, clearly indicates and shows that the investigation at which the petitioner testified concerned the offense of bribery. While there was testimony which related to violations of the gaming laws of the state, this was necessarily admitted to prove the charge for which petitioner was indicted, which was accepting money from John R. Osborne to protect the latter from arrest for violating the gaming laws of the state. In the first place, these alleged violations of the gaming laws occurred during the years 1938 and 1939, and the testimony of the petitioner was given before the grand jury on May 14, 1941, from two to three years after the asserted violations of the gaming laws by Osborne, the alleged bribe-giver. The record before us not only fails to show that any proceedings were pending against Osborne based upon those violations, but the reporter's transcript shows that Osborne never was prosecuted for said offenses. The whole tenor of petitioner's testimony before the grand jury indicates that the investigation was made for the purpose of determining whether he had accepted money from Osborne to protect the latter from arrest. We shall note only a few passages from the reporter's transcript in support of the foregoing statement.

Petitioner testified that on one occasion in the early part of 1941, he had a conversation with a deputy district attorney, who stated to him: "Let me speak very frankly. After all, we are on the other side of the fence right now. In about ten days I am going before the Grand Jury, and if I do you are going to the penitentiary." To which petitioner replied: "I have played the game squarely down there. I am taking a lot of stuff that has not been coming to me because I have been played in the center with Contreras." Further on petitioner stated: "I hadn't finished my statement about what I meant by being put in the center. So Utley and Coyne then started a campaign of smear, in West Hollywood and Sunset Boulevard with my name and Contreras' name tied together, and Mr. Biscailuz's name, and they enumerated a lot of places that had been knocked over for over a year or two years. That is what I mean by saying I have been kicked around. I was constantly being called on to explain this and that report."

In his testimony petitioner admitted that there were many places where illegal gaming was carried on; in fact, they were wide open. In this connection we quote from his testimony as follows: "I mean wide open like the place over the Home Ice Company ran for over a year without ever being bothered. That's what I mean by running wide open, and there are lots of places. When Contreras said not to knock them over, I followed orders." By the expression "knock them over" petitioner evidently meant that he closed them up and arrested the operators.

In his testimony petitioner referred to a number of other places where illegal gaming was being carried on and where no arrests were made due to orders from his superiors. He said that in some instances he was instructed not to make an arrest until he saw a bet made, and that he spent long intervals of time in some of these places "until a bet would come in." He did not state whether he made an arrest or closed the place after he witnessed the making of a bet.

Petitioner testified in some detail as to the operations of Osborne, but, as stated above, that Osborne was never prosecuted as there was not evidence on which to prosecute him. He was asked whether he received "$100 a week from Mr. Osborne for protection for his bookmaking joint," to which he replied: "I received nothing from Mr. Osborne or any one else for protection or anything else at any time." At another place in his testimony, referring to a man named Utley, petitioner stated: "He also told me he knew where somebody had given me money. I told him at that time he knew where to go. There isn't a person who can say they have ever given me a cent."

After the deputy district attorney had finished questioning the petitioner, the latter made the following statement: "There is one statement I would like to make. I want you ladies and gentlemen to know that as a citizen and as a father of two boys long in the service of this country—one is a sergeant who received an appointment to Annapolis—and I have been a conscientious officer. I want you to weigh those facts and where these other facts are coming from—this Osborne with his record, a man who robbed widows and orphans at Valhalla and the Government sent him away; a man who has constantly violated every law since he has been here, even coming to Mr. Cooper and telling him that there was a corrupt officer. I want you to consider Mr. Utley and the man I have mentioned, Mr. Coyne. That is all I asked you. I believe when you weigh those things you will arrive at the right result, and that is all I ask you. Thank you for your courtesy."

[1, 2] Reading the reporter's transcript from one end to the other, we find nothing therein, or from any other source, that would indicate that the purpose of the investigation in which the petitioner testified before the grand jury was to ascertain whether the laws of the state against gaming were being violated. All acts which purported to be violations of the gaming laws of the state were shown to have been committed long before petitioner gave his testimony before the grand jury. No prosecutions for such violations were then pending. On the other hand, the record before us, and particularly the reporter's transcript, shows that the investigation at which petitioner testified was being held for the purpose, and for the sole purpose, of determining whether petitioner had accepted money to protect parties guilty of violating the gaming laws of the state. The evidence given by the petitioner concerning the offense of gaming was merely incidental and preliminary to the proof of the charge of bribery then under investigation. It goes without saying that a public officer could not be found guilty of accepting money for protecting a person guilty of violating the gaming laws of the state without some evidence to show that said laws were being violated and that the officer had knowledge of such violation. Insofar as any evidence concerning gaming was given by the petitioner before the grand jury, it was confined to proof that illegal gaming existed within his district to his knowledge. As we have seen, this evidence was offered not for the purpose of prosecuting the person guilty of violating the gaming laws, but as a foundation upon which to predicate the charge of bribery, for which crime petitioner was subsequently indicted. No protection is afforded a witness testifying in an investigation when the subject of the investigation is bribery. It is confined solely to those witnesses who testify in a case where the defendant is charged with gaming or in an investigation of the offense of gaming. In re Critchlow, supra. Petitioner's testimony was not given in either of such proceedings. He is therefore not protected from prosecution based upon the indictment charging him with the crime of bribery.

For the reasons herein stated the petition for a writ of prohibition is denied and the alternative writ is discharged. Petitioner also asked for a writ of review of the order denying his challenge to the jurisdiction of the court to try him upon said indictment in case his petition for a writ of prohibition should be denied. The petition for a writ of review is denied for the same reasons upon which we base our denial of the petition for a writ of prohibition.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, and TRAYNOR, JJ., concurred.

HOUSER, J., dissented.

50 Cal.App.2d 736

SHORE v. CRAIL.

Civ. 12853.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
March 26, 1942.

1. Building and loan associations 🔑10

Where purchaser of building and loan association's capital stock from sole owner granted an option to seller to repurchase the stock for $1 plus a consideration to be computed under contract requiring purchaser to render personal services during existence of option, minimum salary advanced to be paid out of earnings "if and when collected," and there were no net earnings prior to exercise of option, the minimum salary paid as advance was not recoverable and hence seller could not offset amount of such salary paid against money owing to purchaser on exercise of the option.

2. Pleading 🔑37

A defendant will be presumed to have pleaded his case as favorably as the facts permitted.

3. Appeal and error 🔑909(5)

On appeal from judgment for plaintiff who sued for money due under option to purchase contract, it would be presumed that plaintiff did not breach the provision which required plaintiff to deliver to defendant a statement of assets and liabilities where only breach claimed by defendant was that plaintiff drew more as salary than he was entitled to under contract.

4. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)

When appeal is on the judgment roll, it must be presumed that the evidence supports a finding.

5. Trial 🔑404(1)

A finding will be construed with other findings to support a judgment.

6. Estoppel 🔑90(6)

Where purchaser of building and loan association's capital stock from sole owner granted option to seller to repurchase stock for $1 plus a consideration computed under contract which required purchaser to deliver to seller monthly statements of assets and liabilities and income and expenses, seller who authorized withdrawal by purchaser of more than minimum salary to which purchaser was entitled in absence of profits, was "estopped" in purchaser's action to recover money due under option, from setting up withdrawal as a breach of the contract.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Estop".

7. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)

On appeal on the judgment roll, the appellate court was bound by trial court's implied finding.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1033(1)

An alleged error in favor of defendant could not be considered on appeal from judgment by defendant only.

9. Interest 🔑19(2)

Under contract requiring seller on exercise of option to repurchase building and loan association stock to pay to purchaser 1 per cent. on investments in certificates in excess of existing certificates, where amount of certificates outstanding on day of contract was reflected in books of association and amount of certificates on day option was exercised was a fixed quantity, amount due purchaser was mathematically calculable and hence interest was properly allowed thereon. Civ.Code, § 3287.

10. Interest 🔑19(2)

Under contract requiring seller on exercise of option to repurchase building and loan association stock to pay to purchaser 1 per cent. on all investments in certificates in excess of existing certificates, the amount owing to purchaser was not rendered "unliquidated" so as to preclude recovery of interest thereon, because an offset against amount recoverable was allowed, where ownership of such offset might have been acquired by seller from the association subsequent to seller's exercise of option. Civ. Code, § 3287.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Unliquidated".

11. Interest 🔑19(2)

A claim for amount mathematically calculable was not rendered "unliquidated" so as to preclude recovery of interest thereon, because an offset against such amount was allowed, where offset was itself liquidated in amount. Civ.Code, § 3287.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Caryl M. Sheldon, Judge.

Action by Egerton Shore against Joe Crail, Jr., to recover money allegedly due under an option to purchase contract after exercise of the option by defendant, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Crail, Shearer & Waters, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warren E. Libby and Paul C. Hill, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal, on the judgment roll alone, by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover money allegedly due under an option to purchase contract after exercise of the option by defendant. The following material facts are disclosed by the findings: On or about December 1, 1936, defendant, who was then the owner of all the outstanding capital stock of the Hollywood Building & Loan Association, sold and delivered the same to the plaintiff in consideration of the execution by plaintiff of an agreement with defendant whereby plaintiff granted defendant an option, for the period of twenty-five years, to repurchase all of such stock for the sum of $1 plus a consideration to be computed as therein provided and whereby plaintiff also covenanted that during the existence of the option he would render personal services to the association, including its active management "under the advice, counsel and supervision" of defendant; that he would "endeavor to obtain additional private investment in the certificates of said association;" that all profits should inure to the benefit of the association; that he would on or before the tenth of each month deliver to defendant "a full and complete statement of the assets and liabilities of the association as of the last day of the preceding month and of its income and expenses during the preceding month;" that he would "take as salary or other compensation for my services not to exceed the following sums, which are to come only out of earnings, except that the first One Hundred Fifty Dollars ($150.00) of my salary shall be payable regularly out of future anticipated earnings whether the earnings are yet sufficient to pay the same or not, but my salary if so advanced is to be finally paid out of earnings, if and when collected.

PROVISIONS APPLICABLE DURING TERM OF OPTION

"One Hundred Fifty Dollars ($150.00) per month until the monthly net earnings exceed Three Hundred Dollars ($300.00) per month. * * *

"I will submit a budget to Joe Crail, Jr. [defendant], and no expense shall exceed a budget approved by him until he has approved a revised budget including such items. * * *

[PROVISIONS APPLICABLE ON EXERCISE OF OPTION]

"In addition to the dollar above provided for, provided the above provisions and obligations on my part have been fully complied with, I shall also receive upon the exercise of this option an adjustment if necessary which, combined with my salary, will make my total earnings from the association and its business one-quarter of net earnings plus my salary. * * *

"I shall also receive one per cent (1%) on all investments in certificates or shares of the association in excess of present certificates."

It will be noted at this point that of the provisions applicable on exercise of the option as above set forth those in the first paragraph call for an adjustment of plaintiff's salary or earnings from the association while that stated in the second paragraph is no part of his "total earnings from the association and its business" but is exclusively a part of the consideration to be paid plaintiff by defendant upon the latter's purchase of the stock in exercise of his option.

On January 21, 1939, defendant exercised the option and paid plaintiff the sum of $1 but no more, asserting that under the factual conditions and a proper construction of the contract no further payment was due. Plaintiff thereupon brought this action, alleging among other things that under his management substantial profits had been earned by the association entitling him to certain salary adjustments provided for pursuant to a sliding scale specified in the contract and that additional investments in association certificates had been made, on the excess of which over the certificates outstanding at the date of the contract there was due him from defendant an allowance or commission of one per cent. Defendant filed an answer and a cross-complaint denying that the association had earned any profits during the term of the option and charging that plaintiff had withdrawn more than the $150 per month minimum "advance" or salary to which he was entitled pursuant to the contract in the absence of earned and collected profits and that defendant's stock in the association had thereby been depreciated in value to defendant's damage.

The trial court found that the association achieved no net earnings during the option term but that the public investment in certificates had increased some $264,192. On the basis of that finding it concluded that plaintiff was entitled to no salary adjustment but that he was entitled to receive $2,641.92 (being one per cent of the certificate investment excess) from defendant. It further found that plaintiff had withdrawn from the association $800 more than the minimum salary to which he had been entitled and allowed this sum in favor of defendant as an offset against the $2,641.92 found due from him to plaintiff. It also specifically found that "it is not true that by reason of withdrawal of funds by plaintiff or any act of plaintiff that the value of stock was decreased and/or that defendant was damaged thereby." In view of the last-mentioned finding it is difficult to see on what theory defendant was allowed the benefit of the $800 overpaid by the association to plaintiff. The record shows no assignment of the claim for that amount from the association to defendant. However, we are not here concerned with possible error in favor of defendant, there being no appeal by plaintiff.

Defendant contends (1) that under the correct construction of the contract the minimum salary paid to plaintiff was a mere advance against earnings, that plaintiff should be required to reimburse the association for all money so advanced and that the amount due the association as reimbursement should be offset against any money accruing to plaintiff from defendant on exercise of the option; (2) that plaintiff breached the option agreement by drawing more than $150 per month salary while no profits were being earned and hence that under the provisions applicable on exercise of the option he either forfeited or there did not accrue to him the right to any compensation other than the $1 which was paid; (3) that the amount awarded plaintiff was not previously liquidated and hence that the court erred in awarding interest thereon to plaintiff. We conclude that none of such contentions is tenable.

SALARY PAID AS ADVANCE AGAINST EARNINGS NOT RECOVERABLE

[1] (1) By the language of the contract hereinabove quoted the payment of the $150 per month to plaintiff was unconditional; there was a conditional provision by which under certain circumstances the salary so paid would be charged against the association's earnings. That condition would arise only upon earnings by the association "if and when collected." The court found that during the pertinent period there were no net earnings; hence, obviously, the condition never arose.

It may be remarked in passing that while no California case on this subject has been called to our attention it appears to have been held in several other jurisdictions, in cases on contracts providing in various forms for advances by an employer to an employee on account of commissions to be earned subsequently, that the use of the word "advance" does not imply the creation of a debt in the first instance and generates no obligation of repayment except out of commissions earned, where none is expressly stated or fairly to be implied from provisions which are so stated (see Kane v. Auto Laks Mfg. Co., Sup. (1918), 172 N.Y.S. 275; Schlesinger v. Burland (1903), 42 Misc. 206, 85 N.Y.S. 350; Arbaugh v. Shockney (1904), 34 Ind. App. 268, 276, 277, 71 N.E. 232 (Opinion on Rehearing), 72 N.E. 668; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mooney (1888), 108 N.Y. 118, 15 N.E. 303; Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Fraser (1924), 128 Wash. 171, 222 P. 228; 2 C.J.S., Advance, p. 496). As already suggested, there is nothing in the contract here which on any contingency whatsoever imports an obligation on plaintiff to repay to the association (or to defendant) the minimum salary paid him.

DEFENDANT ESTOPPED TO CLAIM AS BREACH ACT PREVIOUSLY APPROVED BY HIM

(2) As to the second proposition, it is true that the court found as hereinabove related, that plaintiff caused the association to make him overpayments of salary aggregating $800. But it is also true that the contract in question was a bilateral agreement, executed by both plaintiff and defendant, which gave rights to, and imposed reciprocal obligations upon, both parties. Among other things it provided that plaintiff would undertake "the active management of the association under the advice, counsel and supervision" of defendant; that each month plaintiff would deliver to defendant a statement of assets and liabilities and of income and expenses; that he would submit a budget and that no expense should exceed a budget approved by defendant.

[2-8] In addition to alleging overpayment of salary, defendant pleaded breach of the contract by plaintiff in several particulars, none of which is upheld in the findings. He did not plead any failure of plaintiff to deliver monthly the statement of assets and liabilities and of income and expenses; it is to be presumed that defendant pleaded his case as favorably as the facts permitted (Gruwell v. Seybolt (1889), 82 Cal. 7, 9, 22 P. 938; Whittemore v. Davis (1931), 112 Cal.App. 702, 708, 297 P. 640; see also Page v. City of Santa Rosa (1937), 8 Cal.2d 311, 314, 65 P.2d 775), and since the execution of the contract and its performance generally, except as assertedly breached, are averred and relied upon by both plaintiff and defendant, and since each is, in effect, permitted to recover, it will be presumed on this appeal that there was no breach by plaintiff by way of failure to deliver such monthly statements of income and expenses. Furthermore, on the issue of expenses, the court, in negating defendant's claim in that regard, specifically found that it was "not true that plaintiff caused the expenses of the operation of the * * * Association * * * to be in excess of amounts approved by the defendant." As this appeal is on the judgment roll, it must be presumed that the evidence fully supports such finding (Coyne v. Spellacy (1938), 12 Cal.2d 284, 286, 83 P.2d 715); a proper inference from that finding, construed with the others to support the judgment (Anglo-California T. Co. v. Oakland Rys. (1924), 193 Cal. 451, 460, 461, 225 P. 452), is that defendant, in performing his duty under the contract to give "advice, counsel and supervision" to plaintiff, and in passing on the budget, expressly authorized and approved the withdrawal of the extra $800. The fact that plaintiff was building up the public investment in certificates of the association in a substantial amount (an increase of more than $264,000 as of the date the option was exercised) and that he was entitled, on exercise of the option, to receive one per cent upon such amount, may well have been considered by defendant as a proper basis for permitting the withdrawal of the excess salary. Under such circumstances the defendant is estopped in an action between himself and plaintiff, from setting up the withdrawal as a breach of the contract. In any event, since the trial court impliedly found the withdrawal not to be a breach of the contract we are, on this record, bound by such finding. As noted above, if there was error in favor of defendant in allowing the $800 as an offset against the amount due from him it cannot be considered on this appeal; only plaintiff could be aggrieved thereby and he has not appealed.

INTEREST ALLOWANCE PROPER ON AMOUNT MATHEMATICALLY CALCULABLE

[9-11] (3) Lastly, there was no error in awarding interest on the amount found due to plaintiff. By the terms of section 3287 of the Civil Code "Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day * * *." A mere mathematical calculation was all that was required to determine the amount due plaintiff on the claim which was allowed. The amount of certificates outstanding on the day he took over control was reflected in the books of the association; likewise, the amount of such certificates on the day the option was exercised was a fixed quantity. One per cent of the excess of the latter over the former thereupon became due plaintiff from defendant. The suggestion that such amount was nevertheless rendered unliquidated because an offset was allowed is not tenable. If we assume that the offset was properly allowed to defendant (which we do not decide) we are still confronted with the possibility that the ownership of such offset (including the right to interest on it, if any) may have been acquired by defendant from the association subsequent to his exercise of the option and the creation of his ensuing debt to plaintiff. The record is entirely silent as to how or when defendant acquired title to such claim from the association; the finding previously quoted does determine that the value of defendant's stock was not impaired and that defendant was not himself damaged by any act of plaintiff. Furthermore, the offset appears itself to have been liquidated in amount and hence would not operate to make plaintiff's claim unliquidated. (See Hansen v. Covell (1933), 218 Cal. 622, 629-632, 24 P.2d 772, 89 A.L.R. 670.) In any event, in the absence of the evidence, we are unable to ascertain error in the judgment as rendered.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, J., and SHAW, J. pro tem., concurred.

* * *

SUBLETT v. HENRY'S TURK & TAYLOR LUNCH et al.[*]

Civ. 11768.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 21, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

A finding of fact by trial court supported by uncontradicted evidence of plaintiff cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Master and servant 🔑3(1)

Where employer required employee to "kick-back" part of each payment of his wages, the repayment was not against "public policy" so as to justify recovery of amount so paid by employee on ground of violation of alleged minimum wage agreement between employer and employee's labor union. Civ. Code, § 1667, subd. 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Public Policy".

3. Master and servant 🔑3(1)

Where employer required employee to return part of each payment of his wages as a condition of employment, the agreement was not made under "duress" or "menace" so as to justify recovery of sums so paid by employee.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Duress" and "Menace".

4. Master and servant 🔑80(9)

In action by employee for wages repaid employer pursuant to contract of employment based on alleged violation of collective bargaining agreement between employer and employee's labor union, evidence was insufficient to raise implication of execution of such agreement.

5. Contracts 🔑187(1)

The rights of a third person to sue on contract made for his benefit depend on terms of the contract and are no greater than granted by the contract as intended by the parties, or, if the contract were enforced between the nominal parties, the beneficiary being in no better position than the promisee; and to recover, the beneficiary must bring himself within the terms of the contract. Civ.Code, § 1559.

6. Master and servant 🔑80(6)

In action by employee, for wages repaid employer pursuant to contract of employment on ground of violation of collective bargaining agreement between employer and employee's union, when employee failed to sustain burden of proof of execution of alleged agreement, he was not entitled to recover.

7. Master and servant 🔑73(8)

Where employee agreed to condition of employment requiring him to "kick-back" a portion of his wages to the employer and accepted and retained the reduced amount, parties modified the amount of wages prescribed, and employee "waived" any right to recover sums so repaid on ground that repayment violated a collective bargaining agreement between employer and employee's union.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Waive".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Raymond Sublett against Henry's Turk and Taylor Lunch and others for amount allegedly due as wages. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

---

[*] Subsequent opinion 131 P.2d 369.

Milton Marks, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Belli & Leahy and Melvin M. Belli, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

The plaintiff alleged in his complaint a cause of action for a balance due for wages earned under a contract evidenced by three written instruments. The defendants filed an answer denying there was any balance due the plaintiff for wages earned and denying there was any written instrument executed by the parties. After a trial before the court sitting without a jury the court made findings in favor of the plaintiff and from the judgment based on said findings the defendants have appealed.

[1] In his complaint the plaintiff, among other things, alleged: "That on or about the first day of February, 1936, defendants and each of them, by written instruments, contracted and agreed with said Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union, Local No. 30, for the benefit of the members of said Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union, Local No. 30, and particularly for the benefit of said Raymond Sublett, plaintiff, and in consideration of said Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union, Local No. 30, leasing and renting to defendants, and each of them, for the purpose of their display, a Union House card, said card by common practice, custom and usage signifying to the public that said defendants, and each of them, conformed to Union Wages, hours and practices and held themselves out to the general public as so doing, to pay plaintiff as an employee * * *" The trial court among others made a finding as follows: "That on or about the first day of February, 1936, defendants, and each of them, by written instruments, contracted and agreed with said Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union, Local No. 30, in consideration of said Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union, Local No. 30, leasing and renting to defendants, and each of them, for the purpose of their display a union house card, to pay the union scale of wages as provided in said written instruments; * * *" Said allegation in the complaint was, in short, that defendants promised to pay the union wage. The finding in response was to the same effect. The plaintiff supported his complaint by his own testimony. The defendants offered no evidence. Clearly the finding, except regarding a lease, may not be disturbed on appeal. But that conclusion does not dispose of all the points presented.

In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendants paid him union wages and at the same time required him to return a part of each payment. He repaid certain sums and the judgment appealed from was for said sums together with interest. Such repayments in labor disputes are called (and will hereinafter be called) "kick-backs." The defendants assert they paid union wages. To that assertion the plaintiff replies that the defendants made such payments but required a "kick-back" of a part of the payment; that the "kick-back" was against public policy; that the "kick-back" was induced by duress and menace; and that the "kick-back" was in violation of the terms of a "collective bargaining agreement." That reply brings us to the real issues presented by the record.

[2-4] The "kick-back" was not against public policy. Civ.Code, sec. 1667, subd. 2; Jones v. Hanna, 81 Cal. 507, 22 P. 883. As the employer was entitled to say what net sum he would pay as a wage and to refuse to pay more even though the employee refused to accept it and quit and although the employer knew such would be the result the determination of the employer was within his legal rights and was not duress or menace. Santa Ana Sugar Co. v. Smith, 116 Cal.App. 422, 427, 2 P.2d 866. As to the claim that the "kick-back" was in violation of the express provisions of a "collective bargaining agreement" executed between employers and employees, the defendants assert there is no evidence that such an agreement was ever executed. That assertion we think must be sustained. The plaintiff makes no claim that there was direct evidence of the existence of a "collective bargaining agreement." However, he relies on the recitals contained in certain written instruments which he introduced in evidence as his exhibits 1, 2, and 3. The first was a union house card, or union sign as it is sometimes called in the record. The defendants had one posted in their restaurant. It was signed by no one. Among others it contained the following provisions:

"This card is the property of the hotel and restaurant employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America and cannot be bought, sold or transferred.

"The person or persons displaying this card do so in accordance with the contract entered into with a subordinate Local Union, located in the city where card is displayed, and it is agreed that he or they will give peaceable possession of same to the local union in whose jurisdiction it is displayed, or to a duly appointed or elected representative, thereof, also, that the same will be given to the president or secretary-treasurer of the H. & R. E. I. A. & B. I. L. O. A., or a duly appointed representative, on demand.

"The holder of this card agrees to comply at all times with the laws, rules, and regulations of the local union which issued said card to him."

The second exhibit was a list of union wages. The heading of the list was "Joint Wage Scale for Dairy Lunches, Cafeterias, Class B Restaurants and Class B Taverns. Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union Local No. 30 * * * Approved by Local Joint Executive Board San Francisco Labor Council and International Union * * * 6. House Managers or men in charge of establishments 7 * * * 24. No more than eight hours shall constitute a day's work * * *" It was signed by no one. There was no evidence the defendants ever saw it until it was produced at the time of the trial.

The third instrument was a licensing agreement. It was signed by no one. In form it was drawn to be signed by the employer only but there was no evidence these defendants ever signed one except the testimony of the witness who said such a document, under union rules, is required to be signed and delivered before a house card is delivered. That document, in part, was as follows:

"No. 1652

"Union Label License Agreement H. & R. E. I. A. and B. I. L. of A.

"Received of the Local Joint Executive Board of Culinary Workers, of San Francisco, Calif., International Union House Card No. . Said card is delivered to, received and held by the undersigned at No. Street, San Francisco, Calif., subject to the following conditions: * * *

"2. All employees shall receive not less than the rate of wages, and shall work within the hours and time specified by the respective wage scales adopted and approved by the said Local Joint Executive Board, and it is expressly understood that the said Board reserved the right to alter or modify or change the said scales from time to time. * * *"

The plaintiff was a member of Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union Local No. 30. Exhibits 1 and 3 are concerned with Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America. There was no evidence that Local No. 30 was in any way connected with the league. There was no evidence of any kind that defendants executed a lease of any kind or nature. Looking at one and all of said exhibits it is clear that at most it may be said they contain admissions of a promise to pay union wages. But they contain nothing showing or tending to show that a "collective bargaining agreement" as to wages was ever executed. On the contrary said instruments suggest that the agreement, if any, was one between these employers only and the Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union of which plaintiff was a member. When such contract was made, what its terms were, who were covered by it when it was made, who were to be covered by it, are all matters not disclosed by any evidence whatever. Summing up the evidence there was not introduced in evidence the original or a copy of a "collective bargaining agreement," nor a bilateral agreement between these employers and the Waiters' and Dairy Lunchmen's Union Local No. 30.

[5] Section 1559 of the Civil Code provides: "When contract for benefit of third person may be enforced. A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." Other states have a similar statute. 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 519, p. 1124. However, there are certain well defined limitations to the rule. In 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 519, p. 1137 the author states: "The rights of a third person to sue on a contract made for his benefit depend on the terms of the agreement and are no greater than those granted by the contract as intended by the parties thereto. To recover the beneficiary must bring himself within its terms, and construction of the contract is involved. Since recovery on a third person beneficiary contract is a recovery on the contract itself, the right of the beneficiary is no greater than if the contract were enforced between the nominal parties, the beneficiary being in no better position than the promisee."

(Italics ours.) The text is abundantly supported by authority. See Dayton v. White, Sup., 182 N.Y.S. 902; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Plumbing Department Store, 117 Fla. 119, 157 So. 506; Marianna Lime Products Co. v. McKay, 109 Fla. 275, 147 So. 264. In the case last cited, at page 266 of 147 So., the Supreme Court of Florida said: "The real party in interest statute, supra, is permissive, not mandatory. Its effect is not to change the contract, but to allow it to be enforced by a benefited party who is a stranger to its execution. The real party in interest would not be entitled to sue on a contract to which he is a nominal stranger but for the permissive effect of the statute. So a recovery by the real party in interest is a recovery on the contract itself. The right to such recovery is no greater under the statute than the contract would warrant if enforced in a suit at law between the nominal parties." (Italics ours.)

[6] However, as we have shown above there was no evidence that the contract, between plaintiff's employers and plaintiff's union, contained any covenant on the subject of wages and in particular on the subject of "kick-backs." The burden was at all times on the plaintiff. In the absence of such evidence he has not shown that the wages paid him were in violation of the terms of any contract between his employers and his union. Therefore he was not entitled to recover.

[7] Moreover, whether a contract between his employers and his union was in existence he waived any right by the oral contract he made with his employers when accepting the employment. The sole evidence on that subject was given by the plaintiff. He was employed by Mr. Torlkerson to work for defendants. He testified in substance as follows: "I walked up one afternoon, he happened to be standing on the sidewalk, he told me to come to work. That was in February of 1936. He told me he had a relief manager's job open and asked me how I would like to have it. I said I would like to have it very much. He said, 'The scale calls for $27.50 but I will only pay you $25.' When he said he would only pay me $25 I understood by that it was the firm would pay the $25. I told him I would take the job. At that time I knew what the union scale was. I knew that the amount being offered to me was less than the union scale was. I knew that the amount being offered to me was less than the union scale. I told him I would come to work. I did not agree how long I would work. The job which Mr. Torlkerson offered me was a better job than I had previously had. It called for more pay. The amount $25 then offered to me was $2.70 more per week than I had been receiving. He said if I took the job I would have to kick-back $2.50 a week. I understood what the words 'kick-back' mean. I told him I would take the job." During the term of the plaintiff his position was changed at different times. In each position he received a wage which he now claims was less than the union scale. However, down to the date when he left the employment of the defendants, he accepted and now retains the reduced amount. Obviously the parties by their oral contract modified the amount of the wage prescribed by the union scale. The plaintiff is bound by the terms of the contract as so modified. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sideboard, 161 Miss. 4, 133 So. 669, 672; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Webb, 5 Cir., 64 F.2d 902, 905.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 726

NORRIS v. NORRIS.

Civ. 11982.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Divorce ⇨130

In action by wife for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty and desertion wherein husband filed a cross-complaint for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, evidence sustained findings and judgment granting divorce to husband.

2. Divorce ⇨184(5)

The trial court has a wide discretion in determining whether either spouse in action for divorce was guilty of extreme cruelty.

3. Divorce ⚷184(5)

Where, in action for divorce, the findings that wife was guilty of extreme cruelty entitling husband to divorce were substantially supported by the evidence, appellate court was required to hold that trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding divorce to husband.

4. Divorce ⚷301

Where husband obtained divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, award of custody of children to husband on theory that it was for the best interest of the children was sustained by the evidence.

5. Divorce ⚷312

In divorce action involving custody of minor children, credibility of witnesses was one within the exclusive province of the trial court whose determination was conclusive on the appellate court.

6. Divorce ⚷296, 312

Under codal provision for awarding custody of children in divorce action, trial court is allowed a wide latitude in exercise of its discretion, and the question should be decided wholly on basis of best interests of children and appellate court will not interfere except in clear case of abuse of discretion. Civ.Code, § 138.

7. Divorce ⚷296

In divorce action involving custody of minor children where husband was granted divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, award of children to husband in view of the evidence did not constitute an abuse of discretion. Civ.Code, § 138.

8. Husband and wife ⚷278(1)

Property settlements between husband and wife are valid, subject to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations in which the highest good faith must be observed. Civ. Code, §§ 158, 2228, 2234.

9. Husband and wife ⚷36

"Confidential relations" are presumed to exist between husband and wife and, if the husband obtains any advantage over his wife, he must stand unimpeached of any abuse of the confidence presumptively reposed in him, and failing in this he bears the burden of showing that the transaction was fair and just and fully understood by the party from whom the advantage was obtained. Civ.Code, §§ 158, 2228, 2234.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Confidential Relation".

10. Husband and wife ⚷36

A husband is bound to highest of good faith in dealings with wife and must make full and fair disclosure to her of all that she should know for her protection concerning nature and effect of transaction, or else must deal with her at arm's length and as he would with a stranger, all the while giving her opportunity of independent advice as to her rights. Civ.Code, §§ 158, 2228, 2234.

11. Contracts ⚷94(1)

One will not be relieved from a fraudulent contract unless he has been injured by it.

12. Divorce ⚷249(2)

Where husband was granted divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, property settlement confirmed by court would not be set aside on ground of husband's fraud in obtaining it in view of provisions for monthly payments of $225, payment of $4,000 incumbrance on wife's property, provision for $150 monthly payment in event of husband's death, and doubt whether wife who would not be entitled to alimony but only an equitable division of the community property could obtain any more if the settlement were set aside. Civ.Code, §§ 146, 158, 2228, 2234.

13. New trial ⚷93

Under codal provision providing for new trial in case phonographic report of trial cannot be transcribed due to death of reporter, trial court has a wide discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

14. Divorce ⚷151

Where notes of counsel in divorce proceeding were substantially complete as to the evidence adduced and bill of exceptions prepared in three volumes seemed to contain all the necessary testimony, refusal to grant new trial on account of reporter's death before transcription of notes taken by him was not an abuse of discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 953e.

15. Divorce ⚷182

In divorce proceeding where wife was without funds to prosecute appeal or to pay attorneys' fees and husband was able to pay a reasonable sum therefor, and appeal was taken in good faith and presented debatable questions which were not without substantial merit or controversy, order of trial court in denying application for reasonable allowance for costs and counsel fees on appeal would be reversed.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action for divorce by Gladys L. Norris against William J. Norris, who filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From a judgment granting defendant and cross-complainant a divorce, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial and from an order denying her application for costs and attorneys' fees on appeal, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed; appeal from order denying a new trial dismissed and order denying costs and attorneys' fees reversed for further proceedings in accordance with opinion.

Hanna & Morton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wood, Crump & Rogers, Francis Petit, and Guy Richards Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In this action for divorce plaintiff and cross-defendant appeals from an interlocutory judgment awarding defendant and cross-complainant a divorce, from an order denying her motion for a new trial and from an order denying her application for costs and attorneys' fees on appeal.

Plaintiff married defendant, a practicing physician and surgeon, on October 25, 1922, and the parties resided in the city of Los Angeles. On February 14, 1924, a daughter, Nancy, was born and on May 1, 1930, a second daughter, Gladys Virginia, was born. The defendant was successful in his practice and the parties prospered financially, but the history of their marital life reveals that it was fraught with difficulties, friction and unhappiness. The parties resided together until February, 1934, except for five months from October, 1928, to March, 1929. The record shows that plaintiff suffered from various illnesses subsequent to the marriage culminating in a nervous breakdown as a result of which she was confined in a sanitarium from February 27, 1934, to June 18, 1934. While plaintiff was in the sanitarium defendant notified her that he intended to terminate the marriage and negotiations were commenced for the purpose of bringing about a settlement of the property rights of the parties. The property settlement agreement which provided for the division of the community property, for the maintenance and support of the plaintiff and for the custody of the children was executed on January 8, 1935, and affirmed in a supplemental agreement made in July of the same year.

On April 7, 1938, the plaintiff filed the instant action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty; she subsequently filed an amendment to her complaint containing a second cause of action on the ground of desertion. Defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. After a rather extensive trial at which many witnesses testified for both sides, the court entered numerous findings in favor of defendant and cross-complainant in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint. The interlocutory judgment awarded the defendant a divorce from the plaintiff, gave the defendant the care and custody of the minor children, confirmed the property settlement agreement, ordered defendant to pay the sum of $225 per month to plaintiff in accordance with the property settlement agreement and assigned all of the community property not disposed of by the agreement to the defendant as his separate property. The plaintiff appeals from this judgment. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, one ground for the motion being that the death of the shorthand reporter who reported the proceedings during the early part of the trial rendered it impossible to obtain a complete transcript of the testimony and proceedings. The trial court denied the motion and plaintiff also appeals from this order. Finally, the plaintiff appeals from the order denying her application for an allowance on account of costs and attorneys' fees on appeal.

[1] Taking these appeals in the order presented, we consider first the appeal from the judgment. It is appellant's contention that the evidence does not sustain the findings of fact upon which the court granted the respondent a divorce. The findings made by the trial court upon the subject upheld the allegations of the cross-complaint in general and of necessity they cannot be set out here verbatim. It was found that the allegations were true to the effect that appellant left the family home in 1923, that she uttered expressions of hatred towards her husband and children, that on numerous occasions in 1928 she again stated her hatred for respondent and her wish that she might leave him, that she refused to assume the responsibilities normally expected of a wife and refused to take care of her children, that she became emotionally upset and hysterical as a result of various incidents occurring in the home, and that her actions were without justification causing respondent great mental anguish and suffering. The testimony presented at the trial of the case was very extensive and in conflict concerning many of the incidents described by the witnesses. It would serve no purpose to review the evidence in support of each and every finding, but a careful study of the record indicates that in spite of the conflict in the testimony the evidence is sufficient to support all of the essential findings of fact made by the trial court. Appellant's complaint that the court failed to find on certain affirmative allegations of her answer in response to the allegations of the cross-complaint on the subject of cruelty is without merit. The findings entered by the court on the subject, when read as a whole, were full and complete and covered all of the essential facts and allegations presented on the matter.

[2, 3] The findings of fact which we have alluded to above support the conclusions of law and the judgment granting respondent a divorce. From our review of the record it would appear that the married life of the parties was one burdened with friction and unhappiness and that the trial court could arrive at no other conclusion than that the marriage should be dissolved. In justice to appellant we must state in passing that the evidence would have been sufficient to sustain a divorce in her favor had the trial court concluded that such was proper. The trial court has a wide range of discretion in determining whether either spouse was guilty of "extreme cruelty" and in view of the evidence which substantially supported the findings and conclusions of law we must hold that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding the divorce to respondent. Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 187, 188, 52 P. 298.

Appellant also attacks the judgment upon the ground that the court erred in awarding the custody of the minor children of the parties to the respondent. The trial court entered numerous findings of fact relative to appellant's conduct with the children and concluded that the best interest of the children would be subserved by awarding their custody and control to respondent; in the judgment the court decreed that appellant could visit the children and take them on trips within the state. Appellant's attack on this award of custody is based on her contentions that the witnesses were friends of the respondent, that respondent had prejudiced the children against appellant and that appellant was the proper person to have the care and custody of the children.

[4, 5] Here again although much of the testimony was in conflict there was substantial evidence to support the findings and the judgment. During the time when the parties were living together appellant had much difficulty in managing and controlling the children and because of her many illnesses was unable to devote the proper attention to them. Appellant's attack upon the testimony to this effect is merely an attack against the credibility of the witnesses which question was clearly one within the exclusive province of the judge of the trial court (Burrows v. Burrows, 18 Cal.App.2d 275, 278, 63 P.2d 1135, 2 Cal.Jur. 916), whose determination is conclusive on the appellate court. Bellandi v. Park Sanitarium Association, 214 Cal. 472, 480, 6 P.2d 508.

[6, 7] Under section 138 of the Civil Code the court may, in a divorce action, make such order for the custody of minor children as may seem necessary or proper. That section provides that the court is to be guided by "what appears to be for the best interest of the child in respect to its temporal and its mental and moral welfare;" and, other things being equal, if the child is "of an age to require education and preparation for labor and business, then to the father." Under this statute the trial court is allowed a wide latitude in the exercise of its discretion and the question should be decided wholly on the basis of the best interests of the child; the appellate court will not interfere with the determination except in a clear case of abuse of discretion by the trial court. Taber v. Taber, 209 Cal. 755, 290 P. 36. At the time of the trial of the instant case the children were of an age at which their education was of paramount importance to their future development, and the evidence shows that respondent could provide for this education better than could appellant. The trial court had the benefit of having the children and their parents before it; the trial judge could observe the entire situation and in view of the evidence on the issue we find no abuse of discretion in the award of custody to the respondent.

Appellant's final attack upon the judgment is based on the contention that the court erred in finding and concluding that the property settlement agreement was fair and just and in assigning to respondent all of the community property not disposed of by the agreement. The property settlement agreement provided that respondent was to have the custody of the children for two years after which time appellant could apply to the court for an order awarding their custody to her; the respondent agreed to pay $200 per month to appellant for her support for a period of two years and thereafter to pay her the sum of $225 per month until she remarried; respondent agreed to pay an incumbrance on appellant's house and lot; appellant was to receive the sum of $4,000; and, finally, respondent agreed to pay premiums on certain life insurance which would provide appellant with $150 per month subsequent to his death. The court entered numerous findings relative to the agreement to the effect that respondent had not made any misrepresentations to appellant, had taken no advantage of her and had concealed no facts from her in regard to the community property. It then concluded that the agreement was fair, reasonable and just, and in the interlocutory decree of divorce ordered respondent to pay $225 per month to appellant in accordance with the agreement, confirmed the agreement and assigned all of the community property not disposed of by the agreement to respondent as his separate property.

The evidence produced in the lower court shows that at the time of the execution of the property settlement agreement the net worth of the community property held by the parties totaled approximately $35,000, and that at the time of the trial the net worth of respondent's estate amounted to about $98,000, though a portion of this was presumably his separate property. In 1934, the year immediately preceding the execution of the agreement, respondent's net income from his professional practice amounted to over $21,000, and by 1937 this net income had increased to about $33,000. The evidence further shows that on April 24, 1934, respondent borrowed $4,300 from an insurance company on his insurance policies which money was deposited in a bank account in his brother's name. On April 25, 1934, respondent transferred his stocks on deposit with a stock brokerage firm and his credit balance with that company to his brother. It was also established that from June, 1934, until December, 1934, only a portion of the collections received from respondent's professional practice were entered in his cash book and deposited in his regular bank account, the remainder being used to purchase cashier's checks in the sum of $6,618.50 payable to himself and his office nurse. These items were concealed from appellant, and it was under these circumstances that appellant signed the property settlement agreement on January 8, 1935, after having been recently released from a hospital where she had suffered serious illness.

[8-12] Property settlements of this character are valid, subject "to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying the confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on trusts." Section 158 of the Civil Code. Turning to the title on trusts we find section 2228 of the Civil Code which provides: "In all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary, and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind." Every violation of the section is declared to be a fraud against the beneficiary of the trust. Section 2234 of the Civil Code. It is established law that confidential relations are presumed to exist between husband and wife; if the husband obtains any advantage over his wife he must stand unimpeached of any abuse of the confidence presumptively reposed in him, and failing in this he bears the burden of showing that the transaction was fair and just and fully understood by the party from whom the advantage was obtained. In re Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 143, 204 P. 583; Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 80, 227 P. 715. The policy of the law in respect to such transactions can be best enunciated by quoting from In re Estate of Cover, supra, 188 Cal. at page 144, 204 P. at page

588: "In short, a husband, by reason of the marital relation, is bound in his dealings with his wife to the highest and best of good faith, and as a consequence is obligated in such dealings not to obtain and retain any advantage over her resulting from concealment or adverse pressure, and he must, if he would avoid the presumption of undue influence emanating from the procurement of any advantage over her, make full and fair disclosure to her of all that she should know for her benefit and protection concerning the nature and effect of the transaction, or else he must deal with her at arm's length and as he would with a stranger, all the while giving her the opportunity of independent advice as to her rights in the premises." See also McKay v. McKay, 184 Cal. 742, 747, 195 P. 385, where it was held that this presumption of undue influence in transactions between husband and wife prevails over other presumptions. Though we should reject the finding that the agreement had not been procured through undue influence and concealment by the respondent as not supported by the evidence, this would not dispose of the issue. It is the settled rule that one will not be relieved from a fraudulent contract unless he has been injured by it. Here the evidence does not show that any material injury resulted to the appellant. With the decree of divorce awarded to respondent on the ground of the appellant's cruelty she would not be entitled to alimony. The most that she could expect, if the settlement agreement should be set aside, would be an equitable division of the community property as provided in section 146 of the Civil Code. What that division might have been if the settlement agreement had been rejected it is not possible to say. But it is true that the property received by the appellant and the awards made by the decree are all substantial payments, and it is altogether possible that in the final analysis they will exceed whatever might have been awarded appellant under the code section.

We conclude, therefore, that though we cannot concur in the trial court's finding that this agreement was wholly free from undue advantage and concealment on the part of the respondent, we are not convinced that under all the circumstances the approval of the agreement was prejudicial to the appellant or that there is any reasonable ground to assume that a reversal of the judgment upon that issue would be beneficial to her.

[13, 14] The appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial on account of the inability to obtain a reporter's transcript because of the death of the reporter who reported a portion of the proceedings is without merit. Appellant admits that the notes of counsel "were substantially complete as to the testimony adduced" and the bill of exceptions prepared in three volumes would seem to contain all the necessary testimony of the witnesses in the trial court. Section 953e of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When it shall be impossible to have the phonographic report of the trial transcribed by a stenographic reporter as provided by section 953a of this code because of the death or other disability of a reporter who participated as a stenographic reporter at the trial, the court or a judge thereof shall have power to set aside and vacate the judgment, order or decree from which an appeal has been or is to be taken and to order a new trial of the action or proceeding." Under this code section the trial court is vested with a wide discretion to refuse or grant the motion for a new trial. Moore v. Specialty Oil Tool Co., 128 Cal.App. 662, 664 to 666, 18 P.2d 82. In view of the complete record presented to this court we cannot see that appellant has been prejudiced and the order denying the motion was, under such circumstances, within the discretion of the trial court.

[15] The final appeal is from the order denying appellant's application for an allowance for costs and attorneys' fees on appeal. From appellant's affidavit and the evidence in the record it appears to be uncontroverted that appellant did not have the funds necessary to prosecute the appeal or to pay attorneys' fees, that respondent is able to pay a reasonable sum therefor, and that the appeal was taken in good faith and presented debatable questions which were not without substantial merit or controversy. Under these circumstances it must be held that the court erred in denying appellant's application for a reasonable allowance for costs and counsel fees on appeal. Coleman v. Coleman, 23 Cal.App. 423, 426, 138 P. 362.

The judgment is affirmed. The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The order denying costs and attorneys' fees is reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

STURTEVANT, J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

MAASKANT et al. v. MATSUI et al.

Civ. 2676.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)

On appeal from judgment on jury's verdict, all conflicts in evidence must be resolved in respondent's favor and all legitimate and reasonable inferences must be indulged to uphold verdict, if possible.

2. Appeal and error 🔑989

When jury's verdict is attacked on appeal as unsupported by evidence, appellate court has power only to determine whether there is any substantial evidence supporting jury's conclusion.

3. Appeal and error 🔑996

When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from facts in evidence, reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of jury or trial court.

4. Automobiles 🔑244(29)

In action for death resulting from collision between automobile operated by deceased and automobile driven by one of defendants while on his way to stop crew of laborers, supplied by him to codefendant, from continuing certain work, as instructed by codefendant's foreman, evidence held sufficient to support jury's finding that defendant driver was "employee" of codefendant, not "independent contractor".

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee" and "Independent Contractor".

5. Evidence 🔑89, 265(10), 589, 591, 594

A fact is proved as against a party when established by his own or his witnesses' uncontradicted testimony under circumstances affording no indication that testimony is product of mistake or inadvertence, and, when such fact is wholly irreconcilable with a presumption sought to be invoked, such presumption is dispelled and disappears from case.

6. Automobiles 🔑246(60)

In action for death of driver of automobile colliding with automobile driven by defendant at road intersection, testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses that intersection was obstructed one and that decedent approached it at high rate of speed was insufficient to establish facts so irreconcilable with presumption of decedent's due care as to dispel such presumption and render instruction thereon erroneous. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

7. Death 🔑104(2)

In death action, instruction that deceased is presumed to have exercised ordinary care is proper, unless testimony as to his acts and conduct proves facts wholly irreconcilable with such presumption under circumstances affording no indication that such testimony is product of mistake or inadvertence. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

8. Automobiles 🔑246(60)

In action for death of automobile driver as result of collision with automobile driven by defendant, instruction that presumption is that decedent was exercising ordinary care for his own safety and that such presumption is species of evidence and must prevail and control jury's deliberations until overcome by satisfactory evidence, was proper. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 4.

9. Trial 🔑260(8)

In action for death of automobile driver as result of collision with automobile driven by defendant, where jury was fully instructed on contributory negligence and court gave defendants' requested instruction that decedent's negligence, however slight, barred recovery by plaintiffs, if it directly and proximately contributed to happening of accident, refusal of defendant's requested instruction that any negligence of decedent, however slight, which directly and proximately contributed to happening of accident, barred recovery, was not error.

10. Trial 🔑305

Counsel in a case should be solicitous at all times to preserve not only substance of justice, but every appearance of propriety, and should keep away from jurors during recesses and have no conversation with them beyond usual salutations.

11. Trial 🔑305

In death action, statement of plaintiffs' attorney in answer to a juror's question, in presence of defendants' attorney during recess, as to a map introduced in evidence, that testimony of engineer who drew map covered that, was not "misconduct" entitling defendants to mistrial.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; Glenn L. Moran, Judge Assigned.

Action by Norman Maaskant, a minor, and others against George Matsui and others, for the death of Harry Maaskant. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Chester O. Hansen, John Said, and William C. Crossland, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Rae B. Carter and John D. Chinello, both of Fresno, and John F. Pryor, of Hanford, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Defendants appeal from a judgment entered on a verdict rendered against them in an action for the death of Harry Maaskant, arising out of an automobile accident in which an automobile operated by said deceased collided with an automobile owned by appellants Shinagawa and Matsui and operated by appellant Matsui. Appellant M. D. Hopper was named as a co-defendant and judgment was entered against said appellant upon the theory that at the time of the fatal accident appellant George Matsui was an employee and agent of appellant Hopper, and appellant Hopper was therefore liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior.

No brief has been filed by appellants Matsui and Shinagawa, but by stipulation said appellants are resting their appeal upon the briefs of their co-appellant Hopper. No claim is made in the briefs filed that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding of actionable negligence on the part of appellant Matsui, but it is claimed by appellants that the undisputed evidence shows that at the time of the accident appellant Matsui was not in the employ of appellant Hopper but was an independent contractor.

[1-3] Before proceeding to consider this contention it is well to quote from Juchert v. California Water Service Co., 16 Cal.2d 500, at page 503, 106 P.2d 886, at page 888, where our Supreme Court said: "As is always true on such appeals, all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent, and all legitimate and reasonable inferences must be indulged in to uphold the verdict, if possible. It is elementary that when a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. And when two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the jury or trial court. Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 45 P.2d 183; Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25; Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. McHugh, 166 Cal. 140, 134 P. 1157; Wing v. Kishi, 92 Cal.App. 495, 268 P. 483."

[4] Appellants quote numerous excerpts from the testimony which, they assert, show that Matsui was not an employee but was an independent contractor. They contend that the testimony shows that appellant Matsui merely supplied a Japanese crew of laborers to appellant Hopper and other farmers, and was free to come and go as he pleased; that he was not told by appellant Hopper as to the manner in which the work should be done but merely that there was a certain piece of work to be done and the number of men needed; and that on the morning of the accident appellant Hopper's foreman told appellant Matsui that it was too windy to continue sulphuring, and that the Japanese crew should be put to some other work, and while Matsui was on his way to stop the crew from sulphuring the accident occurred.

Appellants then proceed to quote numerous authorities stating the well-settled rules as to the distinction between an employee and an independent contractor. It is not necessary to refer to these because the most casual reading of the record shows that appellants have omitted to refer to testimony which clearly gave the jury the right to infer that appellant Matsui was an employee of appellant Hopper, and we are, of course, not concerned here with mere conflicts in the testimony.

The following appears in the testimony of appellant Matsui:

"Q. Now, on the 7th day of May, 1940, you were working as foreman of the Japanese crew on the Lucerne Vineyard, weren't you? A. Yes, I was. * * *

"Q. At the time this accident happened you were on your way to take the men off of the sulphuring job, weren't you? A. Yes.

"Q. And that was because of a wind that had come up that morning, wasn't it? A. Yes.

"Q. Those were Japanese laborers that you were going to, weren't they? A. Yes.

"Q. They were men that were doing work on the Lucerne Vineyard, weren't they? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. Just before you left on that trip you talked to Mr. Oscar Hinton, the foreman of the Lucerne Vineyard, didn't you? A. Yes.

"Q. You talked to him at or near the blacksmith shop on the Lucerne Ranch, didn't you? A. Yes.

"Q. And it was at his direction that you went down there to tell these men to stop sulphuring, wasn't it? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. How many Japanese laborers were at work on the Lucerne Vineyards that day, May 7th, 1940? A. I believe twelve. * * *

"Q. And you were paid the same rate as the other employees, weren't you? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. It was part of your duty to supervise the work of the Japanese laborers on the Lucerne Vineyards, wasn't it? A. That's correct. * * *

"Q. * * * When you did any work on the place you got paid by the hour for that and that went in separately, didn't it, on your time sheet? A. Well, that's the way I got paid, I used to do my work, so many hours a day.

"Q. But on the day of this accident you didn't do any work, did you? A. Yes, I was working on the day of the accident.

"Q. Did you turn in any time for yourself to Mr. Hinton or Mr. Adams on the day of this accident? A. Well, I put down my time up to the time of the accident. * * *

"Q. Mr. Matsui, what is your business or occupation? A. I am foreman at the Lucerne Ranch.

"Q. Were you so employed on the 7th day of May, 1940? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. And how much were you being paid per day for the work that you were doing? A. I was paid the same prevailing wages.

"Q. That is twenty-five cents an hour? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. Now, Mr. Matsui, at the time of this accident you were on your way from one ranch belonging to the Lucerne Vineyards, or Mr. Hopper, to another ranch, is that correct? A. I was going to a ranch of Lucerne Vineyards to stop the boys from working.

"Q. That was on account of too much wind to be sulphuring? A. Yes.

"Q. And you were under instructions from Mr. Hinton, is that correct? A. Yes."

It is quite apparent from the foregoing that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding that appellant Matsui was an employee of appellant Hopper.

[5, 6] Appellants next contend that the trial court committed error in giving an instruction on the presumption of due care. The instruction given was as follows: "Since you may accept a presumption satisfying your minds rather than spoken testimony which does not produce conviction in your minds, you are further instructed that there is a presumption that every man obeys the law and takes ordinary care of his own concerns; therefore, the presumption in this case is that the decedent Harry Maaskant was traveling at a lawful rate of speed and was on the proper side of the highway at all times, and was at all times exercising ordinary care for his own safety. This presumption is in itself a species of evidence, and it shall prevail and control your deliberations until, and unless it is overcome by satisfactory evidence."

Appellants argue that the giving of this instruction was error "for the reason that from the testimony of plaintiffs' own witnesses, the presumption of due care on the part of decedent Harry Maaskant was dispelled and disappeared from the case entirely". Appellants then quote testimony of respondents' witnesses to show that the intersection at which the accident occurred was an obstructed intersection, and then quote testimony which, they assert, shows that decedent was approaching at a high rate of speed. There was no testimony as to the rate of speed at which decedent was traveling, but appellants refer to the testimony of a witness who heard the roar of the exhaust of decedent's automobile as indicating a high rate of speed. There is, however, testimony of the same witness ascribing the roar to a hole in the muffler. No witness produced by plaintiffs saw the accident, the only testimony of plaintiffs' witness being that he saw the top of decedent's automobile the instant of the collision, but had not seen it before.

In the case of Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corporation, 190 Cal. 1, at page 9, 210 P. 269, at page 273, our Supreme Court said: "* * * a fact is proved as against a party when it is established by the uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or of his witnesses, under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence; and that, when the fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, the latter is dispelled and disappears from the case."

The testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses in this case falls far short of establishing by uncontradicted testimony that the facts proved are so irreconcilable with the presumption of due care on the part of the deceased as to dispel the presumption and cause it to disappear from the case.

[7] In the case of Westberg v. Willde, 14 Cal.2d 360, at page 367, 94 P.2d 590, at page 594, the court said: "We think it well to state here that in our opinion there is a substantial difference in the situation before a court where the question of the plaintiff's negligence is in issue, and both plaintiff and his witnesses testified to all his acts and conduct at the time of his alleged negligence, from a situation where the acts and conduct of a decedent are the issues before the court. In the first instance, all possible facts both in favor of and against the alleged negligence of the plaintiff are before the court, and it is difficult for us to perceive how any presumption as to his conduct can add to or detract from this evidence. Surely if this evidence conclusively supports the claim that he was negligent, then, according to our decisions cited above, the presumption as to his conduct has been dispelled. On the other hand, if the plaintiff has testified respecting his acts and conduct, and his testimony and that of his witnesses showed that he used ordinary care for his safety, an instruction to that effect would not be of any assistance to him; but if such evidence did not clearly and unmistakably clear him of the charge of negligence, then an instruction which would place his testimony in a more favorable light than it would be without such instruction would seem to be uncalled for, if not improper. In such a case the giving of any instruction as to the presumption of plaintiff's conduct would seem to be of doubtful propriety. It has, however, been held that the giving of such an instruction under the circumstances just related was not prejudicial. Tuttle v. Crawford, 8 Cal.2d 126, 63 P.2d 1128; Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., 212 Cal. 36, 38, 39, 297 P. 884. But in the other situation, where the acts and conduct of a deceased person are the subject of inquiry, and the testimony respecting such acts and conduct necessarily must be produced by witnesses other than the deceased, unless such testimony meets the requirement of the rule in the Mar Shee case, and other cases decided by this court following the Mar Shee case, an instruction that the deceased is presumed to have exercised ordinary care for his own concerns is not only proper but this court in an unbroken line of decisions, has sustained the giving of such an instruction. Ellison v. Lang Transp. Co., [12 Cal.2d 355, 84 P.2d 510]."

In the case of Stroh v. Bauman, 37 Cal. App.2d 241, at page 244, 99 P.2d 337, at page 338, this court said: "There has been some confusion in the decisions on the propriety of instructing the jury on the substance of section 1963, subdivision 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. That confusion has been settled by the case of Westberg v. Willde, [14 Cal.2d 360], 94 P.2d 590, 594. That case holds that such an instruction should not be given where the party attempting to invoke it is still living and all circumstances are proved and where 'all possible facts both in favor of and against the alleged negligence of the plaintiff are before the court' because 'it is difficult for us to perceive how any presumption as to his conduct can add to or detract from this evidence'; that it is in a case where a party has died that the presumption may come into play."

[8] The instruction now challenged by appellants contained the qualification that the presumption was a species of evidence and "shall prevail and control your deliberations until and unless it is overcome by satisfactory evidence". The jury was clearly told that the presumption could be overcome by satisfactory evidence. Under the authorities cited the instruction was properly given by the court.

[9] Appellants' third contention is that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction offered by them: "You are instructed that any negligence, however slight, on the part of Harry Maaskant, which directly and proximately contributed to the happening of the accident involved in this case, bars a recovery by the plaintiffs."

This contention is utterly lacking in merit because the jury was very fully instructed upon the subject of contributory negligence, and furthermore, at the request of appellants, the court gave the following instruction: "You are instructed that if you find from the evidence that at the time and place of the accident involved in this case Harry Maaskant drove and operated the Chevrolet pickup automobile, then and there being operated by him, in a negligent manner, and if you further find that such negligence, however slight, directly and proximately contributed to the happening of the accident, then I charge you that such negligence, however slight, on the part of Harry Maaskant bars a recovery by the plaintiffs in this case."

[10, 11] Appellants' final contention is that one of the counsel for respondents was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in conversing with a juror during a recess, and that the court erred in denying appellants' motion for a mistrial. It appears that during the recess a juror, who remained in the courtroom, asked counsel, in the presence of one of the co-counsel for appellants, a question regarding a map which had been introduced in evidence, and was told that the testimony of the engineer who drew the map covered that. The matter was called to the attention of the trial court and the court heard the matter in the absence of the jury and denied the motion and thereafter properly instructed the jury to disregard it. While we, of course, feel that counsel in a case should at all times be solicitous to preserve not only the substance of justice, but every appearance of propriety, and should keep away from jurors during recesses and should have no conversation with them beyond the usual salutations, yet it is quite clear to us that there was no misconduct in this case. The incident was in fact precipitated by the juror who asked the question and it appears that counsel was merely endeavoring to answer the juror without seeming to be discourteous. He said nothing that could have given the juror any information which he did not already possess.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 743

FERRILL v. ELLIS et al.

Civ. 6739.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
March 26, 1942.

1. Mandamus ⇨72

While mandamus will not lie to compel an officer to perform a purely discretionary act in a particular manner, if the facts as admitted or proved be susceptible of but one conclusion, the right to the writ becomes a matter of law and the officer may be compelled to act accordingly.

2. Mandamus ⇨168(4)

In mandamus proceeding to require municipal civil service commission to afford petitioner a physical examination to determine whether petitioner was in ordinary good health without regard to his false upper plate and if so found to place petitioner on eligible list for position of patrolman, evidence showed that petitioner was in excellent health.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨184(2)

Under municipal charter requiring applicants for police duty to be in "ordinary good health", to be ascertained in such manner as the civil service commission may deem advisable, commission had power to determine manner in which fact of good health should be ascertained, but could not inject into the proceeding a physical requirement not affecting applicant's health or his physical ability to discharge the duties called for and reject him without affording him a complete physical examination to determine possession of ordinary good health.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ordinary Good Health".

4. Municipal corporations 🔑184(2)

Under municipal charter requiring applicant for police duty to be in "ordinary good health", the fact applicant for position as probationary patrolman otherwise qualified used a false upper plate did not constitute "ill health" so as to justify denial of a physical examination to ascertain whether applicant was in ordinary good health.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Ill Health".

5. Municipal corporations 🔑184(2)

Where applicant for position as patrolman had complied with all rules laid down by municipal civil service commission and applied for physical examination in accordance with the then existing rules, he may not be rejected for having a false upper plate, a reason not specified in the rules, and later required to submit to examination under a new rule requiring 20 natural teeth which upon its face would bar him from participating.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑184(2)

Where applicant had complied with all rules laid down by a municipal civil service commission and applied for physical examination in accordance with the then existing rules, he may not be rejected for some reason not specified in the rules and later required to submit to examination under a new rule, setting up a standard which upon its face would bar him from participating.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Ross Myron Ferrill against W. Fred Ellis, and others, as members of the Civil Service Commission of the City of Stockton, California, to compel respondents to afford petitioner a physical examination limited to determination whether petitioner was in ordinary good health without regard to his possession of artificial teeth and if found in good health, to certify petitioner to eligible list of appointees for the position of probationary patrolman of the police department of the City of Stockton. From an adverse judgment, respondents appeal.

Affirmed.

Joseph C. Tope, City Atty., and H. C. Stanley, Asst. City Atty., both of Stockton, for appellants.

O. C. Parkinson, of Stockton, for respondent.

STEEL, Justice pro tem.

This is a proceeding in mandamus wherein petitioner, respondent here, obtained in the court below a peremptory writ commanding appellants as members of the Civil Service Commission of the City of Stockton, as follows: "* * * that they afford to petitioner Ross Myron Ferrill a physical examination, that such examination be limited to the determination of whether petitioner is in ordinary good health, without regard to his possession of certain artificial teeth in place of natural teeth, and that if found in ordinary good health, with the consideration of his artificial teeth in place of natural teeth excluded, they certify said Ross Myron Ferrill to the eligible list of appointees for the position of Probationary Patrolman of the Police Department of the City of Stockton."

From the record before us it appears that the City of Stockton is governed by a Freeholder's Charter, which includes the police department as subject to civil service regulations and rules.

Respondent, who it is conceded, was possessed of the requisite qualification of age, residence and citizenship, applied for examination for the position of police officer of the City of Stockton, and fully passed all requirements of both the charter and commission rules, which included height, weight, chest expansion, etc., up to the question of inquiry as to the condition of his health, the requirement in this regard being that all applicants must be in ordinary good health. The duty of determining this question was assigned by the commission to the city surgeon, a practicing physician, who at the outset of such physical examination disqualified petitioner by reason of the fact that his upper teeth had been extracted and replaced with a plate. This ruling was upheld by the commission, and they thereupon refused to afford him a further physical examination. The instant proceeding was then instituted by petitioner, resulting in the order set forth above, from which the commission prosecutes this appeal.

Appellants assign as error the trial court's decision to the effect that the examining physician was not justified in arriving at the conclusion that the lack of natural teeth in the upper jaw standing alone was sufficient to warrant the rejection of petitioner as lacking good health.

The main issue, therefore, is whether or not the commission, in the reasonable exercise of its discretion was justified in concluding that the petitioner was not in ordinary good health solely because he was not possessed of his natural upper teeth.

Under the City Charter the commission may make suitable rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of the act, and in respect to the health of an applicant the matter is left to the examining physician. Section 32-4 of article XXXII contains the following:

"All tests shall be practical and shall consist only of subjects which will fairly determine the capacity of persons examined to perform duties of the position to which appointment or promotion is to be made."

And section 32-6 reads in part as follows:

"In addition to the above, all applicants must be in ordinary good health, of good moral character, and of temperate and industrious habits, these facts to be ascertained in such manner as the commission may deem advisable. This section applies to original appointment only."

[1] While the rule is well recognized that mandamus will not lie to compel an officer to perform a purely discretionary act in a particular manner (16 Cal.Jur. 809) there is, however, an exception to this general rule in that if the facts as admitted or proved be susceptible of but one construction or conclusion the right to the writ becomes a matter of law and the officer may be compelled to act accordingly. Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200 Cal. 1, at page 31, 251 P. 784 and cases cited.

Considering now the record before us the evidence discloses that respondent, approximately two years prior to the examination, had called upon his dentist Dr. Chalmers of Stockton, who testified at the hearing, and requested the doctor to put his mouth in good condition. At that time it appears that seven of his upper teeth were missing and the remaining nine were so situated that the installation of a partial plate or bridge would have been impracticable and therefore they were extracted and a full denture or plate put in. The doctor testified that the nine teeth which he extracted were "absolutely in good condition" and had no abscesses or anything from which poison might enter the system.

[2] Several experts, medical and dental, were called by the respective parties and testified as to the relative efficiency of artificial dentures as compared with natural teeth in masticating food, and the possible ill results that might occur to one's general health if they were abscessed, such ailments as indigestion, arthritis and heart trouble being mentioned. Most of this testimony was highly speculative and based upon assumptions entirely outside the facts in the instant case. The evidence shows without conflict that the petitioner is in excellent health. He was under thirty years of age and had been employed for eight years last past as a private patrolman, working long hours, and with the exception of a kidney ailment or attack in 1936, and also the removal of his tonsils, he had lost no time from his work nor had he suffered any illness.

[3, 4] Appellants cite numerous authorities to the effect that courts should not interfere with administrative boards and officers in the proper exercise of their discretionary powers. This unquestionably is the settled law as heretofore indicated. However, the facts here under consideration present a somewhat limited situation in that the provision in the charter for physical requirements for police duty is that the applicant be in ordinary good health, such fact "to be ascertained in such manner as the commission may deem advisable" or in other words, the power given the commission in this regard is to determine the manner in which the fact of good health or lack of it may be ascertained. And in determining whether an applicant is in good health it may not inject into the proceeding a physical requirement which does not affect his health at all or his physical ability to discharge the duties called for and then ipso facto reject him without affording him a complete physical examination to determine the ultimate fact, to-wit: does he possess ordinary good health. This apparently is the conclusion arrived at by the trial court in framing the order appealed from which is hereinabove set forth. Obviously the mere fact that one uses a false plate does not of itself constitute ill health. One of the doctors testified as follows:

"Q. You have studied and practiced in regard to the effect of a plate of that kind on a person's ordinary health, have you? A. Yes.

"Q. Would you state, then, Doctor, whether in your opinion the possession of a plate of that kind is detrimental to a man's ordinary health? A. Not to his general health, no.

"Q. If he was otherwise in ordinary good health would you say that he was rendered not in ordinary good health by reason of his having an upper plate such as Mr. Ferrill has? A. I think he is in good physical condition.

"Q. And the fact that he has that plate would not make that opinion any different? A. No."

And again another witness, testifying as to petitioner's physical condition, testified as follows:

"Q. In your opinion, Doctor, did that take him out of the class of one in ordinary good health? A. No.

"Q. In your opinion does it have any detrimental effect on his general health? A. No, it has no detrimental effect on the general health. As a matter of fact, it is often done, so far as the M.D. standpoint is concerned, to get the man in better health or to keep him from going into bad health. Because one of the most common sources of infection and consequent disability in middle or later life is infected teeth. So, if there is any indication for that, why, the man is far better off both at present and in the future to have his teeth out. I had my own taken out for backache. The only effect I have had is that I can't keep my weight down now because my health is so much better.

"Q. Then would you say, Doctor, that a denture such as Mr. Ferrill has does not take a man out of the classification of being in good health, or ordinary good health, then? A. Not only doesn't take him out of the classification, but it is possibly a protection to keep him in that classification over a longer period."

[5] Appellants next assign as error the trial court's refusal to permit them to file a supplemental answer in the proceeding wherein is set forth an amendment to the rules and regulations of the commission as follows:

"Mouth: Pyorrhea, enlarged tonsils, adenoids, or nasal obstruction will reject. Teeth must be in good shape. Missing teeth may be supplied by crown or bridge work. At least twenty natural teeth must be present."

And also a resolution which reads as follows:

"Resolution No. 113

"It Appearing to the Commission from the medical report heretofore made of the applicant that a full medical examination was not made of applicant, and Good Cause Appearing to the Commission why a full examination of applicant in this case should be made; now therefore,

"Be It Resolved by the Civil Service Commission of the City of Stockton, As Follows:

"That Ross Myron Ferrill be, and he is hereby referred to Dr. H. S. Chapman, City Surgeon for the City of Stockton, for a full and complete medical examination.

"Dated: June 20th, 1941. (Signed)
"H. A. Gibson
"W. Fred Ellis."

The record shows that petitioner was rejected because of his upper plate in March, 1941, and that he instituted the instant proceeding on May 2, 1941, the return date being May 19th, at which time appellants requested a continuance, which was granted, until June 20, 1941. In the meantime appellants promulgated the new set of rules and regulations, supra, specifically requiring every applicant to have at least twenty natural teeth in his mouth. This requirement would automatically exclude petitioner, and an examination would have been an idle act insofar as petitioner is concerned.

Appellants cite the case of Jones v. O'Toole, 190 Cal. 252, 212 P. 9, as authority in support of their right to amend the rules and as so amended apply them retroactively to petitioner. The case cited is not controlling, as there the petitioner was not complaining of being deprived of anything himself but sought to have cancelled the action of the commission in giving additional points of rating to another and thereby placing him higher on the eligible list than petitioner whose own rating on the list was not disturbed.

[6] We are constrained to hold that when an applicant has complied with all of the rules laid down by the commission and has applied for a physical examination in accordance with the then existing rules, he may not be rejected for some reason not specified in the rules and then later required to submit to an examination under a new rule setting up a standard which, upon its face, would bar him from participating.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and TUTTLE, J., concurred.

NEWKIRK v. LOS ANGELES JUNCTION RY. CO.*

Civ. 12905.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 13, 1942.

Hearing Granted May 21, 1942.

1. Commerce 🔑27(2)

A state operating railroad which had track connections with at least three interstate carriers and several industrial concerns, which did business only with railway carriers, and whose services consisted wholly of switching over its own line for which railroad made a flat charge per car to the carrier served, was a "common carrier" engaged in "interstate commerce" within Employers' Liability and Safety Appliance acts. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Common Carrier" and "Interstate Commerce".

2. Commerce 🔑27(7)

Where tank car had been billed from Arizona to consignee in California, its interstate character did not cease while car was on state operating railroad's tracks for switching operation preparatory to delivery to consignee, and hence such railroad and switchman who was injured in operation of hand brake of the car were engaged in "interstate commerce" and hence subject to jurisdiction of Federal Employers' Liability Act. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

3. Trial 🔑203(1)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to switchman, wherein evidence was not disputed that both parties were engaged in interstate commerce at time of accident, it was unnecessary to instruct on the issue. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

4. Master and servant 🔑111(1)

The Safety Appliance Act is a substantive and not a remedial law and imposes an absolute liability for all damages sustained by a person which are the proximate result of some defect in railway vehicle against the common carrier, interstate or intrastate, who is in possession thereof, or on whose line vehicle is being used. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

5. Master and servant 🔑276(5), 278(6)

Under Safety Appliance Act, which makes carrier an insurer as against enumerated defects in vehicle regardless of knowledge thereof or of any negligence, evidence must pointedly disclose that there is a defect as claimed and that it proximately caused injury. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

6. Courts 🔑97(5)

The decisions of federal courts and not those of state courts are controlling in construing the Safety Appliance Act. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

7. Commerce 🔑8(4)
Courts 🔑97(5)

Under Safety Appliance Act, the character and amount of evidence required to sustain a claim of defect in instrumentality, that defect was proximate cause of injury, that evidence is sufficient to warrant a verdict, and other evidential matters, are governed by standards adopted by federal courts and not by the laws or decisions of jurisdiction in which the case is tried. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

8. Evidence 🔑589, 591

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to switchman caused by allegedly inefficient handbrake on tank car, while jury could disbelieve all testimony produced by defendant, jury was not entitled to infer that the pawl overrode the ratchet when physical fact was that it could not have done so on the evidence produced by plaintiff. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

---

* Subsequent opinion 131 P.2d 535.

9. Evidence ⚷380

In action under Federal Employers Liability Act for injuries to switchman caused by allegedly inefficient handbrake, pictures of brake assembly which were taken more than a year after accident occurred were inadmissible where conditions were not shown to be sufficiently similar. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

10. Master and servant ⚷286(13)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to switchman who slipped on tank car because of alleged inefficient handbrake which switchman was holding, evidence was insufficient for jury on issue whether railroad supplied an efficient handbrake as required by Safety Appliance Act. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

11. Master and servant ⚷291(4)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to switchman caused by alleged inefficiency of handbrake, instructions which dealt with the case as though it were an ordinary negligence case were improperly given, since, if act was violated, railroad was liable whether or not it was negligent. Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

W. J. WOOD, Acting P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Parker Wood, Judge.

Action by George W. Newkirk against the Los Angeles Junction Railway Company, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq., to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Rehearing denied; W. J. Wood, Acting P. J., dissenting.

Lyndol L. Young, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James E. Martin, of Los Angeles, and Clifton Hildebrand and James A. Myers, both of Oakland, for respondent.

HANSON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq., brought by plaintiff against the defendant railway company to recover damages for his personal injuries. The injuries are alleged to have resulted from a violation of that provision of the Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., which imposes an absolute duty on a railway to provide an "efficient handbrake" on every car it transports.

It is undisputed that Newkirk was employed as a switchman by defendant, and at the time of his injuries was engaged in the performance of his duties. The accident occurred at about five o'clock on the morning of December 14, 1938, when in the light of his lantern he was engaged in setting a handbrake on a moving railway tank car as it was proceeding up a slight incline on a storage track on its own momentum, after having been cut away from a switch engine which had been pushing it. The Safety Appliance Act in question provides that it is unlawful for any common carrier that is subject to the provisions of the act to permit any car which is not equipped with "efficient handbrakes" to pass over its line; and if injury ensues as a proximate result of such failure to any one of its employees, it is liable to him absolutely, even though the employee knows of the defect in the instrumentality. It was the contention of Newkirk that the brake was defective and that this defect proximately caused his injuries. On the other hand, the defendant contended that the brake was not defective, and, instead, that plaintiff slipped on the rain-soaked platform adjoining the brake and as a result was precipitated to the ground below with resultant injuries. As the plaintiff did not allege any act of common-law negligence, his case rests wholly on the claim that the brake was inherently inefficient and that its inefficiency was the proximate cause of his injuries. A jury found for the plaintiff and assessed the damages at $8,000. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict having been denied, judgment was entered on the verdict. The case is here on appeal from the judgment as entered.

The defendant is a California railway corporation which transports freight cars and their contents over certain railroad tracks located in the industrial area in the neighborhood of the city of Vernon, in Los Angeles County. In that locality it has a railway track or siding known as the "Flood" track, within its railroad yards. It is not shown by the record that it owns any engines or other railroad equipment. However, it has track connections with at least three interstate carriers and a great number of industrial concerns located in the neighborhood of its yard. It has no other rail lines except those in the general locality mentioned. It does not do business with the general public but only with railway carriers which have connections with its tracks. It moves railway cars on its own lines on instructions from these carriers, to and from its various track junctions with the carriers and industrial plants on its lines. The service rendered is wholly a switching service over its own lines, for which it makes a flat charge per car to the carrier served. It issues no bills of lading and is not a party to any through rates.

The tank car which is here involved was one of 63 cars which the Southern Pacific Railway Company hauled over its railway lines from Phoenix, Arizona, to Los Angeles. It was loaded with cotton-seed oil and was billed from Phoenix to Swift & Company at its sidetrack in the city of Vernon. The latter company had a switch track upon its property which connected only with the rails of the defendant. The car reached the Los Angeles yards of the Southern Pacific at about 6:50 o'clock p. m. on December 13, 1938. This car, along with other railway cars, was transported by the Southern Pacific from its yards to a rail junction with the defendant company, where the latter accepted it at about 1:40 a. m. on December 14, 1938, for transportation to the siding of Swift & Company. The handbrake of the car received several inspections before it was delivered to the defendant, and one by it immediately after the delivery. It was inspected by a car inspector for the Southern Pacific Company two hours prior to its delivery to defendant. At that time the inspector found the handbrake and all the mechanical appliances in connection therewith, including the pawl, ratchet and other parts, were efficient and in good working order. He so reported in writing to his employer. Another car inspector for the Southern Pacific inspected the brake a few minutes later and found it was efficient and in good working order. He testified that the pawl did not override the ratchet, and that if it had or if it had been otherwise out of order he would have put a "bad-order" card on it. Additionally, it was shown that when the car was weighed earlier in the evening two other car inspectors for the Southern Pacific had checked the brake and found it efficient and in good working order. Immediately after the car was received and placed on the tracks of the defendant company its car inspector, with twenty-seven years of experience in that capacity, inspected the handbrake and found nothing wrong with it.

A few moments before the accident the switching crew of the defendant company, of which plaintiff was a member, hooked a switch engine onto a "cut" of seven cars received from the Southern Pacific, of which the tank car was the last and farthest from the engine. The foreman directed the plaintiff to ride on the tank car during a flying switch operation in order to disconnect it from the other cars and to set the brake on it when it reached a certain locality on defendant's "Flood" track. The flying switch procedure was for the switch engine to back the line of cars fast enough to give the tank car sufficient momentum after it was uncoupled from the other cars so it would pass over a switch onto the "Flood" track and up a slight incline or hump, after which the brake would be set and the car brought to a stop.

The only eye-witness to the accident was plaintiff himself. He testified that after he had uncoupled the car from the cut of cars he mounted the car's ladder and proceeded along the platform on the side of the tank car towards the handbrake which was located on the far end. With his electric lantern slung over his arm—it being still dark—he proceeded to turn the brake. He had no difficulty with it. He tightened it sufficiently so the car would come to a complete stop within about fifteen feet, and engaged the pawl in the ratchet to hold the brake in place. He then reached with his left hand for the handhold on the car, keeping his right hand resting loosely on the brake wheel. His testimony is that at that moment the brake suddenly released itself, causing the brake wheel on which his hand was resting to spin around, and that this action of the brake caused him to fall from the car to an embankment alongside the track. As he fell on the embankment he started to roll towards the rails, and to protect himself, as he rolled, he stuck out his left hand towards the rail. As he did so the fingers of his left hand came in contact with the top of the rail, and before he could withdraw them the rear wheels of the tank car ran over and cut them off.

One of the switchmen, a witness for the plaintiff, testified on cross-examination that he took the plaintiff to a doctor a few moments after the accident happened. While there, in response to his inquiry as to how the accident happened, the plaintiff told him, in the presence of the doctor and another person, that he was setting the brake and he slipped and fell. After the case had been closed and the motion for nonsuit made, the trial court over objection reopened the plaintiff's case on direct. He was then permitted, over objection, to deny he had made the statement attributed to him by his own witness.

Plaintiff testified that after he had finished setting the brake the car was still moving, but slowly, and it was going up a slight incline. It is undisputed that the tank car stopped within fifteen feet of the point where plaintiff fell or was thrown from the car; that the incline was such that if the brake was not set or holding, the car would have rolled back; that the car did not roll back; that as late as three hours after the accident, when the son-in-law of plaintiff examined it, the brake was set and the car was where it had stopped. The only evidence produced by the plaintiff to sustain his claim that the handbrake was inefficient was given by his son-in-law, supported by certain pictures of the brake in question taken more than a year later. This witness testified that a few hours after the accident he found a half-inch vertical and a three-sixteenths-inch lateral play in the "dog," or "pawl," and that "the vibration from the brake-shoes and the brake shaking on the wheels when the car is moving would cause the 'dog,' if it had too much play in it, to slip out of the ratchet." With this statement of the facts we turn to the legal questions involved.

[1-3] The defendant contends that it is not a common carrier by railroad and that the plaintiff and defendant were not engaged in interstate commerce at the moment plaintiff was injured. We think that on the facts which we have already related the contention possesses no merit. The defendant, it seems clear, is "a terminal railroad for the industries and carriers with which it connects, and it serves as a link in the through transportation of interstate freight shipped to or from points in [the city of Vernon] over the connecting carriers." United States v. California, 297 U.S. 175, 56 S.Ct. 421, 423, 80 L.Ed. 567; cf. United States v. Brooklyn, etc., Terminal, 249 U.S. 296, 304, 39 S.Ct. 283, 63 L.Ed. 613, 616, 6 A.L.R. 527. While it is true that the defendant does not hold itself out to the general public as a common carrier, yet its service involves the transportation of interstate cars and their contents as agent of the connecting carriers. As such it is as much engaged in interstate commerce as are its principals. That plaintiff and defendant were both engaged in interstate transportation at the moment plaintiff was injured we think is likewise clear. The tank car in question was still in interstate commerce, as it had been billed from Phoenix, Arizona, to the siding of Swift & Company in the city of Vernon, California, and not merely to a point on the line of the connecting interstate carrier. Its interstate character had not ceased while it was on the defendant's "Flood" track for the latter's convenience. Its interruption and deviation from the nearest route to its ultimate destination did not change the character of the shipment from one in interstate commerce to one in intrastate commerce. The act of plaintiff at the moment he was injured was an act in the furtherance of interstate transportation, required or demanded by his employer for its own ends in the performance of its duty to transport the car to the siding of the consignee. Accordingly, the trial court not only had jurisdiction of the action under the terms of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, but it was entitled as a matter of law on the undisputed facts to instruct the jury, as it did, that both parties were engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident. Indeed, as the evidence was undisputed, it was wholly unnecessary to instruct on the issue at all, and we think it would have been preferable for the court not to have done so.

[4-7] A further contention of the defendant is that there is no substantial or credible evidence that the handbrake was inefficient or that its alleged inefficiency was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Before proceeding to an analysis of the facts we turn to controlling decisions as a guide to determine where the fact line is to be drawn. The Safety Appliance Act is a substantive and not a remedial law. It imposes an absolute liability for all damages sustained by a person which are the proximate result of some defect in a railway vehicle, against the common carrier, interstate or intrastate, who is in possession thereof or on whose line the vehicle is being used. As the act makes the carrier an insurer as against enumerated defects in the vehicle, regardless of any knowledge thereof or of any negligence in respect thereto, it is obvious that the evidence must pointedly disclose there is a defect, as claimed, and that it proximately caused the injury. This is the view of the federal courts, whose decisions, and not those of the states, are alone controlling. Likewise, the character and amount of evidence required to sustain a claim of defect in the instrumentality, that the defect was the proximate cause of the injury, that the evidence is sufficient to warrant a verdict, and other evidential matters, are governed by the standards adopted by the federal courts and not by the laws or decisions of the jurisdiction in which the case is tried. Bevan v. New York, etc., Co., 132 Ohio St. 245, 6 N.E.2d 982—certiorari denied by the United States Supreme Court 301 U.S. 695, 57 S.Ct. 924, 81 L.Ed. 1351. Indicative of the strictness of the rules laid down and as a corollary of the tests we must follow in our analysis of the facts are these cases: Burnett v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 6 Cir., 33 F.2d 579; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 6 Cir., 78 F. 754, 759, 24 C.C.A. 305; Hardy-Burlingham M. Co. v. Baker, 6 Cir., 10 F.2d 277; New York Central R. Co. v. Ambrose, 280 U.S. 486, 50 S.Ct. 198, 74 L.Ed. 562; Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co., 179 U.S. 658, 21 S.Ct. 275, 45 L.Ed. 361; Gulf, M. & N. R. Co. v. Wells, 275 U.S. 455, 48 S.Ct. 151, 72 L.Ed. 370; Northwestern Pacific R. Co. v. Bobo, 290 U.S. 499, 54 S.Ct. 263, 78 L.Ed. 462.

[8-10] We think there is merit in the contention of appellant herein that there was no substantial or credible evidence to sustain the verdict. In the first place, there is no direct evidence that the brake was inefficient at the time of the accident. Such evidence as there is we think fails to overcome the physical facts. While the jury was entitled to disbelieve all the testimony produced by the defendant, it was not entitled to infer that the pawl overrode the ratchet, when the physical fact is it could not have done so on the evidence produced by the plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that while he was setting the brake it appeared to him that it was an efficient brake; that it operated normally; that it was effective in slowing up the car to the extent that it was just creeping along before coming to a stop; that he noticed by the light of his lantern that the pawl had properly engaged the ratchet and was holding properly; that the pawl was not overriding the ratchet when he set the brake; that he did not notice anything was wrong with the brake, its ratchet or pawl, and that if he had he would not have turned it loose. The only fact he testified to in connection with the brake was that the brake wheel unexpectedly turned clockwise, and with his right hand resting lightly on it he was thrown from the car. The testimony of plaintiff's son-in-law as to the extent of the play in the "dog" fell short by at least one-sixteenth of an inch of showing that the pawl could possibly have overridden the ratchet. The only evidence tending to show that the pawl at the time of the accident might have overridden the ratchet was the pictures taken of the brake assembly more than a year after the accident occurred, and the opinion testimony of plaintiff's son-in-law. The pictures in the record are not too clear, but for our purpose we will assume that they show that the pawl could have overridden the ratchet. But we think the pictures were erroneously admitted in evidence, as the conditions were not shown to be sufficiently similar or identical. The only evidence to indicate that there was no change in the condition of the brake assembly was the testimony of the son-in-law. But that there was a change, notwithstanding his testimony, is show by the fact that on his own measurements, made on the morning of the accident, it would have been physically impossible for the pawl to have overridden the ratchet. His opinion that the stress on the brake shoes would cause the pawl to override the ratchet is contrary to the physical facts testified to by him. Accordingly, it follows there was no substantial evidence that the pawl did override the ratchet.

If, then the brake wheel spun clockwise, as plaintiff testified, there is no evidence that it did so because the brake was inefficient, unless we may assume that the brake could not have done so unless it was inefficient. We think we may not make that assumption and that the jury was not entitled so to infer without evidence pointing to the fact. When we bear in mind that the plaintiff's own witness, Everly, although directly contradicted by plaintiff, testified that plaintiff told him at the doctor's office that he was pulling up on the brake and slipped and fell; that the undisputed evidence is that the incline was such that the car would have rolled back down the incline if the brake had not been set; that the brakes were found set three hours after the accident; that the car was then only fifteen feet beyond the point where the undisputed facts disclosed the accident occurred; that the switching crew had not touched it; that the evidence, contradicted only by plaintiff, is that a mist was falling for a half-hour before the accident; that plaintiff approached the brake contrary to well established custom for safety; that he falsified about his age when he applied for the job, making it appear that he was forty-four when he was in fact sixty-three; that he was injured when he was sixty-eight—in conformity with our charitable persuasions we shall classify his testimony and that of his son-in-law as incredible only. To permit the verdict to stand on the tenuous foundation upon which it rests would, in our opinion, be nothing short of a travesty on justice. The opinion expressed by plaintiff's son-in-law to the effect that vibration from the brakeshoes could cause a pawl to slip out of its ratchet was predicated on facts not shown in the record. For the jury to infer from this opinion, thus expressed, that the brake was inefficient would be pure speculation.

As in our judgment the verdict cannot be upheld, we need not consider appellant's claim that the instructions dealing with plaintiff's misrepresentations to defendant were inadequate. In view of a new trial, we need only repeat that the views expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States on that subject control.

[11] Inasmuch as the case must be reversed for a new trial we think it proper to comment briefly on the instructions. The instructions given to the jury dealt with the case as though it were an ordinary negligence case. This was error, but the error was the fault of the appellant. The case is not a negligence case, in the usual sense. There was no count based on any act of common-law negligence, but instead a count based wholly on the violation of a provision of the Safety Appliance Act. If there was such a violation the liability of defendant was absolute, whether or not it was negligent. If there was a violation of that act and the injury resulted proximately from it, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Accordingly instruction after instruction dealing with definitions and various phases of negligence were entirely out of place and should not have been given.

Judgment reversed.

McCOMB, J., concurred.

W. J. WOOD, Acting Presiding Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. In my opinion the evidence is sufficient to support the jury's finding that the handbrake was defective.

50 Cal.App.2d 844

RITTER v. FRANKLIN et al.

Civ. 2964.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 30, 1942.

1. Limitation of actions ⇨1

"Statutes of limitation" in a strict sense, are statutes of repose, and are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims or within which certain rights may be enforced, but statutes which merely restrict a statutory or other right are in the nature of "conditions" put by the law upon the right given.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Condition" and "Statute of Limitation".

2. Municipal corporations ⇨564

The amendment of Street Improvement Act requiring a suit to foreclose lien of improvement bond to be maintained within four years after due date of last installment is a "statute of limitation" rather than a "condition" restrictive of a litigant's right to proceed. St.1929, p. 1306, § 76a.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑405

A street assessment is a "contract" and provisions of statute in force at the time, prescribing manner of its enforcement, are a part thereof.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Contract".

4. Constitutional law 🔑169

If a remedy available to a person is altered after contract is made so as to materially impair the obligation of such contract, the law cannot affect the relations between the parties to such contract.

5. Constitutional law 🔑144
Municipal corporations 🔑526

The 1929 amendment of Street Improvement Act of 1911 limiting the time within which to foreclose a lien of improvement bonds to four years after due date of last installment, as applied to owner of bond issued in 1925, was not invalid as "impairing obligation of contract", since the amendment was merely a modification of the manner or means of procedure. St.1911, p. 730; St. 1929, p. 1306, § 76a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Impairing Obligation of Contract".

6. Municipal corporations 🔑564

Where street improvement bond, issued in 1925 under Street Improvement Act of 1911, did not become due as to its final payment until 1935, and act was amended in 1929 limiting time within which a lien might be foreclosed to four years after due date of last installment, and bondholder filed action to foreclose the lien in November, 1940, the limitation imposed afforded bondholder a "reasonable time" to prosecute the action after adoption of the amendment, and hence action was barred by limitation. St.1911, p. 730; St.1929, p. 1306, § 76a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Reasonable Time".

7. Municipal corporations 🔑564

In amending 1911 Street Improvement Act to require a suit to foreclose lien of improvement bond to be brought within four years after due date of last installment, legislature intended to give to any debtor who is sued thereunder the privilege of pleading the limitation statute in same manner that it might be pleaded should an action be instituted by a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgagee or by a payee for judgment upon a note, or other written instrument. St.1911, p. 730; St.1929, p. 1306, § 76a.

8. Municipal corporations 🔑564

A property owner was not precluded from interposing bar of four-year statute of limitations in action to foreclose street improvement bond because the act under which bond was issued provided for payment of principal and interest out of a particular fund only, since if a property owner had provided the fund for payment, his defense would be that he had paid his indebtedness, and only person to whom statute would be available would be the person who would not need its benefit. St.1911, p. 758, § 60; St.1929, p. 1306, § 76a.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by Linda Ritter against Harvey H. Franklin, the Pioneer Title Insurance and Trust Company, and others, to foreclose a street improvement bond. From a judgment for plaintiff, last named defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Robert Mack Light, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Tobias R. Archer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The following opinion was prepared by the Honorable Franklin G. West, Justice pro tem., and is adopted as the opinion of the court.

Respondent was the owner of a street improvement bond issued February 3, 1925, under the Street Improvement Act of 1911. Stats.1911, p. 730. She instituted an action to foreclose said bond in the Superior Court of San Bernardino County pursuant to the provisions of section 76a of said act. The said bond was a lien upon certain property in the city of San Bernardino, a portion of which property was owned by appellant and the balance by the defendants Franklin, who, prior to the trial, conveyed to plaintiff all of that portion of the lot of land belonging to them. The action was dismissed as to defendant Southern California Telephone Company.

At the date of the issuance of the bond here under consideration, section 76 of the improvement act of 1911 provided, insofar as pertinent here, as follows:

"In the event of the nonpayment of any installment of the interest or principal and by way of a separate, distinct and cumulative remedy, the holder of any bond upon which any payment either upon the principal or of the interest has not, or shall not be made when due, may file and maintain a suit to foreclose the lien of the bond in the same manner provided in this act for the foreclosure of the lien of delinquent assessments." St.1921, p. 297.

In 1927, St.1927, p. 1411, the section was amended to provide a four-year limitation for commencing foreclosure proceedings and in 1929 the provisions for foreclosure were taken out of section 76 and recast in a new section to wit: Section 76a of said act. Stats.1929, chap. 718, p. 1306. The general provisions governing proceedings for foreclosure were not materially altered. The provisions of said section 76a, insofar as bearing upon such limitation, read as follows:

"In the event of the nonpayment of any installment of the interest or principal and by way of a separate, distinct and cumulative remedy, the holder of any bond upon which any payment either upon the principal or of the interest has become delinquent may, at any time after three months after the date it is provided by ordinance or charter of said city that taxes are due, or in case taxes are collected by the county for the city at any time after four (4) months next succeeding the fourth Monday of September, following the date of delinquency of principal or interest and prior to the expiration of four (4) years after the due date of the last installment upon any bond or of the last principal coupon attached thereto, file and maintain a suit to foreclose the lien of the bond and recover the amount due thereon * * *."

According to the terms of the bond, which is the subject of this litigation, the due date of the last installment as indicated by the principal coupon attached to the bond was January 2, 1935. The first seven of the ten installments on the bond were paid, but the last three installments due respectively January 2, 1933, January 2, 1934 and January 2, 1935, were not paid for the reason that the fund providing for the retirement of said bond became exhausted January 2, 1932, by reason of nonpayment of any further installments of principal and interest into the fund by the owner of the property.

Respondent instituted the present action for the foreclosure of the lien of the bond on the 4th day of November, 1940, designating the appellant as one of the defendants, inasmuch as it was the owner of a portion of the land affected. By its answer appellant alleged that the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint was barred by the terms and provisions of section 76a of the Street Improvement Act of 1911, and also alleged that said action was barred by the provisions of sections 329, 337 and 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California. Upon the trial, the court found that all of the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true, and that the denials and allegations of appellant's answers were untrue. Judgment was entered for plaintiff, and the premises of appellant, or so much thereof as might be necessary, were ordered sold as provided by law. This appeal followed.

The single point presented on this appeal is as to whether an action to foreclose the lien of a bond issued under the terms of the improvement act of 1911 may be maintained in the face of a clear showing that the complaint was not filed within four years after the due date of the last principal coupon attached to said bond. The sole contention of appellant is that section 76a of the act is determinative of the question. It argues that where a statute contains, as does the act under consideration, as an integral part of its provisions a limitation as to the time of performance of a certain act specified therein as one of the steps in effecting a remedy, such limitation is not technically a statute of limitations, but is properly to be considered as a condition to the right extended, and that it must be strictly complied with by litigants seeking to avail themselves thereof. Respondent defends the judgment entered upon two grounds. First, that no statute of limitations barred the action to foreclose the bond for the reason that the provisions of the act limiting the time within which the action must be commenced were not adopted until after the issuance to respondent of her bond, and was therefore inoperative to change or impair the contract or to affect her right of foreclosure by any retroactive limitation of action. She furthermore urges that in any event appellant could not avail itself of a statute of limitations because section

60 of the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats.1911, p. 758) provides for payment of the principal and interest of bonds of the character owned by respondent out of a particular fund only, and that under such circumstances, the debtor may not plead the statute of limitations without showing that the fund has been provided to pay the obligation.

The court found, as heretofore mentioned, that nothing had been paid in to the bond fund for the payment of the amounts due on principal and interest since January 2, 1932.

[1] We are of the opinion that the case must be reversed, and that the trial court erred in its refusal to accord to appellant the benefit of the statute of limitations provided by section 76a, supra. It is not our opinion, however, that the distinction contended for by appellant, to wit: that the four-year limitation provided in said section is not correctly a statute of limitations, but a condition to the prosecution of a foreclosure action is well taken. The distinction between statutes of limitation and statutes in the nature of conditions is clearly set forth in the case of People v. Kings County Development Co., 48 Cal. App. 72, 191 P. 1004, 1005, where it is said:

"Statutes of limitations are, in a strict or legal sense, statutes of repose, and 'are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims, or within which certain rights may be enforced.' Wood on Limitations (3d Ed.) § 1. The same author further observes: 'Those statutes which merely restrict a statutory or other right do not come under this head (i. e., under the head of 'statutes of limitations'), but rather are in the nature of conditions put by the law upon the right given."

[2] We are of the opinion that we are dealing with a statute of limitations, rather than with a condition restrictive of a litigant's right to proceed.

[3-5] Referring to the first contention of respondent, to wit: That the action is not affected by nor subject to the limitation set forth in section 76a of the act, because of the general provision that a law enacted after a contract is made cannot apply to such contract, but can have only a prospective effect, we must disagree with respondent's theory. It is, of course, true that a street assessment is a contract, and the provisions of the statute in force at the time prescribing the manner of its enforcement are a part of such contract. Chapman v. Jocelyn, 182 Cal. 294, 187 P. 962; Jeffreys v. Point Richmond Canal & Land Co., 202 Cal. 290, 260 P. 548. It is likewise well recognized that if a remedy available to a person is altered after the contract is made so as to materially impair the obligation of such contract, the law cannot affect the relations between the parties to such contract. We do not believe, however, that the effectiveness of section 76a as providing a limitation is affected by the rules just referred to. In our opinion, the adoption of said section was merely a modification of the manner or means of procedure.

In the case of Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 91 P. 330, 332, the Supreme Court in discussing the question of the power of the Legislature to alter a period of limitation as to contracts then in force, stated:

"The constitutionality of statutes establishing or altering a period of limitation as to contracts then in force is beyond question. Subject always to the limitation that a reasonable time must be allowed for prosecuting a proceeding after the passage of an act establishing or shortening such a period, the power of the Legislature is absolute in such matters. There is in such legislation no forbidden impairment of the obligation of any contract. As said in Terry v. Anderson, 95 U.S. 628, 24 L.Ed. 365, the parties to a contract 'have no more a vested interest in the time for the commencement of an action than they have in the form of the action to be commenced, and, as to the forms of action or modes of remedy, it is well settled that the Legislature may change them at its discretion, provided adequate means of enforcing the right remain.'" See, also, Los Angeles Bond & Securities Co. v. Heath, 120 Cal. App. 328, 329, 7 P.2d 1089.

[6] The addition of section 76a to the improvement act of 1911 was in 1929. Respondent's bond did not become due as to its final payment until 1935. She filed her action in the latter part of 1940. It cannot be said that the limitation of action imposed did not afford a reasonable time to respondent to prosecute her proceeding after the adoption of the amendment established in the period of limitation.

The other point necessary to be discussed presents a somewhat more difficult situation.

In a number of cases the courts of California have used substantially the following language: "When payment is provided for out of a particular fund, or in a particular way, the debtor cannot plead the statute of limitations without showing that the particular fund has been provided or the method pursued." Sawyer v. Colgan, 102 Cal. 283, 36 P. 580, 583, 834; Hewel v. Hogin, 3 Cal.App. 248, 84 P. 1002; Bradley Co. v. Ridgeway, 14 Cal.App.2d 326, 58 P.2d 194. Respondent contends that the above stated rule is applicable to the situation existing here. She points out that section 60 of the improvement act of 1911 requires the maintaining of a particular fund by the city treasurer and payment upon the principal and interest of an outstanding bond from that fund and that fund alone. She further calls attention to the fact that it was specifically found that the debtor did not provide the particular fund from which of necessity the principal and interest of her bond had to be paid, and that therefore all of the elements are present which make the plea of the statute unavailing to appellant.

It becomes necessary to analyze to some extent the cases upon which respondent relies in order to determine their applicability to the situation present here. In the case of Sawyer v. Colgan, supra, a petition was filed for a writ of mandate, commanding the controller of the State of California to issue a warrant upon the state treasury for the amount alleged to be due on a certain bond and coupons. The bonds had been issued under an act of 1852 authorizing the state treasurer to issue bonds for the payment of expenses of certain expeditions against the Indians. It was stipulated in the bonds that they should be payable at the office of the state treasurer, ten years after date, provided they had not sooner been paid from funds anticipated in the act to be derived from the Government of the United States under Congressional appropriation. It was further provided that the bonds, if to be paid by the state, should be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the expenses of the expeditions mentioned in the act. Subsequently, Congress did make an appropriation to pay these bonds, but some portions thereof were not paid from said appropriation, which resulted in the mandamus proceeding being instituted. It appeared that from 1862 to 1889, inclusive, there was not in any year in the general fund in the State Treasury of California any surplus not otherwise appropriated, and that in 1890, for the first time, there was a surplus. The controller contended that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. It was clear that some thirty years had elapsed between the due date of the bonds and the institution of the action. It was held that since the petitioner never prior to 1890 could have maintained a mandate for the payment of his bond coupons because of the lack of otherwise unappropriated funds to pay them, the statute could not bar the proceeding, for since the state had not made available those funds necessary to retire its obligation, any previous demand by the bondholder would of necessity have been refused because of the lack of statutory liability on the state.

In Hewel v. Hogin, supra, there was an application for a writ of mandate commanding the treasurer of an irrigation district to pay interest on certain bonds. Several of the interest coupons had fallen due more than four years prior to the institution of the proceeding. The bonds themselves were not barred.

The defendant treasurer sought to avail himself of the statute of limitations. It appeared that no fund was at any time provided for the payment of these interest coupons, as of the time when they became due or until less than four years before the action was filed. It was held that since the principal of the bonds was not barred by the statute, and since no statute forbade payment of the accrued interest, even after the four-year statute had run thereon, the defendant should not be permitted to avail himself of the statute of limitations.

In both of the foregoing cases, it will be noted that the very person seeking to plead the statute could not have complied with a timely demand for payment had it been made.

[7, 8] In Bradley Co. v. Ridgeway, supra, the debtor was the owner of certain property upon which rested the lien of certain street improvement bonds. Certain payments of principal and interest were delinquent for a period of more than four years. The property owner offered to pay into court a part of the installments of principal, interest and penalties which had become due on the bonds within four years prior to the institution of the action, and sought to quiet its title against the holders of the bonds, and also sought declaratory relief with respect to the outstanding bonds. It was plaintiff's contention that it was not obliged to pay the "outlawed" installments in order to quiet its title against the lien of the bonds. This contention was rejected and insofar as pertinent here, this court predicated its opinion partially upon the rule that the debtor could not claim the benefit of the statute without showing that it had made the payments into the fund which in the action it was contended need not be paid on account of the bar of the statute. Under the peculiar circumstances of the Bradley Co. case, it seems clear that the rule was properly applied, for the debtor was attempting to quiet title against claims for payment of principal and interest due on bonds which had been validly issued, on the ground that such payments were barred by the statute of limitations, without pleading willingness to pay the indebtedness which was admittedly due. The cause of action was equitable in character, and as the court said [14 Cal.App.2d 326, 58 P.2d 199]: "No principle of equity is more firmly established than the familiar rule that he who seeks equity must first do equity." It is and always has been the rule that a court of equity will not look favorably upon the efforts of a debtor to avoid the payment of a just obligation, while at the same time seeking affirmative equitable relief. As applied therefore in the Bradley Co. case, the rule that when payment of an obligation is provided to be made out of a particular fund, the debtor may not plead the statute of limitations without showing that he has provided the fund, was clearly just in its application. To apply the rule in the instant case, however, would, in our opinion, render meaningless the clear limitation of four years provided by the Legislature in the enactment of section 76a of the act, for if a property owner had provided the fund for payment, his obvious defense to the foreclosure proceeding would be that he had paid the amount of his indebtedness into the fund, rather than to plead the statute of limitations. It follows that if the rule contended for by respondent is adopted, the only person to whom the statute would be available would be the person who would have no need for its benefit. Under the circumstances, sound legal reasoning would seem to indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature in the adoption of section 76a to give to any debtor who is sued thereunder the privilege of pleading the statute in the same manner that it might be pleaded should an action be instituted by a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, or by a payee for judgment upon a promissory note or other written instrument.

One other case was cited by respondent in support of the rule which she urges is applicable here. That case is McGrath v. County of Butte, 30 Cal.App.2d 734, 87 P.2d 381. In that case, petitioner sought by mandamus to compel the members of the board of supervisors to levy a special tax to pay for lands purchased at a delinquent tax sale. The sale had followed a failure to pay assessments on bonds issued by a county improvement district. Plea of the statute of limitations was raised, but it was held that the proceeding was not barred by subdivision 1, section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the reason that there was a continuing duty to levy and collect a tax with which to make the payment, and thus that the statute of limitations would never run as long as the obligation to levy the tax existed, such liability not being one created by statute but rather one arising out of the contract created by the bond. The case is clearly not comparable to the instant situation, since the obligation to levy the tax could never be fixed as of a definite date from which the statute would commence to run, while on the contrary, in our case the obligation of appellant arose at fixed intervals indicated in the bond coupons.

We are of the opinion that since the last payment of principal on the bond in question fell due on January 2, 1935, and the action to foreclose was not commenced until the fourth day of November, 1940, some five years and ten months thereafter, that upon a proper pleading the trial court should have found that the action to foreclose was barred under section 76a of the act. For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed.

50 Cal.App.2d 721

NORTHWESTERN PAC. R. CO. v. CONSUMERS ROCK & CEMENT CO.

Civ. 11945.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
March 26, 1942.

1. Landlord and tenant ⟹291(14)

Where assignee of tenant took assignment of lease in violation of provision against assignment without written consent of landlord, and landlord refused to accept assignee's tender of rent but notified assignee that assignment was not recognized, in the absence of a declaration of a forfeiture of the lease by landlord, judgment for landlord in unlawful detainer action for rent in excess of that provided in lease was error.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟹76(3)

The assignment by tenant of a lease in violation of a provision against assignment without the consent of landlord did not of itself terminate the lease or render the assignment void, but it merely gave the landlord the right to stand on the covenant against assignments and declare a forfeiture, sue for breach of covenant, or, upon proper notice, maintain action in unlawful detainer, but he could not, without declaring a forfeiture, recover rental in excess of that provided in the lease.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company against Consumers Rock & Cement Company in unlawful detainer for restitution of real property and treble rent. From portions of a judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, awarding to plaintiff an amount for rental, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Randolph V. Whiting and Henry F. Wrigley, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Paul V. De Ford and A. G. Goodrich, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff filed a complaint in unlawful detainer praying for restitution of certain real property and treble rental. The trial court found that no three-day notice had been served as alleged in the complaint and that no notice had been served terminating or forfeiting the lease under which plaintiff had leased the premises to defendant's assignor. The trial court therefore denied judgment for restitution but entered its judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $184, being rental at the rate of $60 per month, which amount was found by the trial court to be the reasonable rental value of the premises during the period that defendant was in possession thereof. Defendant made a motion for a new trial. Upon the hearing of said motion, the trial court made its order denying said motion but further ordering that the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment be amended so as to increase the amount awarded to $224. Defendant appeals from the portions of said judgment and order awarding said amounts to plaintiff.

In 1924, plaintiff leased the premises in question to Pacific States Construction Company for a period of one year at a monthly rental of $10. The written instrument provided that in case the lessee should hold over, such holding should be deemed a tenancy from month to month. It further provided that the lease could not be assigned without the written consent of plaintiff. The lessee went into possession and remained in possession under the lease until March 20, 1940, at which time defendant went into possession under an assignment from the lessee. Plaintiff did not give its written consent to said assignment and it refused to accept tenders by defendant of the monthly rental provided in the lease. Plaintiff wrote three letters to defendant stating that it refused to recognize the validity of said assignment but it served no notice terminating or declaring a forfeiture of the lease. The trial was had in August 1940 and it appears that in the meantime the major portion of said premises had been taken by the state for the purposes of a right of way for a highway.

[1] Defendant contends that the trial court erred in awarding to plaintiff any amount in excess of the rental provided in said lease for the period during which defendant was in possession of said premises. We are of the opinion that this contention must be sustained.

[2] The assignment of the lease without the consent of the lessor did not of itself terminate the lease or render the assignment void but the making of such assignment merely gave to the lessor certain rights to be exercised in the manner provided by law. Buchanan v. Banta, 204 Cal. 73, 266 P. 547; Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 104 P. 432, 25 L.R.A.,N.S., 609; Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 51 P. 684; Licht v. Gallatin, 84 Cal.App. 240, 257 P. 914; Ruppe v. Utter, 76 Cal.App. 19, 243 P. 715. If the lessor desired to stand upon the covenant against assignment, he could have given notice of his election to declare a forfeiture of the lease and could have sued for breach of the covenant. He could also have had his remedy in unlawful detainer if possession had been thereafter withheld following proper notice. But we find no authority indicating that the lessor had the option of merely giving notice of the invalidity of the assignment without declaring a forfeiture of the lease, and then suing for rental in excess of that provided in said lease. We are satisfied from the authorities cited that the lessor had no such option and that, under the circumstances before us, the award of rental in excess of that provided by the lease was not warranted.

The portions of the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

WELLS FARGO BANK & UNION TRUST CO. v. OLDER.

Civ. 11976.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1942.

1. Internal revenue 🔑121

Where Congress made only one exception in statute imposing upon executor the duty of paying federal estate tax, it will be presumed that no other exception was intended. 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, §§ 800–938, and 822(b), 826(c).

2. Internal revenue 🔑1732

Where decedent had created a trust and made a will without providing in either that federal estate tax should be paid by trustees, duty of paying such tax was on administrator with the will annexed. 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, §§ 800–938, and 822(b), 826(c).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. J. Goodell, Judge.

Action by Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company, as trustee, etc., against Lily B. Older, as administratrix, etc., for a declaratory judgment whether there was any duty on plaintiff to pay a federal estate tax liability. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Charles A. Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Martin Minney, Jr., and Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This action was brought by Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., one of the trustees of a living trust, for declaratory relief, praying that the court declare whether or not there was any duty upon the plaintiff to pay a federal estate tax liability. The trial court found for the plaintiff, and decreed that the administratrix with the will annexed apply the entire estate of Andreas Bang to the payment of said federal estate tax liability, and that any balance of said federal estate tax remaining should be paid by the trustees of the living trust created by Andreas Bang. This appeal is from said judgment.

The material facts in this cause are undisputed. On the 17th day of May, 1934, Andreas Bang created a trust, wherein plaintiff, Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., and Benjamin Older were trustees, and certain relatives of Andreas Bang were beneficiaries. Under the terms of said trust Andreas Bang transferred to the trustees certain personal property having a value of approximately $100,000.

Thereafter, and on the 17th day of May, 1938, Andreas Bang died, and after proceedings duly had, defendant was appointed administratrix with the will annexed of his estate. In said estate proceedings the assets of decedent situated in the state of California were appraised in the sum of $7,370.91. Other estate in a substantial amount is being administered in San Salvador and the probate proceedings in this state are but ancillary thereto. At the time the instant action was commenced, there was in said estate the sum of $4,072.88 in cash and one hundred shares of stock in Pan-American Life Insurance Company, appraised at $1,300. During the course of the estate proceedings a federal estate tax return was filed, wherein the aforementioned trust was reported, as well as the property constituting the general estate of said Andreas Bang. Thereafter it was determined by the Department of Internal Revenue of the United States that a federal estate tax was due and owing to the United States in the sum of $6,691.23. The United States Treasury Department made demand upon the trustees of said trust and the administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Andreas Bang for the payment of said tax.

[1, 2] The defendant contends that the trustees should pay all of the tax or that in equity it should have been apportioned. We find no merit in that contention. We have before us a simple matter of statutory construction. The congress has acted (26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, §§ 800 to 938). In the sections cited full provisions are set forth showing in detail how estates are to be taxed, the manner for computing the tax, and the person on whom the duty rests of paying the tax. That person is specifically designated as the executor. Subdivision (b) of Section 822 provides: "The tax imposed by this subchapter shall be paid by the executor to the collector." If the decedent had desired that the tax should have been paid, in whole or in part, by the trustees he could have expressed that desire in the deed of trust or in his will. He did neither. The same remark applies to the matter of apportioning the tax; and, in that particular, if the congress had so intended it would have so provided. It made an exception as to certain insurance (Sec. 826, subd. (c); but there it stopped. It will be presumed the congress intended no other exception. Bemis v. Converse, 246 Mass. 131, 140 N.E. 686. For the courts to designate a different procedure is to usurp the powers of the congress or to make additions to the will or deed of trust executed by the decedent.

The federal government is concerned in collecting the tax—and all of it. The statute makes the executor the actor. If the beneficiaries are dissatisfied they can make such contributions among themselves as to them may seem meet and proper. However, they are not entitled to have the courts readjust the responsibilities which the statute has definitely placed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and SPENCE, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 857

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INS. CORPORATION v. EDDLEMAN.

Civ. 13531.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 25, 1942.

Appeal and error 🔑801(1)

Where motion to dismiss appeal was supported by superior court clerk's certificate setting forth facts required by reviewing court rule, and all grounds stated in motion were supported by certificate and by authorities cited, appeal was dismissed. Rules of the District Court of Appeal, Second District, rule VI.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation against Moses E. Eddleman. From the judgment, defendant appeals, and plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Houston A. Snidow, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sanner, Fleming & Irwin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The respondent having filed its motion to dismiss the appeal in the above entitled matter, supported by a certificate of the clerk of the superior court setting forth the facts required by rule VI of this court, and it appearing that all of the grounds stated in the motion are supported by the said certificate and by the authorities cited, it is hereby ordered that this appeal be, and it is hereby, dismissed.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 680

POWELL et al. v. JOHNSON.

Civ. 2690.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
March 24, 1942.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 13, 1942.

1. Evidence 🔑419(15)

The maker of a note may prove actual consideration given for it and that actual amount of the indebtedness is less than the face of the note.

2. Trial 🔑397(1)

In action to foreclose mortgage with special defense putting amount due in issue, the special defense presented a "material issue" on which trial court should have made findings.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Material Issue".

3. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)
New trial 🔑64

Where court renders judgment without making findings upon all material issues of fact, decision is against the law and constitutes ground for a new trial or for reversal provided it appears there was evidence introduced as to such issue sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of complaining party.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)

In action to foreclose mortgage where defendant pleaded a special defense putting amount due in issue and the parties introduced evidence upon that issue, refusal of trial court in rendering judgment for principal, interest and attorney fees to find upon issue of amount due, which was a "material issue", constituted reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Donald L. Powell and others against Glenn M. Johnson, as administrator of the estate of Isaac H. Vogle, deceased, to foreclose a mortgage on real property. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for appellant.

Harvey, Johnston & Baker, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an action to foreclose a mortgage on real property in Kern County. Plaintiffs were given the usual decree of foreclosure directing that the property be sold to pay $6,500, the principal of the secured note, $4,389.72, accrued interest, $40, cost of the title search, and $1,250, attorneys' fees.

Earl F. Long loaned Isaac H. Vogle, his aged uncle, various sums of money over a period of years, taking notes secured by mortgages on Tulare and Kern County properties.

The documents affecting the Tulare County property are the following: Note for $2,000, dated January 3, 1922, secured by a mortgage recorded January 13, 1922. Release of this mortgage recorded June 21, 1929; note for $2,980, dated December 28, 1928, secured by a mortgage recorded December 29, 1928. Contract dated December 4, 1933, pertaining to the last-mentioned note and mortgage reciting that "the balance owing upon said promissory note is $1,500.00" and extending the due date of that sum to "on or before the 28th day of December, 1938."

The documents affecting the Kern County property are the following: Note for $1,800, dated September 14, 1923, secured by a mortgage recorded September 22, 1923. Release of that mortgage recorded June 21, 1929. Note for $3,207.66, dated June 15, 1929, secured by a mortgage recorded on June 21, 1929. Release of that mortgage recorded December 6, 1933. Note dated December 15, 1932, for $6,500, secured by a mortgage recorded December 6, 1933.

There was also an unsecured note dated June 19, 1929, for $50.

All of the foregoing notes were signed by Mr. Vogle and were made payable to Mr. Long who died on May 5, 1935, a resident of Franklin County, Ohio, where his estate was probated. Ancillary letters were taken out in Tulare County. Ownership of the unpaid notes together with the mortgages passed to plaintiffs.

Actions were started in Tulare and Kern Counties against Vogle to foreclose the mortgages. Vogle died and the actions were continued against Glenn M. Johnson as administrator of the estate.

The Tulare County action was tried first. While the pleadings are not before us it is apparent from the findings that a special defense was interposed putting in issue the total amount of the indebtedness, alleging that it was less than the $8,000 principal of the two notes and asking for an accounting to determine the amount due and unpaid on the notes.

It was found in that action that the sum of $1,500, represented by the note there involved, was due and unpaid. That court expressly refused to go further into the question of the total amount due and unpaid on the two notes and "expressly makes no findings on said matters." Counsel for defendant states that, as the pleadings admitted a total indebtedness of more than $1,500, this admission furnished the reason for the foregoing holding by the Tulare County Superior Court. This statement is not denied by counsel for plaintiffs. Judgment was rendered for $1,500, principal, $792.81 accrued interest, and $121 attorneys' fees, with the usual decree of foreclosure.

The same defenses were interposed in the instant case. The fact of the pendency of the Tulare County action was affirmatively pleaded and it was alleged that the total indebtedness for which the two notes were given did not exceed the sum of $4,000. An accounting was asked to determine the amount of the debt.

In the instant action the trial court found that the $6,500 note was given "for value received" but did not find the amount loaned by Long to Vogle and expressly refused to find on the special defenses which included the defense that the total indebtedness did not exceed the principal sum of $4,000.

[1, 2] It is a thoroughly established rule in California that the maker of a promissory note may prove the actual consideration given for it and may prove that the actual amount of the indebtedness is less than the face of the note. Richardson v. Lamp, 209 Cal. 668, 290 P. 14; Singh v. White, 111 Cal.App. 683, 296 P. 119; Cooper v. Cooper, 3 Cal.App.2d 154, 39 P.2d 820. This being true the special defenses presented a material issue on which the trial court should have made findings.

[3] In 24 Cal.Juris., pages 940, 941, the following rule is announced: "It has been repeatedly affirmed that where a court renders a judgment without making findings upon all material issues of fact, the decision is against law, and constitutes grounds for granting a new trial in order that the issues of fact may be determined, or for reversal upon appeal, provided it appears that there was evidence introduced as to such issue and the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of the party complaining." See, also, James v. Haley, 212 Cal. 142, 297 P. 920; Matthiessen v. Grand, 92 Cal.App. 504, 268 P. 675.

[4] Defendant introduced evidence tending to show that the total principal sum of the indebtedness for which the two notes were given was considerably less than the $8,000 total of the two notes. Evidence to the contrary was introduced by plaintiffs. Thus a material issue was presented both by the pleadings and the evidence upon which the trial court erroneously refused to find.

The judgment is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 658

O'BRIEN v. O'BRIEN et al.

Civ. 11871.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 24, 1942.

1. Trusts ⇨371(2)

In action commenced in January, 1940, complaint alleging that plaintiff's and defendant's mother conveyed realty purchased with family savings to defendant on his promise to hold one-half thereof in trust for plaintiff, that, pursuant to agreement between plaintiff and defendant, apartment house was built on realty and was managed by plaintiff, and that defendant repudiated trust for the first time in December, 1939, and ordered plaintiff to move from apartment house, stated cause of action for declaration of "voluntary constructive trust" or "positive voluntary trust resting in parol", which cause of action was not barred by "laches" or limitations.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Laches", "Positive Voluntary Trust Resting in Parol" and "Voluntary Constructive Trust".

2. Limitation of actions ⇨103(3)
Trusts ⇨365(5)

The statute of limitations and the equitable doctrine of laches do not begin to operate against action for declaration of voluntary constructive trust or positive voluntary trust resting in parol until trustee begins to act in hostility to continuing obligation imposed by parol agreement or understanding.

3. Pleading ⇨252(2)

An amended complaint supersedes complaints previously filed, and reference cannot be made to the superseded complaints for the purpose of contradicting the last complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Suit by George Ambrose O'Brien against William Francis O'Brien and others for a declaration of trust and for quieting of title. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed with directions.

Eric J. Robertson and Meurice Swim, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wolff & Wolff, Norman Sanford Wolff, and Harry K. Wolff, Jr., all of San Francisco, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff's second amended complaint contained two counts. In the first count, plaintiff sought to have it declared that defendant William Francis O'Brien was holding two parcels of real property in trust and that plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance of a one-half interest therein. In the second count, plaintiff sought to quiet his title to a one-half interest in said real property. The trial court sustained the demurrers of the defendants to said second amended complaint without leave to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendants and from said judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff contends that the trial court erred in sustaining said demurrers to the second amended complaint without leave to amend and in our opinion said contention must be sustained. The first count of the second amended complaint alleged the following material facts: That plaintiff and defendant William Francis O'Brien are brothers and they are the sons of Margaret O'Brien, who died in 1917. That during her lifetime, said Margaret O'Brien was the custodian and trustee of the accumulations and savings of the family, including those of the said brothers, and that said funds were held for the mutual benefit of said brothers. That said two parcels of real property were purchased with said funds. That in 1916, said Margaret O'Brien informed said brothers of her intention to convey said real property to defendant William Francis O'Brien upon condition that he promise and agree to hold one-half thereof in trust for plaintiff. That said defendant so agreed and that said Margaret O'Brien, relying solely upon said promise and without any other consideration, conveyed said property to said defendant upon said agreement and understanding. That in 1926, and while said defendant was holding said property pursuant to said trust, plaintiff and said defendant agreed to build and did build an apartment house on one of said parcels of real property and it was further agreed that plaintiff would manage and operate said apartment house for their joint and mutual benefit. That since that time and until December, 1939, plaintiff has so managed and operated said apartment house for their joint and mutual benefit and has accounted to said defendant for the income thereof. That at all times prior to December, 1939, peace and harmony existed between plaintiff and said defendant and each reposed great confidence in the other. That in December, 1939, said defendant, who was then 79 years of age, repudiated said trust by ordering plaintiff to vacate and move from said apartment house and by placing another in the management thereof for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff of his one-half interest in said property. That it was not until December, 1939, when plaintiff was served with a notice to surrender and vacate the premises, that he learned of said defendant's purpose to defraud him of said property and to repudiate said trust. The second count of the complaint contained the judicially approved allegations of the ordinary count to quiet title. The action was commenced in January, 1940.

[1, 2] While the second amended complaint may not have been a model pleading, the foregoing facts were pleaded with sufficient certainty and they stated a cause of action for a declaration of a trust in plaintiff's favor. Smith v. Lombard, 201 Cal. 518, 258 P. 55; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 127 P. 66; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 P. 430; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 P. 506; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 P. 689, 7 Am.St.Rep. 189; 25 Cal.Juris. 165, § 35. This type of trust has been termed a "voluntary constructive trust" or a "positive, voluntary trust resting in parol" and it has been said that "neither the statute of limitations nor the equitable doctrine of laches begin to operate until the trustee begins to act in hostility to the continuing obligation imposed by the parol agreement or understanding." Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 P. 506; see, also, Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 725, 127 P. 66. Here it appears that first acts of the alleged trustee in hostility to the alleged trust were committed in December, 1939. The action was commenced in January, 1940, and it therefore appears clear that defendants' claim that plaintiff's alleged cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations and by laches cannot be sustained.

[3] Defendants further claim in their briefs that there are certain alleged contradictions between the allegations of the second amended complaint and the allegations contained in the complaints previously filed. It appears unnecessary to discuss these claimed contradictions for the complaints previously filed have been superseded by the second amended complaint and it appears well settled that reference cannot be made to the superseded complaints for the purpose of contradicting the last complaint. Penziner v. West American Finance Co., 133 Cal.App. 578, 24 P.2d 501; Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 256, 124 P. 1004; Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 P. 625; Maddux v. Mora, 99 Cal.App. 695, 279 P. 467.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 674

SAFEWAY STORES, Inc., v. SAN JOAQUIN COTTON OIL CO.

Civ. 2670.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 24, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1942.

1. Execution ⇨37

A judgment creditor on levy of execution on mortgaged property is in no better position with reference to the rights of the mortgagee than the debtor would be.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇨157(2)

In action by judgment creditor against chattel mortgagee of judgment debtor to have value of mortgaged cotton, which was levied upon but not delivered to sheriff, applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, evidence sustained finding that act of chattel mortgagee in joining judgment debtor in signing application for government loan on the cotton constituted a "subordination agreement" rather than a release of the mortgage lien.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Subordination Agreement".

3. Attachment ⟹53
Execution ⟹37

Where a cotton crop was subject to an unpaid chattel mortgage, a judgment creditor of the cotton grower could not subject the proceeds of the crop to attachment or execution without tendering to the mortgagee the amount of the mortgage debt. Civ.Code, § 2969.

4. Chattel mortgages ⟹157(2)

In action by judgment creditor of cotton grower to recover from chattel mortgagee of cotton grower value of mortgaged cotton in mortgagee's possession not surrendered to sheriff after garnishments under attachment and execution and after assignment by cotton grower of his interest to judgment creditor, where mortgagee had applied proceeds of the sale of the cotton to the mortgage debt and judgment creditor had not offered to pay mortgage debt, evidence justified denial of recovery on ground that at time garnishments were served and assignment was given, mortgagee did not have in its possession or control any property, moneys or credits belonging to cotton grower. Civ.Code, § 2969.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action by Safeway Stores, Inc., against San Joaquin Cotton Oil Company to recover money and property garnisheed under writs of attachment and execution while in defendant's possession but not delivered to sheriff and for money assigned to plaintiff and held by defendant. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Calvin H. Conron, Jr., of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Borton, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice pro tem.

Appellant sought to recover the sum of $2,002.67 from respondent in a complaint which set forth three causes of action. The first cause of action alleged in substance that respondent, on December 21, 1938, had 47 bales of cotton of the value of $2,002.67 in its possession and control, said cotton being the property of the San Joaquin Agricultural Company, which will be hereinafter referred to as the Agricultural Company; that on December 21, 1938, plaintiff filed an action against L. A. Sustarich and the Agricultural Company to recover $2,026.12, and that in said action a writ of attachment was levied which on said date was served on respondent; that on June 21st, 1939, after judgment in said action was rendered in favor of appellant, execution was issued, levied and served upon respondent; and that in response to said levy respondent failed to deliver said property or the value thereof to the sheriff.

The second cause of action alleged in substance that on March 16, 1939, respondent had in its possession and under its control the sum of $2,002.67 owed by it to said Agricultural Company; and that on said date appellant caused a writ of attachment to be served upon respondent. The remainder of the allegations of the second cause of action were the same as those of the first.

The third cause of action alleged an assignment by the Agricultural Company to appellant of the proceeds of 47 bales of cotton to the extent of $2,026.12, and the service of said assignment by appellant on respondent on December 21, 1938, and that respondent, on January 26, 1939, and February 15, 1939, received the proceeds of said 47 bales but did not pay said proceeds to appellant.

The answer of respondent put in issue all of the allegations of the complaint except the incorporation of the parties and admitted that respondent had not paid appellant. The answer also set up by way of special defense the execution of the notes, a deed of trust and a chattel and crop mortgage executed by L. A. Sustarich, the predecessor in interest of the Agricultural Company, in favor of respondent, and alleged that the proceeds of said cotton were received and applied in partial discharge of said obligations, and that there was nothing owing to the Agricultural Company at the time of the alleged garnishment. Further special defenses were set up alleging that the levying or attaching officer did not pay or tender to respondent the amount of the mortgage debt at the time of the alleged garnishment, and that L. A. Sustarich, as general manager of the Agricultural Company, was acting for and was the agent of the Agricultural Company in all transactions concerning the crop.

The trial court found that appellant recovered judgment against the Agricultural Company and L. A. Sustarich in the sum of $2,061.77; that respondent did not have on December 21, 1938, or March 16, 1939, or June 15, 1939, any money or property which respondent owed to or which belonged to the Agricultural Company or L. A. Sustarich; that the proceeds of the loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation were applied in partial payment of the obligation due to respondent and secured by the chattel and crop mortgage and deed of trust; that none of the proceeds were paid to appellant; that the garnishing officers did not pay nor offer to pay the mortgage indebtedness; that throughout the entire transaction L. A. Sustarich was acting for and on behalf of the Agricultural Company. Judgment in favor of respondent followed and appellant appealed therefrom.

It appears from the record that early in 1938, one J. C. Sharp commenced growing a crop of cotton on property known as the McCrary ranch in Tulare County. There was a first deed of trust for $60,230 against the property and respondent held a second deed of trust securing an obligation of $20,000 from said Sharp together with a crop mortgage upon the cotton crop to secure a note of $14,124 plus the obligation secured by the second deed of trust. Respondent was financing the growing of cotton upon the property. In June, 1938, Sharp sold the property to L. A. Sustarich and on June 29, 1938, Sustarich executed a new note and deed of trust to the McCrarys and also a new note to respondent payable on demand in the sum of $25,000, secured by a second deed of trust which covered not only the real property but the "rents, issues and profits therefrom," and which contained all of the usual provisions of such deeds of trust. In addition to the $25,000 note and deed of trust, said Sustarich executed a crop and chattel mortgage in favor of respondent to secure, among other things, his note in the sum of $6,990, which mortgage, by its terms, and by its incorporation, by reference, of the terms of a fictitious mortgage on record in said county, made said crop and chattels, and all payments, bounties, bonuses and benefits that might be received from the state or federal government, security for the payment of the deed of trust note and any other sums that Sustarich owed or might thereafter owe to respondent.

Sustarich testified that shortly after he purchased the property he and one T. H. Mitchell entered into an agreement to jointly farm the property, and in addition to the crop of cotton to put in a crop of peas, and that Mitchell agreed to furnish the money to finance the operation. On August 8, 1938, Sustarich conveyed a one-half interest in the property to Mitchell by deed which specified that it was subject to the deed of trust and crop mortgage. By another deed, also dated August 8, 1938, Mitchell and Sustarich conveyed the property to the San Joaquin Agricultural Company, a corporation which they had formed, they being the only two stockholders, each owning one-half of the stock. There were three directors, Mitchell, his wife A. R. Mitchell, and Sustarich. Sustarich was made general manager and continued in sole and active management of the farming operations upon the property. On August 19, 1938, respondent was advised by letter that the Agricultural Company was the owner of the land and that the interest of Sustarich had been transferred to the Agricultural Company. Throughout the fall of 1938 and the early part of 1939, Sustarich was in sole and active supervision of the growing of the cotton and pea crops, and from time to time obtained advances from respondent to cover and defray the expenses of growing the crops, which advances, he testified, were used for the purposes of the Agricultural Company in growing said crops. The cotton, as it was harvested, was delivered to gins of respondent, and there ginned, and Sustarich, as general manager of the Agricultural Company, sold the cotton from time to time, and the proceeds were applied by respondent on the mortgage debt. By December 12, 1938, all of the cotton crop had been sold except 47 bales, for which negotiable bale or yard receipts had been issued. Sustarich testified that he and Mitchell, the only other stockholder in the Agricultural Company, agreed that because more money could be obtained by placing the last 47 bales in a government loan than by selling same on the open market, this remaining cotton should be put in a government loan. In order to secure the signature of respondent to said loan application, Sustarich, as general manager of the Agricultural Company, agreed that the proceeds of the loan would be delivered to respondent and applied on the secured obligations owing to respondent. On December 16, 1938, the application for said loan on 44 bales was made and the bale and yard receipts endorsed and delivered to the Commodity

Credit Corporation the government agency making the loan.

On December 21, 1938, appellant brought an action against Sustarich and the Agricultural Company and on June 15, 1939, obtained judgment against them in the sum of $22,061.27. A writ of attachment was issued and served on December 21, 1938, but no offer was made then or at any subsequent time, to pay the mortgage obligation due respondent. On December 21, 1938, Sustarich, as general manager of the Agricultural Company, signed a letter addressed to respondent, authorizing respondent to pay to appellant the sum of $2,026.12 out of the proceeds of 47 bales of cotton, and respondent acknowledged receipt of said letter but did not agree to comply with said order. At that time there was still due to respondent on the two notes hereinbefore mentioned, the sum of $26,876.99. On January 26, 1939, the proceeds of the government loan were received by respondent and applied by it on the secured debt. The other three bales of coton were sold on February 15, 1939, and the proceeds likewise applied by respondent on the secured debt. On March 6, 1939, a second garnishment under the writ of attachment was served on respondent, and on June 20, 1939, another garnishment under a writ of execution was served on respondent.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, and makes an extended argument raising many questions most of which it is unnecessary to discuss. As we view the matter, the issues of fact and law in this case are exceedingly simple.

[1, 2] Appellant, as the creditor of the Agricultural Company, is of course in no better position in reference to the rights of the respondent than said Agricultural Company would be. It is clear that the respondent had a deed of trust upon said land and a mortgage upon the crops thereof, and that in accordance with said deed of trust and mortgage, it had a right to advance money for the care and harvesting of said crops to Sustarich as general manager of the Agricultural Company, or to anyone else, and it is also clear that it had a right to said crops and the proceeds thereof superior to appellant. It is appellant's contention that by signing the loan application for the 44 bales of cotton (which virtually amounted to a sale thereof) respondent released its lien on said cotton, but in the light of the evidence and the testimony of Sustarich it appears that this must be considered merely as a subordination agreement rather than a release of the mortgage lien of respondent, as respondent was merely cooperating in completing the necessary details to consummate the loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

It may be true, as appellant contends, that the Agricultural Company did not assume the personal indebtedness of its predecessors in interest, but the land and crops that it acquired were subject to such indebtedness, and the only moneys here involved are the proceeds of said crops.

[3] Appellant has cited numerous well-established rules of law concerning the correctness of which there is no question. However, the difficulty with appellant's position is that the trial court, upon sufficient evidence, has found against the main contentions of appellant as to the facts. Although we may sympathize with the effort of a creditor who has furnished credit to a cotton grower to obtain his money notwithstanding a mortgage lien of the company which has financed the crop, which is still unpaid, there is no way under the law that the proceeds of the crop may be subject to attachment or execution except in the manner provided by section 2969 of the Civil Code, namely, by tendering to the mortgagee the amount of the mortgage debt.

[4] We must conclude, therefore, that the court below properly found that at the time the said garnishments were served and at the time the so-called assignment was given, respondent did not have in its possession or control any property, moneys or credits belonging to the Agricultural Company.

In view of the foregoing, it is unnecessary to discuss a number of other contentions made by appellant. We are convinced from a careful reading of the entire record that the judgment is amply supported by the evidence and that there is no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 697

PEOPLE v. PALMER.

Cr. 471.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 24, 1942.

1. Kidnapping ⚷1

In prosecution for attempted child stealing, the intent must be determined from the surrounding circumstances. Pen.Code, § 278.

2. Kidnapping ⚷1

The fact that girl was able to escape from defendant, charged with attempted child stealing, had no bearing upon the inference of intent to detain and conceal which might reasonably be drawn from evidence disclosing defendant's attempt to force girl into defendant's automobile. Pen.Code, § 278.

3. Kidnapping ⚷5

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for attempted child stealing. Pen. Code, § 278.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Gordon Thompson, Judge.

James O. Palmer was convicted of attempted child stealing, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Frank M. Downer, Jr., of San Diego, for appellant.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Gilbert F. Nelson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with attempted child stealing in violation of section 278 of the Penal Code, and with two prior felony convictions. He admitted the prior convictions and a jury found him guilty on the charge here involved. He has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The incident in question occurred on a little used road which runs into the hills back of Chula Vista. According to the evidence this road "is just a trail," has never been graded, is very rough, and is so narrow that there is no room for two cars to pass. There were two or three houses on the road near where it leaves Chula Vista and the purpose of the road was to serve two or three houses several miles up in the hills. On this occasion a girl 17 years of age was walking along this road toward Chula Vista on her way to school and carrying some books and a purse. As she neared Chula Vista the appellant came up the road toward her driving an old model green Chevrolet sedan. The girl stepped out of a rut to permit the car to pass but the appellant stopped his car, jumped out and grabbed her, ordered her to get in his car, and struggled with her in an attempt to force her into the car. The girl dropped her school books and purse and after a struggle succeeded in getting away. She ran several hundred feet to a house in the direction of Chula Vista, arriving in an hysterical condition, and a woman there telephoned to the Chula Vista police department.

The chief of police with another officer responded to the call and arrived at this house within a few minutes. The officers were given a description of the car and of the appellant and immediately started up the road in the direction the appellant had gone. About 500 feet up the road they found the girl's school books and purse lying in the center of a circle of footprints about five feet in diameter, which they described as looking as though someone had been going around in a circle. As they proceeded up the road they saw a green Chevrolet sedan coming down out of the hills at a high rate of speed for that kind of a road. Being unable to get by the officers' car the appellant stopped and immediately said, before any accusation had been made against him: "What the Hell is the matter? This is a public road here. I have got a right to drive on this road." The officers then placed him under arrest and without asking the reason for his arrest the appellant said: "You can't pin anything on me, I wasn't out of the car." The appellant then told the officers that he had driven into the hills to look for rabbits, although he had no gun with him. At the trial he testified that he had gone into the hills to look at a piece of real estate and that he had told the officers that he had gone to look for rabbits "for the purpose of throwing them off of any idea of how I may have arrived at that point on the road."

Immediately after arresting him the officers took the appellant to the house to which the girl had gone, where she positively identified him as the man who had tried to force her into the car. There was evidence to the effect that this road just ran two or three miles into the hills, that it did not connect with any other road, and that it was not possible to get from it to any other road without unlocking gates and going through the fields. This evidence justifies the inference that it was necessary for the appellant, having gone up this road, to come back the same way. In an attempt to establish an alibi the appellant introduced evidence that approximately half an hour before this incident occurred he had personally applied for a job at a certain place in National City. He testified that he then went out another road leading into these hills and after going up some miles took a crossroad over to the road down which he was coming when he was arrested. Not only does this entire matter present merely a conflict in the evidence but the appellant's brother, who testified that there was another road, which was rough and more or less of a trail but still passable, by which it was possible to go "miles around" and get into the road down which the appellant was coming when he was arrested, when asked on cross-examination how appellant could have gotten around over that road within an hour, replied: "I don't know."

The sole ground relied upon for reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment. No evidence is specifically referred to and the only contention is that no intent to detain and conceal this minor is disclosed by the evidence. In People v. Simmons, 12 Cal.App.2d 329, 55 P.2d 297, 299, the court said:

"The statute does not include 'concealment' nor 'detention.' It does contain an element 'with intent to detain and conceal.' As proof of that element, the courts will consider the acts and conduct of the parties, together with all the circumstances of the case both before and after the act complained of."

[1-3] As is usual in such cases, the intent must be determined from the surrounding circumstances. The fact that the appellant was driving along this lonely road toward open country up in the hills, with the facts surrounding his attempt to force the girl into his car, justify an inference that he intended to force her to accompany him into the hills and thereby intended to detain and conceal her from her parents or guardians within the meaning of Penal Code, section 278. The fact that the girl was able to escape has no bearing upon the inference of an intent to detain and conceal which may reasonably be drawn from the evidence. People v. Kocalis, 140 Cal.App. 566, 35 P.2d 584. There is no question that the appellant is the party who attacked this girl and the evidence with the reasonable inferences therefrom is sufficient to sustain the conviction under the statute.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 705

RAGLAN v. JOHNSTON ROCK CO. et al.

Civ. 6613.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 25, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1942.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑93

Where the change is gradual, whether caused by accretion, reliction or encroachment, the boundaries shift with the shifting of the channel or shore.

2. Boundaries 🔑42

In action involving boundary line, a finding which fixed dividing line as center of non-navigable stream "as now situated" and then delineated the line by metes and bounds was simply a determination that the center of the stream at that time had a definite location and would not operate to deprive either party of any advantage which might accrue to him at a later date by the shifting of the center of the stream to another location.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "As Now Situated".

3. Boundaries 🔑37(4)

In action involving boundary line, evidence sustained finding that boundary line was the center of a non-navigable stream as then situated.

4. New trial ⚷6

The granting or refusing of a new trial rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.

5. New trial ⚷99

Refusal to grant a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence was not an abuse of discretion.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; W. D. L. Held, Judge.

Action by A. W. Raglan against Johnston Rock Company for moneys due under contract for value of gravel removed wherein the defendant paid the money into court and by agreement Isaphene Beasley filed an answer and cross-complaint claiming the money so deposited. From a judgment for substituted defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Burke & Rawles, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Taft & Spurr, of Ukiah, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice.

The appellant herein, A. W. Raglan, is the owner of a ranch in Mendocino County situated on Highway No. 28, which runs between towns of Cloverdale in Sonoma County and Boonville in Mendocino County. A portion of the boundary line of his land on the southwest is formed by Rancheria Creek, a stream whose course runs in a general southerly direction. The appellant acquired the ranch in the year 1924. The respondent, Isaphene Beasley, is the owner of a ranch situated to the southwest of the Raglan property and whose northeast boundary is also formed by Rancheria Creek.

In 1938 appellant herein entered into an agreement with the Johnston Rock Company, which Company held a contract for the construction of certain highways within the State of California. The agreement was to permit the Johnston Rock Company to remove gravel from the bed of Rancheria Creek for which they agreed to pay to appellant an agreed price for each cubic yard of gravel so removed. Thereafter the Johnston Rock Company entered upon Rancheria Creek and removed the gravel, but due to the fact that the respondent herein presented her claim to the Company for the value of the gravel so removed, the Johnston Rock Company refused to pay either appellant or respondent. Thereafter the appellant herein filed this action against the Johnston Rock Company for the value of the gravel removed as provided by their agreement. The Johnston Rock Company thereafter deposited the value of the gravel removed as agreed upon by both appellant and respondent with the Superior Court of Mendocino County, and the respondent herein filed her answer and cross-complaint claiming the moneys so deposited. Findings were made in favor of respondent, to the effect that he was the owner of the land from which said gravel was removed, and judgment was entered that he recover that portion of the amount paid into court by said Rock Company which represented the value of the gravel taken from the lands found to be owned by respondent. A motion for new trial, based upon newly discovered evidence, was denied, and the appeal then taken from the judgment.

The sole question presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. The issue was the boundary line between the properties of the parties. On January 31, 1894, W. T. Rock, Jennie Rock, and Lawrence Rawles, predecessors in interest of the appellant, A. W. Raglan, executed a deed to S. W. Knowles, predecessor in interest of the respondent, Isaphene Beasley, conveying all their interest in "all lands owned by the parties of the first part, or either of them, lying to the south and west of Rancheria Creek, in Section 32, Township 13 North, Range 13 West, M. D. M." On the same date, S. W. Knowles, the predecessor in interest of the respondent Isaphene Beasley, made his deed to W. T. Rock conveying to him, "all land owned by the party of the first part lying to the north and east of Rancheria Creek in Section 32, Township 13 North, Range 13 West, M. D. M." The parties to the above mentioned deeds were apparently attempting to make Rancheria Creek the boundary between their respective ranches. Rancheria Creek is a non-navigable stream. Section 2077 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"The following are the rules for construing the descriptive part of a conveyance of real property, when the construction is doubtful and there are no other sufficient circumstances to determine it:

"1. Where there are certain definite and ascertained particulars in the description, the addition of others which are indefinite, unknown, or false, does not frustrate the conveyance, but it is to be construed by the first-mentioned particulars.

"2. When permanent and visible or ascertained boundaries or monuments are inconsistent with the measurement, either of lines, angles, or surfaces, the boundaries or monuments are paramount.

"3. Between different measurements which are inconsistent with each other, that of angles is paramount to that of surfaces, and that of lines paramount to both.

"4. When a road, or stream of water not navigable, is the boundary, the rights of the grantor to the middle of the road or the thread of the stream are included in the conveyance, except where the road or thread of the stream is held under another title.

"5. When tide-water is the boundary, the rights of the grantor to ordinary high-water mark are included in the conveyance. When a navigable lake, where there is no tide, is the boundary, the rights of the grantor to low-water mark are included in the conveyance.

"6. When the description refers to a map, and that reference is inconsistent with other particulars, it controls them if it appear that the parties acted with reference to the map; otherwise the map is subordinate to other definite and ascertained particulars."

[1-3] Rancheria Creek was and is the dividing line between the properties of appellant and respondent. The bed of said Creek, at the point involved in the controversy is of a width of approximately 600 feet, that is, from the southwest to the northeast bank. The volume of water in the stream varies with the season, there being but a small area covered with flowing water in the summer seasons and on some occasions the stream dries up in the summer months. The court fixed the dividing line between the parties as the center of said Creek "as now situated", and proceeded to delineate said line by metes and bounds. The testimony of surveyor Cummins supports such finding. The evidence shows that the stream meandered through its wide bed, in past years, changing from time to time. It is the rule that where the change is gradual and imperceptible, whether caused by accretion, reliction or encroachment, the boundaries shift with the shifting of the channel or shore. 9 C.J., page 195, § 82; 11 C.J.S., Boundaries, § 34. Appellant therefore contends that the court erred in fixing the line by a surveyed description, irrespective of the fact that the line is the center of the stream, and is subject to change. We do not believe that the findings should be so construed. The line fixed, although given by metes and bounds, is simply a determination that the center of the stream at present has a definite and fixed location. It is therefore not a permanent dividing line, and would not operate to deprive appellant of any advantage which might accrue to him at a later date by the shifting of the center of the stream to another location. The rule laid down in Corpus Juris is just as applicable now as it was prior to the judgment herein. We therefore hold that the attack upon the findings is without merit.

[4, 5] It is next contended that the motion of appellant for new trial should have been granted. That matter was committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. We find no error in the denial thereof. It was made upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in making said ruling.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMPSON, Acting P. J., and STEEL, J., pro tem., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 827

EDGAR et al. v. BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N et al.

Civ. 2691.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 27, 1942.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 25, 1942.

1. Appeal and error 🔑882(16)

Where defendant's objection to trial by jury was overruled on ground that action was at law and not in equity and, after evidence was in, plaintiffs advised trial court that they were uncertain as to type of action and were willing for jury to be dismissed or retained in advisory capacity, neither plaintiffs nor defendants could complain on appeal of action of the trial court in retaining jury in advisory capacity only.

2. Trusts 🔑265

Where bank by mistake sold arid land which the bank held in trust, and on discovering the mistake, after purchaser had drilled wells producing water for irrigation, bank repurchased land for trust beneficiaries, the bank could be held liable for its negligence, but beneficiaries were not entitled to punitive damages. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

3. Trusts 🔑247

The three statutory remedies available to trust beneficiary in case of use or disposition of trust property by trustee for his own profit are alternative. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

4. Trusts 🔑247

The statute setting forth extent of trustee's liability for breach of trust is aimed at making the trust beneficiaries whole. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

5. Trusts 🔑247

Beneficiaries who brought action for breach of trust against trustee which by mistake sold land held in trust and, on discovering the mistake, repurchased land for the beneficiaries, could not recover both value of use and occupation of land and the rents, issues, and profits thereof. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

6. Trial 🔑395(2)

In beneficiaries' action for breach of trust by trustee which sold arid trust land by mistake and on discovering mistake, after purchaser had drilled wells producing irrigation water, repurchased land for beneficiaries, findings that beneficiaries sustained $25,000 damages for having been deprived of use and occupation, rents, issues and profits, and loss of rents for use of water applied to adjacent lands, were too indefinite and furnished no reasonable basis for judgment for $25,000 for beneficiaries. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

7. Trusts 🔑263

In beneficiaries' action for breach of trust by trustee which by mistake sold trust land and, on discovering mistake, repurchased land for beneficiaries, complaint should have charged specifically whether recovery was sought for value of use and occupation of land, or for rents, issues, and profits thereof. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

8. Trusts 🔑265

In determining damages recoverable for breach of trust by trustee which by mistake sold trust land and on discovering mistake repurchased it for beneficiaries, true criterion of "rental value" was not what the land or water thereon would rent for under special circumstances or what its worth to owner or to a particular person would be, but its fair rental value on market when offered for rent under ordinary circumstances. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Rental Value".

9. Evidence 🔑555

In beneficiaries' action for breach of trust by trustee which by mistake sold arid trust land and on discovering mistake, after purchaser had drilled wells producing irrigation water, repurchased land for beneficiaries, testimony concerning rental value of land and water, given by witnesses whose opinions were based mainly on incompetent matter and on what a particular lessee of the land and adjoining land had been able to do on the whole property, was inadmissible. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)

In beneficiaries' action for breach of trust by trustee which by mistake sold arid trust land and on discovering mistake, after purchaser had drilled wells producing irrigation water, repurchased land for beneficiaries, erroneous admission of testimony concerning rental value of land and water by witnesses, whose opinions were based on what a particular lessee of the land and adjoining land had been able to do on the whole property, which must have resulted in apparently excessive judgment of $25,000, was prejudicial. Civ.Code, §§ 2229, 2237.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; K. Van Zante, Judge Assigned.

Action by Laura B. Edgar, as administratrix, etc., and others, against the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association and others, for loss of use and occupancy of land, and loss of rental for use of water from the land, resulting from fact that bank by mistake sold plaintiff's land which bank held in trust and, on discovering the mistake, repurchased the land for the plaintiffs. From an adverse judgment, the bank appeals.

Reversed.

Harvey, Johnston & Baker, of Bakersfield, and Louis Ferrari, G. D. Schilling, and D. Bianco, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

John W. Preston, of San Francisco, and Brittan & Mack, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

On February 15, 1921, plaintiffs or their predecessors, and defendants, other than the defendant Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, hereinafter referred to as the Bank, purchased in fee an 80-acre tract of land in Kings County. The recited purchase price of the property was $8,000. Because of the fact that there were some 30 or more of such purchasers, it was deemed necessary and advisable to take title to that property directly from the grantor to a trustee, and accordingly, arrangements were made by the purchasers with the Security Trust Company for title to be conveyed to it under the terms and conditions of a certain trust agreement hereinafter referred to. Upon the recording of the deed, the trust agreement was duly entered into between the purchasers and the trustee Security Trust Company. The trust agreement, in form a declaration by the Security Trust Company on the back of which was endorsed the signatures of the purchasers and owners of the land as the beneficiaries of the trust, contained, among other things, the following provisions:

"c. That the trustee was without power or authority to sell or lease the property except as provided in the agreement as follows:

"'In case of sale or lease of the property, or any part or portion thereof, the price and terms of sale or lease shall be agreed upon by holders of at least fifty-one per cent (51%) of the interests hereby represented, and the written consent of a 51% interest to said sale or sales, or lease or leases shall be our authority to make such sale or sales, or lease or leases and our authority for executing a conveyance or lease in accordance therewith;'

"d. The trustee was not required to pay taxes, * * *

"e. The fees for services of the trustee were fixed in the instrument * * *"

Appellant bank succeeded to the interests of the Security Trust Company as trustee without change in the provisions of the trust agreement. The trust property was allowed to remain dormant except for two rights of way, one in 1929 and the other in 1932, which were given by the trustee with the consent of the beneficiaries. From February, 1921, until December, 1936, the property was rented by the beneficiaries, whenever it could be, for grazing purposes, and the rentals received by them for such purposes did not exceed the amount of taxes. The taxes for the years 1932 to 1935 inclusive, were allowed by the respondents to become delinquent and were paid by the bank on January 5, 1937. During the years 1933, 1934 and 1935, no rental money was received by the beneficiaries for grazing. The taxes on the 80 acres for the years 1932 to 1935, inclusive, averaged $6.11 per year. In the year 1935, one Scott and one Stahl, after some investigation, became convinced that land in the region near respondents' land could be made to produce crops if water therefor could be developed. In October, 1936, a letter was written by Scott and Stahl to the bank to determine whether the 80 acres in question was for sale. This letter was referred to the California Lands, Inc., a subsidiary of the bank, which operated or leased the lands owned by the bank. An investigation was made by the California Lands, Inc., which disclosed that this property was acquired by the bank from one Murray, but such investigation was unsuccessful in disclosing that it was also held in trust for the respondents. The bank and California Lands, Inc., then being under the impression that it was desert land of questionable value upon which payment of taxes had been discontinued, and believing itself to be the owner of the property, sold the surface rights to Scott and Stahl and their respective wives for the sum of $800. $200 was paid down and the balance of $600 was agreed to be paid in various installments thereafter. The oil rights were reserved by the bank and conveyed without consideration to its subsidiary. At this time there was no irrigation of land in the Kettleman plain where this property was located. The entire area was arid and had been used only for pasturing sheep. It had a rental value for such purpose of 15c to 25c per acre per annum. The plan of Scott and Stahl was to drill a well for water on the 80 acres belonging to respondents, leasing several hundred acres of surrounding or near-by land cheaply and conveying the water thus developed to the entire project. After the sale of the surface rights by the bank on December 28, 1936, early in 1937, Scott and Stahl drilled two wells on the 80 acres and developed a large quantity of water (about 1200 gallons per minute per well). Pumping equipment was placed thereon by them. They also paid the cost of the wells and the casings thereon amounting to approximately $4,500. They also obtained leases on approximately 900 acres to the west and north of the 80 acres at a cost of about 50c to $1 per acre per year. When water was developed on the 80 acres, on March 1, 1937, they executed a lease to one Samples of the 80 acres as well as a sublease covering the 900 acres. The rental to be paid by Samples to Scott and Stahl was approximately $5 per acre per year during the term of the lease and sublease, which lease and sublease were to terminate on August 1, 1942. In October, 1937, one of the beneficiaries noticed that extensive farming operations were being conducted on the 80 acres. This was reported to the bank and an investigation was made. Immediately upon the discovery of the bank's error in selling the trust property, the oil, gas and mineral rights were reconveyed by the California Lands, Inc., to the bank and restored to the trust. Negotiations were then conducted by the bank which on March 10, 1938, resulted in a repurchase of the property by the bank subject to a reservation in the deed from Scott and Stahl reserving unto them the use and occupation of the 80 acres until August 1, 1942, on the payment by them of $200 cash and $400 annually beginning with the first day of August, 1938, to and including August 1, 1941. The water wells and casings were to be maintained in good condition, reasonable wear and tear excepted, and delivered to the bank at the end of the term. The repurchase price paid by the bank for the property subject to the reserved use was the cancellation of the balance of $500 owing on account of the original purchase price from Scott and Stahl and the further sum of $5,000 cash. This valuation of $5,500 was predicated on the amount that Scott and Stahl had paid for the property and the cost of drilling and equipping the wells with casings. From this transaction it becomes immediately evident that the bank expended at least $4,700 to recover the property for the trust as the result of its mistake.

[1] This action was filed by the plaintiffs and respondents to recover damages for its deprivation of the use, occupancy, rents, issues and profits of the 80 acres for the term of the reservation. Certain of the beneficiaries refused to join as parties plaintiff and were consequently joined as defendants and have become respondents on this appeal. By amendment at the close of plaintiffs' case, and over objection of the appellant, plaintiffs were granted permission to amend their complaint to charge damages for the loss of rents for use of water applied to the 900 acres for the same period. Objection was made by appellant to the trial of the action by a jury on the ground that it was an equitable action. See Reay v. Reay, 97 Cal.App. 264, 275 P. 533. This objection was overruled on the ground that the action was one at law. After all of the evidence was in, plaintiffs advised the trial court that they were uncertain as to whether the action was one in equity or at law; that they were willing that the jury be dismissed or retained in an advisory capacity. This point is not raised on appeal. In view of the conduct of the parties neither could complain. Hyde v. Redding, 74 Cal. 493, 16 P. 380. The jury was retained by the court in an advisory capacity and returned a verdict against appellant in the sum of $25,000, which verdict was adopted by the court and findings and conclusions were prepared and signed.

From the evidence it becomes immediately apparent that the bank was negligent in the handling of the property of the trust. This is admitted and there is no dispute as to this issue. The only question here presented is whether, under the pleadings and the evidence the court was justified in concluding that the appellant bank was liable to respondents in the sum found. The gist of the complaint is that the respondents purchased and transferred to appellant's predecessor, in trust, 80 acres of real property to be held and managed for the respondents; that appellant sold and repurchased the property; that by reason thereof the respondents "have been deprived of the use and occupancy, rents, issues and profits therefrom, * * * and loss of rental for use of water from said property, the same being distributed to adjacent leases adjoining said property * * *" since the 28th day of December, 1936, and "will continue to suffer damage likewise until the first day of August, 1942, and that by reason thereof these plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00)." The jury returned an advisory verdict that respondents had "been damaged by the actions of the defendant" bank in the sum of $25,000. The trial court then prepared separate findings and found that respondents suffered damages in the sum of $25,000 for having been deprived of the use and occupancy, rents, issues and profits and loss of rents for use of water applied to the adjacent lands, without specifying particularly whether the amount of the recovery was for deprivation of use and occupancy of the 80 acres or as rents, issues and profits therefrom, or loss of rental for use of the water from said property, which water was distributed to adjacent leased property, or all of these combined. Judgment was entered for the lump sum of $25,000 as and for "damages." This appeal is from this judgment.

At the outset it will be seen, as a result of the bank's so-called negligent act, on August 1, 1942, the beneficiaries of the trust, instead of having 80 acres of arid sheep grazing land which was producing practically no income and having no great rental value, and on which the taxes were delinquent, will have the same acreage returned to them, enhanced by two large producing wells and casings and the benefits therefrom paid for by funds of the appellant bank. In addition, the trust was paid or will be paid as rental, under the reservation agreement, until August 1, 1942, the sum of $200 cash, plus $400 paid on August 1, 1938, and a like sum on August 1st of each year thereafter, including August 1, 1941, and if this judgment is allowed to stand, the beneficiaries will receive, in addition thereto, the sum of $25,000.

[2] Respondents, in effect argue that the appellate court is bound to affirm the judgment because there is a conflict in the evidence produced on the issue presented on the question of damages and such conflict must be resolved in favor of the judgment of the trial court. This may be true if the evidence received was competent, relevant and substantial and based on law and reason. To apply the rules claimed by respondents alone to this case would work an injustice and not only give to them the pound of flesh they claim but also innocent blood to which they are not entitled. While appellant bank should be held liable for the result of its negligence in accordance with the rules of law applicable, it cannot be said that respondents may benefit by any judgment that indicates an award of punitive damages. Richman v. Bank of Perris, 102 Cal.App. 71, 90, 282 P. 801. From the pleadings, the evidence, and the instructions to the jury, we are unable to determine whether the proper measure of recovery was applied.

[3-7] Section 2229 of the Civil Code provides that a trustee may not use or deal with the trust property for his own profit or for any purpose unconnected with the trust in any manner. Section 2237 of the Civil Code measures the liability of the trustee for breach of that trust. It provides that a trustee who uses or disposes of the trust property, contrary to section 2229, may, at the option of the beneficiary, be required to (1) account for all profits so made, or (2) to pay the value of its use, and if he has disposed thereof, (3) to replace it with its fruits, or (4) to account for its profits with interest. These remedies are alternative. Work v. County Nat. Bank, etc., Co., 4 Cal.2d 532, 537, 51 P.2d 90; Reay v. Reay, supra. This section sets forth the extent of the trustee's liability for the breach of the trust here involved, and is aimed at making the beneficiaries whole. Clapp v. Vatcher, 9 Cal.App. 462, 466, 99 P. 549. In Work v. County National Bank, etc., Co., supra, at page 537 of 4 Cal.2d, at page 93 of 51 P.2d the court said: "The alternative remedies given to the beneficiary by section 2237, supra, are all aimed to make the beneficiary whole. * * * The only way the trust properties can be 'replaced' is to permit the respondents to receive what they would have received had appellant been faithful to its trust." In the instant case, respondents, neither by their pleadings nor otherwise, have elected to exercise their option and rely upon any one particular measure of recovery, but have grouped most of the allowed measures of recovery, taken evidence tending to support each one, and the trial court submitted all of the theories of recovery to the jury under instructions that would indicate that it could find on any one or all of the theories mentioned and, without designating in the findings or judgment the particular basis for the judgment, allowed an amount which, from the competent evidence received, would appear to exceed any one of the alternative measures of recovery reasonably allowable under the above-mentioned section. Under no theory of law would the plaintiffs be entitled to recover both the value of the use and occupation and the rents, issues and profits. If they elected to charge the bank for the value of the use and occupation, the bank would be entitled to retain the rents, issues and profits. They cannot have both. Whether the judgment is for any one or more of these items cannot be determined from the findings. The findings are not definite and furnish no reasonable basis for damages in the sum mentioned in the judgment. James v. Haley, 212 Cal. 142, 297 P. 920; 24 Cal.Jur., p. 935, sec. 183; 24 Cal.Jur., p. 940, sec. 186; Erving v. Jas. H. Goodman & Co. Bank, 171 Cal. 559, 153 P. 945; Yellen v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 115 Cal.App. 434, 441, 1 P.2d 1019; Hullinger v. Big Sespe Oil Co., 28 Cal.App. 69, 71, 151 P. 369; Armstrong v. Rau, 72 Cal. App. 288, 290, 236 P. 937. The complaint should have charged definitely and specifically the theory under which the recovery was sought. Tobin Grocery Co. v. Spry, 204 Cal. 247, 267 P. 694.

Respondents produced lay and expert witnesses who testified, over strenuous objection, in reference to all phases of the claimed damages for the breach of the trust by the trustee. Some of this testimony pertained to loss of profits, some to use and occupancy of the property, some to reasonable rental value of the 80 acres, and other portions pertained to rental value of the water in connection with the 900 acres. This may be illustrated by the testimony of one witness which was received in support of the judgment and is as follows:

"Mr. Brittan: Supposing you were a farmer out in this section and you had no water and you wanted to raise some crops, what would be the reasonable rental value to this farm in this section would be insofar as water being given to his land is concerned? (Objection by Mr. Harvey) * * * Mr. Brittan: I said 'What is the reasonable rental value' * * * A. Of course, it depends upon the crop. He can afford to pay more for crops like cotton than he could for flax or barley or grain. I think a farmer could well afford to pay over that—may I explain the general contours?

"Q. Yes. A. This land all has a gentle slope to the north, it is rather smooth and requires some slight floating, which is not a very difficult farming project. From the records given to me by Mr. Samples, it is mostly productive land." (There was testimony that in the year 1937 Samples raised total crops having a gross value in excess of $40,000; in 1938, in excess of $26,000; and in 1939, in excess of $26,000.) "On that whole property land has no value except for water, without the water it could only be rented for sheep pasture at a small rental (about 25c per acre). Based upon what I considered Mr. Samples' income thought he could afford to pay (italics ours), and based upon what I assumed that anyone could afford to pay on the whole property, something between twelve and fifteen dollars an acre. * * *

"Mr. Brittan: Now, having in mind the eighty acre parcel of land where you saw the buildings and so forth, and pumping plant, what would be the reasonable rental value of that land itself? * * * A. * * * I would place the value of rental on that, and it could be cultivated to crops, —oh, I assume you mean crops that bring the largest net rental to the farmer,—I think a farmer could pay for that property $15.00 an acre." (Italics ours.)

A motion to strike the above so-called expert testimony was denied.

"Mr. Brittan: What would be your opinion, based upon your investigation, and also upon your experience as an appraiser and being in the real estate business also, what would be your opinion of the value of the water per acre on the adjacent lands for farming purposes other than the lands of the eighty acres, what would be the rental value per acre per year?" This question was objected to on the ground that "it takes into consideration improvements on the premises and things of that sort which are certainly not proper to charge against these defendants as elements of rental value and incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, no proper and sufficient foundation laid for the reasons stated." The objection was overruled. "A. * * * Before I can answer that question I would have to determine the cost of the operations, planting, harvesting and sacks.

"Q. * * * I would like to have what the rental value of that water would be to that farmer who has no water per acre per year? * * * I think the value of the water to the person buying the water that could use it on the land adjoining this eighty acres to the north and to the west, if delivered to him without any other additional cost, that the water that could be delivered there would be worth about $15.00 per acre to that person."

A motion to strike the answer was denied.

"Q. (By Mr. Brittan): If confined to the eighty acre parcel of land if you owned the land what would you expect the reasonable rental value of that eighty acre parcel? * * * A. You also mean if I owned the pumping plants and wells and improvements on it? (Italics ours.)

"Q. Yes. A. I think it is worth $15.00 per acre as rental value."

A motion to strike this answer was also denied.

This is a general illustration of the evidence received and upon which the court allowed the judgment for damages in the sum of $25,000.

[8] The true criterion of rental value is not what the land or water would rent for under special or extraordinary circumstances or what its worth to the owner or to a particular occupant or to a particular person would be, but its fair rental value on the market when offered for rent under ordinary circumstances. Nathan v. Dierssen, 164 Cal. 607, 130 P. 12.

[9, 10] The lands adjacent, which were referred to in each of the questions above quoted, were the lands under lease to Samples. This was an inquiry into the value of the water to a particular occupant situated such as Samples was. It is plain from the testimony that the witnesses based their opinions mainly on incompetent and inadmissible matters and upon what Samples had been able to do on the whole property. They were basing their value mainly upon the peculiar situation of this particular land and the gross value of crops produced thereon by Samples, without considering the cost of production, planting, harvesting and sacks, and without considering the personal element of skill, industry and management. They were not giving opinions of market value or reasonable rental value on the market of the 80 acres here involved, together with the water thereon. The motions to strike portions of this evidence should have been granted. Reclamation District No. 730 v. Inglin, 31 Cal.App. 495, 500, 160 P. 1098; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 62, 25 P. 977, 11 L.R.A. 604. Timely motions were made to strike the evidence of these witnesses for the reason that they were based upon what one man's industry and skill had been successful in producing and were, for many reasons, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. The rulings of the court in reference to a great portion of the evidence received, were prejudicial and must have resulted in the apparent excessive judgment rendered. Crow v. San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co., 130 Cal. 309, 314, 62 P. 562, 1058; Stockton & C. R. R. Co. v. Galgiani, 49 Cal. 139, 140. All these matters were called to the attention of the court on a motion for new trial and a request for a specific finding in reference to them was made. This request was refused by the trial court.

The judgment is unsupported by proper evidence, unsupported by proper findings, and appears to be excessive. It should be and is reversed.

BARNARD, P. J., and MARKS, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 709

BURGER et al. v. HIRNI, County Auditor.

Civ. 2681.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 25, 1942.

1. Statutes 🔑158

The repeal of statutes by implication is not favored, especially where prior enactment has been judicially construed and is generally understood and acted upon.

2. Statutes 🔑158

It will be presumed, in absence of express terms, that Legislature did not intend to repeal a statute by a later act, if both can be given effect by fair and reasonable construction.

3. Statutes 🔑159

To overcome presumption that act was not intended to repeal former act, the two acts must be "irreconcilable", that is, clearly repugnant, as to vital matters to which they relate and so inconsistent that they cannot operate concurrently, or it must be apparent that later act is revision of entire subject matter and designed as substitute for earlier act, or intent to effect repeal must be otherwise expressed in unmistakable language.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Irreconcilable".

4. Statutes 🔑161(1)

Two laws on same subject will be so construed as to maintain integrity of both, if reasonably possible, as courts are bound to uphold prior act, if both may well subsist together, but if they cannot be reconciled; the last act governs and repeals former act so far as they are repugnant.

5. Statutes ⟐158

The theory of repeal of statute by inadvertence will not be considered, if another result may be reached by application of any rule of construction.

6. Schools and school districts ⟐22

The sections of School Code, referring exclusively to annexation of elementary or high school districts to unified school districts, do not impliedly repeal earlier sections prescribing procedure for withdrawal of elementary districts from union high school districts, as two groups of sections do not relate to same subject and are neither conflicting nor irreconcilable. School Code, §§ 2.120–2.131, 2.270, 2.271, 2.640 et seq., 2.641, 2.2081–2.2084.

7. Statutes ⟐231

A code section dealing with but one subject must be construed in its entirety.

8. Statutes ⟐231

The provisions of entire code, or at least all those relating to same subject matter, must be examined in order to ascertain meaning of language of one section thereof.

9. Statutes ⟐231

The various sections of a code should be read together and harmonized, if reasonably possible, so that all may stand.

10. Schools and school districts ⟐37(1), 42(2)

An elementary school district, which is part of union high school district, should follow procedure established by law for its withdrawal from such high school district, as well as prescribed procedure for its annexation to unified school district, in order to join such unified district. School Code, §§ 2.120–2.131, 2.270, 2.271, 2.640 et seq., 2.641, 2.2081–2.2084.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Proceeding by August T. Burger, as a taxpayer of Central School District in Tulare County, and such district for a writ of mandate requiring William J. Hirni, as auditor of such county, to compute taxes on property in the district annexed to the Lindsay Unified School District of Tulare County. From a judgment denying a peremptory writ, petitioners appeal.

Affirmed.

Jas. R. McBride, of Lindsay, for appellants.

Walter C. Haight, Dist. Atty., and Leroy McCormick, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Visalia, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is a petition for a writ of mandate brought by August T. Burger as a taxpayer of the Central School District in Tulare County, and by that district against Wm. J. Hirni, as auditor of Tulare County to require him to compute the taxes on property in the Central School District as annexed to and a part of the Lindsay Unified School District of Tulare County. The Central School District had been a part of the Exeter Union High School District. The trial court refused to issue the peremptory writ of mandate and this appeal followed.

All the facts of the case are admitted. Without question the Central School District and the Lindsay Unified School District complied with all the provisions of the School Code (Secs. 2.120 to 2.131, incl., Sec. 2.270, Secs. 2.2081 to 2.2084, incl.) necessary to permit the joining of the two districts. Also admittedly the Central School District complied with none of the provisions of that code governing withdrawal from Exeter Union High School District. Sec. 2.640 et seq., School Code.

The question presented to us is this: Can a school district which is a part of a union high school district join a unified school district and thereby automatically sever itself from the union high school district by following the prescribed procedure permitting it to join a unified school district without following the prescribed procedure under which it can sever itself from the union high school district?

Sections 1577 and 1578 of the Political Code have been codified into sections 2.120 to 2.131, inclusive, of the School Code. Section 1591a of the Political Code has been codified into sections 2.270 and 2.271 of the School Code. Sections 2.640 and 2.641 of the School Code have similar provisions relating to the separation of a district from a union or a joint union high school district as had the former section, 1591a of the Political Code relating to its separation from a union elementary district.

Section 2.2081 of the School Code as amended in 1939, and sections 2.2082 and 2.2083, as passed in that year (Stats. 1939, Ch. 433 p. 1763) established the procedure for the annexation of an elementary or high school district to a contiguous unified school district. These sections do not provide for the withdrawal of an elementary district from a union high school district of which it may have been a member before its annexation to the unified school district.

It is petitioners' theory that as section 2.2081 of the School Code was amended in 1939, and sections 2.2082 and 2.2083 of that code were enacted in that year, subsequent to the adoption of the other sections we have cited requiring the withdrawal of a school district from a union high school district, the 1939 enactments provide for a complete and exclusive procedure for annexation which can be followed without the necessity of following the procedure prescribed for the withdrawal from the union high school district. This argument has the legal effect of maintaining that the 1939 enactments repealed by implication the other sections of the School Code requiring a school district to follow the procedure to withdraw from a union high school district before it can be excluded therefrom.

[1-5] In 23 Cal.Juris., page 694, it is said: "It is elementary that the repeal of statutes by implication is not favored, especially where the prior enactment has been judicially construed and is generally understood and acted upon. Likewise, in the absence of express terms it will be presumed that the legislature did not intend by a later act to repeal a former one, if by a fair and reasonable construction effect can be given to both. To overcome this presumption, the two acts must be irreconcilable—i. e., clearly repugnant—as to the vital matters to which they relate, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation, or it must be apparent that the later statute is a revision of the entire subject matter and designed as a substitute for the earlier act, or the intent to effect a repeal must be otherwise expressed in unmistakable language. Accordingly, where there are two laws upon the same subject, they will, if reasonably possible, be so construed as to maintain the integrity of both, the courts being bound to uphold the prior act if the two may well subsist together, though if the two cannot be reconciled, the last act will, of course, govern, and repeals the former in so far as the two are repugnant. The theory of repeal by inadvertence will not be considered if another result may be reached by the application of any rule of construction * * *."

[6] Sections 2.2081, 2.2082 and 2.2083 of the School Code refer exclusively to the annexation of an elementary or high school district to a unified school district. The other sections we have cited prescribe the procedure for the withdrawal from a district. It is immediately apparent that the two groups of sections do not relate to the same subject and are neither conflicting nor irreconcilable. Therefore under the rules we have quoted we cannot regard the 1939 sections as a repeal by implication of the earlier sections.

[7-9] A further rule of construction important here is thus stated in 23 Cal. Juris., at page 761: "This rule is applicable to the codes. Thus it has been held that a code section which deals with but a single subject must be construed in its entirety; that the provisions of the entire code—or at least all such provisions as relate to the same subject matter—must be examined in order to ascertain the meaning of the language of one section; and that the various sections of a code should be read together and harmonized if reasonably possible, so that all may stand."

[10] It needs no great effort to harmonize and give effect to both groups of sections as they do not relate to the same subject matter and therefore are neither inconsistent nor conflicting. We can thus give each effect in the sphere in which it is supposed to operate. We therefore conclude that the trial court properly construed all of the code sections together, gave effect to both groups and correctly held that the Central School District should have followed the procedure established by law for its withdrawal from the Exeter Union High School District as well as the prescribed procedure for its annexation to the Lindsay Unified School District.

We are fortified in this conclusion by the case of Slater v. Kesey, 102 Cal.App. 266, 282 P. 1021, 1022, where a similar result was reached. It is true that the Slater case was decided prior to the adoption of the School Code, but the sections of the Political Code there construed were not materially changed when they were adopted into the School Code. With a factual situation somewhat similar to the one before us, the court there held: "These several sections respecting the organization, maintenance severance, and termination of school districts must be construed together and harmonized if possible. This leads to the conclusion that after an elementary school district becomes subject to a joint or union district by formally uniting therewith, except when it has been suspended under the provisions of section 1591b of the Political Code, it is imperative that such district or any portion of its territory seeking independence from the union district shall first withdraw therefrom in the manner prescribed by section 1591a of the same Code. Having voluntarily become a part of a duly organized union district, independence therefrom may be secured only by a formal severance. Participation in the benefits of a union district may not be repudiated without legal process and without consent of the representatives of the union district so abandoned."

The judgment is affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 700

DAVIS v. ROBINSON.

Civ. 11769.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 25, 1942.

1. Death 🔑13

Where motorist negligently caused mother's death, obligation arose against motorist, immediately on the mother's death, to recompense her child for any damages sustained and such obligation constituted a "cause of action", the child's action against the motorist being founded thereon. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Cause of Action".

2. Death 🔑27

Where decedent's mother improperly obtained judgment in death action against negligent motorist although decedent's son, rather than her mother, was decedent's heir and hence the only party who could properly bring death action, such recovery did not bar action by son. Code Civ.Proc. § 377.

3. Stipulations 🔑19

Admissions of fact made by counsel in one case have no binding effect in another and different action. Code Civ.Proc. § 283.

4. Stipulations 🔑19

In death action by decedent's son, admission of stipulations by defendant's counsel in former death action by decedent's mother, wherein defendant's responsibility for the fatal accident was admitted, was erroneous. Code Civ.Proc. § 283.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)

In death action by decedent's son, admission of stipulations by defendant's counsel in former death action by decedent's mother, wherein defendant's responsibility for the fatal accident was admitted, was prejudicial to defendant where the only other evidence of defendant's negligence was policeman's testimony as to defendant's oral statements, relating how defendant had struck decedent without seeing her while driving on right hand side of street. Code Civ.Proc. § 283.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by Olin Davis, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, against Alfred Robinson, for the death of plaintiff's mother. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Elliott Johnson and D. W. Brobst, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

B. C. JONES, Justice pro tem.

This action is by a minor suing through a guardian ad litem to recover damages as an heir under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the negligent death of his mother. The complaint alleges that the mother, Nilan Burns, was struck and killed by an automobile, driven by the defendant, while she was crossing East 14th Street in Oakland in a pedestrian lane.

Prior to the bringing of this suit one Ida B. Turner, the grandmother of the plaintiff, also sued the defendant for damages under section 377 for the death of Nilan Burns, claiming to be her heir and recovered a judgment for $2,500. This judgment was paid by the defendant and satisfaction thereof duly entered. The grandmother did not divulge that her daughter was the mother of a child, although at the time he was in her care and being kept by her. She was not joined as a defendant, or otherwise made a party to this action. The child was awarded a judgment by the court in the sum of $4,000, and it is from this judgment in favor of the child that the defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The appellant makes the point that the judgment recovered by the grandmother is a bar to a recovery by the plaintiff, and in support of his position he cites the case of Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 139 Cal. 480, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244, 96 Am. St.Rep. 154, and other cases. In each of these cases the question raised was as to the right of an heir to maintain the action, or the effect of an action brought by one heir out of several. In none of them was there presented the precise question here involved. Ida Turner, the grandmother, not being an heir, was not entitled under the provisions of section 377 to recover a judgment against the defendant. The fact that she did so did not jeopardize the rights of the minor child as an heir of the decedent. If the defendant had been negligent, an obligation arose in the child's favor against the defendant immediately upon the mother's death to recompense him for any damages sustained. An obligation so created is the cause of action, and upon that obligation the action is founded. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 P. 705, 84 Am.St.Rep. 53; Bradford v. Southern R. Co., 195 U.S. 243, 25 S.Ct. 55, 49 L.Ed. 178; Milwaukee Light, Heat & Traction Co. v. Ela Co., 142 Wis. 424, 125 N.W. 903, 27 L.R.A.,N.S., 567, 20 Ann. Cas. 707. When such a cause of action arises, it can only be defeated by a release, payment, or the receipt of something in satisfaction. The failure of the defendant to defend against the false claim of any one who was not an heir does not operate to estop another with a rightful claim to prosecute his cause of action.

In the action brought by the child's grandmother, and in which she recovered, counsel for the defendant stipulated liability and responsibility for the happening of the accident. The stipulation so made is as follows: "Mr. Johnson: Your Honor, I might simplify matters a little bit by saying that Mr. Robinson, who is seated here, confesses liability and responsibility for the happening of the accident in which the deceased was killed. The only question to be litigated is that of damages. I think the evidence will be confined to that feature of the case."

[3, 4] The appellant contends that the admission of this stipulation, made in another and different case, in evidence in this case constitutes reversible error. It was early held in this state to be the rule that admissions of fact made by counsel in one case can have no binding effect in another and different action. Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 83 Am.Dec. 64. As is said in Board of Commissioners v. Sutliff, 8 Cir., 97 F. 270, 282, 38 C.C.A. 167, "A stipulation made by an attorney in one action will not bind his client in another, unless the latter expressly acquiesces in it in the second suit. Much less will it estop his assignee. Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Jones, 32 Mo.App. 657, 664; Wilkins v. Stidger [supra], 22 Cal. pages 232, 239, [83 Am.Dec. 64]; Weisbrod v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 20 Wis. [419], 441, 443. The reason for this rule is obvious. An attorney employed to conduct and try a single action has no power to bind his client or the assignee of his client in subsequent suits upon other causes of action, respecting which he has neither retainer, employment, nor authority." To the same effect is Berry v. Littlefield, Alvord & Co., 54 App.D.C. 195, 296 F. 285, 287. The authority of an attorney to bind his client in any proceeding is found in section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is there provided: "An attorney and counselor shall have authority: 1. To bind his client in any of the steps of an action or proceeding by his agreement filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes of the court, and not otherwise." It is manifest that the stipulation made by counsel with reference to the alleged cause of action of the grandmother, Ida Turner, against the defendant, was not entered in the minutes of the court in the action of this plaintiff against the defendant. Unless so entered it can have no binding effect. Fresno City High School District v. Dillon, 34 Cal.App. 2d 636, 94 P.2d 86. The admission of the stipulation in evidence in this case was clearly erroneous but the point is made that it was not prejudicially so.

The only evidence as to what occurred at the scene of the accident is contained in an oral statement made by the defendant to a police officer on the day following. This statement as testified to by the officer is as follows:

"'I was driving west on East 14th Street about 25 to 30 miles an hour. There was no top on my car. The weather was clear. The streets were dry, and my brakes were good. I was driving between the north curb and the tracks.' And later he corrected this particular statement by, 'I was driving between the north curb and the tracks' and qualified it by saying, 'I am not certain of it.' Then he said, 'I never saw the woman before I struck her. I heard her scream about the center of the intersection of Fourth Avenue and East 14th Street. I didn't know where the scream came from. I stopped immediately, then continued on with the car about 100 feet west of Fourth Avenue, parked my car, as there was several parked at the curbing. I stopped as soon as I heard the scream and put my car in second gear to pull out of the street to the curb. I told her to remain in the car and I went back to the safety zone on the southwest corner of Fourth Avenue and East 14th Street. Saw the woman lying in the rails of the eastbound street car tracks. I called for some one to get an ambulance. Then I went back to my car and asked the young lady to park it on Third Avenue around the corner facing East 14th Street. Then went back to the scene, and the ambulance arrived. Saw the ambulance pick up the woman and drive away.'"

It is this oral statement taken with the stipulation in the Turner case that comprises the evidence of the defendant's negligence. There is no corroboration of the statement other than the stipulation. In passing upon the effect of oral admissions as evidence, the Supreme Court in Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 430, 71 P.2d 220, 230, said: "On the subject of oral admissions, unless corroborated by satisfactory evidence, this court, in the Estate of Emerson, 175 Cal. 724, 728, 729, 167 P. 149, rates it as the weakest of testimony that can be produced." Again in Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., 212 Cal. 540, 560, 299 P. 529, 537, it is said: "Evidence of the declarations or oral admissions of a party are always received with caution. Code Civ.Proc., § 2061, sub. 4. The reason for this rule is that: 'In most cases it is impossible, however honest the witness may be, for him to give the exact words in which the declaration or admission was made. Sometimes even the transposition of the words of a party may give a meaning entirely different from that which was intended to be conveyed. The slightest mistake or failure of recollection may totally alter the effect of the declaration or admission.' 10 Cal.Jur., p. 1081; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 44, 85 Am.Dec. 157."

There is very little evidentiary value to be attached to the declaration which we have here when it is taken alone. In Larson v. Larsen, 72 Cal.App. 169, 236 P. 979, where the evidence was weak and largely circumstantial, it was held that evidence of other acts than that charged, erroneously admitted, was prejudicial. And in Anderson v. Hagen, 19 Cal.App.2d 714, 66 P.2d 168, that hearsay testimony was prejudicial, the other evidence in the case being in sharp conflict on a vital issue. The court there deemed the erroneously admitted testimony sufficient to turn the case in view of the sharp conflict in the other evidence. The character of the oral statement here presented leaves the weight of the proof of liability resting upon the erroneously admitted stipulation. In such a case the trial court could not but have taken into consideration in some degree the confession of negligence and responsibility for the death of the decedent in making its findings. As is said in Nishi v. Inoguchi, 116 Cal.App. 398, 2 P.2d 864, 865, quoting from Estate of James, 124 Cal. 653, 655, 57 P. 578, 1008: "'If improper evidence under objection has been admitted, it is impossible for this court to say how much weight and influence it had in the mind of the trial court in framing its findings of fact. The improperly admitted evidence may have been all-powerful to that effect. As far as this court knows, it may have been that particular evidence which turned the scale, and lost the case to the appellants. This must, of necessity, be the rule wherever improper evidence has been admitted, which, upon its face, tends in any degree to affect the final conclusion of the court.'"

[5] In view of the inherent weakness in the oral statement, the error in admitting the stipulation of liability made in a different case cannot be said to be without prejudice.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 837

CALDER v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.

Civ. 11929.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 30, 1942.

Hearing Denied May 28, 1942.

1. Negligence ⚿1
Nuisance ⚿1, 7

While a nuisance and liability for injuries occasioned thereby may exist without negligence, the torts of negligence and nuisance may be coexisting and practically inseparable, and a "nuisance", especially with respect to buildings or premises, presupposes negligence. Civ.Code, § 3479.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Nuisance".

2. Negligence ⚿65
Nuisance ⚿43

When a claim of liability is predicated upon theory of nuisance or theory of negligence, defense of contributory negligence is available to defendant. Civ.Code, § 3479.

3. Municipal corporations ⚿808(2, 3)

Every obstruction or depression, constructed or maintained by a property owner in the area between curb and property line, does not necessarily constitute a "nuisance". Civ.Code, § 3479.

4. Municipal corporations ⚿821(17)

In action for injuries when plaintiff fell in driveway leading to private garage in basement of defendant's cottage, whether the construction or maintenance of driveway constituted a nuisance was for jury. Civ. Code, § 3479.

5. Municipal corporations ⚿808(2, 3)

The major factor in determining whether an obstruction or depression in area between the curb and property line constitutes a "nuisance" is the factor of reasonableness and the same factor is the major factor in determining negligence. Civ.Code, § 3479.

6. Appeal and error ⚿1066

Where complaint in action for injuries when plaintiff fell in private driveway was drawn on theory of nuisance, but trial proceeded as though negligence had been especially alleged, negligence instructions, which predicated recovery if defendant was negligent, were not prejudicially erroneous, it appearing that a finding by jury of nuisance would have necessarily presupposed a finding of negligence. Civ.Code, § 3479.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Mabel Calder against the City and County of San Francisco and others to recover for injuries sustained when plaintiff fell in a driveway leading to a private garage in basement of a cottage of defendant property owner. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

James C. Purcell and William Ferriter, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hoge, Pelton & Gunther and A. Dal Thomson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff sought damages against the defendant property owner for personal injuries sustained when she fell in the driveway leading to the private garage in the basement of one of defendant's cottages. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant and from the judgment entered upon said verdict, plaintiff appeals.

Defendant was the owner of the business premises on the northeast corner of La Playa and Judah Streets in San Francisco and he also owned the two adjoining cottages on La Playa Street. He purchased the property in question in 1934 with the improvements thereon. The area between the curb and the property line on La Playa Street was fifteen feet in width. In 1934 this fifteen foot area in front of the business premises was entirely covered with a concrete sidewalk. For the remainder of the block and in front of the two cottages, there was only the ordinary six foot concrete sidewalk, which was located approximately three feet from the curb and six feet from the property line. The area on either side of the six foot sidewalk consisted of sandy soil covered with weeds. There was a garage in the basement of each of the two cottages. Access to said garages was obtained by driveways which sloped slightly upward from the curb to the six foot sidewalk and sloped slightly downward from said sidewalk to the property line. These driveways were likewise constructed of concrete and the gradual incline downward from the sidewalk to the property line was such that the driveways were ten inches below the level of the sidewalk at the property line.

After purchasing said premises, defendant made extensive improvements on all of the buildings. The driveways leading to the cottages were not changed but, in order to eliminate the dirt and the weeds, defendant covered with concrete practically all of the area between curb and the six foot concrete sidewalk and between said sidewalk and the property line. Several small areas were left open for planting between the original six foot sidewalk and the property line. Shrubs were planted in said open areas.

On the night of the accident, plaintiff and her escort left their automobile at the curb near the driveway of the second cottage. They walked to the business premises on the corner where they had something to eat. On the return to the automobile plaintiff's escort went directly to their automobile but plaintiff walked near the property line and fell as she stepped into the portion of the driveway of the second cottage between the original six foot sidewalk and the property line.

Plaintiff filed her complaint alleging that the construction and maintenance of the above described depressed area for driveway purposes "constituted a public nuisance." Defendant denied the allegations of the complaint and affirmatively alleged that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The trial court instructed the jury on the issues of nuisance, negligence and contributory negligence and the jury returned its verdict in favor of defendant.

Plaintiff's attack is directed solely at the instructions given by the trial court. It is not claimed that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. The proposition stated in the heading in plaintiff's brief is "In a case founded on nuisance, is it proper to instruct that negligence of defendant is a prerequisite to liability?"

[1, 2] While it is true that "a nuisance and liability for injuries occasioned thereby may exist without negligence" (Curtis v. Kastner, 220 Cal. 185, 188, 30 P.2d 26, 28), it is likewise true that "The torts of negligence and nuisance may be, and frequently are, coexisting and practically inseparable. * * * A nuisance, in many if not in most, instances, especially with respect to buildings or premises, presupposes negligence." Foley v. H. F. Farnham Co., 135 Me. 29, 188 A. 708, 710; see also 46 C.J. 663. And when a claim of liability is predicated upon either the theory of nuisance or the theory of negligence, the defense of contributory negligence is available to the defendant. Curtis v. Kastner, supra. This last mentioned fact further emphasizes the close relationship existing between these two theories of liability.

Here the complaint was drawn upon the theory of nuisance rather than upon the theory of negligence. Plaintiff states that she "did not attempt to produce any evidence to show negligence in the construction of the driveway." Nevertheless the trial proceeded in much the same manner as though negligence had been specifically alleged. The trial court gave numerous instructions covering both the theory of nuisance and the theory of negligence. Among said instructions were certain so-called stock instructions customarily used in negligence cases, which instructions indicated, when read alone, that unless the jury found that defendant was negligent, the verdict should be in favor of defendant. It is the giving of these last mentioned instructions which is assigned by plaintiff as error. We may assume, without deciding, that the giving of said instructions would have constituted prejudicial error under certain circumstances but the question remains as to whether the giving of said instructions constituted prejudicial error under the circumstances presented by the record before us.

[3-5] Not every obstruction or depression, constructed or maintained by a property owner in the area between the curb and the property line, constitutes a nuisance. Under the code definition a nuisance is declared to be anything which unlawfully obstructs the free use, of such street "in the customary manner." Civil Code, section 3479. It seems to be conceded here that the question of whether the construction or maintainence of the driveway in question constituted a nuisance was a question of fact for the jury. In McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, Second Edition, Volume 4, page 114, section 1438, it is said that no absolute rule can be stated and that "The final question is: Are the obstructions or encroachments involved unreasonable and against the public rights and general welfare?" And after discussing whether the construction or maintenance of cornices, awnings, shade trees, hitching posts, steps and the like constituted nuisances, the court said in Pickrell v. City of Carlisle, 135 Ky. 126, 121 S.W. 1029, at page 1032, 24 L.R.A.,N.S., 193, "The question always comes back to the point: Are they unreasonable, and do they make the street unsafe for the public use?" The major factor in the test on the question of nuisance in such cases is therefore the factor of reasonableness and, for all practical purposes, the same factor of reasonableness is the major factor in test on the question of negligence.

[6] As we view the situation presented by this record, a finding by the jury of nuisance would have necessarily presupposed a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant. Under these circumstances, we find no prejudicial error in the giving of the challenged instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and STURTEVANT, J., concurred.

---

50 Cal.App.2d 713

CRIVELLO et al. v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

Civ. 11893.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 26, 1942.

1. Counties 🔑190(1)

Boats engaged in fishing industry and carrying only fishing equipment and sufficient food to supply their crews until the return to port with the catch of fish were not "engaged in transportation of freight or passengers" within constitutional provision exempting certain vessels so engaged from taxation, except for state purposes, and therefore the boats were not exempt from taxation by county. Const. art. 13, § 4.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Engaged in Transportation of Freight or Passengers".

2. Counties 🔑190(1)

The phrase "engaged in transportation of freight or passengers" in constitutional provision exempting certain vessels so engaged from taxation, except for state purposes, means engaged in the transportation of property or persons for hire. Const. art. 13, § 4.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Arthur L. Mundo, Judge.

Action by M. Crivello and others against County of San Diego and others to recover taxes paid under protest. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Sloane & Steiner, of San Diego, for appellants.

James B. Abbey, Dist. Atty., and William A. Glen, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought against the County of San Diego and its tax assessor to recover personal property taxes paid under protest on two boats for the year 1939. Each boat was of more than fifty tons burden, and the refund was sought upon the theory that said boats were exempt from taxation under section 4 of article XIII of the state Constitution which provides: "All vessels of more than fifty (50) tons burden registered at any port in this State and engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers shall be exempt from taxation except for State purposes until and including the first day of January, 1955." The cause was decided in favor of the defendants upon the authority of Dragich v. County of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.App.2d 397, 86 P.2d 669, and plaintiffs make no claim that the facts of the present case differentiate it from that case; but they contend that the construction there placed upon the meaning of said constitutional provision is erroneous; and by this appeal they seek to have that decision repudiated. In this respect plaintiffs in the opening statement of their opening brief frankly state: "This appeal is taken for the purpose of testing the soundness of a decision of First Appellate District, Division Two, wherein a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County was reversed, Dragich v. County of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.App.2d 397, 86 P.2d 669 [670]. Petition for hearing in the Supreme Court was denied."

[1] In this case, as in that one, the boats involved were engaged in the fishing industry. After leaving port they proceeded many miles distant to the fishing grounds, manned by a fishing crew, and carrying only fishing equipment and sufficient food to supply the crew until the return to port with the catch of fish. The boats involved in the Dragich case were purse seiners, while those here involved were operated as bait fishing boats, and brought back the catch in refrigeration.

[2] In the Dragich case it was held "that the phrase 'engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers' as found in said section [4 of Article XIII of the Constitution] means 'engaged in the transportation of property or persons for hire' "; and the ground upon which plaintiffs base their attack upon the soundness of the decision is that since the constitutional provision does not employ the words "for hire" the decision therein has in effect written those words into the Constitution. Plaintiffs then argue that by so doing the court exceeded its judicial power. The record in the Dragich case discloses, however, that counsel for the boat owners herein were of counsel for the boat owners in that case, and that one of the major questions presented by the appeal therein was whether it was intended by said constitutional provision to exempt from county taxation all vessels of the specified tonnage, or only those engaged in the transportation of property or persons for hire. The record in that case further discloses that said question was extensively argued in the briefs by the respective parties; and it appears from the opinion subsequently rendered therein that said question was fully considered by the reviewing court and proved to be the controlling question on the appeal. In holding adversely to the contention made by the boat owners the court said in part: "It is at once apparent that said section was not intended to exempt all vessels of the specified tonnage but only those 'engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers'. This phrase must be given some meaning. If it be given the broad meaning contended for by respondents, it would only be necessary that the vessel be used for the conveyance of property or persons. But to give this phrase such meaning would be to render it meaningless as all vessels are used for the conveyance of either property or persons or both." Being dissatisfied with the decision the boat owners petitioned for a hearing in the Supreme Court; and in addition numerous amici curiae briefs were filed in behalf of several large boat owners. In the petition for a hearing and in said briefs the same attack was made upon the soundness of the decision therein as is here made. It was based on the same points and the same arguments; and the Supreme Court denied a hearing. The order of denial was made on March 20, 1939, and so far as our attention has been called nothing has transpired since then to alter the situation. It is our conclusion, therefore, that the decision in the Dragich case is decisive of the present appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 761

PEOPLE v. ONE 1937 PACKARD 6 TOURING SEDAN, ENGINE NO. T21720 et al.

Civ. 11793.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1942.

1. Forfeitures 🔑5

In proceeding for forfeiture of automobile used to transport narcotics, claimant has burden of proving investigation of automobile purchaser's moral responsibility, character and reputation, of the kind and to the extent required by statute. St.1939, pp. 767, 768, §§ 11610 et seq., 11620, 11622.

2. Forfeitures 🔑3

In order to protect claimant of automobile against forfeiture for use to transport narcotics, statute requires an investigation not only as to financial responsibility of purchaser to pay, but also as to moral responsibility, character and reputation. St.1939, pp. 767, 768, §§ 11610, et seq., 11620, 11622.

3. Forfeitures ⚿3

Investigation of proposed purchaser of automobile, required by statute in order to protect claimant against forfeiture for use in concealing or transporting drugs, is not alone to protect financial investment of seller or finance company, but to protect public, and to keep automobiles out of the possession of those who might use them for an unlawful purpose. St.1939, pp. 767, 768, §§ 11610, et seq., 11620, 11622.

4. Forfeitures ⚿3

Refusal to forfeit finance company's lien against automobile used to transport narcotics could not be sustained, where purchaser was unknown to manager of finance company, who negotiated loan, and no attempt was made to investigate his moral character, notwithstanding purchaser's parents were well known to company and of good reputation. St.1939, pp. 767, 768, §§ 11610, et seq., 11620, 11622.

5. Forfeitures ⚿5

The extent and reasonableness of an investigation of automobile purchaser's moral responsibility, character and reputation required by statute to protect claimant of automobile against forfeiture for use in concealing or transporting drugs is primarily a question of fact, as to which trial court's finding, having evidentiary support, will not be disturbed.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Proceeding by the People to obtain a judicial forfeiture of One 1937 Packard 6 Touring Sedan, Engine No. T21720 for the illegal transportation of narcotics, wherein, the San Francisco Remedial Loan Association, Ltd., appeared and sought to establish priority for its mortgage lien. From that portion of the judgment denying a forfeiture of the interest of the finance company, the people appeal.

Judgment reversed.

Earl Warren, Atty. Gen., and Dennis Hession, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Thomas, Beedy & Paramore, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This proceeding was instituted in behalf of the state pursuant to the provisions of chapter 7, article I, of the narcotics division of the Health and Safety Code, St. 1939, page 767, to obtain a judicial forfeiture of a 1937 Packard 6 touring sedan seized by state narcotic inspectors for the illegal transportation of cannabis sativa (marihuana). The car in question was being operated by the registered owner (hereinafter referred to as the purchaser). He was accompanied by a friend, and they were placed under arrest. The San Francisco Remedial Loan Association had refinanced the purchase of the car and was the legal owner thereof by virtue of a chattel mortgage given as security for the payment of a promissory note executed by the purchaser and endorsed by his father, upon which there was a balance due of $216 and interest. The finance company appeared in the proceeding by answer and at the trial sought to establish priority for its mortgage lien. The trial court found that at the time of the seizure the vehicle was being used for the illegal transportation of narcotics and gave judgment forfeiting the interest therein of the purchaser, but denied a forfeiture of the interests of the finance company. This appeal was taken by the state from that portion of the judgment in favor of the finance company.

[1-3] Section 11620 of said code provides that the claimant of any right, title or interest in a seized vehicle may prove his lien, mortgage or conditional sales contract to be bona fide and that his right, title and interest was created after a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the purchaser and without any knowledge that the vehicle was being or was to be used for the purpose charged; and section 11622 declares in effect that "In the event of such proof" the rights of the claimant shall not be forfeited. In construing the provision above italicized it has been held that the burden of proving that such investigation has been made rests upon the claimant (People v. One Pontiac 8 Sedan, 22 Cal.App.2d 503, 71 P.2d 302; People v. One 1938 Buick Sedan, 39 Cal.App.2d 42, 102 P. 2d 447), and that the statutory requirement imposed thereby is not met where the purchaser is unknown to the claimant and the inquiry extends only to the ascertainment of his financial responsibility to pay and no effort is made to investigate his moral responsibility, character or reputation. People v. One 1939 Buick 8 Coupe, 43 Cal.App.2d 411, 110 P.2d 1013; People

v. One Packard 6 Touring Sedan, 26 Cal.App.2d 150, 79 P.2d 130; People v. One Lincoln Eight, 12 Cal.App.2d 622, 55 P.2d 925; People v. One Harley-Davidson Motorcycle, 5 Cal.2d 188, 53 P.2d 970. In speaking of the object sought to be obtained by the statutory requirement, the court in the first of the cases just cited goes on to say that the investigation of a prospective purchaser of an automobile is not alone for the protection of the financial investment of the seller or the institution financing the sale; that the legislature has in effect said the public also has an interest in the character of persons who may acquire automobiles; that the purpose of the law clearly is, therefore, to keep automobiles out of the possession of those who might use them for an unlawful purpose and is one of the methods devised to aid in the prevention of crime.

[4] In the present case the only proof offered by the claimant as to the matter of investigation consisted of the testimony given by the manager of installment loans of the finance company, who negotiated the loan; and he stated definitely that prior to making the loan the purchaser was unknown to him and that no attempt was made to investigate his moral character. In this regard the witness testified that he had never seen the purchaser prior to the time he applied for the loan; but that the purchaser told him he lived with his parents and that they had recommended that he refinance the purchase of the car with this company. Continuing, the witness stated that the company had known the purchaser's parents in a business way for about 10 years, during which period it had handled "many deals" with them; that he knew where they lived and knew that the purchaser's father was employed by the Southern Pacific Company and had been so employed for about 23 years. The witness then went on to say that so far as the finance company was concerned, the purchaser's parents had a fine reputation; that they were always found to be very reliable, and were very prompt in taking care of their obligations. The witness felt, however, so he testified, that since the purchaser was only 22 years old and the amount of the loan he was applying for ($250) was a "pretty heavy" obligation for him to carry, he "wanted to make sure that it was more or less with his parents' consent," and that accordingly he contacted the purchaser's father, who agreed to the loan and agreed to endorse the note, which he did. The witness positively stated, however, that previously the purchaser was unknown to him and that he did not ask him for any personal references on the application; that he did ask him what his employment was and was informed that he worked as a musician at various clubs in San Francisco; but that he "did not contact them"—that he "felt that it was not necessary, due to the fact that the father authorized this loan." And finally, on cross-examination the witness was asked the direct question: "Did you attempt to make any investigation of his [the purchaser's] moral character?" and he answered, "No, I am sure we did not." Applying the law as laid down in the cases above cited to the foregoing admitted facts, it is apparent that the trial court's finding that the finance company's lien as mortgagee was created "after a reasonable investigation of the moral character and reputation of" the purchaser, cannot be sustained. People v. One 1939 Buick 8 Coupe, supra.

[5] As supporting the trial court's finding, the finance company emphasizes the undisputed fact that the reputation of the purchaser's parents was of the very best and that such reputation was well known to the finance company. But neither of the parents was the purchaser of the car; and the law requires that the reputation of the purchaser be investigated. It is doubtless true that the question of the extent and reasonableness of such investigation is primarily one of fact, and that a finding of the trial court on that issue will not be disturbed where found to be with evidentiary support; but here, as shown, the finance company admits that it made no attempt to investigate the moral character of the purchaser.

It follows, therefore, that the portion of the judgment in favor of the finance company from which the appeal was taken must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

PETERS, P. J., and B. C. JONES, J. pro tem., concurred.

50 Cal.App.2d 841

ANDERSON et al. v. MEUER et al.

Civ. 2685.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 30, 1942.

1. Quieting title ⚿44(4)

In lessors' suit to quiet title to mining claim which had been leased to defendant under lease giving lessors right of termination, on 30 days' notice, if defendant did not begin actual mining operations within certain period, defendant's testimony that he received two letters stating that he was in default in performance of work under lease, stating exact amount of default, and stating that he was to remedy such default within 30 days, supported finding that proper notice of default was given.

2. Quieting title ⚿44(4)

In lessors' suit to quiet title to mining claim which had been leased to defendant under lease giving lessors right of termination, on 30 days' notice, if defendant did not begin actual mining operations within certain period, evidence supported finding that defendant was in default when notice of termination was served, 36 days after service of notice of default.

3. Mines and minerals ⚿64

Where lessee, who had defaulted under lease of mining claim giving lessors right of termination, on 30 days' notice, if lessee failed to begin actual mining operations within certain period, was given notice of default, and, 36 days later, was given notice of termination, lessee's assignee under subsequent assignment acquired no interest in claim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Suit by Walter W. Anderson and another against Rolph L. Meuer and another to quiet title to a mining claim. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal, and plaintiffs move to dismiss the appeal.

Motion denied and judgment affirmed.

Holcomb, Holcomb & Kempley and C. C. Kempley, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Gerard Remington, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment quieting title to a mining claim in the plaintiffs.

The respondents Anderson and Umbach, on July 15, 1935, leased this mining claim to Rolph L. Meuer, who will be referred to as the appellant. This lease was for a term of five years with the privilege of renewal on certain conditions, and it provided that the lessee should have sixty days in which to do prospecting and such other work as he saw fit; that within sixty days he should begin "actual mining operations" and thereafter do a specified amount of such work each month; that he should have the right to remove all machinery and equipment upon the expiration or termination of the lease; that in the event of any default upon his part the lessors should give him thirty days written notice; and that if he failed and neglected to correct said default within thirty days the lease should terminate.

It is conceded that the time within which the appellant was required to begin actual mining operations was extended by mutual agreement to July 1, 1936. On November 8, 1936, the lessors served written notice on the appellant that he was in default in that he had not done the required work during the preceding four months and notifying him that if the default was not corrected within thirty days the lease would be terminated. On December 14, 1936, a notice that the lease was terminated was served. In March, 1937, the appellant assigned his interest in the lease to the Golden Butte Mining Company, Ltd., a limited copartnership of which he was the only general partner. In this action, which was subsequently filed, the only issues presented, as stated by counsel for the appellants, were "whether proper notice was given after they claimed the default, and secondly if such notice was given, whether there was a default during the four months given to perform this work." The court found in all respects in favor of the respondents and this appeal followed.

[1] It is first contended that the evidence does not support the finding that notice of default was given. The appellant himself testified that on or about November 8, 1936, he received a letter, although he could not remember whether or not it was registered; that "some kind of a notice" was enclosed in this letter; that he read the notice; that the notice specified that he

